INTRODUCTION

The material contained in this book, GOD’S GREAT FAMILY OF SONS, has been in preparation over a period of some twenty years.

As we read the word of God, our minds begin to grasp what great importance our Lord has placed upon His intention to bring forth a vast family of sons of God. Paul, writing to the Romans, made this very significant statement: "Whom He did foreknow He also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of His Son, that He might be the first-born among many brethren." Rom. 8:29

Great importance is added to this incredible statement by reading the translation of Weymouth, which, if possible, gives an even more forceful understanding of Paul’s inspired statement.

"Those whom He has foreknown He has also predestined to share the likeness of His Son, that He might be the eldest in a vast family of brothers; and those whom He has predestined He has also called; and those whom He has called He has also acquitted; and those whom He has acquitted He has also glorified." Rom. 8:29, 30 (Weymouth)

As we read the pages of this book, we will see the purpose of God unfolding - a pre-determined plan by which He will govern the universe in the aions to come.

CHAPTER ONE
THE SIGN OF THE SON OF MAN

So many truths come pouring into the soul that there seems to be a lack both of time and of ability to write them. We must indeed be rushing rapidly to the close of this age that we call the Dispensation of Grace. The same glorious sun which set in turn upon the successive dispensational days of Innocence, Human Government, Conscience, Promise, and Law is now extending its lengthening shadows across the harvest fields of the dispensation of Grace.

There was a time when the Pharisees came to Jesus seeking a sign from Him that would prove that He was the Son of God. It is a surprising fact that this same question was repeated at least twice in the Gospel of Matthew. (Matt. 12:38, 39 and 16:1-4) Both times they asked for a sign and on each occasion He told them that the only sign that would be given was the sign of Himself, that as Jonah was three days and three nights in the belly of the whale so also should He be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth.

It seems to me that for centuries our eyes have been kept holden to many of the great truths of the scripture. We have read and reread the Bible, usually taking for granted that we understood perfectly what was written, and frequently just reading over the passages and noticing little or nothing of their message. I do not think we should be overly concerned about this lack of understanding, but we should remember that God never reveals anything to anybody until He is ready to reveal it, and He is never ready to reveal anything until the time has come to prepare for that great event which He is about to accomplish.

For centuries Israel had looked for the coming of the Messiah until their eyes were dim with watching, but who among them all had even a hazy idea of how that coming would be accomplished. They did not expect a virgin birth; they did not expect a lowly birth; they did not expect a despised and rejected man nor a man at variance with their established creeds. They did not expect a crucifixion, a resurrection, or an ascension to heaven. All these things were contrary to their expectations and their long established beliefs; consequently they rejected Him. I suppose that Mary was the first person in all Israel to have the wonder of the virgin birth explained to her and that less than a year before the great event was to transpire.

No, we need not worry about our ignorance of things. Our only concern should be that when God does send us light that we receive it, for, if we reject it, the light we have becomes darkness and we can understand nothing. My old instructor, Elmer Hoff, taught me a lesson I hope I shall never forget. He said, "The moment you say no, you close the door for the Spirit to teach you anything." What a lesson that is! How badly we all need to learn it! The moment the Spirit of God begins to shed light on a truth, it is time to begin to ask Him to instruct us in it. Do not submit God's revelation to the criticism of some dead church member or preacher, for they like the birds of the air will steal away the seed of the truth before it has a chance to sprout or take root within you.

We will never discover anything that God has hidden from us, but when by His grace He draws back the curtain and reveals the hidden treasure, it is time to grasp it, for if we tarry it will be covered again, and we will miss it. Do you remember that Jesus rejoiced in spirit and said, "I thank thee, Father, Lord of heaven and earth, that Thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent and hast revealed them unto babes. Even so, Father, for so it seemed good in Thy sight?"

There can be no doubt we are living in an hour when the Lord is revealing many things that concern the coming age. I am certain, however, that even now we see them only darkly. We catch only faint and fleeting glimpses of these wonders of the golden age. We are looking for the unveiling of the sons of God. We are looking for the revelation of Jesus Christ. The revelation will reveal what is hidden. The unveiling will reveal what has been kept veiled. As the lightning flashes forth from inky clouds, so the manifestation will disclose that which has been hidden in darkness. "Let us therefore fear lest, a promise being left us of entering in to His rest, any of you should seem to come short of it."

One of the greatest truths ever kept hidden from the eyes of man is this: that Jesus Christ, the only begotten son of God, was from His birth to His resurrection the greatest sign that God has ever given to the world. Everything about His life and His ministry. His birth, His death, His resurrection was a clear distinct sign of things that are to come. We may have overlooked the fact that no less an authority than Jesus Christ Himself made the clear definite statement that "as Jonah was a sign to the Ninevites, so also shall the Son of man be to this generation." (Luke 11:29, 30) This passage tells us that Jesus was a sign to this generation in the same way that Jonah was to his generation. When I meditate upon the experience of Jonah as he went into the whale’s belly and felt the bars of hell close about him, then to come forth from that hell to experience the glory of a resurrection, it seems small wonder that his preaching so mightily affected the Ninevites that in forty days one hundred twenty thousand souls turned to the Lord. Jonah's experience was a sign to the Ninevites of wonderful things to come when Christ would go into death and hell and then lead forth in triumph an innumerable company of captives from the pit itself. (Eph. 4:7-10) But we dare not stop here. The glorious victory of Christ in descending to hell and leading forth a host of captives is in itself a sign of the day when the sons of God will unlock the gates of hell, for the gates of hell shall not prevail against them.

So it was that God told King Ahaz, "Therefore the Lord Himself shall give you a sign. Behold, a virgin shall conceive and bear a son and ye shall call his name Immanuel (God with us)." (Isa. 7:14) It was not the virgin birth that was to be the sign. It was the Son that was born of the virgin that was the sign. Therefore when Simeon came by the Spirit into the temple after the birth of Jesus, he prophesied saying, "Behold, this child is set for the fall and rising again of many in Israel, and for a sign which shall be spoken against." (Luke 2:34)

The Lord Jesus Christ was the only begotten Son of God. He was a Son in a way that no other man has ever been a son of God. He was begotten by God. He came from the bosom of the Father. He was a Son before other men existed and when He partook of flesh and blood. He was born, not of the will of the flesh, not of the will of man, but of God. He was born through the miraculous work of the Holy Spirit and even as a human being He was begotten of God.

Now that which is born of God is begotten of God as James says, "Of His own will begat He us with the word of truth that we should be a kind of firstfruits of His creatures." (Jas. 1:18) We can therefore reverently say that the blessed Jesus was the only begotten Son of God, but that He was a first fruits and a sign that other men, thousands of other men, would through the miracle working power of the Holy Spirit become sons of God, begotten of God through the omnipotent power of the Holy Spirit. These are they who are born not of blood nor of the will of the flesh nor of the will of man, but of God. (Jno. 1:13) Strange and glorious as this may seem, James in the verse quoted above shows that we who are being born of God are ourselves but firstfruits of all God's creatures. Jas. 1:18. We are a sign therefore that all creatures shall be eventually born of God.

I wish with all my heart that Christians would stop believing that they are born again the moment they believe. This doctrine, taught almost universally among evangelical people, has been an enormous hindrance in the progress of Christians, for they, thinking they have reached sonship, fail to press toward the mark of full sonship in Him. If men could only see that "that which is born of God cannot sin, for His seed remaineth in him and he cannot sin because he is born of God," (1 Jno. 3:9) then they would not be in such a hurry to declare that they are born again and thus full sons of God. There is a universe of difference between being justified by faith and being born again. Both the thief on the cross and the Philippian jailor believed on Christ and were justified from their sins, but I think we would be very wrong to imagine that they had done any more than "receive Him" and, because they had received Him, power was given to them to become sons of God.

We shall yet see walking on this earth a great company of begotten sons who have been born of God even as Christ was born of God. These sons will be completely incapable of sin in any aspect or in any sense of the word. I am sorry to say that, though I have been a believer for many years, yet I am still capable of sin in thought, word, and deed. But I think I can truthfully testify that I am far less capable of sin now than I was when I first believed, and I see such a growing hatred within of all that pertains to sin's realm that sin is rendered well nigh impossible. Those who thus walk are in the process of becoming sons of God and, when that birth is complete, they will have this testimony, "They cannot sin because they are born of God." "Beloved, now are we the children of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be, but we know that when He shall appear we shall be like Him, for we shall see Him as He is. And every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself even as He is pure." (1 Jno. 3:2, 3)

We speak too lightly about the deep and sacred things of God. We speak flippantly about such divine eternal wonders as the new birth, sonship, the fullness of the Spirit, transfiguration, and the manifestation of the sons of God. The light and frivolous way in which these truths are handled proves beyond a doubt that those who handle them understand them less than Belshazzar understood the sacredness of the vessels of the Lord from which he drank wine with his lords and ladies. If we are going to approach God at all, we are going to have to come in an attitude of wide-eyed awe. We shall have to approach with reverence and godly fear lest we blaspheme and take the name of the Lord in vain. I hate to hear any man use light, frivolous, and familiar terms when speaking of the things of God. Surely if Michael the archangel durst not bring a railing accusation against the devil because we are forbidden to speak evil of dignities, then I must approach all the sacred truths cleansed by the blood and having my mind renewed and hallowed by the Holy Spirit.

With this exhortation fresh upon our minds let us think briefly of what it will mean to be begotten of God. I could be wrong, but it seems perfectly clear to me that only three people were ever born sons of God. By this I mean that only three people ever came into this world who were sons of God at birth, body, soul, and spirit. The first son so born was Adam, who having no human parents was formed by the Spirit of God from the dust of the earth. He was a son of God. (Luke 3:38). He was clothed upon with the life and glory of the Lord. To him was given the power to live forever, but to him no power had been given to discern between good and evil. The second son of God born of the Holy Spirit was Eve. When the Lord had caused a deep sleep to fall upon Adam, he opened his bosom and from a rib of this son He formed a woman, a son of God in all the glory of Adam, made by the Spirit, begotten by the Spirit, and clothed upon by the life of God Himself. She was a true son of God even as Adam, for neither male nor female is known in that realm. No corrupt and dying blood flowed in the veins of these inhabitants of Paradise. No death-dealing carnal mind corrupted them to bring their members under the power of death and sin. They lived in a realm long since closed to the human race. They were clothed upon not with garments of wool and cotton or even seamless robes, but, because of their heavenly brightness and their blessed communion with God, they lived in a realm of transfiguration and were no more in need of earthly garments than an angel. All creatures of that perfumed, effulgent paradise were under their wise and loving control. No timid creature raced in terror from snarling ravenous beasts. The pitiful cry of a dying thing was never heard. Peace reigned supreme and love without alloy. Had this blessed son in his unfallen state walked the earth centuries later, he, too, would have stilled the waves, raised the dead, and healed diseases as did Christ, the last Adam. But this was not God's plan.

The third person to be born of the Spirit of God was Jesus Christ. Christ had existed before the world was. Christ, who proceeded from the bosom of the Father, the One by whom and for whom all things were created, was born into this world by the power of the Holy Spirit. The Holy Spirit, who had made Adam from the dust of the earth and who had formed Eve from the bone and flesh of Adam, now by the power of the Most High overshadowed a virgin and brought forth a Son from her womb. These and these alone were born sons of God, but God has given power to all members of the human family who receive Christ to become sons of God, for as many as received Him to them gave He power to become sons of God. Male and female will not be recognized in Christ. Both alike are sons.

My heart sings a thousand hallelujahs, for this earth in God's good grace is yet to see a whole race of sons of God, begotten by the Holy Spirit in the extremity of the age. They are not to rise from the dust of the earth as Adam, but by the power of the Holy Spirit they will arise from the dust and ashes of their crucified selves. "I am crucified with Christ," said Paul, "nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me." This is sonship, for in some miraculous way the "I" that was crucified and the "I" that lives are not the same, but from the ashes of our crucified selves God has brought forth a son of God.

There was a very great difference between the unfallen Adam clothed in glory and Jesus Christ, the Son of God, who for our sin laid aside His glory. For He, though equal with God, did not grasp at equality, but made Himself of no reputation and took upon Himself the form of a servant and was made in the likeness of men (fallen men), and, being found in fashion as a man, He humbled Himself and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross. This He did because man was fallen, and to lift him back to sonship He had to come into the condition in which man was that through the shedding of His everlasting incorruptible blood in which flowed eternal life He might give back to all men that eternal life which they lost through disobedience. As in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive. "For if by one man's offence, death reigned by one, much more! much more! much more! who receive abundance of grace and of the gift of righteousness shall reign in life by one, Jesus Christ. Therefore as by the offence of one judgment came upon all men to condemnation, even so by the righteousness of one the free gift came upon all men unto justification of life. For as by one man's disobedience many (i.e. all) were made sinners, so by the obedience of one shall many (i.e. all) be made righteous." (Rom. 5:17-19) But when this glorious work of redemption had been completed by the shedding of His precious eternal blood. He rose from the dead because death had no power over Him and was highly exalted and given a name that is above every name that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow of things in heaven and earth and under the earth. In my heart I hear Him pray, "And now, 0 Father, glorify Me with the glory that I had with Thee before the world began." (Jno. 17:5)

We might well fill the whole book with this glorious truth of sonship, but that is not our purpose now. Our purpose now is to show that this glorious Son of God, begotten of the Father by the Holy Ghost, was a sign son. He was a sign of a vast family of sons who would also be begotten and born of God through the centuries intervening between Bethlehem and the end of this age. This is the truth that inspired Paul's heart as he exultantly wrote, "Whom He did foreknow He did predestinate to be conformed to the image of His Son, that He (Jesus Christ) might be the eldest in a vast family of brothers."

There was a time when certain Greeks came to Philip and said, "Sir, we would see Jesus." When Philip and Andrew told Jesus of the request, Christ made this strange statement of truth. "The hour is come for the Son of Man to be glorified. Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone; but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit." (Jno. 12:20-24) I am sure you must understand what He was telling them, for a spiritual mind... could scarcely miss this truth. They wanted to see Jesus, but they did not know that if they wanted to see the complete Christ, the first and the last, they would have to wait until the harvest time at the end of this age when that single corn of wheat that fell into the ground and died would be a whole ear of wheat full of kernels, each one in the exact image of the one who fell into the ground and died, but rose again. This is the fullness of Christ. This is Christ with that vast family of sons in His own image.

I do not think we should build our faith on visions that men have seen, but I was once deeply impressed by one who told me he had seen a vision of Christ. In the vision Christ appeared as a huge man who seemed to fill all things. But closer observation showed that the huge form of Christ - head, body, hands, and feet - was composed of numberless thousands of little men, each in the exact image of each other and all in the image of Christ Himself. This is what Jesus wanted to teach us when in answer to the question, "We would see Jesus," He pointed to a single kernel that fell into the ground and became a harvest of identical kernels at the end of the age. Oh, Lord, I shall certainly be satisfied when I awake in Thy likeness.

There are three things in this vast world, and only three: - the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life; briefly, appetite, avarice, and ambition. I do not think you will be able to avoid the conclusion that all the inventions, creations, and contrivances of man are in existence to cater to these three things. It was with these three things that Eve was tempted. She saw the tree was good for food (the lust of the eyes), a tree to be desired (the lust of the flesh), a tree to make one wise (the pride of life), and though the temptation was not from within but from without, she yielded to it and partook. The temptation of Christ was on the same basis exactly. The first appeal was made to the flesh through appetite. "Command that these stones be made bread." The second was made to the eyes to awaken covetous-ness and greed. "All this will I give you if Thou wilt fall down and worship me." The third was to the pride of life. "If Thou be the Son of God, cast Thyself down from hence."

I shall not attempt to develop the thought given above, for that is not the purpose in mind, but the truth that we must see here is that Jesus Christ overcame the world, the flesh, and the devil and all that is involved in them, and that He overcame so thoroughly and delivered such a crushing defeat to the wily tactics of Satan that it is actually recorded by the Holy Ghost that the devil left Him and angels came and ministered unto Him. (Matt. 4:11) Truly Jesus said, "The prince of this world cometh and findeth nothing in Me." No wonder he left Him. I think we would be right to conclude that never again did Satan come to tempt the Lord, but his next efforts were to destroy Him.

In His great victory over the power of Satan He was a sign that pointed unerringly to another company of overcoming sons. In all the churches of Revelation there were two classes of people - those who were overcomers and those who were not. It is to the overcomers that the glorious promises are given, for they follow the Lamb whithersoever He goeth, have partaken of His mind and of His will, and thus are equipped to reign in His kingdom.

Thus to them it is said: "To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life which is in the midst of the paradise of God." (Rev. 2:7) "He that overcometh shall not be hurt of the second death." (Rev. 2:11) "To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the hidden manna, and I will give him a white stone, and in the stone a new name written which no man knoweth saving he that receiveth it." (Rev. 2:17) "He that overcometh and keepeth My works to the end, to him will I give power over the nations, and he shall rule them with a rod of iron; as the vessel of the potter shall they be broken to shivers even as I received of My Father, and I will give him the morning star." (Rev. 2:26-28) "He that overcometh will I make a pillar in the temple of my God and he shall go no more out and I will write upon him the name of my God and the name of the city of my God which cometh down out of heaven from my God and I will write upon him my new name." (Rev. 3:12, 13) "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with Me in My throne even as I overcame and am set down with My Father in His throne." (Rev. 3:21) "He that hath an ear let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches."

When any man becomes a lover of the will of God, then he becomes a hater of the world and an overcomer of the world. Christ's greatest secret was that He did always the things that pleased the Father. When any man lives in this manner, the world is overcome as a matter of course. No man will ever be an overcomer until the Christ within him is greater than he that is in the world. (1 Jno. 4:4) "Whosoever is born of God overcometh the
In the lives of most Christians the world is greater than Christ. They do not know it, perhaps, but it is certainly so and at times it is glaringly evident.

Every Christian should seek that God would open his eyes to show him that the world and all the things therein are but vanity and vexation of spirit. Everything that belongs to the world is of a passing nature. It fades as the green leaf. It is like the grass that today is green in the field and tomorrow is burned as if in an oven. It is like the mist that appeareth for a little time and is gone, or like a vision of the night that vanishes with the awakening. It is a bubble that bursts, a whiff of perfume that came from nowhere and disappeared into nothingness. "I said of laughter, it is mad, and of joy, what doeth it?" I love Phillips' translation of (1 Jno. 2:15-17) "A man cannot love the Father and love the world at the same time, for the whole world system, based as it is on man's primitive desires, their greedy ambitions, and the glamour of all they think splendid, is not derived from the Father at all, but from the world itself. The world with all its passionate desires will one day disappear, but the man who is following God's will is part of the permanent and cannot die." Who is he that overcometh but he that believeth that Jesus is the Christ? This glorious overcoming first Son of God is a sign and a herald of a vast company of completely overcoming sons who will stand in His likeness at the end of the age.

Whenever God requires anything of man, there is always a reason for it. The reason so many people fail to attain the great heights of the Spirit is because they are unable to see God's purpose, and therefore they have no particular incentive to seek the great heights that are in Him. We have been far too taken up with theories about heaven and childish notions about mansions in the skies to be able to see the true purpose of God. I have positively no hesitation whatever in telling you that according to the scriptures God's plan for man from the very foundation of the world was to make man the true lord of the universe and to bring all things into subjection to him. This is certainly Paul's theme when in Heb. 2 he says, "For unto the angels hath He not put in subjection the world to come - but one in a certain place testified saying, What is man that Thou art mindful of him? Or the son of man that Thou visitest him? Thou madest him (man) a little lower than the angels. Thou crownest him (man) with glory and honor and didst set him over the works of Thy hands. Thou hast put all things in subjection under his feet. For in that He put all in subjection under him, he left nothing that is not put under him. But now we see not yet all things put under him." (Heb. 2:5-8) This is a very definite and glorious statement and shows in few words the true purpose God had in creating man. It shows the reason for the fall and all the intricate infinite preparations of man through the fall, through suffering, through tribulation, sickness, death, and a thousand other trials that man might eventually be fit and equipped for the rulership which God ordained for him in the very beginning. All this truth is found in the very first words God ever spoke about man. "Let us make man in our image and after our likeness and let us give him dominion..." (Gen. 1:26) If men and women could see this by the Spirit instead of the fairy tales we have been taught through the centuries about harps and mansions in the sky, they would have some incentive to partake of the glorious sonship God is looking for in His people.

Now, would it not seem to be divine sense, human sense, and common sense that, if the almighty God is preparing man to reign over His creation, if He is preparing him to rule the earth, if He is planning to put all things in subjection under his feet, then that man must be prepared for this lordly rulership? Could the wisdom of God set a man to be lord and ruler of the world if the world can overcome him? He who is to rule the world must be an overcomer of the world. Does not the scripture say, "Know ye not that ye shall judge angels"? Could we imagine God's setting one to judge Satan who is continually overcome by Satan? Or can he be a judge of sin who is overcome by sin? Will he not have to be a complete overcomer before he can judge the world or angels? He who is overcome by thieving can scarcely be called upon to judge the sin of theft. Abraham said of God, "Shall not the judge of all the earth do right?" What greater argument then can be presented than that he who is to rule all things must first of all have overcome all things] Even in the world as it is now no one can rule that which he has not overcome. Let all those therefore who hope to reign with Christ set their hearts and affections on overcoming the world and all things in it. It is our understanding of these precious truths that is the ground and foundation of our faith, and "this is the victory that overcomes the world, even our faith." (Jno. 5:4)

Let us turn away from our subject long enough for a word of exhortation. I do not see how a Christian is ever going to be an overcomer and enter into sonship by following the ordinary course of church activity. There is something about the continual vain repetitions of the church that keeps Christians in a state of spiritual infancy.
When the Jewish offerings and sacrifices got to be nothing but a ritual which they performed every week, God turned His face away in disgust and said it was a weariness to Him and a stench in His nostrils. What more is there to the wearisome repetitions into which the churches have entered? Do they not go through the same ceremony every week as they sing their hymns, say their prayers, give their offerings, and wait for the preacher to pronounce the benediction? This is not the path that leads to sonship. Regardless of what your traditions may be, this is the path to spiritual stalemate and infancy.

Every man must come to know God personally, individually, and independently of all theories and traditions. He must through private communion with his Lord enter into such friendship, unity, and fellowship with Him that should earthly and spiritual dependencies vanish he would be completely undisturbed and unmoved, or should every Christian be removed from the earth and he left alone that he would feel no lonesomeness or lack in anything. David, the king of Israel, had entered this blessed abiding place when he took up his harp to sing, "God is my refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble; therefore will not we fear though the earth be removed and the mountains carried into the midst of the sea." (Psa. 46:1,2) And again the same knowledge must have filled his soul when he said, "He that dwelleth in the secret place of the Most High shall abide under the shadow of the Almighty." (Psa. 91:1) There is a secret place for us in God where crowds can never come. There are gardens to which Jesus often resorts with His disciples. (Jno. 18:2) There are mountains of transfiguration where He leaves the clamoring crowds below while He takes a few up higher with Himself. The shout and song of revival meeting has been a method of God during the dispensation of grace, but to sit with Him in His throne will be the order of the kingdom. I have no hesitation in saying that the last sands of this imperfect age of grace are running through the hour-glass of time and the perfect kingdom morning is at hand.

When Jesus Christ, the sign son, was baptized with the Holy Ghost, He knew the fullness of God in a way that no other man has yet known it. God gave the Holy Spirit to Him without measure. "God giveth not the Spirit by measure unto Him." (Jno. 3:34) However much other men have experienced the fullness of the Spirit or however glorious was their baptism in the Holy Ghost, I feel they are all terribly lacking when compared to Him. His life was under the complete dominion of the Holy Spirit. The words He spake, the deeds He did, the prayers He prayed, the miracles He performed, the places He went were all the result of that limitless fullness which God gave unto Him. His birth, His life, His works, His death. His resurrection, His ascension were all by the Holy Spirit. He made no mistakes in any word He spoke for He spake by the Holy Spirit. He made no errors in judgments for judgment was not His but God's. He was never overcome by the arguments of clever men but silenced them all with a word of wisdom from God. When Aaron the priest was anointed with the holy oil, Moses poured it on his head until it ran down over his face and beard, over his body and down to the very skirts of his garments. This is typical of that measureless fullness of the Holy Spirit which Christ enjoyed - not just a drop of oil on the forehead applied by the finger, but oil in abundance for the whole man. Psa. 133:2.

All who read these lines must be able to give proof after proof and evidence upon evidence that Jesus Christ possessed the glorious fullness of the Holy Spirit, so we will refrain from going further to make proof of that. But let us consider that great company of sons who are to come in His image and in the same fullness that He, the sign Son, had.

Self-satisfaction is an enormous, blinding, deceiving evil. A man who thinks he is righteous never bothers to seek righteousness, but a man who knows he is unrighteous will seek the righteousness of Christ. While scribes and Pharisees prided themselves that they were the children of Abraham, they knew not that they were the children of the devil, and they hated Christ for telling them so. "For they, being ignorant of God's righteousness and going about to establish their own righteousness, had not submitted themselves to the righteousness of God." (Rom. 10:3) The same principle holds true regarding the fullness of the Spirit. It is a great indictment against us all that we have claimed the fullness of the Holy Spirit when indeed our lives showed little or no sign of the Holy Spirit at all, let alone His fullness. It is a pitiful misconception prevalent in the entire professing church that each division in it should imagine that the Holy Spirit is imparted by obedience to the form of baptism laid down in their particular creed.

I do not want to belittle or depreciate anything that God has done for any man. We should be extremely thankful for any experience we have had in Him, but let us abolish all opinions that would lead us to believe that our little thimbleful of water is God's ocean, or that our little Pentecost was the Spirit without measure or all the fullness of God. Let us rather realize that at best we have partaken of a mere earnest of our inheritance and that the whole inheritance still lies out ahead of us. We have partaken of a few luscious grapes from Canaan, but just beyond us lies a whole realm flowing with milk and honey and wine. Why should men refuse the meal after they have tasted its goodness? Why do we refuse the inheritance because we have partaken of a few pennies ahead of time? Why be satisfied with a stagnant pool when a river of the water of life is flowing from the throne of God? Paul prayed that we might be filled with all the fullness of God. Jesus declared that those who believed on Him as the scriptures had said would find rivers of living water flowing from their beings. Let us then wake up to the fact that we know nothing as we ought to know, and we have received nothing as we ought to receive. Our confident assurance that we are filled with the Spirit has been a blindfold that has kept us from seeing the rivers and oceans that lie just beyond us. Do not cast away the good that God has given you, but do, I pray you, cast away all self-satisfied belief in your fullness, for this dams up the fountains of living water. If it is true that rivers of living water can flow from the innermost being of men who believe on Christ, then there is one thing of which I am certain. Before those rivers of living water can flow from our being, all obstructions will have to be removed that they might first flow into our being. Let us settle it in our hearts that there is an everlasting fullness that can only be ours as we become empty of self-righteousness and give up our proud belief in our own fullness.

I do not propose to discuss here the many promises that go to prove that we can be filled with the Holy Spirit, but the undeniable fact that Jesus Christ, the sign Son, was given the Holy Spirit without limitation or measure is also an undeniable proof that there is an experience of equal glory and magnitude awaiting all those who will enter into sonship. Indeed, every day I am convinced more and more that it is the ever increasing fullness of the Holy Spirit that produces sonship, for by it we are both born of God and brought to the maturity of full sonship. It is a most significant fact that, at the moment Jesus was filled with the Holy Ghost, there came a voice from heaven declaring Him to be God's beloved Son in whom He was well pleased. Matt. 3:17

There is a fullness of the Spirit awaiting all those who long for sonship. It is a fullness that none but Christ has ever received. It is a fullness reserved for the time of the manifestation of the sons of God. It is a fullness that brings to a complete maturity. It is the early and latter rain in the first month. It was John the Baptist who said, "Of His fullness have we all received and grace for grace," (Jno. 1:16) and there is no doubt whatever that we have all received of His fullness, but we have by no means received His fullness. It was the beloved Paul who many years later bowed his knees before the God and Father of the Lord Jesus Christ and prayed "that ye might be filled with all the fullness of God." (Eph. 3:19) Have we ever even remotely understood what it would mean to be filled with such divine and almighty fullness - filled with all the fullness of God? For centuries we have groveled along imagining our little stagnant pool was His mighty ocean, so robbing ourselves of His fullness. We have wrestled with the demon at the foot of the mount, excusing ourselves because we could not cast him out, when just above us in the mount God was declaring, "This is my beloved Son," (Matt. 17)

It is unfortunate that Christians in these latter days have always associated the fullness of the Holy Spirit with power for service. They grasp eagerly for the baptism of the Spirit in a vain and selfish hope that they will have superhuman power over sickness and disease, or that they will have a spectacular ministry, or be possessed with spiritual gifts. But there is something far more important than this that has been completely overlooked. There is something far more important than powerful preaching and working of miracles. That important thing is the purifying effect the Holy Spirit will have upon the individual and personal life.

The scripture declares that we are changed by His Spirit from glory to glory until we come into the image of the Lord. "But we all with open face beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord are changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord." (2 Cor. 3:18) This is a truth Christians are missing. It is pitiful that we have overlooked it so long. We are like the disciples who sought who would be greatest, not knowing that he who would humble himself and become least would be the one who would be filled with the fullness of God.

I feel I cannot be too strong in my earnest exhortation to all who read that we would earnestly seek day by day to have an ever increasing fullness of the Holy Ghost. It is your God-given duty to seek the Spirit with far greater earnestness and sincerity than you would for silver or gold. I greatly fear that the god of this age is the dollar bill. It is called the almighty dollar and certainly that is the honor given it by most Christians today. Earthly and financial gain has become the prime and foremost requisite in most Christian lives while prayer, meditation, the reading of the Word, praise, kindness, love, the grace of giving, tithing, the leading of the Spirit, constant communion, repentance, and all such things that pertain to the fullness of the Spirit have been relegated to the realm of annoying nuisances that hinder us from going all out for the god of his age. How sorely we need to read and learn the lesson taught us by Peter when he wrote, "And beside all this, giving all diligence add to your faith virtue; and to virtue knowledge; and to knowledge temperance; and to temperance patience; and to patience godliness; and to godliness brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness, charity." Now listen to the promise that follows this exhortation. "For if these things be in you and abound, they make you that ye shall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ... For if ye do these things, yet shall never fall; for, so an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ." (2 Pet. 1:5-8, 10, 11).

It is time to stop, look, and listen. It is time to see if our rush for gold is canceling out our progress toward the kingdom of God. We are living in very, very important times. We are continually hearing wonderful things. But I warn you that the heights of sonship, the kingdom, and all the fullness of God are not attained by merely hearing about them. They must be our heart-absorbing, soul-consuming quest. Otherwise we will be like those who have heard the pipe but have not danced, and those who have heard the voice of mourning and have not wept. It has always been a vicious trait of man to hear but not to do. Thousands love to hear and read new things and listen to spiritual revelation, but never raise a finger to attain. Don't waste time telling me that we need do nothing about it. Don't try to persuade me that all we need do is believe. I would rather far listen to Paul who knew what he was talking about when he said, "Forgetting the things which are behind and reaching forth unto the things that are before, I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus." Again he says, "Leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on to perfection." (Heb. 6:1)

This last exhortation plainly shows that constant adherence to elementary doctrines is as great a hindrance to spiritual progress as anything could ever be.

I firmly believe it is time to leave the shadowy imperfect things of the dispensation of grace and begin to lay hold on those more permanent things that belong to the kingdom. Let us therefore no longer be interested in laying the foundation of repentance from dead works and faith toward God, baptisms, laying on of hands, but let us seek to go on to the perfection of sonship and the fullness of the Holy Spirit.

When I speak of the fullness of the Spirit, I am not speaking of an initial baptism of the Holy Spirit such as you may have received thirty or forty years ago, but I am speaking of an ever increasing fullness that gradually saturates and overwhelms your life, your being, and your walk until all your thinking, your walking, your talking, and your doing is done by the Holy Spirit Himself. Your whole life becomes a life lived in a realm that is strange and ethereal to all other men because almost all men live on a plane completely governed by the natural and the carnal mind.

It is difficult to illustrate what I mean because we have spent our lives interpreting scriptures as they seem to suit our experience regardless of how low the plane may be on which we dwell. But let us for a moment consider the pattern son, Jesus Christ, for He is the true pattern and sign of the sons who are to come. The life of Jesus Christ, the pattern Son, the apostle Son, the high priest Son, was a life completely swallowed up by the fullness of the Holy Spirit. Immediately following His baptism it is stated, "Then was Jesus led of the Spirit into the wilderness," and I have no hesitation in saying that in His case from that very moment on there was never a thought or a word or a deed that was outside the realm of the Holy Spirit. The works that He did were in His Father's name. Jno. 10:25, 5:36. All His words were of the Father. "I do nothing of Myself; but as My Father has taught Me, I speak these things." (Jno. 8:28) And again: "I speak that which I have seen with My Father." Jno. 8:38. Nothing was ever done to please self in any way, but rather He said, "I do always those things that please Him." (Jno. 8:29) Empty laughing and joking had no place in His life, but He "rejoiced in the Spirit" (Luke 10:21), and for the joy that was set before Him He endured the cross and despised the shame. He was born of the Spirit, was baptized in the Spirit, lived by the Spirit, worked by the Spirit, talked by the Spirit, died in the Spirit, rose by the Spirit, and ascended by the Spirit, and even now, though He was crucified through weakness, yet He liveth by the power of God.

Perhaps it is beyond the scope of this message to speak much of that blessed person, the Holy Spirit. But that we may better see our vast need of Him as Lord of our lives, let me point out a few of the names and titles of the Holy Spirit, for each and every name given to Him in the word of God teaches us some new thing that points to our immense need of living and moving in Him. First, He is the Holy Spirit. That is His name. While men struggle for lives of holiness and righteousness, God is telling us that His glorious fullness will make us holy. He is the Spirit of Holiness. Angels are spirits and they are holy, but He is the very essence, the source, and the spring of all the holiness in the universe. He is the Spirit of Adoption (sonship). What a truth is here, for all those who long for sonship, for all who are led by Him and who are under His control are sons of God and cry from the Spirit within, "Abba Father" (our Father). He is the Spirit of Truth. All the truth of the universe emanates from Him and all who are under His control speak only the truth of the Lord.

He is the Spirit of God. (1 Cor. 3:16)
He is the Spirit of wisdom and understanding, council, and might. (Isa. 11:2)

He is the Spirit of the Lord. (Isa. 11:2) He is the Spirit of Jesus Christ. (Phil. 1:19) He is the Spirit of Burning. (Isa. 4:4) He is the Spirit of Life. (Rom. 8:2) He is the Spirit of Grace. (Heb. 10:29) He is the Spirit of Glory. (1 Pet. 4:14) He is the Eternal Spirit. (Heb. 9:14)

Each one of these names is worthy of life-long thought and meditation. This is not a variety of names given to break the monotony of sameness. These names teach us that everything we could ever hope for, desire, or accomplish is found in the fullness of the blessed comforter, the Paraclete, that proceeds from the Father and the Son. To those who seek for holiness He is the Spirit of holiness; to those who long for sonship He is the Spirit of adoption. He is the Spirit of truth to all who love truth and the Spirit of wisdom to those who would be wise. To Him who longs for understanding He is the Spirit of understanding and where there is need of power He is the Spirit of might. To those who would be in the image of Christ He is the Spirit of Jesus Christ. For freedom from flesh and corruption He is the Spirit of burning and judgment. He is the Spirit of life to all who love life, the Spirit of glory for our transformation, the eternal Spirit bringing all those who are in unity with Him to the fullness of God's life for ever and ever. In Him let us live and move and have our being. He was the all-embracing, all-controlling power in the wonderful life of that pattern Son, Jesus Christ, and He will also be Lord in the lives of all those by the Spirit of glory are coming into Christ's image.

My heart is filled with a burning longing as I think of those whom God is calling to share the image of His Son. Oh that we all might seek His fullness, that we might cast from us every unclean and hurtful thing, that base thoughts having their beginning in the corrupt fountains of the carnal mind might be swept away. Those who seek for glory and honor, immortality and eternal life will not find it in the flesh pots of Hollywood, but they will find it in the ever increasing fullness of the Holy Ghost, and every man who has this hope in him purifies himself even as He is pure.

CHAPTER TWO
SONSHIP THE HOPE OF ALL CREATION

The languages of earth do not contain words descriptive and meaningful enough to adequately describe the immensity and all-embracing scope of the work of Jesus Christ, the Son of the Living God. Human vocabularies were designed to fit human needs and are capable of nothing more. Once the heart of man reaches out to a realm beyond the natural, it finds itself lost for proper descriptions and hopelessly bound up in the phrases of human speech. For unnumbered centuries men have sought to extol and magnify the work of Jesus Christ, but their efforts and eloquence have been no more than the shining of a penny candle in the darkness of a world blinded by sin, full of human ways of looking at things, and with no power of perception beyond the darkness of the natural mind. In trying to honor Him, we have often brought Him dishonor and, in trying to magnify His work, we have dragged it in the dust and desolation of human reason and finite understanding.

If only men would open their hearts that they might behold the power and glory of the all-embracing purpose of the Father in that hour when He proclaimed the edict, "Let us make man in our image and after our likeness." If we could even begin to grasp the depths of meaning of those mighty words, "Let us give him dominion over the fish of the sea, over the birds of the air, and everything that moveth upon the earth." (Gen. 1:26) Oh, that men might see that at that moment wisdom was rejoicing in the habitable part of God's mountain, so that the morning stars sang together, and the sons of God filled the vastness of heaven with their shouts of joy and anticipation as they beheld what the end of the plan would be! There is always the possibility of our being wrong, for lacking in understanding we always are, but there is a chord deep in my heart that still echoes to that shout of joy. There is a faith to believe that in the long-forgotten past we were there with Him in spirit beholding with joy the unfolding of His marvelous plan. But as Nebuchadnezzar had forgotten his former glory when his brilliant mind was taken away and he was given the mind of a beast, so we, too, have forgotten the glorious things of the past ages, because for a purpose we were born into this world in sin and shapen in iniquity. This assurance I have that, if the "spirit returns to God who gave it", then certainly it must have come from God in the first place. There is little possibility of our denying that.

For many centuries all creation has groaned and sighed under the thralldom of sin and decay, but our heavenly Father had a purpose eternal and omniscient when in hope He subjected the whole creation to the desolation of the fall. "For the creature was made subject to vanity, not willingly, but by reason of Him who hath subjected the same in hope." (Rom. 8:20) Ever since that day the earnest expectation of the creature has waited for the manifestation of the sons of God. (Verse 19)

Every man needs the spirit of revelation from God. I do not refer to that silly spirit so often found among zealous Christians that is always clamoring to come up with some new idea that they can call a revelation. It is not a flurry of fantastic fancies that we need, but a great spirit of wisdom and understanding given by God that will unfold to us the immutable almighty omniscience of God's eternal purpose. That spirit of wisdom and understanding from God gives the heart of man the ability to receive and understand the purpose of His divine mind that has been planned from time immemorial.

There is certainly no lack of fantastic notions among Christians which they imagine are revelations. Should I try to imbibe or believe even half the weird doctrines people propose to me, I would now be floundering in a sea of utter confusion and my frail bark would soon be wrecked upon the rocky reefs that encompass the island of oblivion. Paul once wailed out his complaint against the useless doctrines of the Galatian Christians in these words: "After ye have known God, or rather are known of Him, how turn ye again to the weak and beggarly elements whereunto ye desire again to be in bondage? Ye observe days, and months, and times, and years. I am afraid of you lest I have bestowed labor upon you in vain". (Gal. 4:10, 11) Then to the legalistic Colossians he insisted, "Let no man judge you in meat, or in drink, or in respect of an holy day, or of the new moons, or of the sabbath days; which are a shadow of things to come, but the body is of Christ." (Col. 2:16, 17) All such doctrines are only noisemakers that are sent to attract our attention away from making Christ our supreme Lord and head. See (Col. 2:18, 19) Let us seek to abandon all such side issues and seek to concentrate on Christ. Those who will possess the mind of Christ will find in Him the end of all doctrine, the antitype of all types, the source of all rivers, the fullness of all love, and the culmination of all purpose. He is the head of us all, "and it is from the head alone that the body is nourished and built up and grows according to God's laws of growth." (Col. 1:19) (Phillips). Let us abandon then the doctrines that concern themselves with eating and drinking, touching, tasting, and handling, or of days, weeks, and years, and seek to become one with Christ, for all who have come unto unity with Him need instruction in none of these things. The complete will of God flows forth from their hearts as naturally as pure water gushes from a pure fountain.

Christ is the head of all principality and power; therefore, concern not yourself with principality and power, but with Him. "By Him all things consist"; therefore, concern not yourself with things, but with Him and all things will consist by Him. He is the end of all things; therefore, concern yourself with Him who is the end and all things will have their end in Him. He is the head of the body; therefore, seek to be joined to Him and your place in the body is assured. Christ is our wisdom and our righteousness; therefore, seek neither wisdom nor righteousness, but seek Him and both wisdom and righteousness shall be yours because He is yours. Christ is our life and our light; therefore, seek neither life nor light, but enthrone Him upon the candlestick within you and the bright shining of the candle shall give you the light of God. Oh what time and effort we waste in seeking things, things, things instead of knowing Him. In His presence is fullness of joy; therefore, seek not joy but His presence. "At His right hand are pleasures forevermore," therefore, seek not pleasure but to stand at His right hand. The Lord is my light and my salvation; whom shall I fear. The Lord is the strength of my life; of whom shall we be afraid?
CHRIST ON DAVID'S THRONE. Psalm 23

The Lord is my shepherd, I shall not want.
He maketh me to lie down in green pastures.
He leadeth me beside still waters.
He restoreth my soul.
He leadeth me in paths of righteousness for His name's sake.
Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death,
I will fear no evil for Thou art with me.
Thy rod and Thy staff they comfort me.
Thou prepar'st a table before me in the presence of mine enemies.
Thou anointest my head with oil; my cup runneth over.
Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life
And I shall dwell in the house of the Lord forever.

We may have read that beautiful passage ten thousand times. Most of us know it by heart, but today it holds new meaning. I think I see today what David saw when inspiration gripped his soul and he sang those meaningful words. See how he makes the Lord the hub and center of everything - the shepherd, the leader, the feeder, the restorer, the anointer, the comforter, and the eternal abiding place.

We hear a great deal today about many wonderful things. As we draw nearer the end of this dispensation and the kingdom morning sends its first rays upon our waiting souls, there will be an ever increasing flood of light and revelation. This we must certainly expect and accept, for new days bring new things, and new dispensations are sent to flood the world with greater light and greater experience in God.

No truth has come with more soul-gripping force and power to the elect of the Lord than the hope of sonship. Well indeed may we lay hold upon that glorious eternal hope, for divine wisdom has ordained that that sonship should be the hope of all creation. It is for sonship that the whole creation groans in a sort of universal travail while it waits to see the glorious sight of the sons of God coming into their own. Rom. 8:22, 23.

Every man and woman who has even in the least partaken of revelation must learn that to love sonship is not a presumptuous infringement on the plan of God. To love and covet sonship is to love and covet the very purpose of God from timeless ages. When the morning stars sang together and the sons of God shouted for joy, was it not because they were then beholding the final fulfillment of God's plan for His sons and for the whole creation through them? Let us give ear to the inspired words of Paul as he shouts, "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath blessed us with all spiritual blessing in heavenly places in Christ according as He hath chosen us in Him before the foundation of the world (before the ages were formed) that we should be holy and without blame before Him in love; having predestined us unto the adoption of children by Jesus Christ to Himself according to the good pleasure of His will." (Eph. 1:3-5) I am afraid that we have all failed to grasp the true meaning of that scripture because of the rather weak expression "unto the adoption of children." The true meaning is that He has predestined us to sonship or, as Moffat says, "designed us in His love to be His sons."

It is hard to understand how the true purpose of sonship has been overlooked and missed for so many centuries. For many ages Christians have thought of sonship as a sort of sentimental thing that amounted to little more than a kind expression on God's part that we should be patted on the head and called sons of God. To most people sonship means little more than material for another Sunday morning sermon or at best some title we will possess in the ages to come.

The truth is that our sonship is now and always was the hope of the entire creation of God. Sonship is dearer to God's heart than any other thing. God the Father has carefully planned our sonship from timeless ages. Every detail of the process by which we were to attain the perfection of sonship was laid down in heaven's blueprint before there was a world, an age, or a dispensation. In the hope of sonship He has subjected the entire creation to the thralldom and decay of ages and dispensations. He has caused men like Abraham to become wanderers and pilgrims on the earth throughout their lives in the hope of bringing them to the perfection of sonship He demands. He has sold men like Joseph into slavery and imprisonment to bring them to sonship. He sends His predestined sons to pass the night in lions' dens and burning fiery furnaces and drops His Jeremiahs into muddy wells all in the hope of sonship. He sends His only begotten Son into the world to learn obedience by the things He suffered, to be despised and rejected of men, a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief. He afflicts His apostle, Paul, with a grievous thorn and causes him to cry with joy from the blackness of his grief, "These light afflictions which are but for a moment are working for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." And for our sakes who are often as sorely tried he names in the eleventh chapter of Hebrews a great cloud of witnesses that died in faith after a life of suffering to wait for that glorious resurrection when both they and us would in the mercy of God be made perfect together.

The sonship which God has planned cannot be attained lightly and with ease. All who bear this eternal hope within their breasts may as well resolve here and now and that the only path that leads to sonship is the path of suffering. Along that path is lonesomeness, temptation, despair, trials, tribulations, misunderstanding, rejection, pain - a great variety of sufferings that come in one way to you, another way to me, and in still another way to our brother or sister traveler. It is unavoidable. It cannot be dodged. At the beginning of the road that leads to sonship stands the first Son of God, Jesus Christ the Lord, saying, "If any man would follow Me, let him deny himself (self) and take up his cross and follow Me." It is still the way of the cross that leads us home, and be warned of this: Your associates will become fewer and fewer as you approach the agonies of Gethsemane, and when you reach your cross you will find yourself alone - alone except for Christ who has now formed within you.

It disgusts me to hear these breezy preachers proclaiming abundance for all and freedom from all sickness and pain and poverty. It has a wonderful appeal to the flesh and to the carnal mind, but it is a way that seemeth right unto a man and the end thereof are the ways of death. It is a gross untruth to tell a suffering man that his suffering is caused by some inconsistency or sin in his life. How often I have heard it proclaimed that the tribulations and distresses through which God's people pass are caused through some sin in their lives and that if they were right with God they would have no trouble at all. It is a lie, I tell you. It is a lie. The opposite is the truth. I know that sin and profligacy have caused many forms of sickness and distress among wicked men, but that is another question altogether and certainly gives no license to condemn a righteous man who is living in good conscience before the Lord. Was Job sick because he was sinful? No! A thousand times No! He was sick because God wanted to bring him to sonship and to sonship He brought him. I often think of the nosey way the disciples asked Jesus about the blind man when they said, "Who did sin, this man or his parents that he was born blind?" Jesus replied, "Neither this man nor his parents, but that the glory of God should be manifested." (Jno. 9:2, 3) I do not ask you to glory in your sickness, your loss of business, or whatever other tribulation may come upon you, but glory in the fact that as you allow these things to work in you the lesson God intended the end will be sonship. Perhaps, if we enquired of God as Paul did, we might hear Him say to us, "My grace is sufficient for thee, for My strength is made perfect in weakness," and then we could rejoice and say with him, "Most gladly therefore will I take pleasure in afflictions, in distresses, in persecutions, that the power of Christ may rest upon me, for when I am weak then am I strong."

I thoroughly believe in divine healing and could write a book on the healings I have seen in my own ministry, but I greatly fear that healing has been taken over by unscrupulous men who, in spite of all their protestations to the contrary, make themselves rich by playing upon the sufferings of the people. The eyes of the people have been turned away from Christ while they run endless journeys to place their confidence in a human being - in a highly advertised man.

What hypocrites we have become as we blithely sing, "The way of the cross leads home," yet senselessly smile the man who has a cross to bear! What inconsistent humbug is it that allows a man to read the words of the Lord, "We shall through much tribulation enter into the kingdom of heaven," while with tongue in cheek we condemn those who are sweating blood as they wrestle in their Gethsemanes or struggle beneath their heavy cross on the way to their Golgotha! Such men and women, void of spiritual understanding, do not know that they themselves are adding their weight to our cross and are casting stumbling stones before our bleeding feet. Have you ever considered the scripture which says, "Forasmuch then as Christ hath suffered for us in the flesh, arm yourselves likewise with the same mind; for he that hath suffered in the flesh hath ceased from sin that he should no longer live the rest of his time in the flesh to the lusts of men but to the will of God." (1 Pet. 4:1, 2) "He that hath suffered in the flesh hath ceased from sin!" There is something about suffering of any kind that brings the world and the flesh into its proper perspective. Suffering makes us understand things as they really are. By suffering we see the worthlessness of all the passing vanities of earth and by it we are weaned away from the vain deceits that concern a purely physical world. Suffering of any kind causes us to be done with the transient affairs of this present age and inspires us to anchor all our hopes within the veil whither the forerunner is for us entered.

Since heaven's greatest desire for the sons of men is that they shall be sons of God, let us learn that God scourgeth every son whom He receiveth. For what son is there that receiveth not chastisement? Chastisement is sent that we might learn the will of the Father and come to cherish that will above all the glittering prizes of the world now present or the world which is to come. We are not asked to accept suffering for suffering's sake, but we are asked to accept and endure suffering for sonship's sake. This is the royal road that leads us to sonship. This is the burning cleansing fire that is to try us. It will not singe one hair of our head nor leave the smell of fire upon us, but it will bum off our bondages and shackles and leave us free to walk unharmed in the fire with One like the son of God.

I do not know how or why Christians came to the conclusion that sonship was to be declared and made manifest by mighty works. It pains my heart to hear of men who imagine they are manifested sons of God, because of their prominence in some field of ministry. I know of no man or woman on earth today who even remotely resembles a manifested son of God. We are at the very door of the great manifestation of the sons of God, but God hath reserved it for a time known only to Himself. Then the wonderful perfection of the sons of God will be manifested. There will be a resurrection of those sons who sleep to join those who still walk the earth. "They without us should not be made perfect". Neither shall we without them be made perfect. There shall be a resurrection unto life that shall disclose the wonder of the ages. It was for this very reason that the Lord said to Daniel, "Go thy way, Daniel, for thou shalt rest and stand in thy lot at the end of the days." (Dan. 12:13) It is near, very near; even at the doors.

There is something about sonship that has a deep root in the hearts of all people. The families of earth anxiously await the arrival of a son. In ancient times it was thought a tragedy that any family should be without a son who would carry on the work and name of the father. This longing in the heart of all mankind had its origin in the heart of the eternal Father who, upon bringing His only begotten Son into the world, proclaimed, "This is My beloved Son in whom I am well pleased." It must have been a wonderful night for the shepherds of Israel who heard the heavenly choir of angels proclaiming the coming of the Son of God. It was a grand moment in John's life when he saw the heavens proclaiming, "This is My beloved Son in whom I am well pleased." God was delighted with His Son, His 'only son. So delighted was He in that Son's perfection that even before the worlds began He purposed to prepare a whole family of sons in His exact image and likeness and form of them one great body of sons which should rule the entire universe according to His divine will.

The languages of earth simply do not contain words that are able to express the vast importance of this family of God's sons. There is not a doubt but that every one of us has failed to comprehend the universal purpose of God in bringing many sons to glory. Words utterly fail to explain the truth which revelation inspires, leaving us helplessly groping for expression. If the Spirit of God will come to my aid, I will try to state as best I can the wonderful purpose of God in sonship. Well do I know that my best efforts will fall far short of His glorious understanding, but, if His Spirit will stir the deep chord of revelation, then understand will come. Ear hath not heard, neither hath entered into the heart of man the things God hath prepared for them that love Him, but He hath revealed then to us by His Spirit.

"... The works that I do shall ye do also and greater works than these shall ye do, because I go to the Father." (Jno. 14:12) This passage of scripture has been the subject of discussion for centuries. The discussion always involves the mighty works of Jesus and the practical impossibility of anyone's doing any work greater than His work. We recount His mighty acts in healing every manner of sickness and disease. We tell with awe of His raising the dead back to life again. We repeat with wonder the story of the stilling of the sudden storm on the lake of Galilee and of His walking the stormy waves. We love to read the accounts of the devils that were cast out by His word and of the endless hosts of sad and afflicted who went away filled with joy and we tell of His words of wisdom and the teachings which none could gainsay nor resist. We speak of His undying love and mercy to all who needed Him. We glory in His death and resurrection and His ascension into heaven. So many marvels crowned His wonderful life that words fail us to tell or imagine how glorious He really was. Perhaps the beloved John most appropriately described it all by saying, "I suppose, if all the books were written that should be written, even the world itself would not contain the books that should be written." (Jno. 21:25)

What then are these mighty works of which He spoke when He who could not lie declared, "The works that I do shall ye do also, and greater works than these shall ye do because I go to My Father?" If we are going to understand what He said, we shall have to open our hearts to a completely new understanding of God's eternal purposes. We will have to see that sonship is God's masterpiece, and that in the manifestation of the sons of God the eternal purposes of God find their complete fulfillment.

The great soul-gripping truth is this. Jesus Christ, our Lord and Saviour, is the only begotten Son of God. Moreover He is the first begotten Son of God, but not the last begotten. He is the firstborn of a vast family of sons who through the wisdom and grace of God are to be born of God, not of water, not of blood, not of flesh, but born of God. Jno. 1:13. Thus it is that Paul by the wisdom of God given unto him did write, "Whom He did foreknow He did predestinate to be conformed to the image of His Son that He might be the firstborn among many brethren." (Rom. 8:29) I love the translation of Weymouth which reads, "That He might be the eldest in a vast family of brothers." Just how vast that family is I am not sure, but I am sure there will be 144,000 who have the name of God in their foreheads. These are sons of God. (Rev. 14) It is a small company in relation to the billions of earth, but for the sake of sonship and one body in the exact image of Jesus Christ it is indeed a vast family. This is the man-child company spoken of in Rev. 12. These are they who are to be caught up to God and to His throne and who will have the privilege of perfecting the woman in the wilderness and of bringing her forth purified, leaning on the arm of her beloved.

Before we speak further of greater works, let us open our hearts that God may speak to us and show us what a son of God really is, for the greater works of which Jesus spoke are not to be performed by ordinary believers, but by that vast family of sons who are now nearing the hour of manifestation. They are that chosen company, selected from many ages, who through fires and furnaces of affliction have been brought into that same glorious image of Jesus Christ. These sons of God are like Him. They are exactly like Him. They are in His image. (Rom. 8:29) They are in His image and after His likeness. They are so completely sons of God, so completely like Him, so completely born of Him, so completely of His mind and will and purpose that their one difference is that He (the blessed Jesus) is the eldest in that vast family of sons, Rom. 8:29. He is the head of the body of sons and they with Him are the bridegroom, the last Adam in all His completeness.

With the pen of inspiration Paul wrote, "It behooved Him for whom are all things, and by whom are all things, in bringing many sons to glory to make the captain (Jesus Christ) of our salvation perfect through suffering." (Heb. 2:10) In like manner John, his soul aflame with inspiration, wrote, "Beloved, now are we the children of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be, but we know that when He shall appear we shall be like Him, for we shall see Him as He is, and every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself even as He is pure." (1 Jno. 3:2) When He shall appear, we shall be like Him. Wonderfully like Him! Exactly like Him! In His Image! In His likeness! The omniscience of His wisdom, the purity of His truth, the omnipotence of His power, the immutability of His love, the faithfulness of His purpose! Full of His grace, His purpose. His kindness, and His unending mercy! The sons shall be like Him for He shall dwell in them all.

Oh, what glory divine it would have been to have stood with John that day on lonely Patmos to behold with him that complete Christ! The Christ of Nazareth complete with all His sons in the end of the age! The glorious head with eyes as lamps of fire all complete with the other sons of His body standing with His beautiful feet burning as though in a furnace of fire! And when the voice of that One like the Son of man rang out, it was not the voice of the lonely Galilean, but the voice as the sound of many waters. Many waters means many peoples, and the peoples here are the sons of God. The vision is recorded for our knowledge and inspiration thus: "On the Lord's day I was inspired by the Spirit and I heard behind me a loud voice like the blast of a trumpet... I turned to see who it was who was speaking to me; and then I saw seven golden lampstands, and in the center of the lampstands One resembling the Son of man, clothed in a robe which reached to His feet and a girdle of gold across His breast. His head and His eyes were like a flame of fire. His feet were like silver bronze when it is white hot in a furnace; and His voice was as the sound of many waters. In His right hand He held seven stars, and a sharp two-edged sword was seen coming from His mouth, and His face was like the sun shining in its full power. When I saw Him, I fell at His feet as dead." (Rev. 1:11-16) (Weymouth)

Before the glory of that vision John fell to the earth as dead. Never in all his long, eventful life, filled with the wonders of spiritual experience, had he ever once imagined the breath-taking glory of the Lord's Christ. He had seen the Galilean subjugate to His control any force or power He desired. He had beheld the awe-inspiring view from the mount of the transfiguration. He had walked with Christ after the resurrection and had seen His glorified body. He had watched Him ascend to heaven and had experienced the glory divine of the fullness of the Holy Spirit. If any man on earth understood the purpose of God, it must have been John, but though he had seen the glory of Christ as He was at first, he was not prepared to see Him as He is at last. Before the effulgent glory of that vision he fell as dead. Years before he had heard the Savior say, "Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone; but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit." Now as his eyes beheld the harvest, Christ in fullness and completeness, he understood the meaning of those words. Many sons brought to glory! Every one in His image and likeness! Everyone with His nature, His mind, and His voice so that His speaking was as the voice of a multitude. Here for the first time we get a picture of what the body of Christ really is - not a hodge-podge of religious denominations, sects and organizations, but one like the Son of man with one vision, one voice and one likeness.

If by the grace of God the truth of this holy vision can burst upon you, all other loves will fade away from your heart. The activities of a visible Babylonish church system have tarnished and dimmed our vision so that we see nothing of the truth. In our desire to promote we have promoted things instead of Christ. We have loved programs and meetings instead of loving Him until we find ourselves in the end of the age with a sort of Christless Christianity. Oh, how we have lauded our systems, our education, our degrees, and our theology!
But the more of worldly wisdom we know, the less we know of the wisdom of God, and the deeper we go into such systems, the farther away from God we get. How proud we have become of our titles and degrees that are supposed to commend us to the world as men of understanding in spiritual things when in reality we know nothing yet as we ought to know! Men love to be called Reverend and Doctor, Most Reverend and Very Reverend, Reverend Doctor, Father, and many other such titles. But this I know; any man who even glimpses the glory of God will be ashamed of his knowledge and repent that he ever thought himself to be someone of importance. Let us drop all these titles that commend us to men, but not to God, and humble ourselves in His sight that we may begin to partake of the wisdom that is from above, for we cannot partake of His wisdom which is from above until we abandon our wisdom which is of this world.

Let us return now to the thought of the greater works. When the beloved Luke wrote the book we call the Acts of the Apostles, he commenced his work with the enlightening statement, "The former treatise have I made, 0 Theophilus, of all that Jesus began to do and teach until the day in which He was taken up..." (Acts 1:1, 2) The part of the verse of interest here is the statement "began to do and teach", for this tells us as nothing else can that Jesus did not complete His work when He was on earth, but He only "began" His work.

In making the above statement, I am fully aware that such a thought runs contrary to long-established views of theology, but we are not concerned with the views of theology, for theology is not really the views of God but the ideas of men. I am concerned only with the purpose of God as it is revealed in His word in the light of inspiration and revelation.

When the Son of God came into the world, He came to do only one complete work and that was the work of redemption. The Son of man came, not to be ministered unto, but to minister and to give His life as a ransom for many. Mark 10:45. Thus it was that, when He died, He uttered the three significant words, "It is finished." Thus also He declared before the Father, "I have finished the work which Thou gavest Me to do." (Jno. 17:4) What people of all ages have failed to see is that Jesus Christ, the only begotten Son of God, did the work which God gave Him to do and no more than that. All the other wonderful things He did were only a beginning of a work that was to be carried out by the other sons who were to come into His glorious image as the ages passed. To them it is given to do greater works than He did and to bring to God's universal creation the endless blessing of the redemption He purchased with His eternal blood, which He gave for the life of the world.

It seems to me that the wild creatures of creation together with the grass of the fields and the trees of the woods have more understanding of God's plan for them than do the theologians of the church, for Paul by the word of inspiration wrote these words: "The earnest expectation of the creature waiteth for the manifestation of the sons of God. For the creature was made subject to vanity, not willingly, but by reason of Him who hath subjected the same in hope. Because the creature itself shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the sons of God. For we know that the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now, and not they only, but ourselves also which have the firstfruits of the Spirit, even we ourselves groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption (sonship), to wit, the redemption of the body." (Rom. 8:19-23) Perhaps there is no other single passage of scripture which throws so much light on the great works which have been left for the sons of God to do. The whole of God's creation is breathlessly waiting for the time of the manifestation of the sons of God. The whole creation has been subjected to a sort of universal travail. It has endured for centuries the terrible bondage of corruption, but God has placed a hope in all creation that it will eventually be delivered from its thralldom and decay by the ministry of the sons of God, who are now being formed in the very image of Christ and will be manifested in the glory of His resurrection at the end of this age and throughout the entire kingdom to come.

The mighty works which Jesus, the first Son, began will be completed by the other sons who are coming into His image. This is not presumption on the part of man. This is the plan and purpose of God. Failure to see this truth has caused men to create many hare-brained schemes to try to convert the world or to bring in some Utopia of their own choosing long before God's time.

When Jesus said, "Greater works than these shall ye do," He meant exactly that. As the Head Son of the body He demonstrated the mighty power and glory of manifested sonship and showed that all things, absolutely all things, come under the power and authority of the sons of God. While He was here, He with wonderful grace and power opened the eyes of blind men and caused some who were dumb to speak. But a greater day is at hand when under the rule of the sons of God all blindness and dumbness will flee from the earth, for "the eyes of the blind shall be opened and the tongue of the dumb shall sing." In His beginning of miracles He healed many that were sick of divers diseases, but the day is at hand when "the inhabitants shall not say, I am sick." ( Isa. 33:24) Jesus by His power of eternal life raised men from the dead, but the day is coming under the government of the sons of God when men shall not die at all, but live out the fullness of their days in reverence and godly fear. (Isa. 65:20)

It would be simple to go on and on with these comparisons. There are, however, other mighty works which Jesus during all His life never once began to do. I am absolutely certain that there was no sickness or disease known to mankind that He did not cure. There was no demon that did not flee at His order. Even death dropped the keys and fled at His command. Wind and water obeyed His will, and those who came to take Him went backward and fell to the ground when He spoke. But did this King of kings and Lord of lords ever attempt to set up a kingdom and govern the world? Did He ever call all the nations before Him and set up a judgment seat? Did He ever attempt to wipe inequity and inequality from the earth? Did He command men to beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning-hooks? Did He ever command the demon of war to flee from the hearts of men and trouble the earth no more? Did He cause the desert to blossom as the rose or Jerusalem to be safely inhabited? No, He did not - not because He could not, but because God has reserved these greater works of universal magnitude and glory for those sons of God who are to share His image and who appear at the end of the age.

The work and scope of the ministry of Jesus of Nazareth was amply described by Himself when He entered into the synagogue and read from the book of Isaiah. "The Spirit of the Lord is upon Me because He hath anointed Me to preach (proclaim) the gospel to the poor. He hath sent Me to heal the broken hearted, to proclaim deliverance to the captives and recovery of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised, and to proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord." (Luke 4:18, 19) His whole life consisted of a proclamation and a demonstration of those all-embracing wonders that are to come during that coming kingdom age, which He here calls the acceptable year of the Lord.
There is yet another work that transcends by far anything that has ever been known. It has been so carefully hidden from our understanding that for the most part we do not even know of its existence. There is a realm beyond the natural realm where men with spiritual senses see, hear, taste, touch, and smell all spiritual realities. The transcending glory of that realm has been lost to man ever since the fall. Which do you think is greater? To restore a man's natural hearing that he may hear the sounds of earth such as music and the voices of people or to restore that spiritual ear that listened to God's voice in lovely Eden and heard the voice of Alpha and Omega on the Isle of Patmos? Which would you say was greater - to restore a man's physical sense of taste that he might taste loaves and fishes or restore his spiritual taste that he might taste and see that the Lord is good? Again which do you think is the greater - to restore man's physical sense of feeling that he might feel the hard substances of earth or to restore his spiritual sense of feeling that he might feel the moving of the breath of God? The physical sense of smell is a wonderful sense, indeed, but the fragrance of heaven's perfume is greater far and will once again be enjoyed as it was in God's Eden long ago. There is an unseen world all about us that the natural man does not comprehend. Eye hath not seen nor ear heard, neither hath it entered into the heart of man. Yet it is there. We lost our spiritual sight in Eden. We lost our spiritual hearing. We lost our ability to smell and taste and feel all spiritual things. The Bible gives abundant examples of the existence and nearness of that glorious realm of spiritual reality and it is clear for anyone to see that all who have experienced the blessedness of even a momentary entrance into that realm have found that it alone is real, while we who are in this bondage of corruption live in a world of illusion and unreality.

There is coming a day when all the glories of the spiritual world will be opened to men and this glorious freedom, this greater work, is reserved for the sons of God to do. We are nearing the hour of the manifestation of the sons of God. The long, long awaited liberation from bondage, thralldom, and decay is near at hand. The greater works which Jesus, our elder brother, told us of are soon to begin on the earth. The hour is at hand when the government shall be upon His shoulder to order the whole world in justice and judgment, peace and equity for the glorious kingdom age. At this very moment the governments of earth are falling apart at the seams and collapsing, but God is preparing an enduring kingdom that shall never be destroyed. The sons shall reign with Him.

I have found even among good men that there is a tendency to imagine that the Son of God (Jesus Christ) and the sons of God who are to be manifested at the end of the age are two separate entities. This is not true. Such an idea comes from a lack of understanding as to what a son of God really is, and how such a son comes into being at all.

It is impossible to explain to the natural mind how two entirely separate things can, though separate, still be one. Men seem to be able to understand how a foot, a hand, and a head can, though separate and different, all be members of one and the same body. We are able to understand this because these members are joined together by flesh and sinew and blood, but when we are asked to believe that the Son of God at the right hand of the Father is one with the sons of God on earth, we flounder in the bogs of unbelief and trip over the stones of doubt and misunderstanding. If, however, we would ask God to reveal this mystery, we would easily see that, if physical members joined only by the weakness of flesh and blood can be one, how much more one are things joined by the Spirit of the living God! An arm that is severed from the body no longer belongs to the body because the bonds of flesh are broken, but time or place or space has nothing whatever to do with the unity of the Spirit, for the Spirit is omnipresent even as God is omnipresent. Therefore, whether a man's abode is on earth or in heaven makes absolutely no difference to spiritual unity, for to spirit there is neither time nor place. Time, place, distance, and all such things belong to the bondage and corruption of the flesh. The Spirit is confined by none of these things. Some day we will realize what a world of truth lay in the words of Jesus when He said, "No man hath ascended up to heaven but He that came down from heaven, even the Son of man which is in heaven." Jno. 3:13. He who lived as a Son of God and had His being in the Father and in the Spirit, even while standing upon the earth, was able to declare that He was in heaven, and so truly He was.

This should help us to see how we are one with Christ and how Christ is one with the Father. This should help us to understand the fathomless depths of meaning in the words of Jesus, "I in them and Thou in Me that they may be made perfect in one," (Jno. 17:23), and again in verse 21, "That they may be one as Thou, Father, art in Me and I in Thee, that they also may be one in us." It is this unity with Him and this alone that makes a son of God.
With all emphasis we must declare that sons of God only exist because of their vital relationship to Jesus Christ. By this I mean that Jesus Christ dwells in you as God Almighty dwelt in Him. If He does not dwell in you, you are not a son. It is Christ in you that is the hope of glory. Not Christ in heaven! Not Christ in the Father! Not Christ in your brother! It is Christ in you!

Good works, giving of alms, preaching, signs, miracles, healings, and all the rest have nothing whatever to do with sonship. We can have all these things and yet never live a day as a son of God. There are far too many people in the world who have the mistaken idea that their mighty works are proof of their sonship. Actually these works are proof of nothing. The works may be good; they may be commendable; they may be beneficial; they may be worthy of reward, but they are not proof of sonship, and never will be. Surely Jesus made this fact abundantly plain when He said, "Many will say to Me in that day, 'Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in Thy Name, and in Thy Name cast out devils and in Thy Name done many wonderful works? Then will I profess unto them, 'I never knew you; depart from me, ye that work iniquity.' " (Mark 7:22, 23) I can truthfully say that I believe in prophecy, but prophecy is no proof of sonship. I thoroughly believe in the casting out of devils, but it is not proof of sonship. Certainly I believe in wonderful works. But though you fill the earth with them, they will not commend you to God nor prove your sonship.

Let us consider again for a moment Paul's statement in (Col. 1:26, 27) "Even the mystery which hath been hid from ages and from generations, but is now manifest to His saints... which is Christ in you the hope of glory." The glory spoken of here is not heaven as has been generally supposed, but sonship. That is the highest and most glorious glory that God has ever given or ever will give. "The glory which Thou gavest Me I have given them," said Jesus. (Jno. 17:22) "Whom He did foreknow He also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of His Son, that He might be the firstborn among many brethren. Moreover, whom He did predestinate them He also called, and whom He called He also justified, and whom He justified He glorified." (Rom. 8:29-30) This is glory; this is glorification; this is sonship. The only hope of sonship, the only hope of glory, is for Jesus Christ, the Son of God, to dwell in you and control and order every step of your life. "As many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God." Christ in you is the hope of glory. Christ in me is the hope of glory. Sonship is not what I am, but what He is. Sonship is not what Christ is apart from me, but what He is in me.

Jesus Christ Himself was the Son of God because in Him dwelt all the fullness of the Godhead bodily. Even He did not hesitate to declare, "I can do nothing of Myself; as I hear I judge, and My judgment is just, because I seek not My own will but the will of the Father which sent Me." (Jno. 5:30) And again He said, "The Son can do nothing of Himself but what He seeth the Father do, for whatsoever He doeth, these also doeth the Son likewise." (Jno. 5:19) (If you would behold the glory and power of sonship, you should read Jno. 5:18-32.) Both the words and the works of Jesus were the words and the works of the Father who dwelt in Him. "The words that I speak unto you I speak not of Myself; but the Father that dwelleth in Me He doeth the works." (Jno. 14:10) It is the indwelling Christ that fills us with the very spirit of sonship. It is Christ within that causes the spirit to cry Abba Father. We can never be sons of God until that only begotten Son dwells in us. His indwelling presence will transform our lives until we are in His image and we can say with John, "As He is, so are we in this world."

We should earnestly consider the following question with prayer for guidance and understanding. Why was it that Jesus boldly and truthfully declared, "If ye had known Me ye should have known My Father also: and from henceforth ye know Him and have seen Him!" (Jno. 14:7) Why was it He said to Philip, "Have I been so long time with you and yet thou hast not known Me, Philip? He that hath seen Me hath seen the Father!" (Jno. 14:9) This passage would be without any hope of understanding were it not for the verse following which says, "Believest thou not that I am in the Father and the Father in Me?" Because the Father dwelt in fullness in Christ, therefore whoever had seen Christ had seen the Father. It is equally true that, when Christ lives in fullness in any human being, controlling and ordering his life, then whosoever has seen that man has also seen Christ. Paul the apostle saw that great truth by revelation when he declared, "I am crucified with Christ; nevertheless I live, yet not I but Christ liveth in me." The I that was crucified was himself, but the I which lived was Christ.
During the last few days these tremendous truths have flooded in upon my soul. If you would be holy, do not try to be holy. Christ is holy so let Him live in you. If you long for righteousness, do not try to be righteous. Christ is righteous, therefore let Him live in you. If you long for purity, do not seek to be pure. Seek to let Him live in you for He is pure. Do you long for sonship? Do not waste time seeking sonship. Let Him live in you. He is God's Son. Your relationship to sects, denominations, people, or things means nothing at all. It is your relationship to Him that counts, for that means everything.

Did He not say, "He that hath the Son hath life, but he that hath not the Son shall not see life but the wrath of God abideth on Him?" Why is it that he who hath the Son hath life? Is it not because in Him is life? Is it not equally true then that He that hath the Son hath wisdom, for in Him dwelleth all the treasures of wisdom? Is it not true also that He who hath the Son hath the mind of Christ, and he that hath the Son hath purity, holiness, truth, longsuffering, love, gentleness, faithfulness, meekness, temperance, judgment, and government? Does not the word declare that God has made Him wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption? Oh! world of truth, in Him are all things! Christ is all and in all, and Christ in you is the hope of glory. Here and here alone is the glory of sonship.

A. B. Simpson must surely have grasped the truth when he wrote these immortal words:

Once it was the blessing, now it is the Lord;
Once it was the feeling, now it is His Word;
Once the gift I wanted, now the Giver own;
Once I sought for healing, now Himself alone.
All in all forever, Jesus, will I sing;
Everything in Jesus, and Jesus everything.

CHAPTER THREE
THE PREPARATION OF THE SONS OF GOD

We should approach all the great truths of God with a sense of reverence and godly fear. The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom and understanding, and all people who would approach unto God should come to Him with a sense of great awe, realizing that He is infinite in all wisdom and understanding but that we know nothing yet as we ought to know. It is much better to listen than to speak in God’s presence. It is wise on our part to wrap the mantle of humility about our heads and stand to listen to His blessed voice. If men and women can be found who are more anxious to hear God speak than to hear themselves speak, we will find men and women who know the purpose of God. Sadly and bitterly we must confess that we have stood up boldly to argue our causes both loud and long, but we have spent little time at His feet disowning our own wisdom, disclaiming our own knowledge, emptying ourselves of vain traditions, repenting of our vain doctrines taught to us by men, and beseeching Him that we might be partakers of His eternal wisdom, His infinite understanding, His counsel and His might. Oh, that men would seek to cast off their natural minds, their human ways of looking at things, and become partakers of the mind of Christ!

Perhaps few people will believe me, but there is a day coming when all the great sermons will fade into insignificance in the light of His greatness and all the doctrines will become utterly lacking before the glory of His fullness. The great man will bow his head before God in shame and repentance and confess that he knew nothing as he ought to have known.

My heart's desire and prayer to God every waking hour of my life and in the night seasons as well is that I might be filled with the wisdom of Christ and be made one with His purpose and the knowledge of His will. For this to be accomplished, I find myself repenting constantly of the foolish things I have said, taught, and preached, and of the limited light and understanding I have had when I almost thought my little flickering candle to be as important as the sun and my tiny grain of sand to be the earth itself. Surely once again we need a Gamaliel to say to us, "Ye know nothing at all," or a Paul to say, "If any man thinketh he knoweth aught, he knoweth nothing yet as he ought to know," or Jesus to say to men who are so self-assured and confident in their knowledge of things, "Ye do greatly err, not knowing the scriptures or the power of God."
I am saying these things here and now so that we might know before we start reading the following pages that there is a universe of truth which we have never touched, heard, seen, nor tasted, and that if we would bow our heads before God and admit our ignorance, He would open to us the things which eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither hath entered into the heart of man.

One of the first things that Christians need to learn is that God is God. We need spiritual revelation to show us that God is almighty, that all the power and authority in the universe belongs to Him; that all things were made by Him, all things were made for Him, and all things consist and exist by His power; that thrones, dominions, principalities, and powers, whether in heaven or earth or hell, were created and designed by Him as part of His plan and purpose. Nothing can breathe or exist a second without Him. Nothing has power that He has not given. Even Satan himself is helpless and powerless and has no strength except what has been given him in the purpose of God. God is omnipotent. God is almighty. All power in heaven and earth belongs to Him.

Christians need a revelation of God's wisdom. It is not enough to say God is omniscient knowing the end from the beginning and the beginning from the end. We must be able to see that a mind so infinitely wise as to contain all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge in the universe would never allow anything of any description to sneak unknown into His purpose that He Himself had not planned. No mistakes were made in the Garden of Eden. Every detail was planned as part of an eternal purpose. "The creature was made subject to vanity, not willingly, but by reason of Him who hath subjected the same in hope." There were no mistakes in Eden. Neither were there any after thoughts about Calvary. All was planned before the foundation of the world. God is not making any mistakes today either. No enemy of any description is hindering His purpose even in the least, but all things are working together to triumphantly complete His purpose even as Paul once said, "We can do nothing against the truth." 2 Cor. 13:8. No man can truly love God until he sees Him wise beyond the possibility of error, omnipotent beyond the possibility of defeat, immutable beyond the possibility of change, incorruptible beyond the possibility of decay, immortal beyond the possibility of death, loving beyond the possibility of loss, and eternal beyond the corroding influence of time.

Such a God as this leaves nothing to chance but includes all in His purpose. Only creatures of ignorance take chances. God never does. It was not chance that sold Joseph into Egypt. It was purpose. It was not chance that shipwrecked Paul on the Island of Melita. It was infinite purpose. It was not fate that confined him to jail. It was purpose. It is not bad fate that three quarters of the earth have not heard the gospel. It is purpose. The glory and the wonder of that infinite purpose will be made crystal clear in the ages yet unborn when all who sat in heathen darkness will see a great light. Once a man sees by the Holy Ghost that all things are working according to His purpose, then with confidence, abandonment, and dedication he can cast himself upon the almighty arms of the Father and submit himself to the direction of Him whose mind is infinite and His purpose immutable.

It is with knowledge of His glorious infinity and of the smallness of our own wisdom that we open our hearts to learn a little more about that purpose of purposes, the manifestation of the sons of God. You may have to change your mind a little or a lot as you read through these pages, but please remember that a change of mind is not a sign of stupidity, but of growth. It was not a backward step when man first began to believe that the earth was round and not flat. Mankind is forever discarding some clumsy old theory as new light is shed on the wonders of the universe. The puff of smoke on the ocean's horizon is a sign that a ship is coming, and the cloud the size of a man's hand was a sign to Elijah that many clouds were on the way, and the sound of abundance of rain.

There is nothing more important at this hour than the preparation of the sons of God for manifestation. The manifestation of the sons of God is God's purpose for the end of this age, or, should I say, for that period between the ages of grace and the kingdom, in like manner as Jesus Christ, the first Son, was manifested between the ages of law and grace. It is the next great event in God's order. There is an event for which the whole creation is groaning and travailing. That glorious event is the manifestation of the sons of God. For years we have been taught that the hope of the church is to be raptured out of the world to escape the tribulation. For years I went along with that belief, but I cannot help but feel that most of the hope for a rapture is built upon man's human desire to escape suffering and tribulation, not knowing that it is through much tribulation that we enter the kingdom of God. While we have some statements that appear very definite about our being caught up, we must remember that Paul was caught up to the third heaven and yet remained right here on earth. John at Patmos was twice caught up to higher and higher realms in the Spirit in one and the same experience yet remained here to bear witness to it. Compare Rev. 1:10, Rev. 4:1. Then again the same truth is evident in Rev. 12 where the man child was caught up to God and His throne, yet was found feeding the woman in the wilderness even as Elijah did.

I have no great desire to change the mind of any man about these things, for we can safely leave this to the revelation of the Lord. However, the sons of God are not to be raptured out of the tribulation but will walk victoriously through it. They are not to be burned to a cinder by the fiery furnace of tribulation, but they are to walk as Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego with the Son of God, preserved in its sevenfold flame, to emerge liberated, unscathed, victorious, and without the smell of fire upon them. They are not to be eaten by the lions of the den, but to stand as Daniel unscathed and unharmed as the angel shut their mouths. They are not to perish of thirst in its wilderness, but to drink as Elijah of the brook of the living waters. They are not to die of hunger in its famine, but to supply the woman with meal and oil till judgment is sent forth unto glorious victory. They are not to be slain by its Jezebel (Babylon), but to defeat her prophets, destroy her altars, and race before the chariot of the king proclaiming rain upon the earth.

"I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory that shall be revealed in us. For the creature was made subject to vanity, not willingly, but by reason of Him (God) who hath subjected the same in hope, because the creature itself shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children (sons) of God. For the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now and not only they, but ourselves also, which have the first fruits of the Spirit, even we ourselves groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption (sonship), to wit, (which means), the redemption of our bodies." (Rom. 8:18-23) This wonderful classic written by Paul on sonship shows what the true hope of mankind really is. May I further add that that hope is not confined to man but includes every creature and thing in the animal and vegetable world, and heaven itself is waiting for the manifestation of the sons of God.

We must now prepare to follow along into deeper waters. You will not be able to hear with natural ears nor understand with natural minds what I am now going to say. You must beg God to open the eyes of your understanding that you might know the hope and the purpose that lies before us, and I pray mightily that God will open your eyes and anoint them with eye salve that you may behold these wonders.

It is a source of wonder to me that very, very few Christians can see any difference at all between the church and the manifested sons of God. But there is a vast difference, and I pray God will give us all help as we think about it now, for without His help and revelation we cannot hope to understand. In any marriage there are two bodies. There is one body of the man or bridegroom and another body of the woman or bride. The body of the man is a complete body in itself without the woman, having head, shoulders, torso, legs, and feet with every ligament, bone, and muscle. That body has its own head, its own body, and its own feet. This same thing is also true of the woman. She has her own head, her own body, and her own feet. But when the man and the woman are united in marriage, the man, the whole man, becomes the head of the woman, and the woman, becomes the body of the man. Thus also it is with Christ and the church. We must understand that the sons of God and the church are two distinct companies, the sons of God being the body of the bridegroom and the true church being the body of the bride. When both are complete and perfect they will become one. It is about this very thing that Paul speaks in Ephesians 5. "This is a great mystery, but I speak concerning Christ and the church."

At least twice in the holy scripture Jesus Christ is referred to as a sign. In that magnificent prophecy of Simeon recorded in Luke 2:25-35 things far beyond human understanding are spoken. Even Joseph and Mary were staggered and caused to marvel at his words. In verse 34 it is recorded that he turned to Mary and said, "Behold, this child is set for a sign!" A sign of what?

Again in Isa. 7:14 Jesus Christ is referred to as a sign. "Therefore the Lord Himself shall give you a sign: behold, a virgin shall conceive and bear a son and shall call His name Immanuel." While it is generally understood that the sign was the virgin birth, according to the words of Simeon "this child is for a sign." It is clear therefore that the sign was not the virgin birth but the child that was born of the virgin. Again I ask, a sign of what? In exactly the same way as the little cloud the size of a man's hand in the days of Elijah was the sign of a sky full of clouds and abundance of rain, so Jesus Christ, the first begotten Son of God, was the sign of a vast number of sons to come of which He is the eldest, the first born, and the head. But all the other sons are with Him in all things, which is the head, even Christ. They are one with Him even as He is one with the Father. They are in His image: they are a part of Him; they form the complete Christ.

This is in exact accord with what Paul says in Rom. 8:28-29. "And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to His purpose, for whom He did foreknow He also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of His son, that He might be the firstborn among many brethren." This passage does not make sense aside from what I am saying. I know the hope is beyond our wildest imaginations. It takes away our breath, but it is true. There is a company being formed whose members are members of Christ, and sons of God, begotten of God, perfected through suffering, cleansed by His blood, made in His image, and members of the bridegroom. I cannot help but pause again to pray that God will give you the Spirit of wisdom and understanding in the knowledge of Him, the eyes of your understanding being enlightened that you might know what is the hope of His calling. Jesus Christ, the perfect Son of God, was formed in the womb of an imperfect virgin. So now in like manner the vast family of sons is coming to perfection in the womb of another imperfect virgin. That is the existing church, torn by strife and division and carnality, held captive in Babylon and taxed by the dominion of a foreign power.

Every healthy body must be possessed of all its organs and its limbs. It must have, not only a head but hands, body, and feet. It should certainly then be easily understood that if Jesus of Nazareth, the first begotten Son of God, is the head of the body of the bridegroom, which is the sons of God, then those of us who are becoming sons will be hands and feet of His spiritual body. Do not turn away in unbelief. My heart has been pounding with joy and anticipation of this glorious thing for weeks, for there are things said about the feet of Christ that are said of nothing else. Therefore let us boldly pursue this course and see at least in part what the glorious truth really is.

In a normal birth the first member to be born is the head, then the body, and finally the feet. Ah! What sublime truth is here! That head was born two thousand years ago and through the centuries the other members of the body of Christ have been forming and coming forth from the womb. We cannot speak in particular about that now, but note that the last members to come forth from the womb are the feet. It is here our interests rest, for we are the members of the sons of God, the body of the bridegroom.

Jacob had twelve sons of whom the youngest was Benjamin. Benjamin was so named because he was born when Jacob was old. But he is the completeness of the family of Jacob and his name means 'son of my right hand, born in the extremity of the age'. That is where we come in. We are the feet of the body of the bridegroom born in the extremity of the age.

Just before the glorious triumph of Christ at Calvary we have on record in John 13 how Jesus poured water in a basin and, girding Himself with a towel, began to wash the disciples' feet. At last He came to Peter, and Peter asked the Lord, "Dost Thou wash my feet?" Jesus with utmost significance replied, "What I do thou knowest not now, but thou shall know hereafter." For many years I with many others have held foot-washing services, and while there was a certain amount of blessing in it, I always felt that we did not know nor understand what we were doing. There was some significance far beyond what we saw and far greater than the little ordinance we were following which seemed to be in accordance with the instructions of Christ. Peter did not know the significance of the thing Jesus was doing, John did not know, nor did any others. The great truth was to be known hereafter. "Thou shall know hereafter." It was to become plain in our day when we, the feet of the body of Christ, would be washed and prepared and made beautiful to spread the glorious gospel of peace to the universe. The story proceeds thus: Peter declared, "Thou shall never wash my feet!" Jesus replied, "If I wash thee not, thou hast no part in Me." Peter in his customary blundering way cried, "Lord, not my feet only, but also my hands and my head." The Lord bless him! He didn't know what he was talking about. But Jesus corrected him with these words, "He that is washed needeth not save to wash his feet, but is clean every whit." This is the hour of the cleansing of the feet.

The head was born pure, the hands have been cleansed long ago, but the feet, the only members of the body defiled by the earth, are being washed now. They are coming out of Babylon. Those naked feet are being shod now with "the preparation of the gospel of peace." (Eph. 6:15) They will never again be contaminated with the dirt and grime of the earth.

Oh, how my heart leaped within me today as I read the words of the prophet, "O Zion, put on thy beautiful garments - shake thyself from the dust and sit down - therefore My people shall know My name; therefore they shall know in that day that I am He that doth speak; Behold, it is I."

"How beautiful upon the mountain are the feet of Him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace, that bringeth good tidings of good, that publisheth salvation, that saith unto Zion, Thy God reigneth: - For they shall see eye to eye when the Lord shall bring again Zion." (Isa. 52:1-8)

It is the feet members of Christ who are to publish the tidings of the glory and peace of the kingdom according to Isaiah, and according to Paul it is the feet who are shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace. I cannot help but believe that the preparation is on right now, and the feet members are being washed and shod in readiness to proclaim the glad tidings of peace.

How gloriously do the prophets describe the ministry of the feet. Let your heart thrill to its truth as we read. "The glory of Lebanon shall come unto thee, the fir tree, the pine tree, and the box (tree) together to beautify the place of my sanctuary; and I will make the place of my feet glorious. The sons also of them that afflicted thee shall come bending unto thee and they that despised thee shall bow themselves down at the soles of thy feet, and they shall call thee the city of the Lord, the Zion of the Holy One of Israel." (Isa. 60:13-15) "Behold upon the mountains the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace." (Nahum 1:15) (We should notice as we read these passages that it is not said the feet of them, but the feet of him.) Zechariah, describing the tribulation and the war and the upheaval among the nations, ends the struggle by saying, "And His feet shall stand in that day upon the Mount of Olives which is before Jerusalem." (Zech. 14:4)

It is small wonder that Jesus said to Peter, "What I do thou knowest not now, but thou shall know hereafter." Before we leave this part of our thought, I would like to point out one or two more outstanding things which show very clearly the infinite relationship between Christ, the firstborn Son, the first manifested Son, and that other glorious company of sons who come into His image and likeness and are the members of His body, members of His family, and members of the bridegroom.

John the beloved disciple had been with Jesus in the mount of transfiguration. He had seen the transcending wonders of things that were to come. Like the others he, too, had fallen down afraid, dumbfounded by the glory that was manifest, as he saw the face of Christ shining as the sun and heard the voice of God from the glory saying, "This is My beloved Son." Sixty or sixty-five years had gone by since that wonder-filled day and now for the word of God and the testimony of Jesus Christ this same John was exiled on the lonely island of Patmos. I do not think there was any place on earth that was lonely for John. He knew far too well how to fellowship with Christ in the Spirit to ever feel lonely, for the nearer he was from the earth the nearer he was to Him, and that is what he loved. Well John knew the Son of God and the sound of His voice was indelible in his ear. He had heard Him preach the sermon on the mount, had watched His gentle hand calm the fevered brow, raise the dead, and cast out the demons with His word. His wondering eyes had beheld Him on the mount of transfiguration; he had talked with Him after the resurrection; he had watched with awe as He rose from the earth and ascended into heaven. Yet he was not prepared for the excellent glory of the revelation that awaited him that distant day on Patmos, for the glory he was then to see was unlike any he had ever beheld before. In times past he had seen Jesus Christ, the only begotten Son of God, the first born from the dead, the manifested Son, the Son of Mary, the Son of the living God, but now he was to see the Christ in all His glorious completeness, Jesus Christ the Head with all that vast family of sons, every one in His exact image and likeness. The mercy drops of God were falling upon him that day as the glory of the Lord encompassed him as a cloud and from out the glory he heard a voice speaking. How well he knew that. blessed voice, for oft its accents had fallen on his willing ear, and yet it was completely different, for he had known the voice of the lonely Galilean, Jesus Christ the Head of the Sons, but now that voice though unmistakable was not altogether identical. Now instead of one voice it thundered forth as the sound of many waters, many people, many sons; yet as many waters lose their identity in one ocean, so the voices of these many manifested sons lose their identity in the glory of Himself that in all things He might have the preeminence.
It was natural that John should turn around to look for the one who spoke, and looking he saw the Christ, the Son of the living God, but was it He? Was it the Christ of long ago? John declared it was "one like the Son of man." Very, very like Him. The exact image of Him. There He stood at the end of the age in all His glorious completeness as if to say, "Here am I and the children which God has given Me," (Heb. 2:13), Christ, the first Son, and all the younger sons now perfected in His image standing with Him, one glorious and perfect bridegroom. His head and His hair were white like wool, as white as snow. His eyes were as a flame of fire, and His feet, His glorious feet, like brass as if they burned in a furnace; and His voice was as the sound of many waters. Out of His mouth went a sharp two-edged sword and His countenance was as the sun shining in its strength. And when John saw Him, he fell at His feet as dead. Oh, the glory of the message that came forth from the lips of the Christ as He took John by the hand to raise him up! "Fear not, I am the first and the last." John had seen Him before and had known him as the first, but never had he seen the glorious end of the matter, Christ as He is at last. There before him stood the One who was dead and was now alive forevermore. The One with the keys of both death and hell. When the blessed Christ rose from the dead two thousand years ago. He led forth from hell a host of captives, but now at the end of the time He stands holding the keys that unlock the gates of both hell and death. No wonder He once said, "On this rock I build My church and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it."

Marvelous are the promises of God made to those members of the body of Christ which are called the feet. Indeed it is positively true and abundantly evident that the final crushing blow that will destroy everything belonging to the kingdom of Satan will be accomplished by the feet members of the body of Christ, the sons of God, who will be manifested at the end of the age.

It was in the sad evening of the same day man fell that the first promise to the feet members of Christ was made. God had come to the garden to talk to the children He loved only to find them hiding from Him among the trees He had made. They had sewn fig leaves together to hide their nakedness, for the glory of God that had covered them at the first was gone and they were desperately afraid. And God said, "Who told thee that thou wast naked? Hast thou eaten of the tree whereof I commanded thee that thou shouldst not eat?" And the man said, "The woman whom Thou gavest to be with me gave me of the tree and I did eat." And the Lord said unto the woman, "What has thou done?" And the woman said, "The serpent beguiled me and I did eat." And the Lord said unto the serpent, "Because thou hast done this, thou art cursed above all cattle and above every beast of the field; upon thy belly shalt go and dust shall thou eat all the days of thy life; and I will put enmity between thee and the woman and between thy seed and her seed. It shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel." (Gen. 3:14, 15) Here the first promise of the coming of Christ, the seed of the woman, is made, but it is a promise not only of the coming of Jesus Christ who is the head but also of the coming of those sons in His image and in His likeness who are members of His body, of His flesh, and of His bones, that complete Christ whom John saw and described as "one like the Son of Man." Rev. 1:13, whose feet were like fine brass (for judgment) as if they had burned in a furnace. These are not idle words. They are words of transcending truth and revelation. The promise to Eve was that the seed of the woman should finally and irrevocably crush the head of the serpent under His heel, or under His feet. We can find greater confirmation of this elsewhere. In Heb. 2:8 Paul said, "Thou hast put all things in subjection under his feet." Paul must be referring to the same thing when he says in Rom. 16:20, "And the God of peace shall bruise Satan under your feet shortly." David also speaking by the Spirit said, "Thou hast put all things under His feet."

It is always a fatal mistake for any man regardless of who he is. That mistake will lead him into endless difficulty and make him bigoted in his ideas and so established in his ways that God can never give him any greater light. We should always remember that the revelation of the Lord is as the path of the just that shineth more and more until the day is full. Revelation grows from the frail flickering light of dawn to the glory and fullness of the noonday sun. Oh, so often people send me books and tracts on moldy old subjects that had their day sometimes several hundred years ago. They are still striving to prove things that need no proof. They are strumming harps that have no strings. They are like the Jews hanging on to the law of Moses after the Holy Ghost was outpoured and Paul had come with his marvelous gospel of the grace of God. But even while I write the shadows are lengthening on the day of the gospel of grace. The day of Paul's gospel is drawing to a rapid close and the glorious new day of the kingdom is at hand. Let us not try to revive the age of grace with its flickering lights, its spiritual gifts, and all its imperfections, but let us follow the increasing light into the perfect day where everything in-part is done away. If you want to stay there, my brother, by all means stay, but don't ask me to stay with you, for the Holy Spirit is urging me within to stand with His feet on Mount Zion and proclaim the glorious kingdom of eternal peace. Farewell to the age of imperfections. Farewell to things that are in part. Farewell to seeing through a glass darkly and good morning to that which is perfect; good morning to that which is complete; good morning to seeing face to face.

Face to face, 0 blissful moment,
Face to face, to see and know;
Face to face with my redeemer,
Jesus Christ who loved me so.
What rejoicing in His presence
When are banished grief and pain;
When the crooked ways are straightened
And the dark things shall be plain.

When God revealed to Adam and Eve that the seed of the woman would bruise the serpent's head, I am sure they saw the truth only in its embryo form. They saw the woman as Eve and the seed as Seth. Would we dare say they were wrong in so seeing the revelation? No! A thousand times no! They were perfectly right in what they saw, but they saw very, very little. They could not look through the vista of the years and see through the line of their son Seth that the glorious Christ in all His sinless purity would be born of a virgin mother, begotten of God, the seed of the Holy Ghost; and Joseph and Mary, rejoicing in the birth of the Christ-child, the only begotten Son of God, could not look down the corridors of the years to the culmination of the age of grace and see that the seed which fell into the ground and died had brought forth a whole harvest of begotten sons in His own image and in His exact likeness. They could not hear the words of revelation flowing from the anointed lips of Paul as he proclaimed, "Whom He did foreknow He also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of His son, that He might be the firstborn among many brethren," Rom. 8:29, or as Weymouth translates it, "That He might be the eldest in a vast family of brothers!"

In my spirit I hear the weeping voice of Jeremiah come ringing down the centuries saying to us at the end of this age, "The precious sons of Zion, comparable to fine gold, how are they esteemed as earthen pitchers, the work of the hands of the potter." Lam. 4:2. But the full glory of the revelation was left for John to see, and when he saw it, he fell down as dead at the feet of that glorious seed of the woman, that glorious Christ, that complete Christ, the head, the body, the hands, and the feet - the seed of the woman that was promised to Eve long ago now ready to fulfill all that was promised in destroying forever from the face of the universe every work of the serpent. It was left for the beloved John to witness the final phase of the complete birth of that Son who is to rule the nations with a rod of iron. Thus in Rev. 12 we read that he saw a spiritual virgin bringing forth a man child, not a male child as some say, but a wonder never before known; a child that is a fully developed man at birth. Even Jesus grew in wisdom and stature and favor with God and man because He was born of a human and an imperfect mother though He was the Son of God. But this child is born of a spiritual woman and so is born a man-child. This is the Son who is to rule all nations with a rod of iron. This is the final company of the sons of God, the feet members of the body of Christ who are to rule all nations with a rod of iron and finally put their heel on Satan's head to destroy his power in the whole universe.

The days of the preparation of the bridegroom are almost complete. The feet are coming forth from the womb of the virgin. Then the preparation of the sons of God will be accomplished. The feet are ready for the washing that they might be cleansed from the last particles of the dust of the earth and have their part in Him. "What I do thou knowest not now," Jesus said to Peter, "but thou shall know hereafter." Hallelujah! The glory of the truth is left for us, the feet, to know and I know for a surety that Christ is cleansing His feet from every trace of the world and its systems.

The story of the final coming forth of the sons of God is revealed in the twelfth chapter of Revelation in these words: "And there appeared a great wonder in heaven; a woman clothed with the sun, and the moon under her feet, and upon her head a crown of twelve stars; and she being with child cried travailing in birth and in pain to be delivered. And there appeared another wonder in heaven; and, behold, a great red dragon, having seven heads and ten horns, and seven crowns upon his heads. And his tail drew the third part of the stars of heaven and did cast them to earth: and the dragon stood before the woman which was ready to be delivered, for to devour her child as soon as it was born. And she brought forth a man-child, who was to rule all the nations with
No one realizes better than I what difficulty is faced in declaring the things I have here taught. The difficulty arises because Christians have become literally filled with tradition and with stuffy old theories formed in the minds of men who imagine they are students of the word of God. I am a great lover of the Bible, but I am always afraid of any man who thinks he understands it. That man is a deceiver of himself and has closed his eyes to the shining light of the revelation of the Holy Spirit as it illumines His word. He will find himself possessing a stagnant pool and denying that rivers and oceans even exist. But those who can see the truth of these things will purify themselves even as He is pure.

We are in the closing hours of the dispensation of grace. The certain hope of the kingdom of God lies before us. Beasts and all cattle, creeping things and flying fowl, together with every living thing that moves draw near to the moment of triumph. The whole creation, that has groaned in travail and pain throughout the night of every dispensation, is soon to hear the joyous song of the kingdom morning where justice and equity will spread like a mantle over the tired world, for the knowledge of the Lord will fill the earth as the waters fill the seas.

Almost two milleniums ago God manifested His first Son, the Lord Jesus Christ. He is the first born and the head of all the sons of God prepared of God throughout the ages, and when all those sons are complete, they will form one body, a sonship body in the exact image and likeness of that first Son who is Himself the image of the Father.

There are many things to learn from types and anti-types, for by them truth is taught with more force than any spoken word. In the plan of God two distinct systems are to rule in power over the entire earth. The first was Babylon, the image of which was vividly portrayed by the prophet Daniel. (Dan. 2:31-35) The second is to be the kingdom of Christ, the Lord and Ruler seen by the Apostle John at Patmos. (Rev. 1:10-18) See also Dan. 2:44. If we consider the image of Babylon with its head of gold, its breasts and arms of silver, its belly and thighs of brass, its legs of iron and its feet part iron and part clay, we will learn this: The image of Babylon is one image, all the various parts of the image contributing together to make one image of the dread forms of Babylonish rule that would prevail over the entire earth. With this in mind we may readily see that, when John beheld the revelation of the fullness of Christ, Rev. 1:10-18, he saw that the head, the hair, the eyes, the hands, and the feet, though all particular parts, were but one body. This was the revelation of the fullness of the sonship company, the in-Christ company, of which He is the head and the first born. Nebuchadnezzar was the head of the image of Babylon. (Dan. 2:38) Christ is the Head of the sons. (Rom. 8:29) The feet of the image of Babylon were ready to fall apart in dust, but the feet of Christ, like unto brass eternally enduring, burned as in a furnace of fire. Just as the image of Babylon representing all dominions and empires was one image, so this image of Christ with its many members is but one body. As many soldiers form one army, so many sons make one body, and that body is the fullness of Christ. When Paul exhorted the Ephesians to come to the stature of the fullness of Christ, Eph. 4:13, he was speaking of the fullness John saw in Rev. 1:13-15.

This is the perfect man among the candlesticks (churches) in His image. And we may further say that could we look more closely we would certainly see that every nerve and fiber, every muscle and sinew of that mighty one like unto the Son of man, was itself a manifested son of God, each the image of the other and all the image of Jesus Christ, the Head of all the sons of God.

The sons of God who are coming to maturity at the end of the age are the feet of Him. (Isa. 52:7; 60:13, 14) The clay feet of the image of Babylon are about to be smitten and crumble to dust. (Dan. 2:34, 35) With them will crumble the whole system of Babylon with all its millenniums of confusion. But the feet of Christ are not of clay but of brass (judgment) burning in a furnace of fire; for judgment shall be given to the saints of the Most High and they shall reign unto the ages of the ages. (Dan. 7:26, 27)

Deep from the depths of my spirit there comes a longing for the purification of the saints of the Most High. Too long have these sons wasted their living with harlot churches. It is time to come out from among them and return to the Father. It is time for the washing of the feet, not in ceremony, but in reality. This is the hour when we are to know what only Jesus knew when He said to Peter, "If I wash thee not, thou hast no part in Me." (John 13:6-8) This is the fulfillment of that blessed type so richly manifested when the woman washed His feet with tears of repentance and love and anointed them with the symbolic oil of the Spirit of God. (Luke 7:37, 38) We are those feet of Christ whom He is now washing (John 13:4, 5) that we might be shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace. (Eph. 6:14, 150) "How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace, that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth salvation, that saith unto Zion, Thy God reigneth!" (Isa. 52:7) (Rom. 10:15) Long ago Jesus showed them His hands and His side, and then were the disciples glad when they saw the Lord; but the hour is at hand when He will show unto all the world His blessed feet, for it is they who will publish to all the world the glad news, Thy God reigneth.

There are many today whose feet are defiled, for they are far too interested in the affairs of this passing age though they protest otherwise. I am convinced that no man who has any love left in him for this present evil age will ever attain to that glorious feet company of the sons of God, for those who are with Him are not only called, but chosen and faithful as well. (Rev. 17:14) He whose feet are as brass in a furnace of fire is portraying in parable, expressive beyond words, that those who are to judge the nations of the earth must certainly themselves be first judged in fire, for the fire shall try every man's work of what sort it is, and all that is wood, hay, and stubble shall be destroyed. (1 Cor. 3:12-16)

Let us then now judge ourselves and thus cleanse ourselves of all that is wood and hay and stubble, for these things vividly portray the passing and not the permanent. Let all who are double-minded purify their hearts. Let us make a clean break with the harlot systems of earth. Let us recognize every denomination, every sect, and every religious system as being part and parcel of the Babylon system that is soon to crumble, bringing destruction not only to itself but to all who are found in her. (Rev. 18:28)

All who are members of Christ must suffer the pains of crucifixion. The Head was pierced with thorns; the hands were pierced with nails, the side was pierced with a spear. So also must the feet be pierced, for He who proudly displayed His hands and His side shall presently display with equal pride His wounded feet. He from whom all men fled that He might suffer alone amid the millions who swarmed around will also have us to share the cross of walking alone and misunderstood amid the millions of this crooked and perverse age. The hour of preparation of the feet company is at hand. It is the preparation of the final company of God's sons. Is it too much that we should be asked to abandon the trifles in which other men are so engrossed? For he that is washed needeth not save to wash his feet and is clean every whit.

CHAPTER FOUR
THE SEALING OF THE SONS OF GOD

It would be impossible to over-emphasize the importance of the hour in which we now live. It should be plain even to unregenerate minds that the end of the age is upon us. There is a tenseness and an expectancy in the air that causes all men to believe that we are rapidly approaching an unavoidable climax from which there is no escape nor any shadow of turning. Events are taking place in the world that are irresistible. Spiritual forces have been set in motion that are beyond human understanding. As a boat that has passed Redemption Point in the Niagara River is swept by the rushing relentless cataract toward its inevitable doom, so the world, which has long flirted with the river of destruction, has been caught in its rapids now to be hurled with ever increasing speed to dreadful tribulation and destruction.

The twelfth chapter of Revelation gives a wonderful description of the travail of a spiritual woman and of a man-child that was born of her travail who is without doubt a glorious company of sons who are to appear on earth in the last days. At the moment of his birth he was caught up to the throne of God away from the presence of the dragon who sought to destroy him. But at the moment the man-child was caught up into heaven, there was war in heaven, and the devil was cast down upon the earth. Knowing therefore that his time of authority over the minds of men and nations is very short, he has great and terrible wrath and goes forth in all his frustrated fury to utterly obliterate all that oppose his power. “And the dragon was cast out, that old serpent called the devil and Satan, which deceiveth the whole world: He was cast out into the earth and his angels with him.” (Rev. 12:7)
The words in this passage, “That deceiveth the whole earth”, are most significant. Satan’s masterpiece is not tribulation and bloodshed, but deception. He is a liar and a murderer. He murders souls through lies and deception today just as he did in the Garden of Eden long ago. We do not know all the truth contained in the twelfth chapter of Revelation. We admit rather that we understand little of the great events mentioned there which are, without doubt, ordained to transform the whole world. Let us remember, however, that while we have but dimly seen these truths afar off, yet we have caught a glimpse of them and the vision of their vast eternal truth has gripped our imagination compelling us relentlessly toward them that we may partake of them and know as we are also known. We have already known much of the travail of this heavenly woman who stands clothed with the sun and the moon under her feet. There has been an almost unbelievable travail in the hearts of countless thousands that the sons of God may come forth to join Christ in His kingdom and deliver the world from its bondage, its thraldom and decay. Dare we think that this sore travail has gone unnoticed by God who gave it? Dare we say that the sons of God have not already been sealed in their foreheads and even now are ascending in the Spirit to cast Satan out of the heavens, his long possessed domain?

However far we have progressed in this direction only the Master knows, but it is clear that, at the time the manchild was caught up to heaven, Satan came down with great wrath to deceive the whole earth. (Rev. 12:1-9) Every day I become more convinced that a strong subtle spirit of delusion has come upon the earth during the last few years. There is something that is fogging up the minds of the people to make them believe a lie. What greater example of this do we need than is found in the almost universal acclaim given to the Pope of Rome by millions of Protestants all over the world? Not only are the religious denominations of professing Christendom openly flirting with the pretty harlot of religious unity as she waits at every corner, attired in her goodly Babylonish garment, but other religious systems are also casting admiring glances in her direction. We are seeing before our very eyes the reality of the parable of King Solomon when in the Spirit he wrote these words:

“Say unto wisdom, thou art my sister, and call understanding thy kinswoman: That they may keep thee from the strange woman, from the stranger that flattereth with her words. For at the window of my house I looked through my casement and beheld among the simple ones, I discerned among the youths a young man void of understanding passing through the street near her comer; and he went the way to her house. In the twilight, in the evening, in the black and dark night; And, behold, there met him a woman with the attire of an harlot and subtle of heart; She is loud and stubborn; and her feet abide not in her house. Now she is without, now in the streets and lieth in wait at every corner. So she caught him, and kissed him, and with impudent face said unto him, I have peace offerings with me; this day I have paid my vows. Therefore came I forth to meet thee, diligently to seek thy face, and I have found thee. I have decked my bed with coverings of tapestry, with carved works, with fine linen of Egypt. I have perfumed my bed with myrrh, aloes, and cinnamon. Come, let us take our fill of love until the morning: Let us solace ourselves with loves. For the Goodman (Christ) is not at home, he is gone on a long journey. He hath taken a bag of money with him, and will come home at the day appointed. With her much fair speech she caused him to yield, with the flattery of her lips she forced him. He goeth after her straightway as an ox goeth to the slaughter, or as a to the correction of the stocks; Till a dart strike through his liver; as a bird hasteth to a snare and knoweth not that it is for his life.” (Prov. 7:4-23) A careful analysis of this passage will show that it is a perfect description of the visible church systems of our day.

Yes, indeed! There is a strong delusion settling upon the earth. It is a delusion born of Satan that makes wrong look right and makes right look wrong. The words of Jesus, “That they all may be one,” are being proclaimed far and wide, but the unity carnal men see in these words is not the unity that He saw. He saw a unity that is born of the wisdom and fire of the one omniscient Spirit, but man sees a fraudulent, physical togetherness that demands unity at any price, where the minds of men are frozen together in the darkness and deception of the dismal valleys of tradition, where the sun of righteousness never shines nor living waters ever flow. This is the D-day and this is the H-hour when we must say to wisdom, “Thou art my sister,” and call understanding our kinswoman that they may keep us from the strange woman, from the stranger that flattereth with her lips. (Prov. 7:4, 5)
There is a sort of mass production, assembly line spirit in the world. We live in the day when countless thousands of items are mass-produced and individuality is forgotten. I recently watched an assembly line producing tin cans. Eight hundred cans per minute were racing off the end of the line, every one exactly the same size and shape, every one bearing exactly the same label, and each the duplicate of the other. This same spirit has invaded humanity until it tries to squeeze all Christians into one mould. It wants them all to look alike, think alike, believe alike, and be alike, but they must take their likeness from the stamp of tradition and not from the stamp of the Spirit of God. There is a vast impassable gulf between this kind of unity and the unity that is born of oneness with the Spirit of God. The former makes us slaves to a system. The other makes us sons of God, an individual in his own right yet bound by the invisible Spirit to the whole body of sons even as the hands and the feet, being individuals and specialists in their own realm, are united by joints and bands, spirit and blood and life.

In the economy of the antichrist, man is only a number. In the economy of God we are individuals with a name in our foreheads. The new name God will write upon His people will describe exactly what we are. It will describe our position, work, and glory in the ages to come. Our Christ was called Jesus because His ministry was to save His people from their sins. So also will the new name God will write upon His people describe perfectly what they are in God's eternal economy ages without end. Amen!

Let us return for a moment to the thought of the strong delusion that is settling down upon the world and upon the professing church today. Paul the apostle, speaking of the end of the age, described the coming of strong delusion in these words: “And then shall that Wicked (antichrist) be revealed, whom the Lord shall consume with the spirit of His mouth and destroy with the brightness of His coming; even him, whose coming is after the working of Satan with all power and signs and lying wonders, and with all deceivableness of unrighteousness in them that perish; because they received not the love of the truth that they might be saved. And for this cause God shall send them strong delusion that they should believe a lie, that they might all be damned (condemned) who believe not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness.” (2 Thess 2:8-12)

This scripture is not describing publicans and harlots and the general run of unregenerate men. This scripture adequately and perfectly describes the professing church of our day. If you think for even a moment that the professing church of our day loves the truth, then strong delusion has already overtaken you. The Jewish church of Jesus' day did not love truth. That is why they rejected Christ. They did not love truth. They loved tradition, form, and ceremony. They loved tradition so much that they made the word of God of none effect by their traditions. Their priests did not love truth; they loved to be admired of men and called Rabbi. They loved to wear long robes and to make long prayers in public places to be seen and heard of men. Jesus told them they were hypocrites and whitened sepulchers which appeared beautiful to men, but within were full of dead men’s bones. As it was in the end of the dispensation of the law, so also it is in the end of the dispensation of grace. Most Christians in spite of all their profession do not love truth. They love their programs, their buildings, their pet doctrines. They love to have their little “song and dance”. They love to get a wisp of blessing or a happy feeling, but that which crucifies the old life and the old world and the old nature, they reject. Show them what the flesh really is and they hate you for it and cast you out. Tell them what it means to walk in the Spirit and they have no idea what you are talking about. You become a proverb and a byword among them, and you are looked upon as some queer individual who has gone soft on religion.

All this is part of the mystery of iniquity. Godliness is a mystery, and great is the mystery of iniquity. Iniquity is really rebellion. It is born in man’s human nature to rebel against truth and love it not. Our age will end, not with innumerable multitudes rising to meet the Lord in the air, but with a vast professing church buried in strong delusion. As it was in the days of Noah, so shall it be in the day of the coming of the Son of man. Certainly there will be a resurrection. But the company who will be raised and caught away will be the in-Christ company, not the people who love systems above Christ and traditions above truth. “If any man be in Christ, he is a new creation.” (2 Cor. 5:17)

In the sixty-sixth chapter of Isaiah, verses one to five, there is an appalling description of the hypocrisy of Jewish worship. Isaiah saw them going on with their usual forms of worship. They were offering bullocks and lambs on the altar as they had been commanded. They were making their oblations as usual. They were burning incense unto God just as they had done for hundreds of years. But the whole thing was hateful in God’s sight and He abhorred it as only God can because they chose their own ways and delighted in abominations. Therefore God sent them strong delusion that they also might be damned. Therefore He said, “He that killeth an ox (for sacrifice) is as if he slew a man; he that sacrificeth a lamb as if he cut off a dog’s neck, (a dog is an unclean animal); he that offereth an oblation as if he offered swine’s blood; he that burneth incense as if he blessed an idol. Yea, they have chosen their abominations. I also will choose their delusions and will bring their fears upon them; because when I called, none did answer; when I spake, they did not hear; but they did evil before mine eyes and chose that in which I delighted not." Verses 3-4. Now read verse two and you will see the kind of man God is calling in our day. “... but to this man will I look, even to him that is poor and of a contrite spirit and trembleth at My word.” But again in verse five we are told what will happen to a man who fears God’s word. He certainly will not last long nor be popular among the religious enthusiasts of his day for thus it says: “Hear the word of the Lord, ye that tremble at His word: Your brethren that hated you cast you out for My name’s sake and said, Let the Lord be glorified; but He shall appear to your joy, and they shall be ashamed.” (Isa. 66:5)

The above verse of scripture is just as true today as it was when it was written. Any man who receives a revelation from God will certainly be cast out of the church, and, when they cast him out, they will think they are doing God a service. They will thoroughly believe they are cleansing the temple of a great evil. They will quote these very words, “Let the Lord be glorified,” while they are shoving him out of the door. Twice during my life I have had the bitter experience of being cast out for truth’s sake. I can still hear the bitter speech of the superintendent of the denomination as he declared, “We felt before God something had to be done.” But thus it has ever been throughout all the ages from the blood of Abel to the blood of Zacharias in the Old Testament, and from the blood of John the Baptist to the blood of the last martyr in our age.

Truth forever on the scaffold,
Wrong forever on the throne.
But that scaffold sways the future,
And behind the dim unknown
Standeth God within the shadows,
Keeping watch upon His own.

You will notice then from reading these passages that it is God who sends the delusion. The reason He sends it is because men do not love the truth but prefer to believe a lie. Men hate truth because it disturbs them and brings them under conviction. It demands action and repentance even in the oldest saint, for no man can advance even a step with God without repentance. No man can see God and live, for seeing God brings repentance and death to the old life, but a glorious walk in realms hitherto unknown. While no man can see God and live, neither can any man see God and die. He dies to the old but lives to the new even as the song-writer so beautifully said, “There is life for a look at the crucified One.” We are always dying on old levels and living on new ones as we are being changed by His Spirit from glory to glory.

Heaven is not reached by a single bound, But we build the ladder by which we rise from the lowly earth to the vaulted skies, And we mount its summit round by round.

The path of the just is as the shining light that shineth more and more unto the perfect day. To the man who walks with God each day presents a new horizon, new realms to explore, new lands to conquer, new experiences to enjoy, new heights to reach. The journey from infancy to maturity is a long one. The road that leads from childhood to sonship is lifelong. Maturity is not attained by traveling in endless circles nor by remaining just as we were when we were saved years ago. It is a straight and ever narrowing pathway that leads to the Elysian fields of God’s eternal glory where we become like Him, for we see Him as He is.

Christians have spent so much time preaching a rapture in which they would all rise to meet the Lord and all be changed in the twinkling of an eye, where they would put on incorruption and leave the world and its inhabitants to the antichrist, but they have completely ignored the parables of Jesus that show so clearly that the kingdom of heaven (the church age) is to be an age when wheat and tares should grow together, none knowing which was which. Matt. 13:28, 29. It is an age when sheep and goats roam the same pastures both bleating alike. It is an age when good and bad fish are caught in the same net, an age when the leaven of malice and wickedness invades the whole lump of dough. Why have we so willingly overlooked the teaching that at the end of this age there will be a great dividing of one from the other - that the goats will be separated from the sheep, the tares from the wheat, and the bad fish from the good? Why have we overlooked the terrible image of the Babylonish harlot with all her illegitimate daughters and the awful doom that is predicted upon her and all who follow her ways of confusion? Can you not see how Christians do not love truth, but hide from it? They don’t want to differentiate between wheat and tares. They don’t want to distinguish between sheep and goats. They prefer to go on believing that everything that names the name of Christ will be raptured regardless of whether he departs from evil or not.

Ezekiel in the eighth and ninth chapters of his prophecy unveils an obnoxious picture which has its parallel in our day. He saw the abominations in the temple of the Lord on one hand and the sealing of the true servants of God in their foreheads on the other. A very strong sense has flooded over my soul of late convincing me that the day of the sealing of the true sons of God is at hand.

Six is the number of man and six is the number of this present dispensation, for the dispensation of grace is the sixth dispensation and the sixth day. It is very significant, therefore, that Ezekiel says, “And it came to pass in the sixth year, in the sixth month, and in the fifth day of the month, as I sat in my house, and the elders of Judah sat before me, that the hand of the Lord fell upon me.” (Eze. 8:1) Six years, six months, and five days. The complete number would have been six years, six months, and six days. Therefore the sealing took place just one day before the judgment of God burst forth in awful wrath against all the abominations carried on in the name of the Lord.

Ezekiel was carried away captive to Babylon, and he was still in Babylon when God opened his eyes to see the true reason for Israel’s captivity and the judgment that was to follow. In the Spirit he was picked up by a lock of his hair and brought in visions of God to the temple at Jerusalem. (Eze. 8:3) He found himself standing at the north gate of the temple where the Spirit of God spoke to him, commanding him to behold all the abominations that were in the house of God. The words of Moffatt’s translation add to the simplicity and forcefulness of the meaning; therefore, we will quote from his text. (Eze. 8) “The Spirit lifted me between heaven and earth and brought me in visions of God to Jerusalem to the door of the north gateway into the inner court where the idol stood that provoked the Eternal to resentment.” (Vs. 3) “Son of man. He said, ‘Do you see what they are doing? Do you see the horrible impieties that the Israelites are practicing here, forcing Me to leave My sanctuary? You will see worse than that.” (Vs. 6) Ezekiel was then taken through a door of the court and commanded to behold the idolatry that was going on inside in these words: “Go inside; look at the detestable impieties they are practicing here. So I went and looked; there pictured all round the wall were all kinds of vermin and reptiles, loathsome representations, and all the idols of Israel. In front of them stood the seventy elders of Israel, with Jaazaniah the son of Shaphan, every man holding a censer from which rose the scent of incense in clouds. ‘Son of Man,’ He said, ‘do you see what the elders of Israel are doing? ... You shall see still worse.’” (Vs 13-15) “And He took me to the outer door of the north gateway into the Eternal’s temple where I saw women wailing for Tammuz. (Tammuz was a hero of Babylonian mythology who supposedly was killed and resurrected.) ‘Son of man,’ He said, ‘do you see that? You shall see even worse.”’ (Vs. 13-15) “And He took me back into the inner court of the Eternal’s temple where at the very door of the temple of the Eternal between the porch and the altar I saw about twenty-five men with their backs to the temple of the Eternal and their faces turned to the east worshipping the sun. (Vs. 16) ‘Do you see that. 0 Son of man?’ He asked, ‘and is it too slight a thing for Judah to practice these detestable impieties of theirs here? Must they also fill the land with violence and anger Me still further? They are filling My nostrils -with their stench! But I will take action in My fury. I will have neither mercy nor pity upon them. I will not listen to them, even if they call Me at the pitch of their voices.” (Vs. 17-18)

The abominations which Ezekiel saw were indeed terrible - the images that provoked God to wrath, the hero worship, the offering of incense to images and representations, the worshipping of the sun and the things which are created rather than the Creator Himself. All these things were detestable in the sight of God, and awful judgment upon them was certain. But the solemn fact is that in our day all these abominations exist. The worship of saints, the offering of incense to images, the adoration of heroes are almost as universal in the professing church as they are in show business. The ancient cathedrals of England and Europe are replete with grotesquely carved gargoyles which seem to depict evil looking creatures that could come from nowhere but the pit.

Let us remember that a man may be an idolater without having an idol of wood or stone or gold. Covetousness, for instance, is idolatry. Col. 3:5. And covetousness is rampant in the professing church, not confining itself to the pew or to members of the congregations, but clergymen of all sects greedily covet money, large congregations, prestige, worldly goods, luxury of goods, homes, clothing, and many other things. The racketeering in the church system has become so great that pulpits are invaded by unscrupulous characters who in hope of gain deceive the people, making themselves to be great ones and resorting to every trick and to attain their ends. It may seem to some that I speak too boldly on this point, but half a century of observation has revealed many bitter and unpleasant things, removing the veneer of outward show to reveal the true purposes of the heart.

The church system of our day is in a sorry state, and it, with the world, is rushing headlong for judgment. Strong delusion has settled down upon the people making them willing to believe a lie and grasp almost anything that will attract a crowd, bring a measure of excitement, or add to prestige and prominence. In all the vast church system today there is but a handful of people whose hearts are crying out for the will of God. There is but a tiny remnant who long to be filled with the wisdom of God and who make the mind of Christ their daily, hourly quest. Few there are who sigh and cry because of the abominations and injustices everywhere and who wait with longing spirits for the judgment of the Lord. But there is a tiny remnant, according to the election of grace, who can say, “At night upon my bed I sought Him whom my soul loveth.” There are still a few who cry, “Let him kiss me with the kisses of his mouth, for thy love is better than wine.” (S. of S. 1:2)

The voice of my beloved! behold he cometh leaping upon the mountains, skipping upon the hills. My beloved is like a roe or a young hart; Behold he standeth behind our wall; he looketh forth at the windows, shewing himself through the lattice. My beloved spake and said unto me, Rise up, my love, my fair one, and come away. For, lo, the winter is past, the rain is over and gone; the flowers appear on the earth; and the time of singing of birds is come, and the voice of the turtle is heard in the land. The fig tree putteth forth her green figs and the vines with the grapes give a good smell. Arise, my love, my fair one, and come away.” (S. of S. 2:8-13)

Not only has a spirit of delusion settled upon the world, but the spirit of confusion is rampant everywhere, manifesting itself in every aspect and walk of life. Confusion reigns daily in the governments of the world. Confusion stalks like an evil spectre among the nations, disrupting all their international agreements. Confusion and disorder reign in millions of homes where all authority has gone from the parents and all respect has vanished from the children. Art and music always reflect the temperament and disposition of the people of the day. Certainly music has returned to the jungle and art to the weird grotesqueness of the kindergarten. Juvenile delinquency has attained such proportions that the Attorney-General of the United States has declared that if it cannot be beaten in ten years it will be unbeatable. Confusion reigns among the races and colors of people, among the majorities and minorities. It reigns between labor and management and between nations that have and nations that have not. And by no means least is the confusion that reigns in the church system, which is spiritual Babylon. Babylon is confusion.

At the time when the vision of all the abominations in Israel appeared to Ezekiel, he saw the wonderful spectacle of the true elect sons of God being sealed or marked in their foreheads. This sealing event which was of so great importance to Israel is of no less importance to us who have come to the end of the age. Not only are we seeing a great separation between good and evil and wheat and tares, but our minds are being set apart and sealed unto God in preparation for the great day when the 144,000 sons shall stand upon Mount Zion, having their Father’s name in their foreheads.

The vision which Ezekiel saw in the Spirit vividly portrays the events which will shortly come to pass on a world wide scale. The world, that has so thoroughly rejected God, is coming into the judgment of tribulation, and the church systems, that have turned from God to every imaginable vanity, are going to know the full penalty of their wrong and pay the price of walking in their own ways.
Amid the scenes of evil and wickedness which Ezekiel saw he heard the voice of God calling forth the men who were to destroy the city. Thus it says: “He cried also in mine ears with a loud voice, saying, ‘Cause them that have charge over the city to draw near, every man with his destroying weapon in his hand.’ And behold, six men came from the way of the higher gate, which lieth toward the north, and every man a slaughter weapon in his hand; and one man among them was clothed in linen with a writer’s inkhorn by his side, and they went in and stood beside the brazen altar. And the glory of the God of Israel was gone up from the cherub, whereupon he was, to the threshold of the house. And he called to the man clothed with linen which had the writer’s inkhorn by his side; and the Lord said unto him, ‘Go through the midst of the city, through the midst of Jerusalem and set a mark upon the foreheads of the men that sigh and cry for all the abominations that be done in the midst thereof.’ And to the others he said in mine hearing, ‘Go ye after him through the city and smite: Let not your eye spare, neither have ye pity: Slay utterly old and young, both maids and little children and women: but come not near any man upon whom is the mark, and begin at my sanctuary.’ Then they began at the ancient men that were before the house. And he said unto them, ‘Defile the house and fill the courts with slain: Go ye forth.’ And they went forth and slew in the city.” (Eze. 9:1-7)

You will notice especially that the people who received the mark in their foreheads were the people who sighed and cried because of the abominations in the house of the Lord. The reason the vast majority of people feel at home in the church systems is because their minds have become accustomed to their surroundings. The light of revelation never penetrates their hearts. They have become so accustomed to custom, ceremony, and tradition that they take it all for granted. Tradition says we must go to church; so we go. We are supposed to listen to a sermon; so we listen. We are supposed to sing songs; so we sing. We are supposed to give offerings; so we give them. It is custom to praise the Lord; so we praise. But truth and experience have fled from so many hearts, and serving God from an overflowing fullness of the Spirit is seldom known. The revival fire that burned in the fathers is but a fleeting tradition in the hearts of the children just as the miraculous wonders of Moses in the land of Egypt and at the Red Sea became little more than bed-time stories to the succeeding generations. The vision and reality was gone.

But never has God left Himself without a witness. Never has He been without His handful of elect who have not bowed down the knee to the prevailing systems of the day. The seven thousand of Israel who had not bowed down the knee to Baal in Elijah’s day were the harbingers of the elect of all ages who bowed not the knee to any but God. They cast from them as profane the authority of Baal, of Nebuchadnezzar, priest, Pope, or preacher, system or organization. There has always been a handful of people who are separate unto God, and there is also today a remnant according to the election of grace who are wholly the Lord’s. As Jonah was vomited from the belly of the sea monster, indigestible and indestructible, so these are vomited out of the sea of humanity. They bear the invisible mark of the Lord in their foreheads and the destroying hands of death and tribulation shall not overwhelm them.

The mark of God in the forehead is not a stamp or a brand. It will not be visible to man at all. It is that which God sees but which man overlooks altogether. These men and women who sigh and cry because of the abominations in the world and in the professing church are the people who have the mind of Christ. Their concern and grief over all iniquity is identical with that of the Father and of the Lord Jesus Christ. Those who have the mind of Christ are the ones who have the mark of God, the seal of the living God in their foreheads. Rev. 7:1-3. Furthermore those also who are said to have the Father’s name in their foreheads (Rev. 14:1) are those who possess the mind of Christ. To have the Father’s name is to have the Father’s mind, for none can use the Father’s name but those who have His mind.

When the apostle Paul said, “Let this mind be in you which was also in Christ Jesus,” the depths of his meaning reached far beyond all natural understanding. The mind that was in Christ Jesus was the Father’s mind. Let us never forget that. The Father’s mind dwelt in the Son. It was this above all else that made Him one with the Father. Their purposes were identical because their minds were identical. Their unity was perfect because they had the same mind. Not two different minds, each one alike, but one mind indwelling both, and that one mind was the mind of the Father. Man is never able to find true unity. He has sought it for centuries. He has tried to attain it through teaching, through instruction, through discipline, through dictatorship, through popery, through tolerance and charity. He has tried to find it by avoiding points of difference, but he never has found it because natural minds are never one. There are as many different minds as there are different people.
The only unity that is now and the only unity that ever will be comes when the carnal mind with all its enormities and divisions is crucified and the mind of God the Father comes to dwell in us, even as it dwelt in Jesus Christ. This is true unity. This is true sonship. This is the mark of God and the name of God in the forehead. The countless divisions in the professing church shout from the housetops that there is no unity in the carnal mind, and they likewise prove that millions of men, though believers, do not possess the mind of Christ, nor have they God’s name in their foreheads.

During the last few years there has come to many people an ever increasing and almost insatiable longing to be filled with the wisdom that is from above. The wisdom from above is first pure, then peaceable, gentle and easily entreated, full of mercy and good fruits, without partiality and without hypocrisy. Such wisdom can never be attained by resolve, by endeavor, by teaching, or any such thing. This wisdom comes when the mind that dwelt in Christ Jesus comes to dwell in us. Then, and then alone, are we one with the Father. Then are we one with the Son. Then and then alone are we one with all people in whom that blessed mind doth dwell. Then will our lips truly repeat the words of Jesus, “I and My Father are one.” This is sonship indeed and everlasting life. Little earth-bound man pores over his books and his Buns en burners in search of wisdom. He peers through his feeble telescope to search the heavens and his microscope to investigate the earth, knowing not that the mind which made the heavens and earth will dwell in us if we desire it more than rubies, and the wisdom that planned the eternal purposes will be ours if we covet it more than gold.

This is the mind that will govern the kingdom of God in the age that is at hand. The mind of God dwelling in the sons of God will be the source of everlasting peace when men, with confidence and assurance, will beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning-hooks and shall learn war no more at all. And there shall come forth a Rod out of the stem of Jesse (David’s father) and a branch shall grow out of His roots, (I am the vine, ye are the branches), and the Spirit of the Lord shall rest upon Him, the spirit of wisdom and understanding, the spirit of counsel and might, the spirit of knowledge and the fear of the Lord, and shall make Him of quick understanding in the fear of the Lord. He shall not judge after the sight of the eyes, neither reprove after the hearing of the ears: But with righteousness shall He judge the poor and reprove with equity the meek of the earth: And He shall smite the earth with the rod of His mouth, and with the breath of His lips shall He slay the wicked. And righteousness shall be the girdle of His reins. The wolf shall dwell with the lamb, and the leopard shall lie down with the kid, and the calf and the young lion and them falling together; and a little child shall lead them. And the cow and the bear shall feed; their young ones shall lie down together, and the lion shall eat straw like the ox. And the sucking child shall play on the hole of the asp and the weaned child shall put his hand on the cockatrice den. They shall not hurt nor destroy in all My holy mountain: For the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the sea. (Isa. 11:1-9) It is plain for anyone to see that all this blessedness comes from the wisdom and knowledge of the Lord which dwells eternally in the mind of Christ, for this blessedness reaches the earth when the earth is full of the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the sea.

Perhaps we have been casual in reading Paul’s exhortation, “Let this mind be in you which was also in Christ Jesus.” (Phil. 2:5) But if we meditate upon the whole passage our minds become overwhelmed by the magnitude of what he says and the magnificent glory of the results attained by Christ because He had the Father’s mind dwelling in Him. And I suppose the result would be no less great for any man who through consecration to God crucified his own mind that he might be indwelt by the mind of Christ, which is the Father’s mind. So the apostle declares, “Let this mind be in you which was also in Christ Jesus: Who, being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God: But made Himself of no reputation, and took upon Him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men: And being found in fashion as a man, He humbled Himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross. Wherefore God hath highly exalted Him, and given Him a name that is above every name: That at (in) the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord to the glory of God the Father” (Phil. 2:5-11)

It seems to me that to comment on this scripture would be to do it an injustice, for the fullness of its meaning transcends the eloquence of men. Its truth beggars description and the extent of its glory defies our understanding. Yet be it known that when all things in heaven and earth and under the earth bow to Christ, it will be because the mind of the Father dwelt in Him in divine fullness and completeness, bearing Him on its everlasting arms into all the will of God both for time and for ages eternal and without end.

Would God that we might see that to obey a command of God is one thing, but for a man to have the mind of God dwelling perpetually in him is another thing altogether. It is one thing to have the mind of God about a matter, but it is something different altogether to have the mind of God. Jonah had the mind of God about the matter of going to Nineveh, but he certainly did not have the mind of God dwelling in him, for if he had, he would have coveted God’s will just as Jesus did, who was able to say, “I do always those things which please the Father.” It is clear then that to momentarily have the mind of God about a thing is not the same as having the mind of God dwelling in us.

When one possesses the mind of Christ, He has a re-newed mind. His mind is transformed after the image of Him who created him. Such a man presents his body to the Lord as well as his soul and spirit, and he is the Lord’s, spirit, soul, and flesh. Because he is renewed in the spirit of His mind, his body begins to be transformed as well. For this reason then Paul said, “I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, and be not conformed to the world, but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind. …” (Rom. 12:1-2)

In the depths of my spirit I am certain that of all truth being brought to light today none is of greater importance than the truth concerning the mind of Christ. The mind of Christ is the mind of God. The mind of Christ is the mind of eternal, immutable, omniscient wisdom. It is the mind of Christ that will govern the world in wisdom in the glorious age into which we shall soon enter. This is the mind that will bring order out of the fearful chaos that now exists. This mind will empty the arsenals of the nations and fill the stomachs instead. It is His mind of wisdom that will fill the whole earth with the knowledge of the Lord even as the oceans are filled with water. Justice and judgment and equity will be everywhere, the reaper will overtake the sower, and none shall ever be afraid. The mind of Christ is a priceless gem, rich and rare above all the treasures of earth. From its eternal wisdom universes roll forth in their orbits and nations dwell in peace.

The carnal mind is the mind which is possessed by all natural men. It is the mind which is concerned only with the carnal, which is the body made of flesh. People hate this truth and cast it from them as profane, but it was given to me by a revelation and proven by many infallible proofs. The carnal mind is an enemy of God. It is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be, so that they who are in the flesh cannot please God. The carnal mind is concerned only with the physical realm. That is why so many Christians are far more interested in physical healing than they are in spiritual progress. The carnal mind is the mind that is concerned with the literal and physical realm. It can never lift itself higher than this.

To be carnally minded is death. That is why all men die. But to be spiritually minded is life and peace. The very moment men begin to have the mind of Christ dwelling in them, there will be an end of death, for the renewed mind will also renew the physical body that it may be fashioned like unto His glorious body.

The carnal mind was never designed to reign. It wrecks every kingdom it possesses, because it is centered in self, concerning itself only in the physical realm. It always becomes corrupted because it makes self the center and not God. It manifests itself in men like Nebuchadnezzar who commands all men to worship his image, or in Pharaoh or Herod, who sought to crush everything that might oppose them. It must try to exterminate all that is Godly as did Haman, Jezebel, Hitler, and many religious leaders. It sets itself up as a god so that he as God sits in the temple of God showing himself that he is God. It desecrates the vessels of the Lord as did Belshazzar and offers swine on the altar of the Lord as did Antiochus.

When the heart first cries, “Thy will be done” the mind of Christ begins to form in man. This is the beginning of the sealing of the mind. When God’s people become fed up and sick to death with all the abominations about them in the world and in the professing church, then and then only do their hearts begin to reach out for the will of God and the mind of Christ. When the heart of any man becomes filled with an insatiable longing for the fullness of the will of God, he discovers that all other wills are at an end. He finds that there is no trace of his own will yet remaining. There is nothing he wants to do to please himself, nowhere he has ambitions to go, no great purpose he wants to accomplish. He has one desire, one love, one hope, and that is to have God’s will revealed to Him that he may do it in all its completeness, for it has become his very life. The will of God is his food and drink. This is his joy and crown. This is his love and only aspiration. His soul continually sings, “I delight to do Thy will, O my God; yea, Thy law is within my heart.”

You will not reach this blessed goal without a struggle, neither will you reach it without a revelation of the will of God. You will find yourself becoming empty of the plans and schemes you cherished to advance the kingdom of God. You will find yourself kneeling in prayer with all requests gone from your lips. But in their place your heart will groan forth the irresistible request. Thy will be done! Thy will be done! And when you have reached the glorious place where your soul at last reposes in God’s will, you will find you have become a stranger and a foreigner to all your acquaintances, for your words and speech will seem to them as idle tales because they do not understand you. My greatest and most heart-breaking surprise after entering into this rest was to find that scarcely a soul understood me, but to all my friends my words were but idle tales. That is why I declare that the will of God must be a personal revelation to the believer’s heart.

To enter fully into the freedom and liberty of the will of God is the beginning of the sealing of the mind. It is the beginning of the mark of God in the forehead.

In Ezekiel’s vision there was deplorable abomination in the house of the Lord. But did you notice as you read that all the abominations had to do with worship? God is not half so concerned about the sins of publicans, harlots, and drunkards as we may think, but His fury is rising every day against the disorder, confusion, and abominations in the professing church. Amid all the abominations that Ezekiel beheld his eye did not miss the fact that there was a small number who sighed and cried because of the abominations on every hand. And those who sighed were the ones who were marked and sealed unto God that they might escape the dread destruction that was to come.

The dreadful scene of destruction which Ezekiel saw following the sealing of the elect is going to be re-enacted at the end of this age, and that will be very, very soon. I am one who believes that the sealing is now taking place. In John’s vision on the Isle of Patmos the events of the closing years of time passed vividly in panorama before his wondering eyes. Amid the dread horrors of that tribulation day he beheld four angels of God holding back the winds and all destruction from the earth until the sealing of the servants of God in the forehead had been completed. Thus it reads: “And after these things I saw four angels standing on the four comers of the earth, holding the four winds of earth, that the wind should not blow on the earth, nor on the sea, nor on any tree. And I saw another angel ascending from the east, having the seal of the living God: And he cried with a loud voice to the four angels, to whom it was given to hurt the earth and the sea, saying, ‘Hurt not the earth, neither the sea, nor the trees, till we have sealed the servants of God in their foreheads:” (Rev. 7:10-3)

How can we ever possibly over-estimate the importance of this sealing? Certainly there is destruction coming upon the earth as the book of Revelation clearly shows, but not until the sealing is complete. Certainly there will be slaughter as Ezekiel saw in his vision, but not until the servants of God are marked in their foreheads. This sealing of the mind is now in progress. People are being separated unto God in a manner hitherto unknown. I do not think that there has ever been a time when the truth concerning the mind of Christ has been made more clear, and neither has there ever been a people more desirous to understand what the will of the Lord is. Never has there been more spiritual insight concerning the condition of organized religion, and never has Mystery Babylon loomed so large nor been so ripe for destruction.

The hour of the sealing of the mind is here. The hour of judgment and destruction is at hand. The priceless prize of the mind of Christ is available to all who sigh and long for it above all earth’s treasures. He who has the mind of Christ will have God’s name in his forehead. “And I looked, and lo, a Lamb stood on Mount Zion and with Him an hundred and forty-four thousand, having His Father’s name in their foreheads. And I heard a voice from heaven as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of a great thunder: and I heard the voice of harpers, harping with their harps: and they sung as it were a new song before the throne and before the four beasts (living creatures) and the elders, and no man could learn that song but the hundred and forty-four thousand, which were redeemed from the earth. These are they which were not defiled with women (the harlot daughters of Babylon) for they are virgins. These are they which follow the Lamb whithersoever He goeth.” (Rev. 14:1-5)
The Spirit of God has warned us of another mark that is coming. It will not be the mark of Christ, but the mark of antichrist. A system of world government will be set up in which no man will be able to buy or sell until he has received the mark of the Beast or the number of his name either in his right hand or in his forehead. Rev. 13:16-18. Men have long talked of a world government and a world church. There are signs even now that some have already thought of the possibility of numbering all men for the sake of convenience and identification. An article appeared in the August, 1963, Reader’s Digest under the title, Call Me 552. The article, though intended to be amusing, is a hint of the way the wind is blowing even as a small straw upon the water indicates the direction the stream is moving. “Here is wisdom. Let him that hath understanding count the number of the Beast: for it is the number of a man; and his number is six hundred three score and six.” People have tried for centuries to discover what the 666 indicates. The truth is it is the number of a man, and the man will be very evident when the time comes.

Let us not concern ourselves or waste any time worrying about the mark of the beast. That will come in its time and none can stop it. But let us mightily concern ourselves with the other mark, the mark of God, the sealing of the sons of God in the forehead. Let us search for it as for hidden treasure, for the great day of the sealing of the servants of God in their foreheads is at hand and none can hinder nor prolong it.

CHAPTER FIVE
GOD SPEAKING BY HIS SON

The journey through time from the cradle of humanity in Eden to the manger of Bethlehem was long indeed. Ages waxed and waned; suns rose and set on millenniums; dispensations dawned with their present truths only to give place to the clearer light of a coming day. No age was without its truth, no millennium without its message, no dispensation without its revelation from the Almighty.

Through the changing scenes of time God was speaking. Never did he leave the world without a witness. Never was the voice of truth silent. The invisible things of Him from the creation of the world were clearly seen by the things which He had made, manifesting His eternal power and Godhead. The heavens declared the glory of God and the firmament showed His handiwork. Day unto day they uttered their speech and night unto night they showed His knowledge. No speech or language was bereft of His voice, for like the rays of the sun, itself, His truth was always present in the earth.

If you will but listen, His voice is always speaking, telling of His eternal goodness, omniscience, and power. The marvels of the starry heavens, the day that follows night, the rain that gives life to the earth, the ship that sunder the sea, the bird that flies, the horse that gallops, the motionless rose and the still stone, the winds, the clouds, the fire, the water, the glance of a woman, the smile of a child, the palm tree that bends in the winds, the date that ripens - these all speak of His goodness and wisdom. The trees sing of His power; the flowers waft their perfume toward Him. He is Lord of the pink morning, the white noon, and the blue evening.

You do not have to shout your faith;
Thrice eloquent are the quiet trees,
    And the green listening sod.
    Hushed are the stars,
Whose power is never spent;
The hills are mute,
    But how they speak of God.

Yes, God is always speaking. But there is a secret to hearing His voice. It will not be heard above the excited babble and din of the throng. He will not shout to drown other voices that clamor to be heard. He waits till all other voices are stilled and you have put away from your heart and mind all your own striving, and the din of the multitude who shouts for your attention has completely died away. You must become insensible to the sound of all other voices and hear only the voice of His Spirit speaking to your spirit.
There is a wonderful peace in silence. When your brain is wracked to a turmoil and you have examined every avenue for a solution to the exasperating problems that confront you, only to find that your search leads you to greater confusion, it is time for silence, repentance, and listening to the voice of Christ. He will speak and give His wisdom, but not until all other voices are silent and all other wisdom has become foolishness. “Be still and know that I am God.” Then He breaketh the bow, maketh war to cease, cutteth the spear in sunder, burneth the chariot in the fire, and is exalted among the heathen in all the earth. Psa. 46. It was after the earthquake, the fire, and the terrific wind that Elijah wrapped his head in his mantle and listened to the still small voice of God. “He leadeth me beside still waters,” said David. “Be still and know that I am God.”

When God speaks to your heart He will not simply help you to decide between two or more opinions already in your mind. When He speaks it is revolutionary and the opinions of men are discarded for they are always contrary to His will. We will never find God building on the old foundations we have laid. He will throw down every stone and build a temple after His own order.

“God, who at sundry times and in divers manners spake unto our fathers by the prophets, hath in these last days spoken unto us by His Son.” God is always speaking. In the perfumed magnificence of Eden He walked and talked with man face to face until man, through his shame and sin, hid himself from the presence of God and from His voice. But, though man is cast out from His hallowed presence, still He seeks and still He speaks. Even the blood of murdered Abel, shed upon the ground and crying for vengeance, spoke of the wrath and judgment of God, and the skins of slain beasts covering man’s nakedness spoke of a sacrifice to be made at Calvary, when once again their nakedness would be covered by His presence and they would see His face and His name would be in their foreheads.

At sundry times and in divers manners He sent His prophets among them, inspiring their words with exactness, proclaiming with wisdom and verbal inspiration the very word of God. They came from divers places, they spoke in divers manners, but all spoke the message of God by verbal (word) inspiration. Moses, the Levite, was rescued from the reeds of the river to speak face to face with his God, and to do all things according to the pattern that was showed him in the mount. Elijah the Tishbite appeared suddenly before Ahab, speaking the word of the Lord. Where he came from is a mystery. His origin matters not at all. The important thing is that he spoke the word of God. Elisha left his oxen to receive a double portion of the spirit of Elijah. David was taken from following the sheep and Amos from among the herdsmen of Tekoa. Shepherds came from their sheepfolds, farmers from their farms. Rugged men came from the wilderness. Kings came from their palaces. Some wore girdles of skin and ate locusts and wild honey; others were arrayed in royal apparel and sat at the table with kings. Others were fed by ravens and widows. Many were destitute, tormented and despised. Singlehanded they put armies to flight, and silenced the wrath of kings. They fed the poor and raised the dead, fled before enemies and prayed for death to take them, but the word of the Lord was in their mouths, burning like an unquenchable fire. They did not speak their own ideas but the Spirit spoke by them, and His word was in their tongues. The prophecy by which God spake in ancient times was not a sermon nor a comforting exhortation. It was the exact word of the Lord, and the prophet was completely incapable of making an error of any kind.

Four hundred years had gone by since Malachi had proclaimed the word of the Lord in Israel. No other prophet had appeared on the scene and there was a great dearth of the word of God in the land. The order was changing. God was removing the old way of speaking and bringing in a better way. In times past He had spoken by the prophets. Now He would speak by His Son, the Son by whom and for whom the world and all things in it were created, the Son who was the brightness of God’s glory and the express of His person.

When they heard Him speak, the soldiers said, “Never man spake like this man.” The Jews marveled that He spake with authority and not as the scribes who could only quote what others had said. The sermon on the mount excelled all other sermons either written or spoken as light excels the darkness. No words of truth and comfort ever thrilled a human heart as did His words to weeping Martha: “I am the resurrection and the life.” No man had ever opened the gates to the kingdom as He did when He explained the new birth to Nicodemus. No words of forgiveness were ever uttered before as were spoken to the trembling woman, “Neither do I condemn thee.” He knew the answer to every question, but when He questioned there was none to reply. By His matchless skill the lame were made whole. By the touch of His hand fevers vanished and by the word of His lips dead men rose to life again. At His rebuke demons fled, fierce winds stilled and raging seas whimpered like babes at His word of peace, and fell asleep. God was speaking by His Son, setting an eternal pattern for a vast family of sons who were soon to follow His steps.

The voice of the Galilean has been silent for almost two thousand years, but all through the centuries God has been speaking by the life of His Son. Consider carefully the thoughts that follow and you will see that God is speaking in these last days by what that Son is even more than He spoke by the words which fell from His lips in the long ago.

Nothing is dearer to the heart of God than sonship. It would be futile vanity for me to presume to argue for the sonship of Jesus Christ, for that must be accepted by us all. That holy thing that was born of Mary was the Son of God. He became a partaker of the human nature, though He was very God, that we who are men might once again be partakers of the divine nature.

There is need of the spirit of revelation here to save us from the gaping cavern of human theology. The driest theologian in the apostate church will admit that God wants us to be sons, and we must avoid that wretched passive admission at all costs. When the truth dawns by revelation to the waiting heart, convincing us that God not only wants sons, but that He has provided a way whereby we can enter into that sonship, then all earthly gain becomes loss in anticipation of the hope of sonship and the whole realm of nature becomes too small a tribute for the prize that is before us.

"Beloved, now are we the children of God (thus says the original) and it doth not yet appear what we shall be." What we are is children. What we shall be is sons. Jesus Christ is the first born son of a vast family of sons. As He possessed the fullness of the divine nature, so also every son will be a partaker of the fullness of the divine nature. What is mortal in them will be swallowed up by His immortality and what is natural swallowed up in the greatness of His divinity. God is speaking by His Son. As He is so we also shall be.

I believe in the virgin birth of Jesus Christ, the Son of God. We must never belittle, minimize, or disparage that fundamental truth. Yet the birth of Christ is wrapped in a garment of even greater importance. I mean the method by which that birth was accomplished.

The mighty angel Gabriel vouchsafed to Mary the method by which sons of God are to be begotten. Setting aside her virginity and all natural processes of birth as a thing belonging to a natural realm, He declared that the birth of the Son would be on this wise: "The Holy Ghost shall come upon you, and the power of the Highest shall overshadow you, and the holy thing that shall be born of you shall be called the Son of God." God is speaking by His Son. There is no other way to sonship than this.

The overshadowing power and presence of the Holy Spirit will bring forth the son of God within us as surely as it brought forth the Son of God in Mary. There is no other road to sonship. Christ in you is the hope of Glory. Though Christ was separated from Mary, He will not be separated from you, for what is mortal must be swallowed by His life.

Except a man be born from above, he cannot see the kingdom. He who dwelleth in the secret place of the Most High shall abide under the shadow of the Almighty. Sonship comes about by dwelling and abiding in the overshadowing presence of the Holy Spirit, walking, living, and breathing in Him. It cannot come to those who persist in show or those who crowd in for a few minutes of praise, prophecy and signs only to go away and fill their ears and eyes and hearts with the sounds and sights of earth for the rest of the day. God is speaking by His Son. Our sonship, like His, is accomplished by the overshadowing power of His Holy Spirit continually touching our lives, our hearts, our thoughts, and our minds. All else beside this is vanity and loss. As He was begotten by the overshadowing power of the Spirit, so also are we.

A teacup cannot contain the ocean, neither can the world contain the books that should be written about Him, yet I fear that for all our learning about Him we have missed one of the most essential things. We learn of His doctrine. Word by word, we study His sermons and dissertations. We preach about His miracles and healings. We talk of His love and mercy. We marvel at His answers and wisdom. Our hearts are made strong by His promises and we are brought to penitence by His rebukes. But have we forgotten that all these glories came from what He inherently was? He gave life because He was life. He spoke wisdom because He was wisdom, and all its universal treasures dwelt in Him. He healed the sick, not because of a gift of healing, but because of the overwhelming presence of life which swallowed up every degree of death that entered His presence. In Him was life. The words of wisdom falling from His lips had no origin in the schools of men, nor yet were they the inspiration of a gift from above. They dropped from a mind from which universal wisdom has come. He is wisdom. God has made Him so. Apart from Him there is neither wisdom nor knowledge. No secret was hidden from Him, not because of learning, but because of what He was.

God is speaking by His Son. Let us pass beyond the realm of doing to the realm of being. Spiritual gifts are an excellent way, but they must cease to make way for the more excellent way. The more excellent way is the way of sonship where everything is God and God is everything. Though I speak with the tongues of men and angels and have not love, I am as sounding brass and a tinkling cymbal. Now please tell me, what is love? Have we not learned that God is love! He who dwells in love dwelleth in God and God in him. But if I speak with tongues, perform mighty miracles and have the gifts of healing, prophesy a great deal, and give many gifts to the poor, yet I am not moving in Him, I will be like those deluded ones who will come saying: “Lord, have we not prophesied in Thy name, and in Thy name cast out demons, and in Thy name done many wonderful works? And He will reply, “I know you not.” Cease crying for a return of gifts. Gifts are always compassed with the dread infirmities of those who possess them. Seek rather to go on to that more excellent way, for that is the way of sonship and the kingdom. If God is removing the spiritual gifts, it is for a reason. He definitely has been removing them for some years. Jesus did His mighty works, not because of gifts but because of what He was and still is. That is the more excellent way. He showed love because He was love. He showed mercy because He was mercy. He spoke truth because He was truth. “What is truth,” Pilate asked, and had he waited for the reply, he would have learned this: “I am the truth, the life and the way.” He does not just give life. He is life. When He shows us the way, He shows us Himself, for He is the way.

God is speaking by His Son. Let us come beyond the realm of doing to the realm of being. Let us leave off our imitation of Christ, which at best is hypocrisy, and give Him place to live within that He, from within these temples, may be the truth, the way, the life, the health, the wisdom, the omnipotence, that as He is, so we should also be, in this present world. This is the more excellent way.

“Inasmuch as He has suffered being tempted. He is able to succor them that are tempted.” What a revelation this passage really is. It throws into clear light the eternal mystery of suffering and temptation. The age old question, “Why do the righteous suffer,” is forever answered by His life of suffering and temptation. The unsympathizing, cynical, and cocky are always found among those who have not suffered temptation’s ravaging power. They cannot shed a sympathizing tear, for they have never faced that trial which manifests their infirmity. Those who brag of their boldness are usually the biggest cowards, and those who boast of the greatest strength manifest the greatest weakness under the stress of temptation. “We have not an high priest who cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmity but one who was tempted in all points like we are, yet without sin.” He knoweth our frame; He remembereth that we are dust. Therefore, like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear Him. God is speaking by the temptation of His Son.

Let us take a different attitude toward temptation and suffering. Let us see by the revelation of the Spirit that the enduring of it and the victory over it are as completely necessary to our sonship, as it was also necessary to His. Though we are tried by fire, we will find the trial of our faith is more precious than gold, that at the appearing of Christ within us, we should be found unto glory and honor and praise. God is speaking by His Son.

The life of Christ was pure and sinless because of what He was. Though we were born in sin and conceived in iniquity, yet we have started on the road to sonship. I know little good is gained by a system of laws consisting of do’s and don’ts. I have never taught that there is merit in such a system. But of a truth I declare that those whose hearts are restless and yearning for sonship can never be satisfied with the trivial vanities of this earth, and in our quest for sonship we will have to refuse to let our eyes be turned aside to the profane and earthly things. “Let thine eyes look right on, and let thine eyelids look straight before thee,” were the words of wisdom from Solomon. There must be a resolution and a resolve in all our seeking. We must lay aside every hindering weight and the sin which does so easily beset us, while we run with patience the race set before us. Races are not won by turning aside to view the landscape, but through straining every nerve to reach the goal. Whatever cynical scoffers may say, it is nevertheless true that all the world’s fleeting joys tend to dull our spiritual appetite, dim our vision, render us insensible to the voice of the Spirit, and, in general, turn our hearts away from God. I strongly advocate to all who patiently wait for the promises of God that they turn aside from all wordly pleasure and refuse the fleeting satisfaction that comes from excitement and amusement. “Flee also youthful lusts, which war against the soul, but follow righteousness, faith, love, peace, with them that call on the Lord out of a pure heart.” If you do this faithfully, your time will be fully occupied. No hours will hang heavily on your hands, nor will you need the world’s trash to fill out your day.

Do not seek to be rich, for riches only add a snare and many hurtful lusts that drown men in perdition. Leave hockey and baseball and all kindred amusement to those who belong to that realm. God is speaking by His Son. He spent His life in touch with God and never once did we find Him obtaining satisfaction in pleasurable amusement and excitement. All the games and vain amusements of this earth are for those who belong to this earth, but if your treasures are in heaven then seek the things that belong to heaven. “My kingdom is not of this world,” said Jesus. Neither is our kingdom from hence, so let us fully turn from it and seek our lasting joys from above. God is speaking by His Son.

Nay, world, I turn away, though thou seem fair and good.
Thy friendly outstretched hand is stained with Jesus’ blood.
If in the least device I stoop to take a part,
All unawares thine influence steals God’s presence from my heart.
I miss my Savior’s smile, when’er I walk thy ways;
Thy laughter drowns the Spirit’s voice,
And chokes the songs of praise.
When e’er I turn aside to join thee for an hour,
The face of Christ grows blurred and dim,
And prayer has lost its power.

No mark of sonship was more outstanding in the life of Christ than His constant walk in the will of God. To please self or to please men never entered His divine mind. He had one thought and one only - to do the will of God that sent Him. The fact of His unswerving devotion to God’s will is clearly seen in that Jesus said, “I honor my Father and ye dishonor me.” (Jno. 5:30) “For I come down from heaven, not to do mine own will, but the will of Him that sent me.” (Jno. 6:38) The temptation, the tears, the strong crying, the agony and the bloody sweat of lonely Gethsemane were the final crucial test of His complete devotion and abandonment to the whole will of God. Neither shame, desertion, nor the prospect of the cross could move Him from the thorny but blessed path of the will of God. He was prepared to endure the cross, despise shame, and be utterly forsaken and alone that He might fulfill the will of the Father. The desperate aloneness of the Son of God in His final hours is amazing to behold, but this is the path that leads not merely to Gethsemane but to His kingdom as well.

God is speaking by His Son, telling us that none can reign with Him but those who embrace His will, become utterly forsaken of carnal men, and lay down their lives that He might live. While tens of thousands of Christians claim to be doing God’s will, in reality they know nothing about God’s will or God’s mind. They are confused, imagining that the purposes they are moving heaven and earth to accomplish, are God’s will. In reality these things are their own will and God has not spoken at all. Let us settle it in our minds, however, that none will reign with Christ but those who are one with His will. That blessed company who have God’s name written in their foreheads, are those who have the mind of Christ, and I am sure that the mind of Christ and the will of God are one and the same thing. God is speaking by His Son.

“God forbid that I should glory save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom the world is crucified unto Me and I unto the world.” (Gal. 6:14) How can a man read those words and still lightly make himself a friend of the fleeting joys of earth? Turn away from these vanities, for there can be no resurrection or glory except it comes by the way of the cross. The way of the cross is the way of death to all the old life and leads us to the resurrection which lies beyond the veil whither Jesus has for us entered.
Stand with me for a moment with bowed head and reverent heart, while we hear Paul speak again, "I am crucified with Christ; nevertheless, I live, yet not I, but Christ liveth in me." (Gal. 1:20) Without the spirit of revelation this passage is devoid of sense, for how could one be dead and still alive? But when seen in the light of the cross it is full of meaning. The "I" that was crucified is not the same "I" that now lives, but the new "I" is none other than Christ Himself. Read it again with this in mind and you will see why the cross is necessary for you. "I am crucified with Christ, nevertheless, I live, yet not I, but Christ liveth in Me. The old “I” that was crucified is my old self, the new “I” that lives is none other than the risen Christ. There is a cross waiting for your crucifixion, that you may be crucified with Him and that Christ may live within you. Herein lies the secret of the resurrection, for the death of the cross is followed by the glory of the resurrection. God is speaking by His Son.

And Jesus when He had cried with a loud voice gave up the Ghost. The earth quaked, the rocks rent, and the veil of the temple was rent from top to bottom. At the precise moment of the physical death of Christ, which is the death of the flesh, the veil of the temple was rent asunder, and the way into the holiest of all, which is the realm of the Spirit, was made open for the first time. Beautiful as the veil was, it had to be rent asunder before the way to the holiest was opened. In like manner also we must die to the flesh, or be crucified with Him, that we may enter into the realm of the Spirit and be sons of God. There is no other way to sonship. The rending of the veil was the opening of the way. There must come an end of all flesh and a new life in the Spirit must begin. It is not enough to know that Christ was raised from the dead. You must be raised with Him. Neither is it enough that His flesh was rent in death. You must be crucified with Him. God is speaking by His Son.

Away with pride! Away with plans! Away with ambitions! Away with every scheming human device to forcefully bring the kingdom. God is speaking by His Son. Let us follow His path in every detail and we will enter in with Him. Time and space would fail me to enumerate all He speaks by His divinely beautiful life, but if in every circumstance of your life you behold Him, you will find the answer, the truth and the way. God is in these last days speaking by His Son.

CHAPTER SIX
ADOPTION OF SONS

I will lift up mine eyes unto the hills from whence cometh my help. My help cometh from the Lord who made heaven and earth. Deep calleth unto deep at the noise of Thy waterspouts, but the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God; neither can he know them, for they are spiritually discerned. Who, then, can hear Thy voice but he whose ears the Spirit has opened? What heart can understand Thy precepts but that which Thy wisdom hath enlightened? Open therefore my eyes that I may behold wonderful things out of Thy law. Open my eyes as the eyes of Jacob were opened when he saw a ladder reaching from earth into heaven with angels ascending and descending. Open my eyes as the servant's eyes were opened when Elisha prayed that I may see beyond the grime and warfare of earth to behold those chariots of fire and myriads of ministering spirits. Open my eyes as Stephen's eyes were opened to see the Son of God seated at the right hand of His Father, henceforth expecting till all the earth shall be His footstool. Open my eyes as Jesus told Nathaniel it would be, saying, "Henceforth thou shall see heaven open and the angels of God ascending and descending upon the Son of man. Open my eyes, oh Lord, that I may understand and enter into the things that are written here. Amen.

"Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love Him. But God hath revealed them unto us by His Spirit ..." (1 Cor. 2:9, 10) I am inclined to believe that the sincere and humble man fain would flee away and beg to be excused from speaking of the sacred things, mysterious and holy, which God has prepared for those who love Him. The man who would approach even the outer court of God's eternal purpose, which He purposed for all creation in Christ Jesus, with a light heart or a glib tongue has never yet, I fear, been awed by the awful glory of the infinite purpose which was conceived in the heart of God ages ago in the distant eternities.

The man whose spirit has not been overwhelmed by the indisputable knowledge that before all things, behind all things, in all things, and through all things standeth God, all-wise, all-understanding, all-powerful, and forever unchanging, has failed to know as God would have him know and has fallen short of that most rudimentary principle of sonship, the knowledge of His will. It is not until we begin to comprehend the purpose of God for the ages that we begin truly to love God. It is well nigh impossible to love God while our minds remain in bondage to those purposeless teachings laid down by the misnamed theologians of man-made systems that masquerade as the church of the living God. The God they proclaim is a God without a purpose, a God who, according to their gospel, was tricked and outwitted in the garden of Eden by a vastly inferior creature who by his sinister cunning laid waste eternal design. Theirs is a God who was forced by the imagined disaster and tragedy of the fall to produce a plan by which He could salvage some tiny remnant of His creation while Satan dragged off to perdition ninety-nine percent of the spoils. Is it any wonder that the hearts of men are turned away and unbelievers are multiplied by millions! Not only do I abhor and disbelieve it, but I think it is Satan's second lie.

It is not until our hearts are turned away from the endless cavillings of men and our ears become deaf to their fruitless doctrines and meaningless traditions that we begin to turn our listening ear to the voice of the Spirit. It is then we hear Him speaking from His throne in eternity, long before ever an age, I was formed and before cosmos began to be formed from the wastes of chaos. There in the glory and wonder of His presence, from out the depths of His omniscient mind, His purpose for the ages, the dispensations, the worlds, and for eternity itself was laid down upon the infinite blue-print, plan by plan, purpose by purpose, age by age in order, controlled by the might and glory of an immutable will and the power and majesty of an omnipotent arm. Like as the billion celestials are held in their orbits by His omnipotence, so each eternal purpose and every divine decree shall be sustained by His almighty guiding hand to grow and mature from glory to glory until His vast family of beloved sons shall deliver up to Him all things in perfection that God Himself shall be all and in all.

It was while poor disconsolate Job, full of misunderstandings and human reasonings, sat desolate in his dust and ashes that the Spirit of the all-wise God arrested him, and, bidding his human reasonings to cease. He turned the eyes of the sufferer to the glory of a scene that took place long before ever the ages began. I may be wrong, but an inner witness tells me that I had my beginnings long ages before that winter morning, Feb. 27th, 1909, when I first saw the light of earth's day. That was but the day when my spirit came forth from God to inhabit this chamel house of death, this flesh we call the body, there to walk and await the day when the spirit would return to God who gave it. Eccles. 12:7. When the spirit partakes of flesh and blood, the glory of the ages past is forgotten because of the bondage of corruption and the darkness and death of the fleshly mind. Our blessed Lord, when but hours away from His crucifixion, lifted His voice in prayer, saying, "And now, 0 Father, glorify Thou Me with Thine own self, with the glory that I had with Thee before the world was." (John 17:5) Our kind Father in heaven awakened the memory of Job to things of eternity past, saying, "Where wast thou when I laid the foundations of the earth?" I suppose Job could not then remember that he, too, had joined the heavenly anthems in that blest day when the morning stars sang together and the sons of God shouted for joy. Rolled out as a scroll before their wondering eyes lay God's blue-print of the ages, the dispensations, the age of the ages, and the limitless eternity. Replete was every minute detail which God purposed through His beloved Son. There their wondering eyes beheld the purpose of the fall, the purpose of suffering and pain, the purpose of war and tribulation, the purpose of bondage and corruption, the purpose of death, the purpose of life, the glory of the plan of redemption and purification, the purpose of grace and the kingdom, and the glory of the ages to follow. So glorious stood the array of infinite purpose that the morning stars lifted their voices in a choral harmony that filled the universe and, as the angels swept their harp strings and trumpets echoed among the eternal hills, the sons of God, both who were and were to be, shouted the glory and praise of God until from mountain peak to mountain peak the chorus swelled and all the great sidereal of God was filled with the harmony of the ages forevermore.

I may be wrong, but a beautiful tenderness fills my spirit when the precious thought thrills my soul that I, with Job, was there among that heavenly host, rejoicing and shouting together with them as my spirit embraced the glory of His purpose and beheld with rapture the part that would be mine in the plan of Him who disclosed this secret: "Whom He did foreknow He did predestinate to be conformed to the image of His Son..." (Rom. 8:29) If the inhabitants of this world who now sit in darkness and the shadow of death could but hear the Spirit say that they, too, are the objects of God's eternal purpose, there would be an immediate and unbelievable change in them, for their faith would reach out at once to lay hold on the hope that is before them. Few things have saddened and appalled my heart so much as the knowledge that my fellow Christians all over the world walk blindly on in the darkness of the absurd and worthless traditions of an apostate church system, completely devoid of any true knowledge of the eternal purpose laid down by God for them before the worlds began. Times without number I have noticed the look of utter incredulity on the faces of God's people when in their ears I unfolded the outlines of God's matchless plan which He purposed in Christ Jesus before the ages began.

When I was a young man nineteen years of age, my brother Philip and I sat side by side listening to a man of God unfold the mysteries of the word of truth. As he spoke, he made a statement which to our young Christian minds seemed to be radical and completely incorrect, to which we quickly and unwisely expressed our dissent. The brother stopped in his talk. Tears filled his kindly eyes and with an emotion in his voice that remains with me until this day he made this unforgettable observation: "The moment you say 'no', you close your heart, and the Spirit of God can teach you nothing." I have never forgotten that word of wisdom. How good it would be for us all if in this final hour of the age we would open our hearts to eternal understanding that we might embrace the wisdom which God displayed in His purpose before the world began. Let us not then judge after the paltry understanding of men nor critically peer through the spectacles of human tradition to cull out and lay aside everything that does not conform to the tradition of the elders. Be not like those unwise Pharisees and doctors of the law to whom our Master said, "Ye make the commandment of God of none effect by your tradition." (Matt. 15:6) And again, "Ye strain at a gnat and swallow a camel." What greater promise was ever given to unlearned and ignorant men, blinded by the wisdom of this world, than the promise given by Jesus that "when He, the Spirit of truth shall come, He will guide you into all truth; For He shall not speak of Himself, but whatsoever He shall hear, that shall He speak, and He will show you things to come. He shall glorify Me; for He shall receive of mine, and shall show it unto you." (John 16:13-14)

Let us now acquaint ourselves with the following important fact. When we learn the truth I now affirm, many things which have hitherto been an insurmountable mystery, will begin to come clear to our understanding. The fact is simply this: Every purpose God ever devised and every plan God ever made He has planned to fulfill through His Son, the Lord Jesus Christ. When the apostle Paul wrote of these breath-taking truths and unfolded before our wondering minds the unsearchable riches of Christ, he made this remarkable statement from the storehouse of his own enlightened mind: "Unto me, who am less than the least of all saints is this grace given, that I should preach among the Gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ; and to make all men see what is the fellowship of the mystery, which from beginning of the world (the ages) hath been hid in God, who created all things by Jesus Christ: to the intent that now unto the principalities and powers in heavenly places might be known by the church the manifold wisdom of God, according to the eternal purpose which He purposed in Christ Jesus our Lord." (Eph. 3:8-11)

Let us then stand assured of this marvelous fact: When God formed the ages and planned the dispensations, He did it in and through His Son, Jesus Christ. When He made the worlds, He did it by and for and through His Son. When He conceived the plan of the ages, He did it through His Son. When He laid the plan of redemption and all the unspeakable wonders of it, He planned that it should be accomplished through His beloved Son. The purpose of God for the government of the universe in the ages to come is committed to His Son, for "He must reign until He has put all enemies under His feet." (1 Cor. 15:25) When God planned to abolish death, 2 Tim. 1:10, He planned to do it through His Son of whom He said, "In Him was life." And when all things have been subdued unto Christ, then will the Son Himself be subject to Him (the Father) who has put all things under Him, that God may be all in all. (1 Cor. 15:26-28)

It is completely impossible for me or for any man who ever lived to explain, or even begin to explain, the abounding, unsearchable, unfathomable love which God has for His Son. God has placed the entire hope of all creation in Him. So unspeakable is His admiration for His only begotten Son that He purposed to create in Him a whole new family of sons who would share the exact image and likeness of Jesus Christ that He might be the firstborn among many brethren, or the eldest in a vast family of sons. (Rom. 8:29) It was Christ Jesus, God's Son, who paid the satisfying ransom of His own blood that we might be redeemed from sin and death. The life is in the blood. (Lev. 17:11; Deut. 12:23) In Him is life, and the life is the light of men. For this reason His better blood, Heb. 12:24, was given that by its power all men once slain by sin should receive life in Him. The Spirit of life was in Christ Jesus. God decreed that "the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus should make all men free from the law of sin and death." (Rom. 8:1, 2) The law of sin and death is simply this: "In the day that thou eatest thereof thou shall surely die." (Gen. 2:17) Now we stand in Him on the ground of no condemnation, for there is now, therefore, no condemnation to them who are in Christ Jesus. Rom. 8:1. Ah, blessed and wonderful mystery of redemption.

There is scarcely a man on earth who has not secretly or openly desired to become the father of a son, and I am not overstepping reason when I say that this desire, inherent in the heart of every human being, was derived from our Creator, the everlasting Father Himself, whose eternal heart conceived the glory of sonship in those realms before ever the world was or time was formed within the bosom of eternity. It was of that hour the apostle wrote, saying, "In the beginning was the Word." John 1:1. "In the beginning!" Why would the eternal God consent to use such an expression as that for that which is eternal - has neither beginning nor ending? Because man is a creature of time, he is completely incapable of understanding that which is timeless. When we humans think of the omnipotent God, we are capable only of imagining Him to be a man like ourselves, only much wiser and more powerful than we are. When we think of eternity, we can imagine it to be only an extension of time. We cannot understand a realm that is not marked off by the rising and setting of the sun, and by months and seasons and years, and by growing old and dying and all such things so familiar to us. Yet it is true that God lives in a realm of timelessness which He knows to be eternity. Thus to accommodate the timelessness of the eternal God to the limited understanding of men the Holy Spirit allowed the phrase to be written, "In the beginning God ...", Gen. 1:1, and "In the beginning was the Word." (John 1:1)

There is nothing dearer to the heart of God than His sons. It was God the Father, almighty, all-wise, unchanging and eternal who first conceived the God-like thought of sonship, His purpose being that they, every one of them, should be begotten of God, perfected through the refining fires of suffering, tribulation, pain, disappointment, injustice, inequity, war, sorrow, bereavement and death, that they might come into the fullness of the mind of God. As the darkness of the night shows us the stars, so sorrow shows us truth. The eyes of our understanding are washed bright by our tears until we are to behold the reality of that which is invisible and real. Richter once said, "To love all mankind, a cheerful state of being is required; but to see into mankind, into life, and still more into ourselves, suffering is a requisite." "The happiest, sweetest, tenderest homes are not those where there has been no sorrow, but those which have been overshadowed with grief, and where Christ's comfort was accepted. The very memory of the sorrow is a gentle benediction that broods over the household like the silence that comes after prayer. There is a blessing sent from God in every burden of sorrow." (J. R. Miller). Phillips Brooks, speaking of sorrow, left this wise and beautiful statement. "Wherever souls are being tried and ripened, in whatever commonplace and homely way, there God is hewing out the pillars of His temple." Sorrow is not the handmaid of Satan, but the handmaid of God. Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning. By the sorrow of the heart the spirit is broken, Prov. 15:13. It is pitiful to find that in this frivolous and selfish age even God's people have forgotten that they are perfected through suffering and not by delights. Even the blessed Christ had His humanity perfected by the things He suffered.

Then when our perfection in His image and likeness is complete, we shall be given the reins of government - first the government of the world in the dispensation of the kingdom of God; second the government and restoration of all things in heaven and earth in the dispensation of the fullness of times, Eph. 1:10; then, the government of the new heaven and the new earth in the dispensation which we can only call the ages of the ages. Ah, glorious mystery of sonship that we should share the image of God and the exact likeness of that first begotten Son, the firstborn of many sons to come. Of Him we will now speak particularly. "Behold, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God: therefore the world knoweth us not, because it knew Him not. Beloved, now are we the sons (children) of God, (Greek teknon, meaning adolescent or youth), and it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that, when He shall appear, we shall be like Him: for we shall see Him as He is. And every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as He is pure." (1 John 3:1-3)

That we might better comprehend, at least in part, the all embracing purpose of sonship, we must leave the customary paths, often carelessly trodden to explore the realms hitherto kept secret and walk in the avenues where man's faith has seldom moved. If we now insist that all revelation and illumination of truth must be judged by the narrowness of our past tradition, better far it is that we turn our back now on all illumination and light and join those tradition-ridden Pharisees who could never believe that Jesus spoke aught but blasphemy when He declared in the certainty of divine wisdom, "Before Abraham was, I AM." (John 8:58)
The book of the prophecy of Ezekiel is a book that defies the wisdom of man. The natural man never can understand the things of God. How much less when they are hidden! Awe-inspiring truth fills the pages of the book and it is certain none could ever understand them but by the Holy Spirit. But we will discover, I am sure, as the ages pass by that this strange prophecy of Ezekiel is among the most revealing and deeply spiritual of all verbal inspirations because the Holy Spirit permitted this son of man through fiery visions to draw back the darkling veil that our wondering eyes might behold the glory of the infinite purpose of sonship that had its beginning in the glorious flaming whirlwind of fire and light which God the Father is.

The prophecy of Ezekiel begins in this wise: "Now it came to pass in the thirtieth year, in the fourth month, in the fifth day of the month, as I was among the captives by the river of Chebar, that the heavens were opened, and I saw visions of God." (Ezek. 1:1) "I saw visions of God!" The visions Ezekiel saw on this occasion were not visions from God nor visions concerning things God intended to do, but the vision that unfolded before the eyes of this prophet and caused him to fall on his face (verse 28) was a vision of God Himself. And lest I should weary you with explanations and statements hard to understand, I shall tell you plainly that which should cause you to be awed as Ezekiel was and to worship Him who liveth forever and ever.

I wish now to show you, as best I can in human terms, that the dreadfully awe-inspiring vision which Ezekiel saw was that omnipotent act of God bringing forth from the fiery glory of Himself His first and only begotten Son before ever the world was formed. I am perfectly aware that such a statement as the above will stagger the imagination of most who read these lines. Indeed, if it does not, I think it should do. Dare we think that a hope so eternal as sonship must from its very genesis be completely hidden from our eyes since it is the hope of all creation and we ourselves with every created thing in heaven and earth unceasingly groan for its fullness? Are we to imagine that He whom God proclaimed to be His only begotten Son was in fact not begotten at all? Or shall we think that He who, as it is written, was in the beginning with God (John 1:2) had in fact no beginning at all before the manger of Bethlehem? Let us then approach this mighty truth in reverence and godly fear, because I am led to believe that the eternal Father is here acquainting His elect ones with the very beginning of all sonship as the almighty Father Himself brought forth from the fire and glory of His omnipotent self the first of all begotten sons, even the head of that vast family of sons which in a dispensation yet unborn will become the body of the bridegroom - every member a begotten son of God, every member joined inseparably by one Spirit to each other and to the eldest Son, who is the supreme head of that vast and glorious family of sons.

Long ago King Solomon wrote of the glory of the Son of God in the limitless eternity before the world was. He told of His rejoicing in the Father's presence as He shared with Him as the architect and builder of this fantastically wonderful universe and laid plans for the boundless glories that were to follow. Divine inspiration demands that the words and phrases of the eighth chapter of Proverbs extend far beyond the mere attribute of wisdom as they reach out to embrace the personality and being of the Son of God Himself. None but Jesus Christ is the wisdom of God. None but He is the power of God, and none but He was in the beginning with God. He is the wisdom and the power of God and by Him who was with the Father in the beginning were all things created and made. Thus Solomon beheld His glory and wrote of Him, saying, "The Lord possessed Me in the beginning of His way, before His works of old. I was set up from everlasting, from the beginning, John 1:1, or ever the earth was. When there were no depths, I was brought forth; when there were no fountains abounding with water. Before the mountains were settled, before the hills was I brought forth, while as yet He had not made the earth, nor the fields, nor the highest part of the dust of the world. When He prepared the heavens, I was there: when He set a compass upon the face of the depth: when He established the clouds above: when He strengthened the fountains of the deep: when He gave to the sea His decree, that the waters should not pass His commandment: when He appointed the foundations of the earth: Then was I by Him, as one brought up with Him: and I was daily His delight, rejoicing always before Him; rejoicing in the habitable part of His earth; and My delights were with the sons of men. Now therefore hearken unto Me, 0 ye children: for blessed are they that keep My ways. Hear instruction, and be wise, and refuse it not. Blessed is the man that heareth Me, watching daily at My gates, waiting at the posts of My doors. For whoso findeth Me findeth life, John 1:4, 8:12, 10:38, and shall obtain favour of the Lord. But he that sinneth against Me wrongeth his own soul: all they that hate Me love death."
Thus in confirmation wrote Ezekiel, saying, "And I looked, and, behold, a whirlwind came out of the north, a great cloud, and a fire enfolding itself, and a brightness was about it, and out of the midst thereof as the color of amber, out of the midst of the fire. Also out of the midst thereof came the likeness of four living creatures. And this was their appearance; they had the likeness of a man. And every one had four faces and every one had four wings. And their feet were straight feet; and the sole of their feet was like the sole of a calf's foot: and they sparkled like the color of burnished brass. (Rev. 1:15) ...As for the likeness of their faces, they four had the face of a man, and the face of a lion, on the right side: and they four had the face of an ox on the left side; they four also had the face of an eagle... As for the likeness of the living creatures, their appearance was like burning coals of fire, and like the appearance of lamps: it went up and down among the living creatures; and the fire was bright, and out of the fire went forth lightning. And the living creatures ran and returned as the appearance of a flash of lightning." (Ezek. 1:4-14)

It is completely impossible to portray a divine image in the mirror of human words. Earthly tongues can but dimly describe things that belong to heavenly realms. We quickly reach the place where things "hard to be understood", 2 Pet. 3:16, are also "not lawful for a man to utter." (2 Cor. 12:4) Need we wonder then at the stammering lips of the prophet Ezekiel as with human words he struggles to describe the magnificent glory revealed to him with such expressions as, "The likeness of the firmament upon their heads was as the color of terrible crystal." Verse 22. The fire enfolding itself or the color of amber out of the midst of the fire. Verse 4. See also verses 13 and 16. I am sure, however, that the fire enfolding itself, the whirlwind, the amber and the terrible crystal were descriptions of God the Father and of the coming forth of the only begotten Son from the very person of the Father in the eternity, and this we shall now describe as God may give us help and understanding.

"And I looked, and, behold, a whirlwind came out of the north, a great cloud, and a fire enfolding itself, and a brightness was about it, and out of the midst thereof as the color of amber, out of the midst of the fire." These are the words of verse 4. This is a vision of God, Chapter 1, verse 1, and all that Ezekiel saw - the whirlwind, the north, the cloud, the fire, and even the color of the fire, amber, are all descriptive of God. All are elsewhere associated with God and all are symbolic and typical of God. In scripture symbols are used to emphasize the many sided aspect of a truth. Types, though only shadows, emphasize the anti-types. For instance, the word of God has many symbols, each of which in its own beauty serves to portray the greatness, the glory and power of that living word which is Jesus Christ. If we simply speak of the word, we have no more understanding than the phrase expressed. But, when the Lord uses symbols to describe His word, then the mind is filled with the glory of the reality of what the word really is. Thus in symbol the word of God is a lamp, Psa. 119:105; a critic (discerner), Heb. 4:12; a mirror, Jas. 1:25; a cleansing laver, Eph. 5:26; food. Job 23:12; milk for babes, Heb. 5:12, 13; strong meat for the full grown, 1 Cor. 3:2; bread, the staff of life, Isa. 55:10; honey, the perfect sweetness, Psa. 19:10; gold to enrich, Psa. 19:10; fire to purify, Jer. 20:9; a sword, Eph. 6:17; a hammer, Jer. 23:29; seed, Luke 8:2; sun, Psa. 19:1-6; rain and snow, Isa. 55:10, 11; and many more. And then, of course, the word of God becomes much more than the beauties expressed by each of these symbols. It becomes the living Word, the Logos, and finally Christ Himself, who was in the beginning with the Father.

With these thoughts in mind we can better understand how the whirlwind, the clouds, the fire, the brightness as lightning portray the mysterious wonder and glory of Him who is the eternal God and the glory of that wonderful Son who came forth from the fiery bosom of the Father. The reader has probably noticed how frequently God associates Himself with the symbolic whirlwind. There is something about a whirlwind, a cyclone or tornado, that we are quite powerless to understand. Even the smallest whirlwind attracts our immediate attention as it catches up into its peculiar folds anything which may be in its path. All winds are whirlwinds in a sense whether they be little whirlwinds that we see almost daily, or whether they be a cyclone, a tornado, or a hurricane, or even the common wind. All are moving in a circle enfolding in themselves all things that can be moved. God manifests Himself in the whirlwind when there is a sense of urgency either real or implied. Thus twice out of the whirlwind the Lord spoke to the distressed and disconsolate Job, as it is written, "Then the Lord answered Job out of the whirlwind, and said, Who is this that darkenth counsel by words without knowledge...?" (Job 38:1, 2) And again. "Then answered the Lord unto Job out of the whirlwind, and said, Gird up thy loins now like a man; I will demand of thee, and declare thou unto me." (Job 40:6, 7) Isaiah, speaking of the coming of the Lord, associated the fire, the chariots, and the whirlwind, saying, "Behold, the Lord will come with fire and with His chariots like a whirlwind to render anger with fury, and His rebuke with flames of fire." (Isa. 66:15) See also Zech 9:14. And was not this also the scene at the translation of Elijah? “For it came to pass, as they (Elijah and Elisha) still went on, and talked, that, behold, there appeared a chariot of fire, and horses of fire, and parted them both asunder; and Elijah went up by a whirlwind into heaven.” (2 Kings 2:11)

Reading each of these passages, we notice that, when the Lord manifested Himself in the whirlwind, there was some strange sense of urgency as, for instance, the coming of the Lord with fire, the translation of Elijah, or the events concerning the perfection of Job. How beautifully appropriate it is that the translation of Elijah and the coming of the Lord, Isa. 66:15, should be associated with the whirlwind!

We need not elaborate to any great extent concerning the fire enfolding itself. The almighty God has often manifested Himself as fire or in fire. Indeed, the word of God has plainly said, "For our God is a consuming fire." (Heb. 12:29; Deut. 4:24) When the law was given to Israel, the whole of Mount Sinai was smoking in the manner described by Paul in Heb. 12:18. "For ye are not come to the mount that might be touched, and that burned with fire, nor unto blackness, and darkness, and tempest, and the sound of a trumpet, and the voice of words." See also Exodus 20:18 where it is said, "And all the people saw the thunderings, and the lightnings, and the noise of the trumpet, and the mountain smoking..." The fire, the smoke, and the lightning indicated the fearful and wonderful presence of God. Each and every one of these phenomena was a clear indication of the presence of the almighty God of Israel, and each was a manifestation of Himself. If a whirlwind is peculiar and awe-inspiring, how much more is fire and lightning! Common as is the sight of ordinary fire and the vivid illuminating flashing of lightning, yet not a man living is truly capable of explaining either. They are as peculiar as life itself is peculiar. The more we gaze upon them the more mysterious and awe-inspiring they become. Consuming fire, illuminating lightning, and enfolding, uplifting whirlwinds are manifestations of the very character and nature of God.

I will not take further space in an attempt to discuss the phenomenon of the color of amber, or the clouds, or the brightness seen by the prophet Ezekiel. All were representations of God. All were manifestations of the Father in this vision of God. The darker the cloud, the brighter the lightning. The greater the dross, the more consuming the fire. The greater the company to be gathered in, the more enfolding the whirlwind.

As Ezekiel stood dumbfounded, fascinated and awed by the splendor of the vision, he beheld a living creature coming forth from out the rolling enfolding fire of God, out of the whirlwind, out of the clouds, out of the amber, out of the north, and out of God. (Ezek. 1:4) "And out of the midst thereof," he said, "came the likeness of four living creatures, and this was their appearance; they had the likeness of man." Verse 5. Then in verse 10 the prophet continues, "As for the likeness of their faces, they four had the face of a man, and the face of a lion, on the right side; and they four had the face of an ox on the left side; and they four had the face of an ox on the left side; they four also had the face of an eagle."

With all humility of mind and with complete understanding of my own human ignorance and limitations, I want to affirm that Ezekiel in this vision of God was actually beholding the God-like, omnipotent act in eternity of God the Father bringing forth from the glory of Himself His only begotten Son - Spirit of His Spirit, mind of His mind, image of His image, likeness of His likeness, power of His power. This is He of whom it is written that He was in the beginning with God. This is the Son of God who came from the bosom of the Father. This is the Son who countless ages before the scene in Bethlehem was "with God in the beginning", "the brightness of His glory and the express image of His person." (Heb. 1:3) This is the only begotten Son of whom John wrote, saying, "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God; the same was in the beginning with God. All things were made by Him; and without Him was not anything made that was made." (John 1:1-3) This is He of whom it is written, "It pleased the Father that in Him should all fullness dwell." (Col. 1:19) He is "the image of the invisible God, the firstborn of every creature; for by Him were all things created, that are in heaven, and that are in earth, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers: all things were created by Him and for Him: and He is before all things, and by Him all things consist." (Col. 1:15-17)

This is indeed God's only begotten Son, begotten of God in the heart of eternity itself. This is the Son of God by whom and for whom all things are made, and this is He who in council with His Father said, "Let Us make man in Our image and after Our likeness." (Gen. 1:26) This is the pre-existent Son of God who was ordained to be the first Son in a vast family of God-like sons who, having partaken of His redemption, would be changed.
into His likeness as the ages roll by. God has predestinated Him to be the oldest and first Son in that vast family of sons who are beginning even now to form His mystical body, and who are being prepared by God to reign with Him over all the earth and over all the universe in the ages yet to come. This body of sons with Christ as its head will become the fullness of Him who filleth all in all, or, as Weymouth has so wisely translated the passage, "the fullness of Him who everywhere fills the universe with Himself." (Eph. 1:23) Oh glorious mystery of the ages! Oh wonderful unfolding of truth! "Who has known the mind of the Lord that he should instruct Him? Or who hath been His counselor? For from Him everything comes, by Him everything exists, and in Him everything ends. Glory to Him unto the ages of the ages!" Amen! (Rom. 11:36) (Goodspeed)

Now that this living creature coming forth from the whirlwind, the fire, the clouds, and the brightness of God the Father was indeed the pre-existent and eternal Son of God we shall immediately see. These are the words of Ezekiel: "As for the likeness of their faces, they four had the face of a man, and the face of a lion, on the right side: and they four had the face of an ox on the left side; and they four also had the face of an eagle." (Ezek. 1:10) It should not be necessary to go to any great length to demonstrate or prove to any lover of the Bible that the four men who wrote the four gospels - Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John - were moved by the Holy Spirit to present the Son of God to the world in exactly the same manner after which Ezekiel saw that strange, wonderful fourfold appearance with faces resembling a man, a lion, an ox, and an eagle.

The gospel of LUKE more than the other three gospels presents Jesus Christ as the Son of man. This, I think is clear, first, by the fact that he addressed his gospel to a man, the governor Theophilus. Luke 1:3, Acts 1:1. Secondly, and much more important, he took almost infinite care, after describing the birth of Jesus Christ, to trace His genealogy from Heli, who was Mary's father and Joseph's father-in-law, Luke 3:23, back over four thousand years of time to show that Jesus descended from Adam and that He was, therefore, indeed the Son of man as truly a man as any living. Thirdly, I would say that, since the term Son of man is repeated in the Gospel of Luke some twenty times, this in itself should surely prove that the main burden of Luke's gospel was to show beyond doubt that Jesus Christ, God's Son, begotten in the heart of eternity, did indeed become a man with a human mother on the same basis as ourselves. It is well to remember that it was as a man that He was made perfect through suffering - not as God.

Ezekiel saw Him not only as a man but as having the face of a lion as well. The lion is the king of beasts; and I am sure I am not in error when I say that the theme of the gospel of MATTHEW is Jesus Christ, the King. It is with the thought of kingship in mind that the very first verse of the book of Matthew was written. It reads thus: "The book of the generations of Jesus Christ, the son of David, the son of Abraham." (Mat. 1:1) It was to David, the king, that the royal promise was given: "Thine house and thy kingdom shall be established forever before thee. Thy throne shall be established forever." (2 Sam. 7:16) And Peter in his sermon at Pentecost confirmed the truth that Jesus Christ was indeed the King of the house of David who was to be raised up to reign. "Therefore," said Peter, "being a prophet, and knowing that God had sworn with an oath to him that of the fruit of his loins, according to the flesh, He would raise up Christ to sit on his throne." (Acts 2:20) Therefore MATTHEW, who presents Christ as the Lion of the tribe of Judah, the promised King, took great care, first, to prove that He was the direct heir of David, to whom the royal promise was given, and, secondly, to prove that He was the son of Abraham, to whom the promise was given that in Him "shall all families of the earth be blessed." (Gen. 12:3)

The theme of the gospel of MARK is Christ the ministering servant and sacrifice, both typified by the ox. No one but God could include an ocean of truth in a glass of inspiration, but this the Lord did when He included the whole of the gospel of Mark in that one beautiful statement of truth, "The Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give His life a ransom for many." (Mark 10:44, 45) The entire book of Mark presents Christ as God's servant and ends with His sacrificial death. That side of His character, servant and sacrifice, which Ezekiel saw as the face of the ox, is brought to its fullness in the gospel of Mark. The ox, the servant and sacrifice, is the theme of the entire gospel.

The particular theme of the gospel of JOHN is Christ, the Son of God. The eagle, that strange creature of the heavens, signifies that Jesus Christ was from above. The way of an eagle in the air was one of the wonders which the wisdom of Solomon was quite unable to explain. (Prov. 30:19) While Luke sets forth Jesus Christ as the Son of man by giving His long human genealogy, John sets forth Jesus Christ as the Son of God with this one mighty edict which only the wisdom and glory of God could proclaim: "In the beginning was the Word (the Logos), and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. The same was in the beginning with God. All things were made by Him; and without Him was not anything made that was made. In Him was life; and the life was the light of men." (John 1:1-4) Many are the passages in this gospel which plainly set forth Christ as the Son of God, begotten of the Father before ever the world was. This is He who was in the bosom of the Father, who both came forth from God and returned to God. (John 13:3)

Space will not permit us to show in detail that the four standards of the house of Israel as they camped about the tabernacle in the wilderness presented this same great truth. The standard of the camp of Rueben to the south of the tabernacle was a man. The standard of the camp of Judah to the east was a lion. The standard of the camp of Ephraim to the west was an ox. And the standard of the camp of Dan to the north was an eagle. Truly it is written that the angel of the Lord (Christ) encampeth round those that fear Him.

My sincere purpose in writing of these mysteries is that all who read might see how dear to the heart of the eternal Father is the hope and purpose of sonship. If I err not, the events of Ezekiel 1:1 took place ages before the events of Gen. 1:1. The latter belongs to time, the former to eternity. How gracious is our blessed Father that He would open the heavens, and draw aside the veil that we who have the spirit of sonship might clearly see that sonship was the very beginning of His purpose and that in the very heart of eternity itself He brought forth from the fiery brightness, the clouds, and the wind of Himself His first begotten Son. God, the eternal Father, has ordained that the Son who was begotten of Himself before ever the world was, should, when the time was ripe, take upon Himself the form of man, and, after becoming a perfect man through suffering and atoning death, should become the first, the oldest, and the Head of that mysterious body of sons who, being redeemed by His better blood, are now coming forth from the fire, the cloud, the whirlwind, and the brightness of Himself into that same image and that same mind, even the mind and image of God's first begotten Son. He who once was called the only begotten Son is no longer the only begotten Son, but the first begotten of a vast family. Rom. 8:29; Heb. 2:11. And that vast family, of which He is the Head, is becoming one body and is itself the only begotten of the Father. "Who hath known the mind of the Lord that he should instruct Him?" Oh, how great is the mystery of godliness!

"When the fullness of time was come," says the scripture, "God sent forth His Son, made of a woman, made under the law, to redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sons." (Gal. 4:4,5) Oh that the darkling veils of tradition might be torn from our eyes that we might see beyond the mists and theories of time and tradition right into the very heart of the eternal! How useless and blinding have become the theories of a church system that has wandered far away from the eternal purposes of God to build their own doctrines and teach their own traditions, which are cisterns that can hold no water and bags that are empty and full of holes! Oh, that men might know that before all things stands God, infinite, eternal, omniscient, omnipresent, immutable, and omnipotent! He who cannot understand that such a God and Lord as He is completely incapable of errors, mistakes, and blunders knows nothing of God nor understands any of his ways. And yet I tell you plainly that the childish notion that Satan by his cunning foiled God's plan in the Garden of Eden is preached in assemblies, taught in schools, and religiously believed by preacher, priest, and people alike. Abandon such inconsistent blasphemy now. Could He who is omnipresent be absent that Satan should thwart His purpose? Can He who is all-wise be guilty of foolishness? Shall He who is almighty be charged with weakness? Oh that all men everywhere would awaken to see that before all things stands God, directing His eternal purpose ceaselessly after the counsel of His will! Oh, that men might see the plan of the ages. Preachers are forever preaching about the fall of man, but they never see the plan of the fall nor the purpose of the fall. They speak with fervor of the plan of redemption without seeing that the plan of redemption was but part and parcel of the plan of the ages. Seeing these things as we do in the light of tradition, we make God to be such a one as ourselves, full of blunders, prone to error, and subject to mistakes. When will our hearts rejoice in the confidence that "in Him are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge?" (Col. 2:3)

Therefore when Paul wrote, "When the fullness of time was come. God sent forth His Son, made of a woman, made under the law, to redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sons", he showed us three blessed parts of God's plan. First, there was an appointed time for the incarnation (the enfleshment) of the pre-existent Son of God. Second, the Son of God thus sent into the world to be born of a woman was that same only begotten Son whom Ezekiel saw come from the bosom of God Himself in the very
It should not be necessary here to speak of the birth of Jesus Christ in Bethlehem. That fact is familiar to us all. But, when the Son of God, equal to the Father in all the attributes of wisdom, knowledge, understanding, holiness, power, and every divine essence, came forth from God to enter this world through the womb of Mary, He divested Himself of the glory, laid it aside, and made Himself of no reputation that He might become a man in the fullest sense of the word. "He stripped Himself of His glory, and took on Him the nature of a bond-servant by becoming a man like other men, and, being recognized as truly human. He humbled Himself and even stooped to die, and that to a death of the cross." (Phil. 2:6, 7)(Weymouth).

It may stagger your imagination to hear what I now say, but, once you see the truth, you will be mightily helped by it. The cross of Calvary was not all the cross that Jesus was called upon to suffer. His whole life from Bethlehem to Calvary was not all the death He suffered. Jesus partook of death and entered into death the moment He laid aside His glory and entered into Mary's womb to be formed as a man. His entire life from the cradle of Bethlehem to the cross of Calvary was death, death, and cross, cross, cross. Calvary was but the termination of both death and the cross. For this very reason, facing the cross, He prayed, saying, "I have finished the work which Thou gavest Me to do. And now, 0 Father, glorify Thou Me with Thine own self with the glory I had with Thee before the world was." (John 17:4, 5) When Jesus left His home beyond the skies, He laid aside all His glory. He laid aside even His pre-existent life, the life of the ages, that He might taste all the fullness of death, a lifetime of death, even as we also are called upon to do.

It will be a great blessing to your heart to understand that the life you now live in the body and which all men now live is not life at all, but death. When men are placed in a coffin and buried in the ground, we say they are dead, and, indeed, they are dead, but the real truth is that the existence here on earth which we call life is, in fact, death. We experience death from the cradle to the grave and the grave is but the termination of that death. God was deceiving no one when He said to Adam, "In the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." Adam did not wait nine hundred and sixty years to die. He entered death right there, and the grave in which he sleeps is but a climax of that death. It is small wonder that so few people can understand the second death since practically none understands the first death. This whole life we live in the flesh is death. Paul called our physical bodies the body of this death. Rom. 7:24. And he wrote saying, "She that liveth in pleasure is dead, while she liveth," 1 Tim. 5:6. Again, "This corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality. So when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, death is swallowed up in victory. 0 death, where is thy sting? 0 grave, where is thy victory?" 1 Cor. 15:53-55. Two questions are here - 0 death and 0 grave - and the answer to them both is the resurrection unto life through Christ. How blessed is the Lord our Savior that He partook of our death in all its fullness, abiding for thirty-three years in its power, that we might be brought forth from the loving hand of the Father in heaven to bring about in him the perfection of full sonship.

If the reader will earnestly consider the truth I have stated in saying that the life we now live in the body is in reality not life at all, but death, then his whole attitude to all that surrounds him will be instantly changed. He will cease to lay hold on this present transient thing we call life, knowing that it is as a mist that the wind drives away. It is as the grass that is green in the field today and tomorrow is withered with the heat of the summer. He will know that riches corrupt, garments are eaten by moths, youth fades away and every pleasure that earth offers is nothing but vanity. And I will say further that, once he sees that his present existence is not life, but death, his whole attitude to the things he suffers will immediately change, for he will have learned that tribulation, suffering, bereavement, disappointment, pain, misunderstanding, and every distress are blessings sent forth from the loving hand of the Father in heaven to bring about in him the perfection of full sonship.

When Jesus came to this world. He laid aside His pre-existent life and became obedient unto death, thirty-three years of it, the cross of Calvary included. He became a man in the fullest sense of the word, and, because He did, as a man - not as God - had to be perfected by the things He suffered. "For it became Him, for whom are all things, and by whom are all things in bringing many sons unto glory, to make the captain of their salvation (Jesus Christ) perfect through sufferings." (Heb. 2:10) If you have wondered why Jesus, who was God manifested in the flesh, should need to be perfected, you must remember that it was as a man that He was perfected through suffering that He might become the first perfect man in the image of God.
as God had planned when He said, "Let Us make man in Our image." God the Father did not save this captain of salvation from any affliction or suffering known to men that He might both save us and lead us to the glory of full sonship in Him.

Seeing the vast benefits of suffering as a pathway to our sonship, we can better understand why Paul wrote, saying, "Therefore I take pleasure in infirmities, in reproaches, in necessities, in persecutions, in distresses for Christ's sake; for when I am weak, then am I strong." (2 Cor. 12:10) You and I together will also take pleasure in all suffering and affliction when we will clearly understand that every stormy blast and every sting of pain and affliction is a stepping stone to our blessed sonship in Him. As it is written, "He that has suffered in the flesh has ceased from sin." (1 Pet. 4:1)

Now as this article is being written to show how God's delight is in His sons, I have pointed out that Jesus was a true man, subject to all the sinless infirmities of the human nature that He, being made a perfect man through suffering, might show us the path and lead us to perfection and full sonship in Him. Paul, writing to the Galatians, clearly showed the purpose for which God sent forth His own Son in these words: "But when the fullness of time was come, God sent forth His Son, made of a woman, made under the law, to redeem them that are under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sons." (Gal. 4:4, 5)

The great truth of adoption is not understood properly at all. Very seldom do we ever hear even a feeble explanation of its profound truth. To those of us who live in the western hemisphere adoption means something entirely different from the meaning it has in the eastern hemisphere. The eastern meaning is, of course, the Bible meaning. When we in the west speak of adoption, we think of an orphan or a homeless child being adopted by benevolent foster parents. But this is not the Bible meaning nor the meaning understood by eastern people. In Israel and in the near East adoption is a public ceremony in which a young man who had proved his responsibility and faithfulness was proclaimed as a son. This ceremony is called adoption.

At the ceremony of adoption, with friends, neighbors, and relatives present, the father publicly proclaimed his hitherto adolescent boy as his son. This proclamation gave the son certain privileges not enjoyed by him before this time. These privileges are very important and will teach us much if we think upon them. First, the son at the adoption ceremony was given the right to use his father's name. He could buy or sell or do business in his father's name. In short, he had the power of attorney. Secondly, at the adoption ceremony the son was given his inheritance, and thus was able to use the wealth that his father had provided for him. It was his from then on and he needed not to ask any questions about its distribution. Thirdly, at the adoption ceremony the son was given equality with the father.

In consideration of these facts which I have briefly stated, it should be easy to understand the reason for so much failure among us. Men and women are forever trying to use the name of Jesus who have absolutely no authority to do so, because they have not come to the maturity of sons and have not been proclaimed as sons by the Father. Consequently their attempts to use the name of Jesus by the power of attorney are false. They become deceivers of their own selves, pretending to be the sons of God by adoption when, because of their immaturity, God has not proclaimed them so. This we will readily see is a most serious matter and we should not use the name of Jesus so lightly before having received authority from Him.

Paul had evidently received this proclamation of adoption and had been given the authority of a son of God, at least to some degree. Thus he was able to heal the sick and cast out demons in the name of Jesus. But when the seven sons of Sceva took upon themselves to use the name of Jesus, saying, "We adjure you by Jesus whom Paul preacheth, ..." the evil spirit answered, "Jesus I know, and Paul I know; but who are ye?" And the man in whom the evil spirit was, leaped upon them and prevailed against them so that they fled naked and wounded. See Acts 19:13-16. The spirit knew Jesus and Paul because they had received the adoption as sons and had been given authority to work in the Father's name, but these sons of Sceva and other exorcists had received no such adoption and no such authority, and so they miserably failed. How often I have seen men struggle and pray and adjure, commanding sickness and devils to depart in Jesus' name, but nothing happened. The solution is perfectly simple. That man, no doubt, was a Christian, having every good intention, yet he had not received the privileges of adoption. The Father had not proclaimed him as a son with power. Consequently he failed. Better far it would be to spend long years in faithfulness, tuition, and fiery trial as adolescent children that God may at last call the world to witness our adoption and hear Him proclaim our full sonship and authority.
I make no profession whatever of being a Greek scholar, but any good Greek-English lexicon can give us much help as to the true meaning of original words. Young's Analytical Concordance lists three words in the Greek New Testament which clearly indicate three stages in our progression toward full sonship. These words are:

1. Teknion. This is the equivalent of our English word infant. An example of this word can be found in Matt. 18:2.

2. Teknon. This word means an adolescent or youth. An example of this word is found in 1 John 3:2 where in the King James version the reading is: "Beloved, now are we the sons of God." The word sons gives the wrong understanding. We are not now the sons; we are adolescents, youths, children, and it should read, "Beloved, now are we the children of God." So the writer goes on: "It does not yet appear what we shall be, but we know that when He shall appear, we shall be like Him." That is where full adoption or sonship begins. So let us understand this as we should, for it is very wrong for little children to imagine they have reached the adoption.

3. Huios. The Greek word Huios means a son, that is, a mature son, a son who has received the rite of adoption. An example of this word is found in Heb. 1:2, 5 where Paul says that God has spoken to us by His Son whom He hath appointed heir of all things. And again, "To which of the angels said He at any time. 'Thou art My Son; this day have I begotten Thee.' " Verse 5. If you will look closely at the life of Jesus, you will plainly see that His life and experience progressed from infancy through adolescence to full adoption, or from teknion (infancy) to teknon (youth) to huios (full sonship or adoption). There should be no story more vivid in our minds than the story of the manger of Bethlehem and of the Virgin who brought forth her baby, wrapping Him in swaddling clothes, laid Him in a manger. Here we have the appearance of the infant, the little child, the teknion, as helpless and dependent as any other baby, a baby who was to smile and gurgle and play and grow like all others. It is true He came from God, but He as all other true men must pass from infancy through youth to sonship. When Jesus reached the age of twelve years, He was no longer a baby, but had come to the time of adolescence. He was a youth now and could properly be described by the Greek word teknon, and thus as a boy maturing in wisdom and stature and in favor with God and man He was found in the temple, sitting among the learned doctors, the lawyers and priests, both hearing them and asking them questions; and all who heard Him were astonished at His understanding and answers. When His mother said, "Son, why hast Thou thus dealt with us?" the word is teknon, signifying a child, (so it is translated by Rotherham, Weymouth, Diaglott, and others), not huios, a mature son. And Jesus, being fully aware of His youth, remained subject to His parents and returned with them to Nazareth. Compare Luke 2:41-52.

The years in the life of Jesus between the ages of twelve and thirty are often called the silent years. During that time we read nothing of Him, but there is no doubt that He continued holy, harmless, undefiled, and separate from sinners, increasing in wisdom and stature and favor with God and man. But at last the long awaited day arrived, the day for which even Jesus must often have groaned as He with all creation longed for adoption, the day when He would receive full sonship and be publicly proclaimed as the Son of God.

John the Baptist, full of the Holy Spirit from birth, was heralding the kingdom message across the land. "Repent ye, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand," he proclaimed, while whole cities and towns emptied themselves of their inhabitants and departed to the wilderness to hear John's message and to be baptized of him in the river Jordan, confessing their sins. "I indeed baptize you with water unto repentance," shouted John, "but He that cometh after me is mightier than I, whose shoes I am not worthy to bear, whose fan is in His hand, and He will throughly purge His floor, and gather His wheat into the garner; but He will bum the chaff with unquenchable fire. Then cometh Jesus from Galilee to Jordan unto John, to be baptized of him. But John forbad Him, saying, I have need to be baptized of Thee and comest Thou to me? And Jesus answering said unto him, Suffer it to be so now: for thus it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness. Then he suffered Him. And Jesus, when He was baptized, went up straight way out of the water: and, lo, the heavens were opened unto Him, and He saw the Spirit of God descending like a dove, and lighting upon Him. And, lo, a voice from heaven, saying, This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased." (Matt. 3)

This, my beloved friends, was the hour of adoption. This was the public ceremony at which the eternal Father openly proclaimed Jesus as His huios, His beloved Son, in whom He was well pleased. (Matt. 3:17) And John, bearing witness of these things, said, "I saw the Spirit descending from heaven like a dove, and it abode upon Him. And I knew Him not: but He that sent me to baptize with water, the same said unto me. Upon whom thou shalt see the Spirit descending, and remaining on Him, the same is He which baptizeth with the Holy Ghost. And I saw, and bare record, that this is the Son of God (the huios)." (John 1:32-34) Up to this time the Bible gives no record of any miracle or sign or wonder performed by Jesus, but now, as He stood in Jordan fulfilling all things required in sons, His Father publicly proclaimed Him as "My beloved Son". And with that proclamation came all the authority sons receive at the ceremony of adoption - the right to use the Father's name, the right to use the limitless resources of the wealth of Him who is all in all. Jesus was only speaking truth when He said, "All power in heaven and earth is given unto Me." That is what adoption means. That is what adoption is for. This is a fact of adoption and full sonship. Thus from His adoption in the waters of Jordan He went forth in full sonship, no longer an infant at the breast, no more a youth, but a beloved Son, equal to His Father in authority, riches, and power.

We may not spend time here rehearsing the events of His remarkable ministry, telling in detail of the display of authority and power that were truly His by His rite of adoption, but we will say with utmost confidence that He manifested the God-given authority of His adoption in all things. Nothing was His master, yet He moved so completely in the mind of His Father that He was able to say, "I do only those things which I have seen of My Father, and I do always those things that please Him." Thus this blessed Son was master of every sickness, every demon, and every disease. Death fled before His word. Stormy winds fulfilled His word. Raging seas whimpered like babes and fell asleep at His command; and even those who came to arrest Him and lead Him off to judgment sprawled helplessly on their backs at His simple question, "Whom seek ye?" (John 18:4-6) When He stood before the cross, power was in His word to call to His side twelve legions of angels, but this He would not do that the scripture might be fulfilled.

I am sure the reader has often noticed how John in his epistle leads our minds through the three stages of experience - little children, young men, and fathers. "I write unto you, little children, because your sins are forgiven for His name's sake." (1 John 2:12) "I write unto you, young men, because ye have overcome the wicked one." (1 John 2:13) "I have written unto you, fathers, because ye have known Him that is from the beginning." (1 John 2:14) Little children, teknon; young men, teknon; fathers, mature sons, equal with the father by adoption, huios. You may always recognize little children because of their great interest and excitement over the things they can receive, forgiveness of sins, gifts of the Spirit, healings, baptisms, blessings and anointings. All these things are evidences - not of mature sonship - but of spiritual childhood. You may not be pleased to hear it, but it is indisputably true that, whenever you find people curious to see signs and wonders, anxious to receive and full of excitement about the things they have received from God, then you may know immediately that they are still little children in Christ though they will certainly imagine themselves to be very mature. The real truth is they are still babes at the breast, delighting over gifts as children on Christmas morning.

Young men are prone to rejoice, not in receiving gifts, but in their strength and in the wonderful fact that through Christ they are living overcoming lives, rejoicing as a strong man to run a race amid a world of men groveling in sin. Thus it was that John wrote to them in these words: "I write unto you, young men, because ye are strong, and the word of God abideth in you, and ye have overcome the wicked one." This is a very great advance from childhood. How precious and wonderful it is that in our day spiritual young men and young women, teknon, should be found who have overcome the world, being strong and full of the Word of God, which is Christ Himself!

Then comes the huios, the adoption. Says John, "I write unto you, fathers, because ye have known Him that is from the beginning." I tell you with all sincerity, soberness, and truth that there is nothing higher in all Christian experience than knowing the Father. To become acquainted with Him and to know His ways, being filled with His mind, His will and understanding, is the highest of all Christian experience. No man can ever receive the adoption until he comes to know the Father. None can receive the adoption until God's will consumes his own and God's mind is his mind. Disaster would follow at once if one could receive the rite of adoption who was still bedevilled with a carnal mind. So, John wrote to these mature sons whom here he calls fathers, saying, "I have written unto you, fathers, because you have known Him who is from the beginning."

How precious and dear to the heart of God is full sonship! That which Ezekiel saw in his vision was the very genesis of sonship as from the fire, the brightness, and the whirlwind the Son of God came forth. And so delighted was the Father in that Son that He proclaimed the edict, "Let Us make man in Our image and after
Our likeness, and let Us give him dominion." So this Son of God from eternity became the Son of man, and, being proclaimed at the river Jordan as "My beloved Son," He became the captain and has led the way whereby we who were the sons of men could be proclaimed the sons of God. Oh Lord God omnipotent! How wonderful are Thy purposes and Thy ways past finding out!

Even while I write, all who have the first fruits of the Spirit groan within themselves while we wait for the adoption in Him. Though we have not yet received the adoption, we have already received the Spirit of adoption. Therefore our spirits loudly cry, "Abba, Father." "The Spirit Himself beareth witness with our spirit that we are the children (teknon) of God; and if children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ if so be that we suffer with Him, that we may be also glorified together." (Rom. 8:17)

Abba, Father! the Spirit of sonship cries.
'Tis deep calling unto deep.
Far, far beyond the scope of natural man lies
The sons' great eternal realms.
Naught but the spirit of sonship can take the veil away.
Naught but deep calling unto deep will bring in God's new day.
Night and day must the cry go forth from deep down within,
Cleansing, purifying, changing till I'm fashioned just like Him.
Then in all His glorious fullness I shall come.
Deep will call to deep, "Abba, Father, I am Thy son."
Father! I am Thy son!

Hear now in conclusion these illuminating words from Romans 8:18-30. Phillips translation.

"In my opinion whatever we may have to go through now is less than nothing compared with the magnificent future God has planned for us. The whole creation is on tiptoe to see the wonderful sight of the sons of God coming into their own. The world of creation cannot as yet see reality, not because it chooses to be blind, but because in God's purpose it has been so limited - yet it has been given hope. And the hope is that in the end the whole of created life will be rescued from the tyranny of change and decay, and have its share in that magnificent liberty which can only belong to the children of God!

"It is plain to anyone with eyes to see that at the present all created life groans in a sort of universal travail. And it is plain, too, that we who have a foretaste of the Spirit are in a state of painful tension, while we wait for that redemption of our bodies which will mean that at last we have realized our full sonship in Him. We were saved by this hope, but in our moments of impatience let us remember that hope always means waiting for something we haven't yet got. But if we hope for something we cannot see, then we must settle down to wait for it in patience.

"The Spirit of God not only maintains this hope within us, but helps us in our present limitations. For example, we do not know how to pray worthily as sons of God, but His Spirit within us is actually praying for us in those agonizing longings which never find words. And God who knows the heart's secrets understands, of course, the Spirit's intention as He prays for those who love God.

"Moreover we know that to those who love God, who are called according to His plan, everything that happens fits into a pattern for good. God, in His foreknowledge, chose them to bear the family likeness of His Son, that He might be the eldest of a family of many brothers. He chose them long ago; when the time came He called them, He made them righteous in His sight, and then lifted them to the splendor of life as His own sons."
Our Father Which art in heaven, Hallowed be Thy name.
Thy Kingdom come.
Thy will be done in earth, as it
Is done in heaven.
Give us this day our daily bread.
And forgive us our debts,
As we forgive our debtors.
And lead us not into temptation,
But deliver us from evil:
For Thine is the Kingdom and the Power
And the Glory, for ever.
Amen.

CHAPTER ONE
THE GLORY AND POWER OF THE KINGDOM

"For Thine is the kingdom, and the power and the glory forever. Amen."— Math. 6:13

The prayer, which for centuries has been known as the Lord’s prayer is a pattern prayer. Jesus introduced it to His people with these significant words: "But thou when thou prayest enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut thy door, pray to thy Father which is in secret; and thy Father which seeth in secret shall reward thee openly. But when ye pray, use not vain repetitions as the heathen do: for they think that they shall be heard for their much speaking. Be ye not therefore like unto them; for your Father knoweth what things ye have need of before ye ask Him. After this manner therefore pray ye:"

For centuries men have practiced their vain repetitions before the Lord, thinking they would be heard for their much speaking, hoping that by often repeating their requests God would at last tike heed to their supplication and grant them the answer they desired, all the time forgetting that our heavenly Father knows what things we have need of before we ask. It is not our intention here to give an exposition on the subject of prayer, but let it be forever known that faith can never operate until first you are sure of the will of God. Therefore our quest should never be an effort to coax God to do a thousand things we think should be done, but rather to wait before Him until He fills our being with the prayer that is born of His own will. Once the heart has become one with the will of God, there need be no striving to exercise faith, for the will of God about any matter is the supreme element of faith. Study the lives of the great heroes of faith as Abraham, Moses, Elijah, and a host of others and you will find that the secret of their mighty works lay in one thing and in one thing alone. They did what God told them to do. Therefore all the faith they needed was to obey His will.

You may be shocked at first by the following statement, but consider it well and you will find it true: Any man on earth could do the works of Moses or Elijah providing God Almighty commanded him to do them, or any man could do the works of Noah, Abraham, or Samson providing God ordained they should be done. The secret of faith is the will of God, not some exploding gift of power within you that can demand from God anything imaginable and see it accomplished. Certainly faith can remove a mountain, but Father must first say that He wants the mountain moved. Outside of the will of God there is no such thing as a commanding faith.

The first request made in this prayer was "Thy kingdom come." The second was "Thy will he done." The coming of the kingdom of God to the earth was without doubt the uppermost thought in the mind of Jesus Christ. That was the thought of thoughts and the prayer of prayers. The entire life of Jesus Christ on the earth was a parable of the coming kingdom. Every man He healed, every leper He cleansed, every sin He forgave, every blind eye He opened, every deaf ear He unstopped every word of wisdom He spoke, every act of kindness He performed was a display of the glory that should be revealed when He, the King of kings and Lord of lords, reigns in the glory of His Father on the throne of David in Jerusalem.

His entire life on earth from birth to resurrection was a testimony to the glory and wonder of the kingdom age to come when He will reign as King and prosper, and of the increase of His government and peace there shall be no end Where could place be found for sin, sickness, war, hate, poverty, greed, anarchy, violence, disobedience, lust, and a thousand other curses when He reigns who during His life on earth abolished these things from the lives of all who misled Him.'

The prayer, Thy kingdom come, has gripped the heart of all creation. There is a secret longing in the innermost being of all mankind that the kingdom of God shall come and God's will shall be done in earth even as it is done in heaven. For almost two thousand years this prayer has been both upon the lips and in the hearts of countless millions of people. Some have prayed it with the revelation and understanding given them by Almighty God, who has already taken His throne within them, for it is in the heart of the believer that the kingdom of God first appears.

That is why Jesus told us, "The kingdom of God is within you." As a seed sprouts in the ground, so the kingdom of God begins within His faithful sons and daughters. Thence it will spring forth, first the blade, then the ear, after that the full corn in the car, until its fertile fruit fills the whole earth.

Not all have prayed with understanding, yet because of the universal hope of the kingdom in God's creation, all have prayed. The wonderful words, "Thy kingdom come," have been mumbled in the litanies of the unthinking, they have been recited at the death beds of men who knew not God, and they have been intoned by condemned men as they stood on the scaffold waiting to be dropped to their death. Men hiding in fox-holes, knowing no other prayer, have prayed, "Thy kingdom come," and in the heat of battle amid the blood and fire and vapor of smoke both the living and the dying have sighed out their longing to God, "Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done in earth even as it is done in heaven." The mind of man, struck dumb and insensible through the fall, still responds to the longing born of God within him that eventually the glory of the kingdom age will dawn upon the earth when God's will shall be done from sea to sea, and the dread rule of the carnal mind will be no more. When the British armies under General Allenby marched into the city of Jerusalem in 1917, their massed bands played as they marched,
Till moons shall wax and wane no more.

Without doubt the hope of the kingdom is in every heart and somehow by divine power God has placed these three words. Thy kingdom come, in the hearts of all creation. And is it any wonder that man should long for that glad hour to come, for the beasts likewise, together with the trees, the winds, and the waters, without understanding groan in travail for the day of sonship and the kingdom. It was Paul the apostle who said, "The earnest expectation of the creature waiteth for the manifestation of the sons of God, for the creature was made subject to vanity, not willingly, but by reason of Him who hath subjected the same in hope. Because the creature itself also shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God." Rom. 8: 18-21

Man does not understand the longing that is within him and we may be sure that all the inanimate creation is also blind and in the dark. We have become like babies who sometimes cry for reasons they know not, refusing to be comforted. Our souls often deplore the awesome conditions that are in the world - the rebellion, anarchy, delinquency, self-assertion, and war - yet if we could look deeper than the surface, we would understand that all these things actually spring from man's hatred and rebellion against the bondage he is in. In his darkness and bondage he imagines that could he but throw off his restraints he would be happy, that could he have all he wants, he would be content, but he does not know that his discontent lies far deeper than his outward life. While he thus seeks liberty from without, he does not know that the inner man is seeking for freedom from the bondage of corruption and all the wretchedness into which the carnal mind has brought him. Man is longing for freedom from the slavish thraldom he is in, but, not knowing God, he seeks freedom by rebellion only to find that his new, found freedom is even a greater and more hateful bondage than the one from which he escaped. But those to whom Christ the King has revealed Himself know that true freedom is found only when Christ is crowned King. When He comes into the life, the snares of the fowler are broken, the tears of sorrow turn to pearls of praise, and sins of years are washed away by His blood.

THE CERTAINTY OF THE KINGDOM

We need no greater evidence of the certainty of the coming kingdom of God on earth than the fact that Jesus taught us to pray for its coming. The prayer prayed by Christ, "Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done in earth even as it is done in heaven," should in itself be indisputable proof that God intends to set up a literal kingdom in which His will shall be done in the entire earth even as it is done in the entire heaven. The evidence, as we shall abundantly see, does not stop with this prayer, but rather the prayer "Thy kingdom come" was the earnest request of Christ that the eternal purpose of God for such a kingdom would soon be accomplished.

The hope of a kingdom in which God's sons would reign existed long before Eden and was first manifested to us in the words, "Let Us make man in Our image and after Our likeness and let Us give him dominion." The Kingdom of God was the theme of the prophets as we shall presently see. When the birth of Jesus was announced to Mary, these words were spoken by the mighty Gabriel, who came from the very presence of God: "Behold, thou shall conceive in thy womb and bring forth a Son and shall call His name Jesus. He shall be great and shall he called the Son of the Highest: and the Lord God shall give unto Him the throne of His father David, and He shall reign over (he house of Jacob; and of His kingdom there shall be no end." Luke 1:31-33 What greater proof do we need at the birth of a king than the word of God as to what His future shall be? No better identification can be given than this: "The Lord shall give unto Him the throne of His father David." Therefore let God be true though every man should be a liar. The earth is yet to see the literal and glorious reign of Christ in a kingdom that shall have no end.

When Jesus prayed, "Thy kingdom come," He was certainly looking beyond this age when good and bad are everywhere together and light is mixed with darkness. He was looking to the age of the kingdom of His Father when the will of God should be done in the earth, and the earth should be filled with the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the sea. When the angels of God gather out of the kingdom of heaven all things that offend (Matt. 13:41), that at last will be the true beginning of the kingdom of God or the kingdom of the Father on earth.

David was anointed to be king of Israel while Saul was still on the throne. David is typical of Christ while Saul is typical of the carnal systems that have ruled the world in Christ's stead for thousands of years. David, though anointed king of Israel, never once put forth his hand to wrest the kingdom from Saul, but waited patiently until God's hour came in which he would be set upon the throne. Even so it is now and has been for centuries past. Christ (the anointed) has made no effort by force or by power of arms to take the kingdom for which He is anointed, but like David is waiting until the Father shall give Him the kingdom and the government of the whole earth. Though David would not lift a finger to take the kingdom from Saul, yet all through his rejection he reigned as king in the hearts of all who loved him and followed him even though Saul was still on the throne of Israel. David had his mighty men. There were those with him who were ready to lay down their lives for him.

He ever delivered those who were oppressed and gathered unto himself all who were discontent with the reign of Saul. His followers were a motley crowd indeed, for it is said, "And every one that was in distress and every one that was in debt, and every one that was discontented gathered themselves unto him, and he became a captain over them: and there were with him about four hundred men." 1 Sam. 22:2 They were indeed an unlikely group, but they were mighty and they were faithful to him. They were the ones who followed him in his distress and in his humiliation and they were the ones who entered with him into the glory of his kingdom and of his reign. So also it is today. The flesh and the carnal mind are usurping the throne of Jesus Christ while the anointed Christ, like David, is rejected by His enemies. Foxes have holes and the birds of the air have nests, but the Son of man hath nowhere to lay His head. But in His rejection and His humiliation He has His faithful followers to whom He says, "Ye that have followed Me, in the regeneration when the Son of man shall sit in the throne of His glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel." Matt. 19:28

The days of David's rejection came to an end, and the days of the rejection of Jesus Christ, the Son of David, are also near their end. Soon Saul will be dead and David (Christ) will be king.

The kingdom of heaven is an age of mixtures, an age when it is difficult to know who is who, a day when sheep and goats flock together, when wheat and tares grow in the same fields, when the leaven is working in the meal, when good fish and bad are in the kingdom of heaven net. But at the end of the age God will send forth His angels to gather the wicked from among the just. He will set the sheep on the right hand and the goats on the left. He will gather up the good fish and cast the bad away. He will gather out of His kingdom all things that offend and whatsoever loveth and maketh a lie, and then His kingdom will have come and His will shall be done in earth even as it is done in heaven.

The kingdom for which Christ prayed was the Father's kingdom. "Thy kingdom come," He said. "Thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven." He was not praying for the kingdom of heaven to come, but for the kingdom of God to come when He should reign in the kingdom of His Father. That is why it is said, "The Son of man shall send forth His angels, and they shall gather out of His kingdom all things that offend and them which do iniquity, and shall cast them into a furnace of fire; there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth. Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father." Matt. 13:41-43 The kingdom of God is the kingdom of the Father. "But I say unto you I will not henceforth drink of this fruit of the vine until that day when I drink it new with you in the kingdom of my Father." Matt. 26:29 Jesus Christ with all the sons of God will reign in the kingdom of the Father even as Joseph reigned under Pharaoh, having complete authority in all things. "And He must reign till He hath put all enemies under His feet. The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death. For He hath put all things under His feet. But when He saith all things are put under Him, He is excepted, which did put all things under Him. And when all things shall be subdued unto Him, then shall the Son also Himself be subject unto Him that put all things under Him, that God may be all in all." Cor. 15:25-28

When we realize that there is so much similarity between the kingdom of heaven and the kingdom of God, it is not difficult to understand why the terms are sometimes used interchangeably.

THE GLORY OF THE KINGDOM

Whenever it pleases God to reveal a truth, it will immediately be found that the whole Bible springs into life regarding that revelation until every page of Holy Scripture breathes forth the fragrance of its message. You discover that wherever you look within its inspired pages golden threads appear, weaving themselves into a pattern of truth until the finished product shines forth with a magnificent beauty and fullness that only God Himself can devise.
Both New Testament and Old Testament writers are forever forging links in the golden chain of kingdom truth until we are left to marvel at so great a restitution and so wonderful a regeneration. These significant words of Peter fill the soul with wonder: "Repent ye therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out, when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord; And He shall send Jesus Christ, which before was preached unto you; Whom the heaven must receive until the times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all His holy prophets from the beginning of the world." Is it then any wonder that the Bible literally breathes the message of the kingdom of God and the restoration of all things that fell under the curse even from the beginning of the world?

The Bible itself does not contain all the things that could be written on this subject. How much less are we able in such limited space to unfold more than a mere outline of the majesty of that kingdom which is even now at hand. We must therefore confine ourselves to small portions from one or two books that we might better understand the whole.

Isaiah is certainly a prophet of the kingdom of God. His prophetic ear seemed always tuned in to the glory of the coming age. His prophetic eye overlooked the scenes of his own day. Spanning the centuries, he saw a Savior who was wounded for our transgressions, bruised for our iniquities, and chastised for our peace. Then, leaping far beyond the sorrow of the cross, he saw every valley exalted, every mountain made low, every crooked place made straight, and every rough place smooth. Isa. 40:4. He saw a king who would not fail nor be discouraged till He had set judgment in the earth, and the isles would wait for His law. Isa. 42:4.

THE KING AND THE KINGDOM

It is the king that determines the kingdom. If the king is righteous, so also is the kingdom. If the king is iniquitous, the kingdom will be filled with evil. "Righteousness exalteth a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people." The nations of the earth have been plagued for thousands of years by strife, inequity, and every imaginable evil because there has been an unceasing reign of the carnal mind in every kingdom from the beginning of time. Throughout all the history of Israel the testimony was "like people, like priest." If the king was righteous, the people were righteous. If the king was evil, so also were the people.

The kingdom of God will be all glorious because the King is nil glorious. All that He is will fall in blessing upon His kingdom as the dew of Hermon falls in blessing upon the mountains in Zion, for there the Lord commandeth the blessing, even life forevermore.

The life, which Jesus lived on earth, was the greatest parable ever known. It was a parable of the kingdom of God. He fully demonstrated by His divine life and power all the blessings that were to follow in His kingdom. The evil things, which we have learned to live with and accept as part of our very existence, He conquered, putting them beneath His feet. He delivered those who believe from every sickness known to man! The word of His mouth makes the lame man to leap as an hart. Hear Him as He commands deaf ears to be unstopped and blind eyes to see. Listen as His wisdom puts all His enemies to silence, causing them to say, "Never man spake like this man!" Stand in awe beside the tomb of the dead while He who is the resurrection and the life calls, "Lazarus, come forth!" Weep with the forgiven woman to whom He said, "Neither do I condemn thee. Go and sin no more." Feast as He feeds the hungry multitude with enough and to spare. Rejoice as He preaches, "Blessed are the poor in spirit, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven. Blessed are they that mourn, for they shall be comforted." Stand in awe as He stills the raging storm even as He stilled the fevered brow. Weep with His friends as He died. Rejoice that He liveth again soon to return on the clouds of glory to reign, no more in humility and rejection in tiny Palestine, but in power and wonderful glory over all the earth.

It is almost possible to hear the thrill of Isaiah's voice as it comes ringing o'er the centuries; "For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given: and the government shall be upon His shoulder: and His name shall be called Wonderful, Counselor, The Mighty God, The Everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace. Of the increase of His government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David and upon 11 is kingdom, to order it and to establish it with judgment and justice from henceforth even forever. The zeal of the Lord of hosts will perform thin." Isa. 9:6,7. I stand in awe before these mighty words. They are too much for my feeble words to describe. Think of it! A King reigning whose very name is Wonderful, whose very title is Counselor, who has a name written The Mighty God, The Everlasting Father, The Prince Peace! We who are accustomed to seeing the increase of strife, anarchy, war and evil are asked to behold the increase of His government and peace which shall flow like a river over all the earth until every sword is a plow share and every spear a pruning hook. Nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more. Thus upon the throne of David and from Jerusalem (the city of peace) shall the throne of the Lord be established with judgment and justice from henceforth for the kingdom age. The zeal of the Lord of hosts will perform this. Isa. 9:7

THE SON AND THE SONS

The apostle Paul taught that, "the earnest expectation of the creature waiteth for the manifestation of the sons of God." Rom. 8:19. Sonship is the hope of the entire creation. In sonship we are to include that first glorious Son, Jesus Christ, who is the firstborn of God's creation of sons, but with Him we are to include also that vast family of sons who are to follow after Him to finally come into His glorious image. Jesus Christ is the firstborn of many brethren, many sons who through His grace were to come into that same image. When John saw the fullness of Christ in his blessed vision on Patmos, he fell as one dead before Him, for he saw Him in completeness, His voice as the sound of many waters, for all the sons of God were complete in Him.

Though the apostles taught the truths of sonship, we must not think that the doctrine began with them, for it did not. Isaiah, David, and many others wrote of sonship. Isaiah in his prophecy opened a revelation which Jesus later completed when He said, "I am the vine, ye are the branches." John. 15:5 In Isaiah 11:1 we have these wonderful words: "And there shall come forth a rod out of the stem of Jesse, and a branch shall grow out of His roots." Jesse was the father of David (Matt. 1:6) from whom according to the flesh Christ came. Rom. 1:3, Matt. 1:1. Jesus Christ was the rod out of the stem of Jesse and the sons of God are the branch that grew out of His root. For this reason Jesus declared, "I am the vine, ye are the branches." His inspired words without doubt explain the true meaning of the prophecy. Speaking again of the kingdom day in chapter 4:2, Isaiah says, "In that day shall the branch of the Lord be beautiful and glorious ..." Jesus Christ was the corn of wheat which fell into the ground and died. The sons of God are the full corn in the ear. He was the seed; they are the fruit in His image. Let us not miss this great truth, for it shows us as nothing else can what the place of the sons of God will be in the kingdom of the Father. Indeed, it manifests the true meaning and purpose of sonship. The manifestation of the sons of God will be during the kingdom age. Then the works that Christ did they will do also and far greater works than these. Their ministry will be to restore the whole creation to the glory of Eden during the entire thousand years of the millennial kingdom.

Let us not be deceived by crafty men who now profess to be manifested sons of God. If they were such, they would have no need to proclaim it, for their undeniable glory and power would stand open before all the world, none being able to dispute nor gainsay it. For the most part these men are as unlike Jesus as it is possible to be. When the sons of God are manifested, all the world will feel the power and authority of their ministry, for the earth will be filled with the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the sea.

When John saw the 144,000 stand with the Lamb on Mount Zion (Rev. 14), he was actually beholding the complete body of sons gathered out of the church age and prepared for the government of the kingdom, for the law will go forth from Zion and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem.

To understand the character and glory of the millennial reign, which is identical with the kingdom of God, we will need far more than ordinary understanding. God grant that His revelation may be given us to see beyond the misty shadows of doubt and fear that belong to this age of carnal men that we may behold the day which the Lord has made, even His Sabbath of rest.

Men who are accustomed to fighting every curse in this age would not know what to do if they were to suddenly find themselves in Eden where no curse is. All our lives we have struggled against the curse of thorns and weeds. In the sweat of our faces we have fought with drought and heat; we have wrestled with floods and endless pests. Frost and hail have snatched away the hope of our labors; fire has devoured the dreams of a lifetime. During the days we have been scorched with heat; in the night we have been bitten with frost. Sickness, disease, war, fear, and death have dogged our pilgrim pathway from the cradle to the grave. Our days have been full of trouble and sorrow as the sparks fly upward. To understand, therefore, the character and glory of the kingdom reign we must know that the nations who then will inhabit the earth will be free from all these blighting curses, for the ministry of the sons of God, the branch of the Lord, will have removed them all. Then shall be brought to pass the saying of Jesus, "The works that I do shall ye do also, and greater works than these shall ye do because I go to the Father."

Let us now notice that upon this branch of the Lord, which is the sons of God, will rest the sevenfold Spirit of God. And the Spirit of the Lord shall rest upon Him; the spirit of wisdom, the spirit of understanding, the spirit of counsel, the spirit of might, the spirit of knowledge, and the spirit of reverence or the fear of the Lord. Isa. 11:2. This is the Spirit and anointing which will rest upon the sons of God who will reign with Christ to govern the earth in the kingdom of the Father. The sevenfold Spirit that is named in detail here is the same as that which John in the Revelation calls the seven spirits, which are before His throne. Rev. 1:4, 3:1, 4:4, 5:6. (Please read these references. Their teaching is most enlightening.) Need we remind ourselves that the throne is the seat of government? Therefore these seven glorious spirits appear before the throne.

The very thought of an age governed by the sons of God who are full of the sevenfold Spirit of God leaves us almost breathless. Words become totally inadequate and human expression collapses completely. Our innermost beings must begin to respond to the revelation and the inspiration of the almighty God; otherwise we will be as dumb as beasts in our understanding. Compare the governments of our day with all their graft and greed, their political maneuvering, their heartless intrigue, their oppression and inequality, with the government of the sons of God upon whom shall rest the Spirit of the Lord, the spirit of wisdom and understanding, the spirit of counsel and might, the spirit of knowledge and reverence for the Lord. If our hearts can comprehend the vast gulf that lies between these two systems, then we will see that all who enter into that blessed realm of the kingdom of God will have awakened to a new age where old things have truly passed away and, behold, all things are become new. Is it any wonder that Paul, thrilling to the inspiration of the Spirit, cried, "I reckon that the sufferings of this age are not worthy to be compared to the glory that shall be revealed in us, for the earnest expectation of the creature waiteth for the manifestation of the sons of God." Rom. 8:18,19

Now notice the kind of judgment the earth will share in that age. "And He shall make Him (the branch, or the body of sons) of quick (living) understanding in the fear of the Lord, and He shall not judge after the sight of His eyes, neither reprove after the hearing of the ears. But with righteousness shall He judge the poor, and reprove with equity for the meek of the earth: and He shall smite the earth with the rod (authority) of His mouth and with the breath of His lips shall He slay the wicked. And righteousness shall be the girdle of His loins and faithfulness the girdle of His reins." (Isa. 11:4,5) The judges of the earth for centuries past have judged by the sight of the eyes and the hearing of the ears. But we have yet to learn that what the natural eye sees and the natural ear hears are outward and undependable. Man can see only the outward appearance, but the Lord looketh on the heart. I know of only one judge who cast outward evidence aside and judged righteously by the Spirit. That judge was, of course, Jesus Christ, the first glorious Son who was the pattern for all God's sons. When the woman taken in the very act of adultery was brought before Him, He judged neither by what He heard nor by what He saw. Casting aside the outward and visible, He judged by what His spirit knew within. Therefore He was able to release her without condemnation and send her away to sin no more. (John 8:1-11) His gracious act on this important occasion proved and confirmed His own inimitable teaching, for He had taught that we should "judge not according to the outward appearance, but judge righteous judgment." John 7:24 The Holy Spirit centuries earlier, speaking by the lips of Isaiah, had said, "With righteousness shall He judge the poor, and reprove with equity for the meek of the earth." This without doubt is to be the character of the reign of Christ in the kingdom of the Father. Upon Him with all the sons of God will rest the sevenfold Spirit of God that "righteousness might be the girdle of His loins and faithfulness the girdle of His reins." Isa. 11:5
THE RESTORATION OF ALL THINGS

The dispensation of the kingdom of God is to be a dispensation of restoration. The things lost through the fall are to be restored from the least to the greatest. Certainly there is a further vast unspeakable gathering of all things into Christ in the dispensation of the fullness of times (Eph. 1:9,10), which dispensation follows the dispensation of the kingdom of God. But, during the kingdom of God, when Christ reigns on the earth with His sons from Zion and Jerusalem, there will be a restoration beyond man's ability to comprehend. We must believe the word of God as we read it and seek the Holy Spirit to give us understanding of the unspeakable glory of that coming age.

When Peter spoke of the restitution of all things (Act 3:21), he was without doubt speaking of the kingdom day. He said that the heavens must receive Jesus until the times of restitution of all things. The blighting traditions of the church have stolen the truth of this scripture from the hearts of believing men, teaching them that God would not restore all things, but I am sure that He who gathered up the fragments of bread and fish that nothing be lost cannot consent to the loss of the greatest purposes of His creation. Nor will He who left the ninety and nine sheep in the fold to seek the one that was lost be content to have one sheep in the fold while ninety and nine are lost. Such thoughts are inconsistent with the very nature of God and contrary to all He is and does. Let us then follow the prophet Isaiah and move with him in inspiration as he paints the picture of restoration on the canvas of our faith.

RESTORATION OF LIGHT AND UNDERSTANDING

Since the day that Adam and Eve sinned in the Garden of Eden, man has lacked spiritual understanding. His heart has been blinded because he has walked almost entirely by the dictates of the carnal mind. The chief interest of a carnal mind is the preservation of his flesh, which is naught but the physical body of flesh. A heavy darkening veil has clouded his spiritual mind. He has groped about in darkness neither knowing nor understanding spiritual things. Like Nebuchadnezzar he has become as a beast because he was given the mind of a beast. But all this dimness will be removed when the sons of God reign in the kingdom of the Father, which is even now at our doors.

In the ninth chapter of Isaiah the prophet overwhelms our minds with these truths. After describing the darkness of the earth (Isa. 8:21,22) which has prevailed in all ages, he throws open the gates of light to illumine the kingdom day. "The people that walked in darkness have seen a great light: they that dwell in the land of the shadow of death, upon them the light hath shined." 9:2. For centuries humanity has been as prisoners gathered in a dark pit, but after many days we will be visited. So great will be the light that the moon will be confounded and the sun ashamed when the Lord of hosts shall reign in Mount Zion and in Jerusalem and before His ancients gloriously. Isa. 24:22,23

The dark covering that has been cast over the hearts and minds of the people for ages and dispensations will be completely destroyed when the sons of God reign in the kingdom of the Father from Jerusalem and from Mount Zion. For thus saith the Lord by the mouth of Isaiah, "And He will destroy the covering cast over all the people, and the veil that is spread over all nations, and it shall be said in that day, Lo, this is our God; we have waited for Him and He will save us: This is our God; we will be glad and rejoice in His salvation." Isa. 25:7-9

Few people have believed in ages past because there has been a veil over their understanding. Even to this day, when Moses is read, the veil is upon their hearts; nevertheless when it (the heart) shall turn to the Lord, the veil shall be taken away. (2 Cor. 3:15) God has a definite purpose in allowing a veil to cloud all human understanding. Contrary to the tradition of the church it is not God's intention to bring all the world into the fold in this age. His intention is to choose out a people for his name, who in a coming glorious age would be used to bring light to all men. This is the plan laid down by the inspired word of the apostle James when he said, "God at first did visit the Gentiles to take out of them a people for His name. And lo (his agree the words of the prophets; as it is written. After this (after He has taken out the people) I will return and build again the tabernacle of David which is fallen down, and will build again the ruins thereof, and will set it up: That the residue of men might seek after the Lord and all the Gentiles upon whom My name is called, saith the Lord who doeth all these things. Known unto God are all His works from the beginning of the world." Acts 15:14-18
It is after Christ's return to set up the kingdom that the residue of men are to be saved. To look for a world-wide ingathering during the church age is unscriptural and ridiculous. The world-wide revival will be during the kingdom age under the government of the sons of God. For then shall the earth be filled with the knowledge of the glory of the Lord as the waters cover the sea. Some years ago it was revealed to me that the evangelization of the nations during the kingdom age would be accomplished in exactly the opposite way to the method used in this age. In the church age the commission has been, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel." In the kingdom age entire nations will come to Jerusalem and to Zion to seek and find the Lord. What could be more certain than the words spoken by Micah the prophet when he said, "But in the last days it shall come to pass that the mountain (Zion) of the house of the Lord shall be established in the top of the mountains and it shall be exalted above the hills; and people shall flow into it and many nations shall come and say, Come, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord (Zion), and to the house of the God of Jacob (Jerusalem) and He will teach us of His ways and we will walk in His paths: for the law shall go forth of Zion and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem." Micah 4:1,2

During this age of grace the Lord has sought the people, but in the age of the kingdom He will pour upon them die spirit of grace and supplication and the millions of earth will come as nations, seeking the Lord in Jerusalem and in Zion. What an indescribable wonder! But once the Lord removes the covering cast over the minds of all people, then all men will see in a clear light and will come by the millions to seek His face. To this also agree the words of the other prophets. Isaiah has said with great clearness, "Behold, thou shall call a nation that thou knowest not, and nations which knew not thee shall run unto thee because of the Lord thy God, and for the Holy One of Israel; for He hath glorified thee." Isa. 55:5,6 Here we have the wonderful promise of whole nations running to seek the Lord, because God has glorified His sons.

"Arise, shine, for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee. For behold, darkness shall cover the earth and gross darkness the people: but the Lord shall rise upon thee and His glory shall be seen upon thee. And the Gentiles shall come to thy light and kings to the brightness of thy rising. Lift up thine eyes round about and see: all they gather themselves together, they come to thee; thy sons shall come from far and thy daughters shall be nursed at thy side. Then shall thou see and flow together and thine heart shall fear and be enlarged: because the abundance of the sea (the people) shall be converted unto thee, the forces of the Gentiles shall come unto thee." Isa. 60:1-5 "Thy sun shall no more go down; neither shall thy moon withdraw it: for the Lord shall be thine everlasting light and the days of thy mourning shall be ended. Thy people shall be all righteous, they shall inherit the land forever, the branch of My planting, the work of My hands that I have glorified." Isa. 60:20,21 Please read Isaiah, chapter 60.

It is completely hopeless here to even try to quote all the scriptures that refer to the universal conversion of the seeking nations during the dispensation of the kingdom of God; therefore, with these scriptures we will pass on: "Look unto Me and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth: For I am God, and there is none else. I have sworn by Myself, the word is gone out of My mouth in righteousness and shall not return, that onto Me every knee shall bow, and every tongue shall swear." Isa. 45:22,23 Thus saith the Lord of hosts. It shall yet come to pass that there shall come people, and the inhabitants of many cities: And the inhabitants of one city shall go to another, saying, Let us go speedily to pray before the Lord and to seek the Lord of hosts: I will go also. Yea, many peoples and strong nations shall come to seek the Lord of hosts in Jerusalem, and to pray before the Lord. Thus saith the Lord of hosts; In those days it shall come to pass that ten men shall take hold of the skirt of him that is a Jew, saying, We will go with you: For we have heard that God is with you." Zech. 8:20-23 Thus shall the covering cast upon the minds if the people since Eden be destroyed by the sons of God, and ill nations will see the light and seek the Lord.

THE END OF OPPRESSION

What a dreadful sermon could be preached on the theme of oppression! But the subject is too well known by most people to speak of it here. From time immemorial the history of the world has been one of the oppressor and the oppressed. The poor have been robbed because they were poor. The hireling has been cheated of his pittance while rich men have grown fat by his loss. The widow's house has been devoured while the rich man's riches have cankered and rusted. The wages of the hireling that reaped the field have been kept back by fraud. that the rich might heap treasure for the last day. The innocent have been condemned and killed while the guilty have gone free. The strong have made slaves of the weak and have taken by force the little he had. But the end of all oppression will immediately come when the law of the Lord goes forth from the 144,000 sons who stand upon Mount Zion, for the righteousness and justice of Christ will fill the entire earth. "For the extortioner is at an end, and the spoiler ceaseth; the oppressors are consumed out of the land. And in mercy shall the throne be established: and He shall sit upon it in truth in the tabernacle of David, judging and seeking judgment and hasting righteousness." Isa. 16:4-5 "With righteousness shall He judge the poor, and reprove with equity for the meek of the earth: and He shall smite the earth with the rod of His mouth, and with the breath of His lips shall He slay the wicked. And righteousness shall be the girdle of His loins and faithfulness the girdle of His reigns." Isa. 11:4,5 Thus shall all oppression end.

PHYSICAL RESTORATION

The kingdom age will see the final end of all sickness and physical disability. A pitiful cry is rising today from all mankind, saying, "I am sick!" Every part of the human body is subject to disease. No member of the physical body has escaped. In spite of all the remarkable accomplishments of medical science we may safely say that the human race becomes weaker as the years go by. Practically every doctor and dentist has a long waiting list. Hospitals are filled to overflowing all the time. One out of every twelve persons requires mental treatment during his life, and cancer and heart disease have reached epidemic proportions. The whole creation groans in pain and the cry of the sufferer never ceases. Is it any wonder that the suffering creation sighs in a sort of universal travail, longing for the manifestation of the sons of God when at last they will be delivered from the awful bondage of corruption into the glorious freedom of the sons of God.

Jesus Christ, who will reign in the kingdom of His Father, demonstrated while upon earth that His power over every human ailment was complete. Even the maimed (people who had lost limbs) were healed by His matchless power and went away rejoicing. Demons who had filled men's minds with wild insanity were cast out. Lepers were cleansed with a word and dead men raised to life again. "In Him was life, and the life was the light of men." "I am the resurrection and the life," He said, "Whosoever believeth in Me, though he were dead, yet shall he live, and whosoever liveth and believeth in Me shall never die." The healings and miracles of Jesus were performed, not to try to rid the earth of sickness nor even to prove His power as the son of God, but rather to demonstrate the power, the authority, and the character of that King whom God has fore-ordained to reign over all the earth in the coming age. If He did these mighty things in His rejection and humiliation, what will He do in His glory? Or if these things be done in the green tree, what will be done in the dry?

The prophecies which concern the kingdom of God leave no stone unturned to fully assure us that there will be a full and complete deliverance from all the diseases and sicknesses which have brought such a night of suffering and death upon the whole earth. The deliverance of the entire creation from this bondage will be one of the greater works of which Jesus spoke. When Zion is the city of our solemnities and Jerusalem a quiet habitation, the inhabitant shall not say, "I am sick." (Isa. 33:20,24) What a change that will be! "Then shall the eyes of the blind be opened, and the ears of the deaf be unstopped. Then shall the lame man leap as an hart, and the tongue of the dumb shall sing; and the ransomed of the Lord shall return and come to Zion with songs of everlasting joy upon their heads: They shall obtain joy and gladness and sorrow and sighing shall flee away." Isa. 35:5,6,10 In that glorious day man shall be satisfied with long life (Psa. 91:16), and they will see the salvation of the Lord, for He gives His followers aionian life and they shall never perish.

RESTORATION OF THE EARTH

Like all other things the good earth has suffered the result of the curse ever since the fall. The very ground itself has been cursed for man's sake. The productiveness and life-giving power it once possessed has vanished from it with the coming of the curse, for God said to Adam, "Because thou hast hearkened unto the voice of thy wife and hast eaten of the tree of which I commanded of thee saying, Thou shall not eat of it, cursed is the ground for thy sake; in sorrow shall thou eat of it all the days of thy life; thorns and thistles shall it bring forth unto thee; and thou shall eat the herb of the field; in the sweat of thy face shall thou eat bread, till thou return lo the ground." Gen. 3:17-19
Never has man been able to remove the curse from the earth. He does not know how much the earth is capable of bringing forth, nor does he understand the creative ministry that Adam enjoyed when he was given the joy of dressing the garden. Of the earth man knows only toil and sweat that he might eat the herb of the field to keep life within him until he returns to the dust. But to His glorious sons God has given the ministry of removing the curse from the earth. This, too, will be restored, for it is written, "Every valley shall be exalted, every mountain and hill shall be made low: and the crooked shall be made straight and the rough places plain: And the glory of the Lord shall be revealed, and all flesh shall see it together: for the mouth of the Lord has spoken it." Isa. 40:4,5 The wilderness and the solitary place shall be glad for them; and the desert shall rejoice, and blossom like the rose. It shall blossom abundantly, and rejoice even with joy and singing: ... The parched ground shall become a pool, and the thirsty land springs of water: in the habitation of dragons, where each lay, shall be grass with reeds and rushes." Isa. 35:1,2,7 "Ye shall go out with joy and be led forth with peace: the mountains and hills shall break forth before you into singing, and all the trees of the field shall clap their hands. Instead of the thorn shall come up the fir tree, and instead of the brier shall come up the myrtle tree: and it shall be to the Lord for a name, for an everlasting sign that shall not be cut off." Isa. 35:12,13 "Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that the 'lawman shall overtake the reaper, and the treader of grapes him hat soweth seed; and the mountains shall drop sweet wine, and all he hills shall melt. And I will bring again the captivity of my people of Israel, and they shall build the waste cities and inhabit hem; and they shall plant vineyards and drink the wine thereof; hey shall also make gardens and eat the fruit of them, and I will plant them upon their land, and they shall no more be pulled up out of their land which I have given them, saith the Lord thy God." Amos 9:13-15. Thus shall the kingdom restore the earth to an Eden of glory.

RESTORATION OF THE ANIMAL KINGDOM

Not least of all that fell beneath the weight of the curse was he animal kingdom. Their once bright minds were forced downward by the fall of man lest they should be wiser than their alien lord. Throughout the dispensations they have groaned under a fearful travail which even man has not known. They lave unwillingly been made man's enemy. They have been sacrificed on the altar for his sin. They have been butchered for his meat. They have been hunted for his pleasure, and made laves for his industry. But the days of their bondage and thraldom are almost over, for the sons of God will restore them o their original glory. Then shall "the wolf dwell with the lamb, and the leopard shall lie down with the kid; and the calf and the young lion and the falling together; and a little child shall lead hem. And the cow and the bear shall feed; their young ones shall lie down together: and the lion shall eat straw like an ox. And the suckling child shall play on the hole of the asp, and the weaned child shall put his hand in the cockatrice's den. They shall not hurt nor destroy in all My holy mountain: for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the sea." Isa. 11:6-9

Most men have a love for animals, and I cannot resist saying that I think I shall weep with joy when I see a mighty lion lying in peace with the calf and the falling. How I shall rejoice to pal his lawny head and see him restored lo the peace of Eden! Then shall our glad hearts repeat, "Greater works than these shall ye do, because I go to My Father."

Then the bear shall be gentle, And the wolf shall be lame; And the lion shall lie down with the lamb. Then the beast from the wild Shall be led by the child, And I shall be changed from the creature that I am.

RESTORATION OF UNIVERSAL PEACE

The reign of King Solomon with its universal peace is symbolic of the millennial reign of Christ From the beginning of time war and strife have been so universal that mankind has accepted them as necessary evils and an important part of international relations. All nations have their ministers of war and all have their armies, either small or large. War is the method of the carnal mind. Carnage and the carnal mind go hand in hand. Though nothing is ever truly settled by war, yet the carnal mind never learns that lesson. Should this age go on forever, there would still be armies and bloody battles in the earth. War exists not only on the level of nations, but it exists in the hearts of the people. It is waged between members of families, between husbands and wives, between rival gangs, and even in sports. The world of religion gives no relief from this spirit of rivalry, for the bitterest of all struggles have been the religious ones, for they never end, neither are they ever forgiven.

All wars in history come from the carnal mind. The carnal mind is the mind that is interested only in the carnal, which is the flesh. The carnal mind is the physical mind and not the spiritual mind. The carnal mind is concerned only with the things of the body - what it tastes, feels, hears, sees, and smells. For the sake if these five senses the whole physical world exists, and for their ratification all war and strife is waged. But the kingdom of God will not be governed by the carnal mind but by the mind of Christ, which is the Father's mind. That glorious mind of wisdom, knowledge, and understanding will be possessed in fullest measure by every reigning Son of God that peace might reign supreme among all nations and all families of the earth. It will change the nature of carnivorous beasts. Then the wolf and he lamb shall lie down together and nothing shall hurt nor destroy in all God's holy mountain, for the earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the sea.

The wisdom that is from above is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, and easy to be entreated, full of mercy and good fruits, without partiality and without hypocrisy. (Jas. 3:17) This is the wisdom that comes from above and this is the wisdom of the mind of Christ. The wisdom from beneath is earthly, sensual, devilish (Jas. 3:14-16), and the result of it has been war and continual confusion throughout all ages. But the wisdom from hove, which is pure and peaceable, gentle and easily entreated, will bring a reign of peace, purity, and gentleness.

With wisdom there is always authority. There is no true authority apart from wisdom. It could not possibly be. Therefore he wisdom God has given to His sons possesses the authority to remove all greed and the resulting strife from the face of the earth, for "He shall judge among the nations and shall rebuke many people: and they shall beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning hooks; nation shall not lift up word against nation, neither shall they learn war any more." Isa. 2:4 "But they shall sit every man under his vine and under his tree; and none shall make them afraid: for the mouth of the Lord of hosts hath spoken it. For all people will walk every man in the name of his God, and we will walk in the name of the Lord our God for ever and ever." Micah 4:4,5

During that glorious reign there will be no lawlessness, reed, graft, or rebellion permitted, for the "spoiler ceaseth, and he oppressors are consumed from the land. And in mercy shall he throne be established: and He shall sit upon it in truth in the tabernacle of David, judging, and seeking judgment, and hasting righteousness," Isa. 16:4,5. "In that day shall there be upon the bells of the horses, holiness unto the Lord... Every pot in Jerusalem and in Judah shall be holiness unto the Lord of hosts. - And in that day there shall be no more Canaanite in the house of the Lord of hosts." Zech. 14:20,21

THE INCREASE OF THE KINGDOM

The kingdom of God will not spread over the entire earth in a moment of time. Never in any dispensation has God undertaken to fulfill His purposes in an instant. There will be increase and a steady growth of the kingdom that will gradually fill all the earth until no man will say, "Know the Lord, for all will know Him from the least to the greatest." Isaiah certainly gives a wonderful understanding of the increase of the kingdom when he says, "Of the increase of His government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon His kingdom to order and establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth even for ever (the age). The zeal of the Lord of hosts will perform this." Isa. 9:7

When Daniel saw the vision of the destruction of the Babylon of the world systems, he saw a stone (Christ) cut from the mountain (Zion) which smote the image of the world systems on the feet. The whole image collapsed, and the stone became a great mountain that filled the whole earth. (Dan. 2:34,35)

I am convinced that we are at the end of this age. The dispensation of the kingdom of heaven, which we have known as the church age, or the dispensation of grace is at an end. It has been an age of good and evil, right and wrong, wheat and tares, sheep and goats, light and darkness, mingled together so that scarcely anyone knew which was which. Jesus Christ, like David, though anointed to reign, has seen Saul seated on His throne while He in His rejection has reigned only in the hearts of His true followers. But those who have truly followed
Him in this age of uncertainties, division, and carnality will be the ones who sit with Him in His throne in the kingdom of God. (Matt. 19:28)

Two thousand years ago John the Baptist came proclaiming, "Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." His message was true and that age came with great power. From its fields of wheat and tares the Lord has gathered the seed of the kingdom of God. The message today is not "Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand," but, "Repent, for the kingdom of God is at hand!" It is scarcely necessary to repeat the signs which Jesus declared would precede the end of this age, but certainly they have been fulfilled and are being fulfilled on an ever, increasing scale. We read in the seventeenth chapter of Luke that the disciples asked Jesus when the kingdom of God should come. Verse 20. In the following verses of the chapter He outlined many signs. "The Son of man must be rejected of this generation," He said, and so it has been. As it was in the days of Noah, so should it be in the days of the Son of man. Certainly the days of Noah are with us. the kingdom of God is at hand.

Great preparations are being made in the spiritual world for the coming age. The image of great Babylon is rising to its fullest height. The sons of God are being secretly prepared and anointed to reign. Very soon the little stone cut from the mountain without hands will strike the image on the feet, and the kingdoms of this world will have become the kingdom of our Lord and of His Christ, and He shall reign for ever and ever.

THE KINGDOM OF GOD WITHIN

"And when He was demanded of the Pharisees, when the kingdom of God should come. He answered them and said, The kingdom of God cometh not with observation: neither shall they say Lo here! or Lo there! For behold the kingdom of God is within you." Luke 17:20, 21

The end of all things as we have known them is at hand. The unsound and worthless feet of the image of Babylon, part of iron and part of miry clay, are even now crumbling beneath the awesome weight of the legs of iron, the belly and thighs of brass, the breast of silver and the haughty head of gold. (Dan. 2:31-45) The image of Babylon is complete. This art of human device now stands before the deceived but admiring eyes of men, a thing of infinite beauty, an image to be trusted, having stood the ravages of millenniums of time. But they do not seem to know that its feet are dross, mingled, weak and corrupt, for they are formed of iron and clay which cannot cling together, and, should a stone but fall upon them, collapse they must and with them the haughty image of the systems of this world.

I need not tell you that Daniel, a prophet dearly loved of God, saw the total collapse of the confused systems and governments of this world when in spirit he saw a stone, cut out without hands, smite the image on its useless feet of iron and clay, shattering them in pieces. "Then was the iron, the clay, the brass, the silver, and the gold broken to pieces together, and became like the chaff of the summer threshing floors; and the wind (the Spirit) carried them away, that no place was found for them: and the stone that smote the image became a great mountain, and filled the whole earth" Dan. 2:35

The stone that smote the image, utterly destroying it with one blow upon its deficient feet, must not be regarded as another of earth's corrupt governments. This stone is not of flint or granite. This is a stone, chosen of God and precious. This is the stone, which the builders rejected, but God has made it the head stone of the corner. (Psa. 118:22) This precious stone is also a living stone, a person who is none other than the Son of God, Jesus Christ the King. It was of Him that Peter wrote, saying, "To horn coming, as unto a living stone disallowed indeed of men, but chosen of God, and precious, ye also, as lively (living) stones, re built up a spiritual house, an holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God by Jesus Christ. Wherefore also it is contained in the scripture, Behold, I lay in Zion a chief corner stone, elect, precious: and he that believeth on Him shall not be confounded. Unto you therefore which believe He is precious: but unto them which be disobedient, the stone which the builders disallowed, the same is made the head of the corner, and a stone of stumbling, and a rock of offence, even to them which stumble at the word, being disobedient: whereunto also icy were appointed," (1 Peter 2:4-8) The inspiration of the Almighty leaves us in no doubt as to what and who this precious one is that smote the image of Babylon on its feet and then went on to build a
There are many sacred realms in scripture where I often fear I tread, not because I doubt their truth or fear to believe the wonders which their truths portray, but I fear those impious men ho would with rough-shod feet and unbowed head stomp in to gaze with unsanctified eyes at the burning bush of God's sacred revelation, or who, like Uzzah, stretch forth an unsanctified hand to steady and adjust that which is wholly of the Lord, "There is a path which no fowl knoweth, and which the vulture's eye hath not seen: the lion's whelps have not trodden it, nor the fierce lion passed by it." Job 28:7,8 It was because of such as these that Jesus always spoke in parables that He might safely hide the deep things of God from the carnal heads of the wise prudent men and reveal them unto babes who walked in the love and fear of the Lord. I find little difficulty in persuading men and women to believe in sonship. They pounce on the truth like vultures and peddle the message like the hucksters of Petticoat Lane, but I find very, very few men who have the spirit of sonship, the spirit that with bowed head and contrite heart breathes in love and yieldedness, "Abba, Father!" He who has the spirit of sonship has no will of his own; neither has he any plans of his own, nor any ambitions of his own. He has no joy or humility of his own, nor gifts, nor sacrifices, nor righteousness, but his soul is bound in a bundle of life with the Lord his God, and the souls of his enemies, them shall he sling out as out of the middle of a sling. 1 Sam. 25:29. His one love and all-consuming passion is bound up in the purpose of Him who worketh all things after the counsel of His own will.

I have written these solemn facts with purpose and fear lest the ambitious and unsanctified Christian should seize upon the truth we now discuss as just so much more ammunition for his gun or wind for his bag, for some preach Christ of envy and strife and some of good will, while others preach Christ of contention, not sincerely. (See Phil. 1:15,16)

The stone, which the builders rejected, is Christ. He is the head stone or the cap stone. The builders of the systems of this world, whether of government or of religion, have rejected Him as their head. Through all the ages the defiant shout of the multitude has been, "We will not have this man to reign over us." He is despised and rejected of men, a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief, and we hid as it were our faces from Him. My heart's desire and prayer to God for those who read is that the Holy Spirit would now open our eyes to clearly see the full force of the truth set forth in this inspired statement of Peter: "To whom coming, as unto a living stone, disallowed indeed of men, but chosen of God, and precious, ye also, as lively (living) stones, are built up a spiritual house, an holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God by Jesus Christ." 1 Peter 2:4,5 May God now open the eyes of our understanding to see that the precious living stone of whom the Spirit speaks is not one stone, but many individual living stones, united by the Spirit of God to become one stone. We, being many, are one body in Christ, and everyone members one of another. With all reverence and godly fear I tell you that that one stone, formed of many living stones, is the fullness of God's Christ. The spiritual house which God is building of many living stones is nothing less than the body of Christ, liveth stone in this building, this house not made with hands, is a living stone. Every living stone is an elect and chosen son of God. Every elect and chosen Son of God is a member of His spiritual body. This is the house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens, 2 Cor. 5:1. This is the Father's house of many mansions which Jesus called "My Father's house". John 14:1,2 It is in this spiritual house (1 Peter 2:5), this holy temple, this spiritual body, that God is preparing a place for us even as Jesus said: "In My Father's house are many mansions: if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again and receive you unto Myself; that where I am, there ye may be also." John 14:2,3

While we entertain the idea that the Father's house is heaven and the many mansions are beautiful palaces in which we will live when we get to heaven, we miss a whole realm of truth as well as being guilty of very childish understanding. The truth that God would have us know is this: He at infinite cost is building a house for Himself, an eternal mansion in the heavens from which He will govern the whole universe in glory and righteousness. The stones of that mansion are living stones. The living stones are elect and precious saints of God. With reverence and godly fear I proclaim the ineffable truth that these living stones are the enchristed, the people Paul speaks of as being "in Christ". They are members of His body (1 Cor. 12:12), of His flesh, and of His bones (Eph. 5:30). In one Spirit, even the Holy Spirit, they are all baptized into one body (I Cor. 12:13), and that me body is Christ's body (verse 12), the spiritual house (1 Peter 1:5), the temple of the Lord (2 Cor. 6:16), an house not made with hands (2 Cor. 5:1), and My Father's house (John 14:2).

Oh, the goodness and the greatness of the purpose of God! How infinite His understanding! How wise His ways! How almighty His acts! How infinitely patient His longsuffering! Who among men can fathom or describe the purpose of the Lord? Who can ever add to His wisdom or detract from His power? God in wisdom has created the heavens and the earth. From the lass of the earth He took a portion of its dust to form a man, and from the mass of mankind and all the stones thereof He elected and chose the living stones who would form His living temple, His house not made with hands. See with what infinite power the Almighty presses His searching and edifying question upon us, for thus the Lord demands: "Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you? If any man defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy; for the temple of God is holy, which temple ye are." 1 Cor. 3:16, 17

Read these inspired and holy statements with all diligence and prayer. Halt now in your reading, if you will, and with bowed head and contrite heart ask the Spirit of God to fill your spirit with the reality of the infinite work He is doing. Through suffering, fiery trial and tribulation, with infinite care He is chipping and cutting, fashioning and polishing that living stone which you are that as a finished, mature, and adopted son you may be placed by Him in the temple of the Lord, the house not made with hands, the Father's own house and eternal dwelling place. Faithfully does He rebuke us, saying, "If any man defile the temple of the Lord, him shall God destroy." In the end of this age the proclamation will be heralded from sea to sea and to the four winds of heaven, "All who are with Him are called and chosen and faithful." Rev. 17:14 It is the combination of these three - called, chosen, and faithful - that will decide our place in His temple. None but these can reign. When I consider the universe, the work of God's hands, the sun, the moon, and the stars with all their infinite and timeless majesty, I fain would fall before God in wonder and adoration; yet all the myriad stars, the suns and planets are but lifeless dust. But when I consider God's holy temple, formed of the living stones which we are, each precious stone chosen of God, each one a son of God, each one a stone of fire, each one a temple in itself where God sits enthroned, every stone filled with the life that God is, the wisdom which God is, the understanding which God is, the omnipotence which God is, then there is no strength left in me, nor scarcely room for praise nor any word at all, for my spirit is struck dumb by the majesty of such infinite purpose.

It is not my intention here to write concerning the temple of the Lord. Perhaps at a later date we can explore more fully the infinite greatness of God and the wonder of the mansion He is building, but we will close the thought with this one question posed to us by the wisdom of God. "What agreement hath the temple of God with idols? For ye are the temple of the living rod; as God hath said, I will dwell in them and walk in them; and I will be their God, and they shall be My people." 2 Cor.6:16. This magnificent statement of truth is followed by definite and infinitely important instruction which millions of Christians now reject. "Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you, and will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty." Verses 17, 18. What, my brother, and what, my sister, does this demand mean to you? Can you not see that those saints who are to be members of His true body, His true temple, His true church, must of necessity separate themselves from the unclean harlots of this resent evil age? However violent may be our reaction to the Spirit's constant call to come out from among them, I tell you in sincerity and truth that you will never be able to understand, much less partake of, the depths of the things I have written until you deliver yourself from the blinding tradition of the harlot system. In these dreadful days, days such as have never been known since the violent and corrupt days before the flood, can you not see that the shadows of night are falling all about us and that Babylon, both spiritual and political, is tottering on its feet "clay? Leave now the temple of Belshazzar where the vessels of ie Lord are defiled with the corruption of the flesh. Leave it, I say, for in this dispensational night that is now upon us Babylon shall fall and all who are therein shall partake of her plagues, eave it now and flee as from Sodom. Flee not to some other tie town as Lot did, but flee to the mountain of the Lord, the temple of the Lord, even as the angel at first instructed him.

THE EVER EXPANDING KINGDOM

From time to time in these writings we have pointed out the significance of the truth Peter taught when he said that no prophecy of the scripture was of any private interpretation. 2 Peter 2:20. All scripture must be understood in conjunction with the whole mass of scripture. Furthermore we can safely say that every statement in God's word has a primary meaning which lies right on the surface, like the words of a parable, plain enough for any man with eyes to see. Let us, however, be sure of this: It is not the surface meaning, which is of greatest importance, but the golden nugget of truth, which lies in the mine beneath the surface. And if you will dig still further, you will always find a third and greater enlargement of the truth you found lying in its simplest form on the surface. When asked by His disciples why He taught in parables, Jesus clearly indicated this divine principle. He answered them, "Because it is given to you to know the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven, but to them it is not given." Matt. 13:11 Any man can understand the surface meaning of the parable of the sower and the seed, but only the spiritual mind sees the underlying spiritual truth. The truth which lies buried as a treasure beneath the surface dust is the meaning the Lord would have us see and, until we thus perceive, all our spiritual understanding lies dreadfully confined and straitened, leaving us to grope among the surface stones for priceless gems to enrich the inner man.

A simple example of the above proposition is found in the statement, "Six days shall thou labor and do all thy work, but the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God: in it thou shall not do any work." Exod. 20:9,10 Surely any natural mind can understand this simple statement. On the surface of this commandment we have seven twenty-four hour days. In the first six of them we may work all we wish, but on the seventh day we must not do any servile work at all. The majority of men see no further than this primary statement of truth, and many, therefore, spend their lives proclaiming the command, arguing about it, quarrelling about it, proving it, and in general making their lives miserable about it. But if, upon accepting the primary truth, we begin to dig beneath the surface, we will hear the Spirit whisper, "A day is with the Lord as a thousand years, and a thousands years as one day." 2 Peter 3:8. Then our eyes are opened to see that six thousand years of travail and labor are destined upon the earth to be followed by a seventh one thousand year day which is God's day of blissful rest. The Sabbath of God's rest is the kingdom age when all labor will be joy. Our peace will be the Prince of Peace. Our rest will be that Sabbath which He is. He who has entered into His rest also has ceased from his own works as God did from His. Heb. 4:10. Just surely as Christ is our light and our peace and our Passover, so also is Christ our Sabbath. Is not this the plain and forceful caching of Paul in his letter to the Colossians? "Let no man therefore judge you in meat, or in drink, or in respect of an holyday, or of the new moon, or of the Sabbath days: which are a shadow of things to come; but the body is of Christ." Col. 2:16,17 All the things contained in the law, good and wonderful as they were, are only shadows of things to come. A shadow falling upon his ground tells us that there is a body nearby, and, if you will lift your eyes away from the dusky shadow on the surface of the round, you will see the body that made the shadow. You will behold the reality rather than the reflection. Therefore Paul says, The body is of Christ." New moons and Sabbaths are but shadows, lying darkly upon the surface of the ground, but look a little farther and you will see the reality - Christ our Passover in whom we are saved; Christ our Sabbath in whom we rest. Having LOW seen how the twenty-four hour day extends itself into a thousand years, we need only to dig a little deeper to discover a even thousand year day and a forty-nine thousand year week Lev. 25:8-24) during which time, according to God's infinite purpose, all things are gathered into Himself (Eph. 1:10; Col.2:19, 20), and the entire universe enters into Christ's rest. That is he meaning of the jubilee. What better name could God have given it?

When Jesus Christ our Lord commenced His ministry, His first message was, "Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." If you will follow His miracles, His sermons, and the signs and wonders of His three years of ministry, you will find in them an exact pattern of all that the kingdom of God will be. How simple it would be to fill this entire book with the spiritual significance of the marriage at Cana of Galilee where in His first miracle our Lord turned the water into wine. John 2:1-10. The ix huge water pots represent the six past dispensations that precede the kingdom of God - innocence, conscience, human government, promise, law, and grace. All through these ages past the wonderful truth they contained has been as water. People have despised the sanctity of innocence, the blessedness of conscience, the glory of human government, the assurance of promise, the holiness, justice and goodness of the law (Rom. 7:13,14), and the wonders of grace. They have reckoned them all as a thing to be done away, but the hour is at hand when all the water pots will be refilled with the water of truth they were intended to establish in the earth, and all the excellence of the truth of those dispensations will be completely restored. Their truth, hitherto lacking in Spirit and rendered helpless by the unregenerate nature of man, will be transformed from the deadness of water to the vibrant life of old wine, for God's Spirit will make them alive and vital and, being thus made alive, they will become the knowledge of the Lord that will cover the earth as the waters cover the sea in that blessed Sabbath day of the kingdom of God.
His truth shall endure to all generations. The beauty of innocence made perfect through experience and suffering; conscience fully enlightened and indwelt by the Spirit of Christ; human government, not by carnal men but God-men, even God's sons. "He that overcometh shall sit with Me in My throne." Promise, not afar off nor seen distantly by faith, not a mystical shadow, but the reality of walking by faith changed to walking by sight; and the law, which is the inherent nature of God, not done away, but enthroned in every transformed heart because He who made the law, yea, is the law, is enthroned in every heart. The law was never done away as people suppose. It was only removed from one place to another - removed from tables of stone to be written in the hearts of the sons of God. The law is God's nature, and all who have the nature of God find themselves living in obedience to the law of God, even though they may never have seen it in writing. The law is fulfilled in Christ, and Christ fulfills it in the hearts of His people. And what shall we say of grace - that unmerited favor of God? Shall we find it missing in the kingdom of Christ? Will it be absent in the fullness of times or in the ages of the ages, which are to follow, or in the period of the second death? No! No! A thousand times no!

Those dear people who teach and preach that the day of grace will soon be ended know nothing at all of grace, nor do they understand that God Himself is grace. He is the God of all grace. You may as well say that God can die as to say that grace will end. I am sure you have read that God "hath raised us up together, and made us sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus; that in the ages to come He might shew the exceeding riches of His grace in His kindness toward us through Christ Jesus." Eph. 2:6,7

Oh, what a wonderful gospel will fill the world in that blessed age of the kingdom of God! No more as in the past will dispensational truth be as weak as water, but it will be water lade wine, even the strong wine of the kingdom, intoxicating very heart and mind in a glory more vivid and powerful than Pentecost. All men at the beginning of a feast set forth the best wine and, when men have well drunk, then that which is worse; but God set forth water first and has reserved the best wine until now. Truly, Lord, Thou doest great things past finding out; yea, and wonders without number!

If you will read a little further, you will see that Jesus, having made the water wine, began to cleanse the temple of rod. John 2:13-25. I need scarcely remind you that you are the temple of God, members in particular of Christ's own body, an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. This was the temple to which He referred when He said, "Destroy this temple and in three days I will raise it up." John 2:19 On the third twenty-four hour day after His crucifixion His own body was used incorruptible and in like manner in the third one thousand year day after His own resurrection He will raise up His spiritual body to incorruption. Follow the miracles with which He adorned the gospel of the kingdom and you will find Him opening the blind eyes, because in the kingdom all eyes will e opened, both physical and spiritual, and blindness will depart forever. Then He touched the lepers, delivering them from their uncleanness, for leprosy is symbolic of sin. By His matchless skill He delivered men from madness and insanity, for all who inherit lat kingdom must be filled with the perfect mind of Christ. We are living in an age of gross insanity. Wherever we look men are walking in contradiction to the revealed will of God with the consequence that God has abandoned them to the lusts of their hearts. The leaders of mighty nations rush madly to prop up a system, which is crumbling all about them, trying desperately to make things work without God, a task which is completely hopeless from beginning to end. "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of knowledge, but fools despise wisdom and instruction."

Oh, what a day of unspeakable glory when He in His living temple shall reign! Then "the wilderness and the solitary place shall be glad for them; and the desert shall rejoice, and blossom as the rose. It shall blossom abundantly, and rejoice even with joy and singing: the glory of Lebanon shall be given unto it, the excellency of Carmel and Sharon, they shall see the glory of the Lord, and the excellency of our God. Strengthen ye the weak hands, and confirm the feeble knees. Say to them that are of a fearful heart, Be strong, fear not: behold, your God will come with vengeance, even God with a recompense; He will come and save you. Then the eyes of the blind shall be opened, and the ears of the deaf shall be unstopped. Then shall the lame man leap as an hart, and the tongue of the dumb shall sing: for in the wilderness shall waters break out, and streams in the desert. And the parched ground shall become a pool, and the thirsty land springs of water: in the habitation of dragons, where each lay, shall be grass with reeds and rushes. And an highway shall there be, and a way, and it shall be called, the way of holiness; the unclean shall not pass over it; but it shall be for those: the wayfaring men, though fools, shall not err therein. No lion shall be there, nor any ravenous beast shall go up thereon, it shall not be found there; but the redeemed shall walk there: And the ransomed of the Lord shall return, and come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads: they shall obtain joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away." Isa. 35

There was a day when the Pharisees came to Jesus, demanding to know when the kingdom of God should come. Luke 17:20. The answer, which He gave indicated none of the wonderful blessedness spoken of above or written by Isaiah and other prophets who proclaimed the kingdom of God. Indeed, at first thought would seem that Jesus was making the kingdom of God to be very small and insignificant by His saying, "The kingdom of God cometh not with observation: Neither shall they say, Lo here! or, lo there! for, behold, the kingdom of God is within you." Luke 17:20,21

The words of our Lord in this passage demonstrate vividly the truth we have been dealing with heretofore. First there appears that primary meaning. The kingdom of God is within you. Within you is the seed bed of that kingdom which will fill the universe. You will not dig much deeper before you make the wonderful discovery that the same kingdom which had its beginning in you has begun to burst its shell and spring forth as a tender plant — first the blade, then the ear, afterward the full 3rn in the ear - until the power and glory of the King who signs within you begins to spread His influence far beyond into all the earth and all things are gathered into the kingdom of God and nothing is left outside of it. "Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will raise unto David a righteous Branch, and a King shall reign and prosper, and shall execute judgment and justice in the earth. In His days Judah shall be saved and Israel shall dwell safely: and this is His name whereby He shall be called, The Lord our Righteousness." Jer. 23:5,6 As the tiny mustard seed is planted in the warm earth, thence to spring forth and grow exceedingly until it becomes the largest of the herbs, the fowl of the air lodging in its branches, so the seed of the kingdom, which is Christ the King, is planted in the earth which you are. There His reign begins. There the tender plant is nourished, and from that lowly place it grows to fill the whole earth until all people find safety in its branches. As we have pointed out before, we now remind you that the kingdom of God, having filled the earth in the dispensations to come, will from thence extend eternally outward to reconstitute, rehabilitate, reconcile, and replenish the entire universe, enfolding within its mighty branches the vast limitless firmament of nebulas, luminaries, and galaxies until the multiplied myriads of lie ransomed and reconciled shall in chorus fill the vastness of tie universe with these words: "Praise ye the Lord. Praise ye the Lord from the heavens: praise Him in the heights. Praise ye Him, all His angels: praise ye Him, all His hosts. Praise ye Him, sun and moon: praise Him, all ye stars of light. Praise Him, ye heavens of heavens, and ye waters that be above the heavens. Let them praise the name of the Lord: for He commanded, and they were created, he hath also established them forever and ever: He hath made a decree, which shall not pass. Praise the Lord from the earth, ye dragons, and all deeps: Fire, and hail; snow, and vapors; stormy wind fulfilling His word: Mountains, and all hills; fruitful trees, and all cedars: Beasts, and all cattle; creeping things, and flying fowl: Kings of the earth, and all people; princes, and all judges of the earth: Both young men, and maidens; old men, and children: Let them praise the name of the Lord: for His name alone is excellent; His glory is above the earth and heaven. He also exalteth the horn of His people, the praise of all His saints; even the children of Israel, a people near unto Him. Praise ye the Lord." Psa. 148

THE KINGDOM WITHIN

It is completely impossible to over-emphasize the importance of this foundational and fundamental truth: The kingdom of God is within you. It is here, Oh child of God, that the magnificence of the all encompassing, all-enduring, everlasting kingdom of God has its beginning. God Almighty, full of wisdom, longsuffering, and faithfulness, is preparing a people in the lowly estates of this present evil world who will reign with Christ in His throne, first from sea to sea and then from universe to universe. Make no mistake about it, my friend and brother! These present hours of preparation in the lowest parts of the earth are fraught with infinite importance and eternal significance. It is here and now that preparations are to be made. The enchristed who are to reign in glory with Him are being prepared. It is a faithful saying and full of truth that all who are with Him are called, and chosen, and faithful, Rev. 17:14. Think not in your heart that you may pass your life here, carefree and dilatory concerning the purpose of God, suddenly to find yourself sitting with Christ governing the universe, because such a thing will not be. Well did Paul say, "If we suffer with Him, we will reign with Him; but if we deny Him, He will deny us." If my understanding of this passage is correct, it simply means that, if we deny Him in our identification with Him in His suffering, rejection and death to self, He will deny us the right to reign with Him. It was not enough that the loving mother of James and John should ask this favor for her boys: "Grant that these my two sons may sit, one on Thy right hand and one on Thy left, in Thy kingdom." Jesus gave the answer to all such presumption when He answered, "To sit on My right hand, and on My left, is not Mine to give, but it shall be given to them for whom it is prepared of My Father."

The kingdom of God begins within you on that day when Jesus Christ is first invited to enter your heart. In the day you repent of your sin, particularly the sin of unbelief, even that very hour Jesus Christ, the Savior of all men, becomes your personal Savior, bringing into your heart then and there the redemption purchased for all men through the blood of His cross. The work of salvation is wholly of God. Even the faith that brings it into your heart is wholly of God. For this reason the scripture has said, "By grace are ye saved through faith, and that (faith) not of yourselves. It is the gift of God." Eph. 2:8

Though the work of salvation is wholly and entirely of the Lord, we can never absolve ourselves from personal responsibility and faithfulness to God. While redemption is wholly of the Lord and "we are God's workmanship", yet it is required in stewards that a man be found faithful. 1 Cor. 4:2. To what extent the reign of Jesus Christ and the glory of His kingdom will increase and prosper within us will depend upon the kind of loving cooperation and submission He finds in our hearts. Our personal relationship with Jesus Christ, our King, means absolutely everything, both now as He reigns within us and in the ages to come when He grants us a place in His throne, The reason John was that disciple whom Jesus loved was because Jesus was the Christ whom John loved more than all else in heaven or earth. The more we love Christ the more abundantly He requites our love. The more we listen for His voice the more readily He will speak to our hearts. The more our searching eyes seek the beauty of His face the more He will reveal His face to us. The more patiently we await His leading the more diligently He will lead us. The more implicitly we trust Him the greater will be His confidence in us. The greater delight we display in carrying out His will the more His soul will rejoice in opening our understanding to the sacred mysteries of God. "I love them that love Me," saith the Lord, "and they that seek Me early shall find Me." Love is an attitude of the heart. There is no way of explaining love that will enable men to grasp it with the natural mind. Love is of God. Yea, love is God and God is love. Love has nothing whatever to do with the sentimental, meaningless bosh we hear all about us. It is abundantly true that God loves those who love Him. He loves all men, even those who hate Him, but how much more is His love made manifest toward those who hourly requite His love and breathe out, often silently, the adorations and contemplations of their souls even as Mary did, who filled the house with the odor of her ointment, though it seems she spoke not a word.

"He that hath My commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth Me: and he that loveth Me shall be loved of My Father, and I will love him, and will manifest Myself to him." John 14:21 Do you see the divine secret hidden here? "He that loveth Me shall be loved of My Father." Does that not tell us that God requites our love? Does it not clearly show that all who love Him, cherishing His commandment, His will, and His eternal purpose, become the special objects of His admiration and His loving kindness? If I ask you why it was that Daniel was a man dearly loved of God, will you not with one consent give me one answer? Will you not tell me that Daniel was dearly beloved of God because he dearly loved God? There is no other answer that can be given. Could it be different with you or with me who dearly love God? Shall our fervent love go unrequited and unreturned? No, indeed no! But it will be returned in that abundance which only God Himself can pour forth.

Furthermore, in this same passage our Lord and Christ has clearly shown that our love for Him is the source of all revelation and spiritual understanding. "He that loveth Me shall be loved of My Father, and I will love him, and will manifest Myself to him." Verse 21 To love Christ is the secret of all revelation and spiritual understanding. The Lord is not interested in the letters that are indicative of our much learning. He is not sufficed by tradition nor delighted by head knowledge; but to all who love Him He reveals Himself that they may love Him yet the more, and, beholding Him, may be changed into the image of Him who has manifested Himself to them. So beautiful was this truth in the ears of Judas, the brother of James, that he was moved to make the useful inquiry, "How is that Thou wilt manifest thyself unto us, and not unto the world?" To this Jesus in answer aid unto him, "If a man love Me, he will keep My words; and My Father will love him, and We will come unto him, and make Our abode with him. He that loveth Me not keepeth not My sayings: and the word which ye hear is not Mine, but the Father's which sent Me." John 14:22-24 Love is the secret key that opens the storehouse of revelation and spiritual understanding. Love enlightens the eyes and gives understanding to. the heart. Love ends the heavy veil that hangs before each holy place revealing the glories of God and His kingdom. Love opens the locked treasure chest where lie the priceless jewels of all eternal things.

Two men looked through prison bars:
One saw mud and the other saw stars.

Thus it ever is with us all. The man who has no burning love for God, though he be a professing Christian of many years, sees nothing but the bondage of corruption, while he who loves God sees in every chastening rod and every weariesome affliction the excellent power of the Lord working in him a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory.

In the work that I am doing I receive many hundreds of letters. Some who write them are very sad and distressed because they seem to be doing nothing for God. People love the excitement of ever doing things, and the more they do the more they imagine they are pleasing God. This line of thinking is a great mistake. It is one of tradition's most stubborn lies. God has not said that as many as are up and doing, they are the sons of God, but He has said, "As many as are led by the Spirit of God, hey are the sons of God." I know you have read this verse: Then was Jesus led up of the Spirit into the wilderness to be tempted of the devil." You know, I am sure, that it was the Spirit who led Moses to the backside of the desert to seemingly waste his life, tending sheep for forty years. You know, too, that it was the leading of the Spirit that placed Paul through shipwreck on the Island of Miletus that the heathen might receive the glorious gospel of Christ. Was it not the Spirit of Christ who locked Paul in a prison cell and led John to Patmos through exile and banishment? Of course it was! Happy is that saintly man who sees God's hand in everything, leading him in the way he should go! When we are led by God's Spirit and our lives are yielded to Him, we must expect many of these strange and often cruel experiences. But, if we love Him enough to lay our head in worship upon His breast and say, "Thy way is in the storm, and Thy paths through the great waters," then we are holding the right relationship to Him and we are receiving the molding that will prepare a vessel fit for the Master's use.

As the protoplasm contains within its minute cells the very essence of that life which is to be, so the kingdom of God within us, infinitesimal in its smallness, contains within itself every essence of that vast universal kingdom to come. We must rightly conclude, therefore, that all things spoken of the kingdom of God within us will later be carried out in greater fullness still when at last that kingdom embraces the universe. Conversely, then, it must also be true that all things spoken of the vast universal kingdom of God equally apply to the kingdom of God, which as a tender plant has taken root within us. In this connection I would like to make special reference to one mighty edict of the Lord, spoken of by Paul concerning the kingdom of God. "As in Adam all die," he said, "even so in Christ shall all be made alive. But every man in his own order: Christ the firstfruits; afterwards they that are Christ's at His coming. Then cometh the end, when He shall have delivered up the kingdom to God, even the Father; when He shall have put down all rule and all authority and power. For He must reign, till He hath put all enemies under His feet. The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death (including the second death, of course). For He hath put all things under His feet. But when He saith all things are put under Him, it is manifest that He is excepted, which did put all things under Him. And when all things are subdued unto Him, then all the Son (which includes the whole sonship company) also Himself be subject unto Him (the Father) that put all things under Him, that God may be all and in all." 1 Cor. 15:22-28

It is inconceivable to imagine any scripture or any inspired saying that could possibly enlarge on such all-embracing words these. Meditate at length on their fullness and, as your spirit asps the boundless realms of their significance, you will comprehend as never before how great are the things God has prepared for Himself and for those who love Him. Nowhere will there remain any sin nor will there be one sinner, for He must reign till all enemies are under His feet, yea, until every knee shall bow and every tongue confess that Jesus Christ is Lord to the glory of God the Father, whether they be things in heaven or earth or under the earth, and every creature in heaven and in earth and under the earth and such as are in the sea will be heard lying, "Blessing and honor and glory to Him that sitteth upon the throne and unto the Lamb forever and ever." Rev. 5:13

I have solemn and important words for every man who has his hope within him and who today rejoices in the knowledge that Christ, the King who shall reign in triumph on David's throne in ages to come, has already taken the reins of the kingdom of God within him. How blessed and wonderful is the force of such an almost incredible truth as this! But it is in the knowledge of this ineffable fact that our responsibility as sons of God finds its deepest significance, as I will endeavor now to show.

We who were once dead in Adam have been already made alive in Christ. He who is alive forevermore has become my life and now He who sits upon the throne of my life must reign until He has put all enemies under His feet. I do not ask you to struggle with those arch-enemies of yours - the world, the flesh, and the devil - but I do beseech you to yield the kingdom which you are to Jesus Christ, the King, that He may destroy these enemies from within you and reign on the throne of the kingdom of God within you until He has put all enemies under His feet. Your greatest enemy is not the devil; it is your own flesh. If men did not love their flesh so much, the devil would have no power at all in their lives. You will find men and women who claim to hate the devil and all he stands for, but no man ever yet hated his own flesh, but nourishes and cherishes it. Yet it is the flesh that lusts against the Spirit of Christ! The flesh unceasingly wars against the Spirit of the King and His kingdom that is within us. Just as the forces of evil and wickedness in the world in hate and envy proclaim, "We will not have this man to rule over us," even so the flesh, desperately striving to revive the corrupt nature of Adam within us, would push Christ from His throne and reign in His stead. It is never our striving against the evils of the flesh and the world and the devil that counts for anything at all; the Christ within us would make short shift of them, but we have the wretched habit of failing to yield these evils to the King. Yea, we protect and excuse them until our willfulness calls forth the rod of iron. We cannot overcome our enemies ourselves. Christ alone can put them under His feet. Our responsibility is to yield ourselves to God that He may reign. It is the civil wars that rage in the kingdom within that hinder the work of God, closing fast our eyes to understanding and shutting up the gates of revelation, experience, and growth in Him.

Times almost without number the Spirit has warned that danger and death await those who remain in the organizations of Babylon, but people go heedlessly on as though no voice had spoken, their eyes darkened by church tradition and their spirits taken captive by the outward beauty of the deceiving harlot. People harshly rebuke me for daring to expose her drunkenness and sins and for warning them to flee from the awful destruction that awaits her and all who dwell in her, until I seem as one who mocks, but they have forgotten that in the end of this age angels themselves will pass through the heavens, crying, "Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication." Rev. 14:8 And another voice came from heaven, saying, "Come out of her, My people, that ye be not partaker of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues. For her sins have reached unto heaven, and God hath remembered her iniquities." Rev. 18:4,5 I have no hesitation in saying this: If you desire to have Christ the King establish His throne and reign within you, then your first and foremost step will be to divorce yourself from the harlot system. The Spirit has said, "Shall I then take the members of Christ, and make them the members of an harlot? God forbid." 1 Cor. 6:15 And yet this is the position of all who remain in the church systems.

To the lowly apostle, Peter, our Lord Jesus Christ gave a special ministry. Once He bade him, "Feed My lambs," and twice He spoke, saying, "Feed My sheep." John 21:16,17 Wonderful are the instructions of Paul. Practical beyond measure are the words of James. Infinite in love and communion are the epistles of John; but Peter above all others is a feeder of the sheep, a feeder of the soul, of the spirit, and of the spiritual mind. Who more than he could prepare our hearts for this reigning King that all our enemies within and without should be subdued into Christ? Yes, even that last enemy, which is death, is not beyond the power of Him who said, "Behold, I am alive forever more, and hold the keys of death and hell." Hear now the instruction of this wise feeder of the sheep as he tells us the way by which we may have an abundant entrance into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ.

"Grace and peace be multiplied unto you through the knowledge of God, and of Jesus our Lord, according as His divine power hath given unto us all things that pertain unto life and godliness, through the knowledge of Him that hath called us to glory and virtue; whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises; that by these ye might be partakers of the divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust. And beside this, giving all diligence, add to your faith virtue; and to virtue knowledge; and to knowledge temperance; and to temperance patience; and to patience godliness; and to godliness brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness charity. For if these things be in you, and abound, they make you that ye shall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. But he that lacketh these things is blind, and cannot see afar off, and hath forgotten that he was purged from his old sins. Wherefore the rather, brethren, give diligence to make your calling and election sure; for if ye do these things, ye shall never fall: for so an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ." 2 Pet. 1:2-11

The subject we are now considering, the kingdom of God within us, is of such dimension and vital importance in these closing hours of time that one scarcely knows how best to present its significance that God's people may be inspired to leave the weak and beggarly things of tradition and religion and to lay hold on the precious promise that is set before us. You will do yourself a great injustice if you read this message carelessly. It should be read and re-read. Its scripture references should be referred to separately. Time should be taken in meditation and prayer for guidance and understanding. There should be a death to self, that impudent, egocentric devil that would and does usurp the very throne of Christ's kingdom within. There should be a forsaking of the traditions of the elders, for they are often a stupefying drug that deadens the senses and blinds the eyes to all spiritual understanding. Traditions and doctrines that are contrary to the gracious nature of God will certainly cut us off from the revelation of God's eternal purpose. These are days when the flesh is rampant on every hand. Compare Rom. 1:21-32 with 2 Tim. 3:1-8 and decide for yourself if this is not a true comparison with our day. Everything now is for the flesh - wine, women, song, drugs, sex, luxury, ease, and pleasure. Even the religions and forms of godliness are designed for the lovers of flesh. Everything everywhere for the five physical senses! Bad and corrupt as all this is, it is extremely awful to know that God's people have permitted themselves to become a ready part of the abominable way of this present evil world. "The earth also is defiled under the inhabitants thereof; because they have transgressed the laws, changed the ordinance; broken the everlasting covenant. Therefore hath the curse devoured the earth, and they that dwell therein are desolate ..." Isa. 24:5,6

I know my words will greatly shock many who read them, but in truth I tell you that the vast host of professing Christians have become just like the people who inhabited Samaria after the ten tribes of Israel were carried captive to Assyria. Of them it is written, "They feared the Lord, and served their own gods, after the manner of the nations whom they carried away from thence." 2 Kings 17:33 Preachers today are for the most part professionals who run their "churches" as a business, measuring their success by visible gain. Instead of feeders of the sheep they are fleecers. They are the false shepherds and the false prophets of whom Jesus said there would be many. Thus saith the Lord, "Many pastors have destroyed my vineyard, they have trodden My portion underfoot, they have made My pleasant portion a desolate wilderness. They have made it desolate, and being desolate it mourneth unto Me; the whole land is made desolate, because no man layeth it to heart." Jer. 12:10,11

I do not believe you will be able to understand this truth of the kingdom of God within you unless you are willing to take time for fasting and prayer. Fasting lays the flesh low. It gives ascendancy to the Spirit. The spirit of man is the same essence as the Spirit of the Lord, for it was God who made man a spiritual being and gave a spirit to him. Eccles. 12:7. It is necessary, therefore, that we avail ourselves of the methods which the Lord has put at our disposal to better enable us to enter into new and holy places and to ascend to new realms of experience and understanding in Him. Fasting, though hateful to the flesh, is simple enough for those who have a mind to do it. What reason can we offer to God for failure to apprehend spiritual blessing just because the flesh, that enemy of the Spirit, loathes to fast? After a fast has been entered into and accomplished, the faithful begin to find new and refreshing understanding in the spiritual realm. Paul taught that to be absent from the body is to be present with the Lord, and I am not speaking amiss when I tell you that fasting from food brings about a deliverance from the body that permits the spirit to enter into its own realm, which is the realm of God. Though this is difficult to understand, it is none the less real. Set aside a week for fasting and waiting upon God. Quit eating food altogether. Drink all the water you wish, but eat nothing. During the first four or five days you may imagine you are ready to die, but it is your flesh and maybe your friends who tell you that. You could live on for many weeks just as Jesus, Moses, Elijah and many others have done. After a few days of fasting your physical strength will begin to return. Body poisons, accumulated through years, are cleansed away, and you will be surprised at how much work you can do and how well you feel. Fasting is excellent for the body and a sure cure for many physical ailments. Spend as much time as possible reading the word of God and in meditation and waiting on the Lord that He may reveal His mind to you. Forget about praying for the things you have always wanted, such as gifts, healings, blessing and power. Seek rather to find out what God wants. Enter into communion, personal relationship and unity with Christ until through association with Him you become a living representation of His mind and will. Be careful to maintain all that was gained in fasting and not to lose out by rushing back to much eating and drinking and living after the flesh. Our attitude should be as the attitude of Christ: "I have meat to eat that ye know not of." Man shall not and must not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God.

We have already pointed out that all the mighty acts accomplished during the life of Jesus Christ were intended to be a typical display of the glory of the kingdom He will establish in the earth when He begins His reign. But be perfectly assured of this remarkable fact: Jesus Christ has been in the process of preparing the kingdom for almost two thousand years. His first message was, "Repent for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." It was at hand when He spoke. The display of the glory of that age began with His ministry by which He demonstrated the power and glory and peace of His coming universal reign. After preaching the kingdom and displaying part of the excellent majesty of it, He then began to prepare through many fiery trials the elect people who will reign with Him in the inconceivable glory of that blessed age. The kingdom of God began to be established in individual, faithful, believing hearts. Christ enters the throne room of the believing heart. He takes the throne and begins to rule and govern and lead the believer till in him Christ is all, and all is Christ. This is the kingdom of God in you. In some Christians His kingdom is unable to gain a foothold and become established because the ground is not made fit for the seed. It is thorny, or stony, or full of weeds, or unreceptive as the uncultivated roadside, where, finding no root, it brings forth nothing, but is carried off by the birds of the air. See Mark 4:1-20. But in others, certainly not many, the seed of the kingdom brings forth fruit, some thirty, some sixty, some a hundredfold. Thus it has been through the centuries as God has prepared His kingdom in men. Let it be fully understood that all through the past nineteen hundred years or so the kingdom of God has been among us, not yet visible, not yet with observation (Luke 17:20), but within the elect and en-Christed ones. The King is ready. The sons are now prepared. Many are waiting in the dust of the earth because God has promised us that they without us will not be made perfect. (Heb. 11:39, 40) Very soon the en-Christed, whether asleep in graves or waiting here, will rise. They will join Christ in the air, which means the Spirit. They will stand in an entirely new realm, but not a strange realm, for we have already partaken somewhat of its glory. Like Paul who, though here on earth in body, was nevertheless caught up into the realm of the third heaven, so these en-Christed ones will stand where He stands forever with the Lord, that the kingdom reign may begin and spread its blessed government abroad in all the earth. Thus shall "Thy kingdom come and Thy will be done in earth as it is done in heaven."

These spiritual realms are being entered here and now by some whether we know it or not. But Satan, knowing that his time is short, has great wrath and has come down to destroy this manchild as soon as he is born, for he is to rule all nations with a rod of iron. The tactics Satan uses are not what saints expect. He is destroying them with sleepiness, carelessness, much catering to the flesh, and with human zeal to accomplish things for God. Christians dread prayer and fasting but love crowds, excitement, and forms of godliness with imaginary power. These are the weapons Satan uses while God's people sit looking for war or death or persecution to destroy them.

According to the gospel of John the second great work in our Lord's ministry was the cleansing of the temple. (John 2:13-17) We have written pages now to show that you are the temple of God. There will never again be another temple made by hands that God will recognize. Even the mighty temple which Ezekiel described (Ezek. Chapters 41-48) must be understood to be the spiritual temple. Ezekiel's temple can no more be physical than can the New Jerusalem which John saw descending from heaven as a bride adorned for her husband. (Rev. 21:2) The New Jerusalem, which is the bride of Christ (Rev. 21:9,10), is here portrayed as a magnificent city of surpassing splendor. I stand weak and trembling with awe before its magnificent radiance. I have no ability to unfold the significance of the beauty of its precious stones; but I know of a certainty that they are living stones, chosen of God and precious. I do not understand the blessedness of the twelve gates; but I know the gates are never closed by day, and there is no night at all. (Rev. 21:5) If Christ is the door by which men enter, surely the bride is the gate through which nations shall come. I do not understand the wall great and high that surrounded this city; but I know it was a living thing. What did the king of Israel mean in that highly spiritual writing we call the Song of Solomon when he said, "We have a little sister, and she hath no breasts: what shall we do for our sister in the day when she shall be spoken for? If she be a wall, we will build upon her a palace of silver (redemption): and if she be a door (gate), we will enclose her with boards of cedar (incorrupt-ion). I am a wall, and my breasts like towers; then was I in His eyes as one that found favor." (S. of
S. 8:8-10) This strange but beautiful meditation is spoken of the bride of Christ, the New Jerusalem, that holy city with living stones, full of gates, with breasts like towers full of the milk of truth to nourish the nations who are yet to be saved and bring their glory and honor into it. (Verse 26)

The bride of Christ is the New Jerusalem. The bridegroom is the temple of the Lord, the sons of God, elect and chosen throughout the ages. Jesus Christ Himself is the head Son of this vast family of brothers. Adam was first formed, then Eve. The bridegroom is first formed, then the bride. The bridegroom company, God's living temple, will be ready, prepared, finished, and complete by the end of this age of grace. The bride company, the New Jerusalem, will be ready, prepared, finished, and complete at the end of the millennial kingdom. It was at the end of the millennial kingdom that John was carried away in the Spirit to behold the New Jerusalem descending from God out of heaven. With the marriage of Christ, the temple of God, to that mysterious, unspeakably wonderful New Jerusalem bride the mystery of God is complete; the seven days of this dispensational week are over; the eighth day, the day of new beginnings, has come; Eden has been restored, and the life of the ages has begun.

During the all important hours before our Lord Jesus Christ departed this world, He filled the moments with fervent reminders of things of greatest importance to us, vividly marking the rugged path which we who take the road to sonship and the kingdom of God must follow. What man, leaving on a long journey, does not call his loved ones to him and refresh their minds with his final and most important instructions? The things of greatest importance are the things he emphasizes the most often with solemn repetition. "The kingdom of heaven is as a man traveling into a far country, who called his own servants and delivered unto them his goods." Matt. 25:14 Thus the last days of our Lord's earthly ministry were filled with reminders and instructions to those blessed ones whose hope it is to inherit the kingdom of God. With infinite care He explained what our relationship to the Father must be. He warned us of the severe tribulation and loneliness of the way. He made it very clear that our understanding of the purpose of God would be commensurate with our love for Him. "If a man love Me, My Father will love him, and We will come unto him and make Our abode with him." It is not the learned and educated, nor the wise and prudent, who comprehend the deep things of God or who taste the glories of the kingdom, but "blessed are the poor in spirit, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven." It is not the "food, fun, and fellowship" crowd that enters in, but "blessed are they that mourn, for they shall be comforted." The mountain peaks of joy that will brighten our morning are reached through the valleys of weeping that endure through our night. There is a blessing sent from God in every burden of sorrow. It is not the proud and mighty, the high and mighty, nor the rich and affluent who inherit the earth, but "blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth." Woolman said, "Selfish men may possess the earth; it is only the meek who inherit it from the heavenly Father." It is those who hunger and thirst for righteousness who will be filled with the righteousness which Christ Himself is. Never repay your enemies in their own coin nor entertain the crude notion that one injustice deserves another. Remember rather that it is the merciful who will obtain mercy and the blessing of the Lord. The pure in heart will see God; therefore, if your eye be single (pure), your whole body will be full of light. But, if your eye be evil (mixed with self and selfishness) and your motives impure, then your body is full of darkness. Blessed are the peacemakers, for they shall be called the children of God. Blessed are they which are persecuted for righteousness sake, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven.

Christian people, I have observed, are carelessly prone to regard the awesome proclamations of Almighty God as nice little meaningless day dreams. It is comforting to believe in heaven because it’s nice to think the dead are there and we might have to go there someday, too. It is convenient to believe in God. Who knows? We just may happen to need Him. And isn’t it nice to know the kingdom will come someday and we won’t have to work or war anymore? They remind me of the millionaire socialite who, speaking in the stuffy accents of her sophistication, remarked, "In our set it is chic to be born again." Oh, fools and slow of heart to believe! These mighty edicts, these divine fiat, are not for the stuffy, the sophisticated, the dilatory, the worldly minded, nor the careless but for those who hunger and thirst for the righteousness of God till all else fades into insignificance and for those who desire the words of His mouth more than their necessary food.

The dispensation of the kingdom of God is very, very near, even at the door. The hour to which we have come is all important. Let not your lamp be depleted of its oil lest you hear the Savior say, "Could ye not watch with Me one hour?" The kingdom of God is the purpose and focal point of all previous dispensations. Jesus said that the kingdom was prepared from the foundation of the world. (Matt. 25:34) All previous dispensations with all the beauty and power of their truth are combined in the glory of the kingdom of God. Awake, then, and sleep not lest its morning come upon you unaware! The signs of the end of this age abound on every hand. Every sign that heralds the end of this age is at the same moment the swift and glorious harbinger of the kingdom of God in the earth.

Jesus spoke of a day when Jerusalem would be encompassed with armies. (Luke 21:20) She is completely surrounded now. He said men's hearts would fail for fear. (Luke 21-25) Heart failure is one of the most merciless killers of the day. Fearful sights are everywhere as nature itself reacts with violence against man's morbid abuse. Perilous times have come to an extent inconceivable even ten years ago. The violence and evil of Noah's day with all its intermingling and mixing of things God made to be pure and separate are upon us, together with all the filth of Sodom. False prophets, false churches, and false christs abound as part and parcel of the Babylon system.

While all this confusion is consuming the world and the vast majority of professing Christians are falling in line with it, and while Babylon has become the habitation of devils and the hold of every unclean and hateful bird, the kingdom of God is coming to the fullness in the hearts of God's elect, "You are a building which has been reared on the foundation of the apostles and prophets, the corner stone being Christ Jesus Himself, in union with whom the whole fabric, truly bonded together, is rising to form a holy sanctuary in the Lord; in whom you also are built up together to become a fixed abode for God through the Spirit." Eph. 2:20-22 (Weymouth) The kingdom within you will soon be complete. The kingdom of God without and in the earth is now at hand. Everywhere you look the kingdoms of this world are falling to pieces. The feet of iron and clay are smitten. Soon we shall hear the triumphant cry, "The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdom of our Lord and of His Christ, and He shall reign unto the ages of the ages." Amen.

THE INCREASE OF HIS GOVERNMENT

Of the increase of His government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon His kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth even forever. The zeal of the Lord of hosts will perform this. (Isa 9:7)

The deep and hidden mysteries of God are never discovered by the investigations or probings of the natural mind because they abide in a realm beyond the reach of the natural. God is not far from any one of us, for "in Him we live and move and have our being", yet "no man hath seen God at any time." When men with natural minds try to describe God, they manifest themselves to be the fools that they are, for "the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God: for they are foolishness unto him: neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned." 1 Cor. 2:14 As man cannot fathom God, neither can he fully comprehend His plan for the ages, His great redemption, or His merciful purpose, which He has purposed in Himself to gather all things in heaven and earth into His Son, Jesus Christ. (Eph. 1:10)

I earnestly pray that God will give a spirit of true humility to all who read these lines, for revelation and understanding are given only to those who humbly confess their ignorance before God. While there is no searching of His understanding, yet "He giveth power to the faint; and to them that have no might He increaseth strength. Even the youths shall faint and be weary, and the young men shall utterly fall: But they that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength; They shall mount up with wings as eagles; they shall run and not be weary; and they shall walk, and not faint." Isa, 40:29-31

Long ago our Lord Jesus Christ warned the Pharisees, saying, "Ye make the word of God of none effect through your tradition." Mark 7:13 What a painful thing it really is that men through centuries of imbibing the teachings and sermons of men should have their hearts so full of religious tradition that they can never see the truth because it is contrary to their tradition. The scribes and Pharisees had formed such definite opinions as to who and what Christ should be that, when He appeared before them, they not only did not know Him but thoroughly rejected Him. Our Lord Jesus was forever knocking holes in their traditions, but for all that they would not abandon them. "What think ye of Christ?" He once asked. "Whose Son is He?" To this they replied, "He is the Son of David." "How is it, then," He asked, "that David in spirit calleth Him Lord, saying, 'The Lord said unto my Lord, sit Thou on my right hand until I make thine enemies thy footstool.' If David then called Him Lord, how is He his son?” Matt. 22:41-46 Though they could not answer His question and dared not try, they still held doggedly to their traditions. But were these scribes and Pharisees more blind and stubborn than the preachers and people who are their counterparts today? I tell you, nay, for the same blindness fills the minds of those who adhere to that unchaste harlot who dares to call herself the church. Blindly they grope and grovel in the darkness of her tradition, obscuring the light of revelation and the understanding of the truth.

"Known unto God are all his works from the beginning of the ages." Acts 11:18 How could it be otherwise with an omniscient mind? We may therefore rest assured that the all wise God planned in the minutest detail each eternal purpose. Nothing happens without His will. No power prospers without His permission. Nations rise at His command and fall at His bidding. He raises up kings and puts them down again. Every stormy wind obeys His command. Angels, principalities, and powers are made subject unto Him. He is before all things, and by Him all things consist. Everything everywhere, whether seen or unseen, obedient or rebellious, is fulfilling His mind and will in some way work toward His infinite purpose and the spokes of a wheel are centered in the hub. From the foundation of the world and the beginning of the ages, before ever there was a man on the face of the earth, the Lord God omniscient and almighty “appointed a day in which He will judge the world in righteousness by that man whom He hath ordained.” Acts 17:31 That man whom He hath ordained is none other than Jesus Christ, and it is of Him and the increase of His government and peace that we will concern ourselves in this chapter.

When the Lord declares Himself immutable, saying, "I am the Lord; I change not", we should understand that His purposes are the same now as they were in the beginning. He is not changing, but is working out that which from the beginning flourished in His divine mind. The ways of God are eternally progressive, for progression was His purpose in the beginning, and progression was His purpose when He declared, "Of the increase of His government and peace there shall be no end." Why do men quote the scripture, "I am the Lord; I change not", or "Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, today, and forever" hoping to relegate God to the static, hearing of no progression or change in anything? The real truth is that God never changes His purpose, but all the growth and development and the glorious increase of His government are according to His unchanging purpose. How often we have read the truth, "The path of the just is as the shining light that shineth more and more until the day is full", but while we rejoice in the statement, we reject its truth, preferring to believe that God, being perfect, remains static in all things.

Have we not noticed the ever increasing growth of revelation in the life of John the Apostle? He who fell down in a daze before Christ at the transfiguration (Matt. 17:6) fell down as one dead before the greater glory when Christ was revealed as the Alpha and Omega in Rev. 1:17, and later still, when carried in the Spirit to behold the bride of Christ, he fell down once more, staggered by the wonder of that which is yet to come. (Rev. 22:8) Let us then raise our sights and lift our eyes unto the high hills of God that we may behold the increasing greatness of the revelation of Christ and the increasing greatness of the revelation of His government.

THE GATHERING OF THE ELECT AND THE REIGN OF CHRIST IN THEIR HEARTS

When the Apostle James stood to speak in the council at Jerusalem, he began by making this remarkable statement which embraces within itself the complete outline of God's purpose for the age of grace in which we live and the dispensation of the kingdom of God, the millennial kingdom, which is to follow. In these words James instructed the brethren at Jerusalem, saying, "Simeon hath declared how God at the first did visit the Gentiles, to take out of them a people for His name. And to this agree the words of the prophets; as it is written. After this (i.e. after God has taken a people out of the Gentiles) I will return and will build again the tabernacle of David, which is fallen down; and I will build again the ruins thereof, and I will set it up; that the residue of men might seek after the Lord, and all the Gentiles, upon whom My name is called, saith the Lord, who doeth all these things. Known unto God are all His works from the beginning of the world." Acts 15:14-18

It is true that God has known all His works from the foundation of the ages, for it was God who formed the ages and appointed what should be done in each one of them. I must, therefore, with utmost force impress upon all who read these lines that, if we are to comprehend God's great plan for the ages, we must raise our eyes far above the engulfing muck and sucking quicksand of Babylonish church tradition handed down to us by the mother of harlots and abominations of the earth to keep God's people in bondage, and, as though this were not enough, she has bequeathed many of her sordid and hopeless doctrines to her harlot daughters of so-called Protestantism. As long as you tenaciously hold to the tradition of the church system (which is not the church at all, but Babylon), believing that every Chinaman or African or Indian is forever doomed who through no fault of his own has never heard the name of Jesus Christ, then you will fail to see God's plan for the ages, but if you see, as the Apostle Paul taught, that in the dispensation of the fullness of times God will gather together in one all things in Christ (Eph. 1:9-11), then for the first time in your life God's marvelous working in every age will make good sense.

God's purpose for this age of grace is not the conversion of the whole world. This never was His plan. God's purpose for this age is to take out a people for His name. (Acts 15:14) And may I further add that, if it were God's plan to bring the whole world to repentance in this age, then the whole world would come to repentance in this age, and nothing could stop it from doing so. Is not God almighty? Does He not hold all the nations in the palm of His hand, turning them about as a watercourse and appointing the bounds of their habitation? Did not our Lord Jesus Christ say, "All that the Father hath given Me will come to Me?" John 6:37 And did He not also say, "No man cometh to Me except the Father draw him?" John 6:44 On that wonderful day of revival when the church was in its infancy it was not it said, "As many as were ordained to eternal life believed?" Acts 13:48 Who else could believe but they? Did God ask Saul of Tarsus whether or not he wanted to be saved? Or did He say to Ananias, "He is a chosen vessel unto Me to bear My name before the Gentiles, and kings, and the children of Israel?" Acts 9:15 Where do these man-made preachers get the notion that man is a free moral agent? Indeed, he may be free in some minor things that concern his personal conduct, but concerning God's eternal purpose for him he is not free to do his own will, for "it is not of him that willeth or him that runneth, but God that showeth mercy." Rom. 9:16

God's purpose, then, in this dispensation of grace is to call out a people for His name. Out from among the billions of earth God is choosing an elect company to bear His name. Even the word church means the called out ones. These are the ones who are being called out of the world, called out of every nation, called out of the Gentiles, called out of Israel until there is a multitude which no man can number of all nations, and kindreds, and tongues. (Rev. 7:9) Just as God passed by all the inhabitants of Ur of the Chaldees, choosing out one man by the name of Abram, saying to him, "Get thee out of thy country and from thy kindred, and from thy father's house unto a land that I will show thee" (Gen. 12:1), so He does today. Passing among the nations, He calls out all those who were ordained to eternal life, leaving the rest to fulfill His purpose in ages to come.

I am persuaded that the true church, which God sees and recognizes, is not the church which man sees and recognizes. God pity us if it were! The visible thing which man sees is a church made by the art of man's device of which he, like Nebuchadnezzar of old, can say, "Is not this great Babylon, that I have built for the house of the kingdom by the might of my power, and for the honor of my majesty?" Dan. 4:30 But the church, which God sees and recognizes, is comprised of those called out ones, for they have heard the voice of God and not the voice of man. They are the sheep of His fold. They are the workmanship of God, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God has before ordained that we should walk in them. (Eph. 2:10) He has become our peace, having broken down the walls and partitions erected by sects and denominations and by the ingenuity of the carnal mind. They are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow citizens with the saints, and the household of God. They are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ Himself being the chief corner stone; in whom the whole building, fitly framed together, groweth unto a holy temple in the Lord; in whom ye are builded together for an habitation of God through the Spirit.

"So you are no longer outsiders or aliens, but fellow-citizens with every other Christian. You belong now to the household of God. Firmly beneath you is the foundation, God's messengers and prophets, the actual foundation stone being Jesus Christ Himself. In Him each separate piece of building, properly fitting into its neighbor, grows together into a temple consecrated to God. You are all part of this building in which God Himself lives by His Spirit." Eph. 2:19-22 (Phillips)

My earnest prayer to God is that those who read this message may quickly come to see the vast and abounding difference between the true church, the mystical body of Christ, which is rising to form a spiritual habitation and dwelling place for God, and that visible thing, the work of man's hands, which like a lewd harlot waits at every corner to catch the man who is void of true understanding. The thing which men today call the church is not the church, but an enormous usurper, full of the lames of blasphemy, abounding in false worship and every service of man. Name off every denomination and every sect in the world and I will still affirm, after you have completed the list, that these are but names. They are neither the true church nor segments of it. Their worship is neither in spirit nor in truth. You owe no allegiance to them, but you owe God the obedience of "coming out from among them and being separate from them."

I suppose all the arguments and persuasions in the world will not awaken Christians to the falsehood of the visible church system or to the reality of that spiritual temple, every member of which is stamped with the name of Christ, washed in His blood, and made partakers of His Spirit. They hear His voice and follow Him and strangers will they not follow. It is here in this blessed virgin church that Jesus Christ first sets up His government that He might begin to rule and reign on the throne of their hearts. God never intended that Jesus should reign over all the earth in this age. His reign is confined completely to that company of believers who have heard His voice and who follow Him.

As soon as a man believes, the Lord Jesus Christ desires immediately to set up His government in that life. He plans to subdue it completely unto Himself, to imbue the believer with His mind, with His Spirit, and with His thoughts until the soul is so yielded to Christ and filled with His ways that it can with truth be said, "As He is, so are we in this world." Under this blessed reign of Christ the believer partakes of truth until he becomes truth. He learns wisdom until he is wisdom. Judgment, justice, and equity become integral parts of his redeemed spirit. All that Christ is the believer becomes. He is a partaker of the divine nature. He escapes the corruption that is in the world. He, like his Lord, becomes meek and lowly in heart. He loses his own will and delights himself in the will of God. God's will is his will; God's love is his love; God's justice is his justice. In this age of grace Christ is the King and those who follow Him are the kingdom over which He reigns. This may seem to be a very small kingdom for such a great and eternal King, but we cannot over- emphasized the importance of this lowly beginning for a government whose authority is destined to be as boundless as eternity, for "of the increase of His government there shall be no end."

How pitiful it is that for centuries Christians have been taught that their hope was to die and fly away to heaven where they would spend eternity shouting "Hallelujah" up and down the golden streets! Oh how much truth is missed by confining ourselves to such doctrines of men! This is not and never was God's purpose for the saints, but the kingdom of God and the sovereign reign of Christ is being set up in the hearts of His believing saints. Thus He is preparing them for the government of the world when the time is ripe for it. He is bringing the true saints to full sonship that these sons, begotten of God, may, together with Jesus Christ the first begotten Son, be used to display unto principalities and powers the manifold wisdom of God. Eph. 3:10. These are the sons of whom it is written, "That He might be the firstborn among many brethren," Rom. 8:26, and again, "Here am I and the children (sons) which God has given Me." Heb. 2:13

When Jesus the Lord came to earth, His own received Him not because He did not come according to their tradition. For centuries they had cherished the hope that the moment the Messiah appeared He would immediately seize authority, cast down their enemies, and begin His reign over the nations of the earth. They expected that He would smite down the Caesars Tom their thrones and restore the kingdom immediately to Israel. Even His disciples were filled with this doctrine, for after His resurrection they inquired, "Wilt Thou at this time restore him to His own kingdom?" But He answered, "It is not for you to know the times and seasons which the Father hath put in His own lower, but ye shall receive power after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you." Acts 1:6-7 The people unto whom He came understood not that this King who had come from glory was not ready to set up His kingdom and reign, but first with utmost care He must choose and prepare through seemingly endless centuries that blessed "cabinet", God's sons, who were to reign and rule with Him. He must first set up His throne and reign in all their hearts, bringing them to the exact likeness and image of the Son of man, knowing full well that, when they had all become partakers of His Spirit, of His flesh, and of His bones, they would be in His image in all things and ready to take the kingdom and reign with Him, not in a limited, confined, and restricted kingdom, but over the whole earth and everything in. He knew that at the end of the age they should be in His image. They would be like Him - so wonderfully like Him that they would be indistinguishable from Him.

Those Jews who rejected Him as their king knew not that He would employ the next two thousand years to slowly, surely, and wisely choose that governing body of sons, preparing them through fiery furnaces and trials of affliction to sit together with Him in His throne, for those who suffer with Him shall reign with Him and those who deny Him He will deny. When that glorious kingdom comes, God will manifest twelve times twelve thousand sons in the image and likeness of God’s firstborn Son that all the earth may be filled with the glory of the Lord.

It would take volumes without number to write of the infinite preparation our Lord is making in the hearts of those saints who are to rule and reign with Him. See how He is preparing our hearts, conforming our very nature to the likeness of His own: First, that Christ may dwell in our hearts by faith; second, that we may be rooted and grounded in love; third, that we may be able to comprehend with all saints what is the length and breadth and depth and height and to know the love of Christ that passes knowledge; and, fourth, that we may be filled with all the fullness of God, that the church should bring glory to Him throughout all ages. Cf. Eph. 3:16-21. Since the reign of Christ is to be one of increasing peace, judgment, justice, order, love and equity, it is necessary that the King of kings and Lord of lords should take this whole dispensation to prepare the hearts of His sons that they might be prepared to reign with Him in the same spirit and with the same knowledge that He Himself possesses. He is not only preparing our spirits and our minds to shine in His exact likeness, but He is making known the mystery of His will, opening the eyes of our understanding that we may know the hope of such a sublime and worthy calling and what riches He enjoys among His saints. See Eph. 1:9-11, 18. It is through His great kindness freely bestowed on us that He will demonstrate the exceeding riches of His grace in the boundless ages, which are yet to come. See Eph. 2:7.

This then is the beginning of Christ’s reign - silent, unpretentious, and unnoticed as He reigns in the hearts of those elect whom He has chosen to reign with Him in the ages to come. But how boundless and important is this the beginning of His government, and how necessary that all the saints should walk in Him and suffer with Him, being “worthy of God who has called s unto His kingdom and glory” (1 Thess. 2:12) that we might walk continually in His will and stand at last in His image.

THE REIGN WITH HIS SONS IN THE KINGDOM

The world, which for six thousand years has endured the ever increasing injustice and inequity of the rule of man, is soon) see a change so unbelievable in its glory and magnitude that /even he that seeth it will scarce believe it. For centuries and dispensations the world has been blighted by the government of the carnal mind until the confusion and disorder has become so real that men's hearts fail them for fear and for looking after the things that are coming upon the earth. But the long, long night of sin and misrule is nearing its end. The Sabbath of the dispensations draweth nigh - that seventh dispensation in God's order, which is the millennial Sabbath. In six days God made the heaven and the earth and all that in them is, and on the seventh day He rested from all His work of creation. Those six days of work and labor represent the six thousand years of man's travails under the rule of the carnal mind, to be followed by a thousand year Sabbath day of rest in which all the former things will have passed away and the government will be upon His shoulder. And His name shall be called Wonderful, counselor, The Mighty God, The Everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace. Of the increase of His government and peace ere shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon His kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with slice from henceforth even forever (or, for the age). The zeal of the Lord of hosts will perform this. (Isa. 9:6,7)

What a glorious day for all the world and all the inhabitants thereof will be this millennial day when the Christ shall reign! And how much more glorious will it be for those saints who, having suffered with Him through the ages of darkness and wail, will now reign with Him in love and peace that the whole earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the Lord as the waters now fill the seas. Then no man shall ever say, "Know the Lord", for in that day all shall know Him from the least even to the greatest.

Throughout the ages of sin and travail, puny man with his carnal mind has devised many forms of government, but each in its turn has proved a failure. The carnal mind wherever it is found continually seeks his own at the expense of others. Thus do all man's efforts fall into decay and pass away. But in the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom which shall never be destroyed, and that kingdom will be the glorious kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ with all the sons of God, which is in truth the body of the bridegroom. With the coming increase of His government there shall be also an increase of those who govern, and we shall now attempt to show as best we can, limited as we are to words and phrases of human language, the very image of that majesty who is to reign over all the earth in the kingdom of our Lord, which is the kingdom of God.

The Apostle John had been exiled to the Isle of Patmos for the word of God and the testimony of the Lord. He was one of those precious saints in whose hearts the meek and lowly Jesus reigned supreme. He was one of the in Christ company, or shall I boldly say he was one of the enchristed. He knew experimentally the truth of the words of the blessed Master, "Thou in Me and I in Thee that they may be one in Us, that the world may believe that Thou hast sent Me." But he who was exiled to Patmos for permitting Jesus Christ to set up His kingdom in his heart was now to clearly see the meaning of the words, "Of the increase of His government there shall be no end."

As he walked the lonely shores of Patmos, he found himself borne away into the realm of the Spirit. In Spirit he traversed the two thousand years of the dispensation of grace to stand in the day that he calls "the Lord's day" or better understood by us as the day of the Lord. From his vantage point in the Spirit he was to behold the tribulation with all its horror unveiled before his eyes. He was to see the rise of antichrist and view the swaggering harlot of Babylonish religion as it exists in our day. He was to hear the voice of an angel proclaiming to God's people, "Come out of her, My people, that ye be not partaker of her plagues; for strong is the Lord that judgeth her." He was to look upon the awful smoke of her burning and destruction and hear the angel voice proclaiming, "The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdom of our Lord and of His Christ, and He shall reign unto the age of the ages." How awesome was his vision!

It is significantly wonderful that, at the very beginning of this great vision in which he was to see the reign of Christ with His saints for a thousand years, he should first be given a vision of the Christ who is to reign. The reign of Christ, which for two thousand years had been restricted to a mystical sovereignty in the hearts of His saints, is now to be greatly increased that He with all those sons whom He has chosen should now reign over all the earth, filling it with the knowledge of the Lord. Thus did John stand in the Spirit on the day of the Lord, and in his own words he declared. "I was in the Spirit on the Lord's day, and heard behind me a great voice as of a trumpet, saying, I am Alpha and Omega, the first and the last: and, what thou seest, write in a book, and send it unto the seven churches which are in Asia... And I turned to see the voice that spake with me. And being turned, I saw seven golden candlesticks; and in the midst of the seven candlesticks one like unto the Son of man, clothed in a garment down to the foot, and girt about the paps with a golden girdle. His head and His hairs were white like wool, as white as snow; and His eyes were as a flame of fire; and His feet like unto fine brass, as if they burned in a furnace; and His voice as the sound of many waters. And he had in His right hand seven stars; and out of His mouth went a sharp two-edged sword: and His countenance was as the sun shineth in his strength. And when I saw Him, I fell at His feet as dead." Rev. 1:10-17

Let us take particular note that this mighty One who stood among the candlesticks, proclaiming, "I am Alpha and Omega", was something more than the meek and lowly Jesus of Nazareth. It is stated with great clearness that John, being turned, saw one like unto the Son of man. This is none other than Jesus Christ, the first begotten Son of God, together with all those other precious sons that have come into His image and likeness throughout the ages. This is in truth the fullness of the body of the bridegroom, for the bridegroom is more than Jesus of Nazareth. He is Jesus Christ and all the sons whom God has given Him now joined together as one glorious body of sons, the bridegroom of whom it was said, "Behold, the bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet Him."

I am terribly at a loss for words to explain or express the glory of that which is soon to come to pass. John, who had been so near to Jesus during His time on earth, could not endure the glory of that mighty One which he now beheld. All his strength ebbed from him until he fell upon the ground as one who is dead. No wonder it is said, "Eye hath not seen nor ear heard, neither hath entered the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love Him. But God has revealed them to us by His Spirit." This He desires to do that we might abandon fully all the weakness of the beggarly things of this age to grasp by faith the marvels of that age which is soon to come.

The voice of this all glorious One was as the sound of a multitude. The significance of this lies in the fact that this was not the voice of the lonely Galilean, but this was Christ, the head, together with all the sons appearing as one body of Christ. Therefore it is fitting that the voice that proceeded forth from Him was the voice of a multitude, or as the voice of many waters. I shall never forget an occasion when we sat amid a crowd of thirty thousand. As they waited for the parade to begin, each was chatting to the other, and as they talked, I heard the swelling voice of a multitude. The only fitting description was that it was as the sound of many waters.

Time’s clock is striking the hour and the time is near at hand for the manifestation of the sons of God, and what a manifestation it is going to be! All creation from time immemorial has groaned and travailed for the manifestation of God’s sons, but soon their prayer will be answered in this mighty One, the Alpha and the Omega, the First and the Last, the Beginning and the End.

I am too weak and earthbound to describe the glory of that heavenly vision that caused John to fall as one dead. Perhaps one should just read it and pass along to let the truth speak for itself. Nevertheless, we shall pause to notice briefly some of the outstanding features that John beheld. This Alpha and Omega was like unto the Son of man. His whole body was clothed with one single garment. He was girt about with a golden girdle. His head and His hairs were white like wool, as white as snow. His eyes were as a flame of fire, and His feet were like brass as if they burned in a furnace. In His right hand were seven stars, and out of His mouth went a sharp two-edged sword. His voice, though the voice of a multitude, was as the sounding of a trumpet, which tells us clearly of the sublime unity of these many voices. Oh, how different it is today as we hear the seven thousand voices of Babylon, each proclaiming his own doctrine! But not so with the sons of God! They have become one Spirit with the Father in heaven. His will He has imparted to them. His will is their will, His purpose their purpose, and His plans their plans. Thus was the multitude of voices as the sound of a single trumpet.

His head was white as wool, as white as snow. The scriptures clearly teach that the hoary head is to be greatly honored, for therein lies the wisdom, experience, and knowledge of great age. The Ancient of days will be no novice in government, for in His hoary head is the wisdom of God who reigneth forever and ever. His eyes were as aflame of fire. How unlike the eyes of mortal man, which can do nothing more than receive light and images from without! Not so with his blessed One. His eyes are as fire, and in the beautiful words of Daniel, who evidently saw the same vision, as lamps of fire. (Dan. 10:6) Everything about the Ancient of days will exude light. All He beholds will receive light, for His eyes are as lamps of fire, and, because they will thus receive light from His countenance, they will receive life as well. "He that followeth Me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life." His feet were as burnished brass as though they burned in a furnace. As brass is symbolic of judgment, and fire, I am sure, has a score of symbolisms, we can behold here the judgment of the nations through those blessed feet members of the body of Christ. Judgment, we must remember, is not merely condemnation as so many seem to think, but judgment may mean acquittal just as it may mean condemnation. The judgment of God has the distinct purpose of setting things right, and, indeed, all things will be set right and all things will be gloriously reconciled unto Himself, yes, things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under earth, or wherever they may be. Out of His mouth went a sharp two-edged sword and His countenance was as the sun shinet in his strength. The word of God that proceedeth forth from the mouth of the Lord is a sharp two-edged sword. It wounds and heals; it kills and makes alive. The whole world is to be judged by that blessed word of God. Just as the eyes give light, so the word that goeth forth from His mouth gives life. There will be no reprieve from its truth nor any error in its judgment.

In the mouth of two or three witnesses shall every word be established. Of such great import is this revelation which Jesus Christ gave to John and all the church that He allowed a vision to be given to Daniel which is so exact in detail with that given to John that none of us can doubt that the two visions were in truth one. As Daniel fasted and prayed, he stood beside the river Hiddekel. "Then I lifted up mine eyes, and looked, and beheld a certain man clothed in linen, whose loins were girded with the fine gold of Uphaz: His body also was like the beryl, and his face as the appearance of lightning, and his eyes as lamps of fire, and his arms and his feet like in color to polished brass, and the voice of his words like the voice of a multitude ... Therefore I was left alone, and saw this great vision, and there remained no strength in me: for my comeliness was turned in me to corruption, and I retained no strength." Dan. 10:5-8

Thus has the Lord revealed that in preparation for the increase of His government He has mightily increased the Governor in that through trial and affliction He has perfected a vast family of sons that they with Christ as one body in God may be able to take the kingdom and reign with Him for one thousand years.
The prophet Daniel, speaking of those days, sums them up in these wonderful words: "I beheld till the thrones were cast down, and the Ancient of days did sit, whose garment was white as snow, and the hairs of His head like pure wool: His throne was like a fiery flame, and His wheels as burning fire. A fiery stream issued and came forth from before Him: thousand thousands ministered unto Him, and ten thousand times ten thousand stood before Him: the judgment was set, and the books were opened. I beheld then because of the voice of the great words which the horn spake. I beheld even till the beast was slain, and his body destroyed and given to the burning flame. As concerning the rest of the beasts, they had their dominion taken away: yet their lives were prolonged for a season and a time. I saw in the night visions, and, behold, one like the Son of man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the Ancient of days, and they brought Him near before Him. And there was given Him dominion and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages should serve Him: His dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and His kingdom that which shall not be destroyed." Dan 7:9-14

It would be futile to close this part of our meditation without mentioning a few of the blessed events of that reign of hitherto unexcelled excellence. Do not relegate the kingdom of God to pure mystery as a thing ethereal, having nothing in common with time. The millennial kingdom is the reign of Christ on the earth. It is just as real as the kingdom of David or Solomon. Into it will be gathered the glory, majesty, and truth of all past ages and dispensations, for it is the millennial Sabbath in which under Christ the world will rest from the travail of the past dispensations.

HIS REIGN OVER THE ENTIRE EARTH

"And the Lord shall be king over all the earth: in that day shall there be one Lord, and His name one. And the land shall be turned as a plain from Geba to Rimmon south of Jerusalem: and it shall be lifted up, and inhabited in her place . . . And men shall dwell in it, and there shall be no more utter destruction...." Zech. 14:9-11 "And in the days of these kings (the present forms of government) shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed: and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms and it shall stand forever." Dan. 2:44

The universal extent of the kingdom of God was foretold by the angel Gabriel at the birth of Jesus in Bethlehem. Appearing to Mary, he proclaimed, "Behold, thou shalt conceive in thy womb, and bring forth a son, and shall call His name Jesus. He shall be great and shall be called the Son of the Highesl: and the Lord God shall give unto Him the throne of His father David: and He shall reign over the house of Jacob forever; and of His kingdom there shall be no end." Luke 1:31-33 And our blessed Lord taught His disciples to pray for the coming of this great kingdom when He said, "After this manner therefore pray ye: Our Father which art in heaven, Hallowed be Thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, as it is done in heaven . . . And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil: for Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, forever. Amen." Matt. 6:9,10,13

"The wilderness and the solitary place shall be glad for them; and the desert shall rejoice and blossom as the rose. It shall blossom abundantly, and rejoice even with joy and singing; the glory of Lebanon shall be given unto it, the excellency of Carmel and Sharon, they shall see the glory of the Lord, and the excellency of our God." Isa. 35:1, 2 "Every valley shall be exalted, and every mountain and hill shall be made low: and the crooked shall be made straight, and the rough places plain: And the glory of the Lord shall be revealed, and all flesh shall see it together: for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it." Isa. 40:4, 5

The transformation of the world in that day will be the marvel and joy of the inhabitants of earth. The weeds and pests that now blight the earth will be no more. "Instead of the thorn shall come up the fir tree, and instead of the brier shall come up the myrtle tree." Isa. 55:13 "Behold, the days, come, saith the Lord, that the plowman shall overtake the reaper, and the treader of grapes him that soweth seed; and the mountains shall drop sweet wine, and all the hills shall melt... And they shall plant vineyards, and drink the wine thereof; they shall also make gardens, and eat the fruit of them. And I will plant them upon their land, and they shall no more be pulled up out of their land which I have given them, saith the Lord thy God." Amos 9:13-15
THE TRANSFORMATION OF THE PEOPLE

"Say to them that are of a fearful heart, Be strong, fear not: behold, your God will come with vengeance, even God with a recompense; He will come and save you. Then the eyes of the blind shall be opened, and the ears of the deaf shall be unstopped. Then shall the lame man leap as a hart, and the tongue of the dumb sing: for in the wilderness shall waters break out, and streams in the desert. And the parched ground shall become a pool, and the thirsty land springs of water: in the habitation of dragons, where each lay, shall be grass and reeds and rushes". Isa. 35:4-7 Then shall “the earth be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea.” Isa. 11:9 "And they shall teach no more every man his neighbor, and every man his brother, saying, Know the Lord: for they shall all know Me, from the least of them unto the greatest of them, saith the Lord..." Jer. 31:34

Even the animals will be changed in the glory of that reign. The wolf also shall dwell with the lamb, and the leopard shall lie down with the kid; and the calf and the young lion and falling together; and a little child shall lead them. And the cow and the bear shall feed; their young ones shall lie down together: and the lion shall eat straw like the ox. And the sucking child shall play on the hole of the asp, and the weaned child shall put his hand on the cockatrice den. They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain; for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea." Isa. 11:6-9

"And I saw thrones, and they that sat upon them, and judgment was given unto them: and I saw the souls of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the word of God, and which had not worshipped the beast, neither his image, neither had received his mark upon their foreheads, or in their hands; and they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years. Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection: on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years." Rev. 20:4, 6

In the years of my preaching I am not sure that I ever attempted to preach from John 3:16. It is too big for man's little mind to comprehend, let alone explain. It may be better just to read it and pass on. So also are our voices hushed as we contemplate the effulgent glory of that coming reign of reigns when Christ in the magnificent glory revealed to John (Rev. 1:9-18) shall reign over all the earth, the sons of God in His perfect likeness with Him. Then shall the whole earth know the wisdom of the mind of Christ, which shall fill every governor of that glorious and holy realm.

THE INCREASE OF HIS GOVERNMENT AND THE DISPENSATION OF THE FULNESS OF TIMES

The dispensation of the fullness of times (Eph. 1:10) is the eighth and final dispensation. In it God will gather all things in heaven and earth into Christ. This will be the most glorious of all ages, exceeding the millennial kingdom of God in glory as that age exceeded all others before it. The dispensation of the fullness of times is a completely new age, which follows the kingdom age. It is the eighth dispensation, typified by the year of jubilee in which year all debts were cancelled and all property returned to its rightful owner. (Lev. 25:1-24)

Seven is God's number of completeness, and as seven twenty-four hour days make one week, so seven dispensational days make one dispensational week. The number eight is the number of new beginnings. Therefore the dispensation of the fullness of times, being the eighth dispensation, is identical with Eden. To make this point clear you will notice by looking at the calendar below that, when the first day of a month falls on a Sunday, the eighth day also falls on a Sunday and is the beginning of a new week. Eight is the number of new beginnings.

The dispensation of the fullness of times, then, is the eighth dispensation due to begin when the seven dispensations of innocence, conscience, human government, promise, law, grace, and the kingdom of God are complete.
In reading these pages, you have noticed that the beginning of Christ's reign during the dispensation of grace was confined completely to the reign of Jesus Christ in the hearts of those few people whom He has chosen for Himself. There is now no outward sign anywhere of the reign of Christ over the nations of the earth. The so-called Christian nations are not Christian in reality. They are only called Christian because they have come under the influence of the gospel, but they continue to live in sin, war, and the turmoil and confusion of the carnal mind. Greed and wickedness reign supreme and the nations are as little like Jesus Christ as they can possibly be. Thus, while sin reigns over all nations, Christ reigns in the hearts of a small but elect company who have been chosen of God in this age that they might be prepared to reign over all the earth in the coming kingdom of God. In that age, as we have already seen, the reign of Christ will have been increased and extended over all the earth. There will be no other government anywhere but the government of Christ, whose voice is as the sound of many waters, and all who are with Him are called, chosen, and faithful. (Rev. 17:4)

Christ, together with all the sons of God, is the completeness of the body of the bridegroom. It is this many membered bridegroom, whose voice, though sounding as many waters, rings with the unity of one trumpet, who will reign over all the earth in the kingdom of God. But this is not the end of the matter, for this all glorious bridegroom, at the sight of whom John fell as dead, is about to immeasurably increase Himself. The long awaited time has come to take the bride, for the marriage of the Lamb is come and His wife hath made herself ready. The marriage of the bridegroom, the male company, to the bride, the female company, will be the signal for the beginning of that age of all ages in which everything in heaven and earth will be gathered into Christ. (Eph. 1:10)

Adam was male and female in one in the beginning, but the female was separated from the male and thus began the tortuous ages of sin which we have known for so long. But now at last, in greater glory far, Christ, the last Adam, is joined to the New Jerusalem bride, for it is the eighth day - the dispensation of the fullness of times in which God has declared, "Behold, I make all things new."

It was after the millennial kingdom was past and the thousand years of Christ's government ended (Rev. 20:1-6) that a mighty angel came to John, saying, "Come hither, I will show thee the bride, the Lamb's wife. And He carried me away in the Spirit to a great and high mountain, and shewed me that great city, the Holy Jerusalem, descending out of heaven from God, having the glory of God: and her light was like unto a stone most precious, even like a jasper stone, clear as crystal; and had a wall great and high, and had twelve gates, and at the gates twelve angels, and names written thereon, which are the names of the twelve tribes of the children of Israel: on the east three gates; on the north three gates; on the south three gates; and on the west three gates. And the wall of the city had twelve foundations, and in them the names of the twelve apostles of the Lamb." Rev. 21:9-14 (Please read the entire chapter.) "And the city had no need of the sun, neither of the moon, to shine in it: for the glory of God did lighten it, and the Lamb is the light thereof. And the nations of them, which are saved, shall walk in the light of it: and the kings of the earth do bring their glory and honor into it. And the gates of it shall not be shut at all by day: for there shall be no night there. And they shall bring the glory and honor of the nations into it. And there shall in no wise enter into it anything that defileth, neither whatsoever worketh abomination, or maketh a lie: but they which are written in the Lamb's book of life." Rev. 21:23-27

John, who had fallen down as dead before the excellent glory of the revelation of Christ (Rev. 1:17), now, beholding the bride, the Holy City, the New Jerusalem, and overcome by her splendor, falls down to worship at the feet of the angel. (Rev. 22:7) And how can we wonder at it? I am at a loss to know which was the more glorious, the bridegroom in all His lordly splendor as portrayed in Rev. 1, or the magnificent glory of the Holy City, the New Jerusalem bride of Christ manifest for the first time in (Rev. 21:9-27). The things of which we speak are too sacred for much elaboration. Rather does my soul desire to fall down to worship at the feet of Him who hath showed me these things. Philosophers and sages could not with golden pen trace the glories that must inevitably follow such a long awaited union as this, for with the marriage to the bride the bridegroom is mightily increased, and with the increase of the governor comes the increase of His government in an eternal reign. Here at last the truth is complete: "In Christ there is neither male nor female," but being joined to Him they are sons of God indeed.

It would be impossible to describe the wonderful glory of the dispensation of the fullness of times. In fear and trembling we will therefore mention a few of these more excellent glories and leave them for the Spirit of God.
to make real to our hearts. Paul only once mentioned the endless accomplishments of that age, including in one inspired statement universality of purpose so great that the imagination is staggered. Thus he writes: "Having made known unto us the mystery of His will, according to His good pleasure which He purposed in Himself: that in the dispensation of the fullness of times He might gather together in one all things Christ, both which are in heaven, and which are on earth even in Him." Eph. 1:9,10 And again, he says, "He must reign until He hath put all enemies under His feet," (1 Cor. 15:25), for He must put down all rule, and all authority, and all power, that there shall be no power or will in the universe but the will of God.

The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death. (1 Cor. 15:26) Death in all its forms shall be destroyed until it shall be said, "There is no more death!" This dreadful enemy has from the beginning devoured all things, eating the vitals of the young and swallowing up the old, destroying beasts and birds, plants and trees, until nothing can escape it. But He must reign until even death has been destroyed to exist no more anywhere in the universe. Then shall every creature in the universe in glad chorus sing, "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory? The sting of death is sin; and the strength of sin is the law. But thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ." 1 Cor. 15:55-57 "And there shall be no more curse; but the throne of God and of the Lamb shall be in it; and His servants shall serve Him:  And they shall see His face; and His name shall be in their foreheads. And there shall be no night there; and they need no candle, neither the light of the sun, for the Lord God giveth them light: and they shall reign forever and ever." Rev. 22:3-5

"... So abundant was God's grace, the grace which He, the possessor of all wisdom and understanding, lavished upon us when He made known to us the secret of His will. And this is in harmony with God's merciful purpose for the government of the world when the times are ripe for it - the purpose which He has cherished in His own mind of restoring the whole creation to find its one Head in Christ; yes, things in heaven and things on earth, to find their one Head in Him." Eph 1:8-10(Weymouth) "Of the increase of His government and peace there shall be no end."

When I consider the greatness of God's program, and the vastness of His eternal plan, my soul grows weary with the vain bickerings of earthbound, tradition-ridden men who never are able to deliver themselves from their own trivial calculations about heaven and hell, what we must eat, what we must drink, what we must put on, and as a consequence are not able to see who God is or grasp the wonder of His ways.

I like the words of Walt Whitman, entitled When I Heard the Learned Astronomer, in which he says:

When I heard the learned astronomer,
When the proofs and figures were ranged in columns before me,
When I was shown the charts and diagrams to add,
divide and measure them,
When I, sitting, heard the astronomer where he lectured with much applause in the lecture room,
How soon, unaccountable. I became tired and sick
Till, rising and gliding out, I wander'd off by myself
In the mystical, moist night air, and from time to time
Look'd up in perfect silence to the stars.

Ah, my brethren, that is the secret of it all. There may be truth in cold, hard facts about God's universe and the number of light years this star is from that. It is all very interesting and good and I love to know and hear about it, but there is nothing so refreshing as to wander into the breathless stillness of the night, there to lift one's wondering eyes in admiration of the handiwork of God, uncluttered and unspoiled by human calculations. There in the wonder of the starlit night, standing alone in the glory of God's presence, our hearts breathe out that holy inspiration, "When I consider Thy heavens, the work of Thy fingers, the sun and the moon which Thou hast ordained, what is man that Thou art mindful of him? or the son of man that Thou visitest him?" There the heavenly architect in accents rare begins to reveal to the inner heart that it was from those realms of glory we came, and our coming to this world was by reason of God's great intention, that we should be prepared to reign in Christ's image over all these beautiful works of God's hands. Did not the beloved Paul by inspiration say, "For unto the angels hath He not put in subjection the world to come, whereof we speak. But one in a certain place testified, saying, What is man, that Thou art mindful of him? or the son of man, that Thou visitest him. Thou madest him a little lower than the angels; Thou crownedst him with glory and honor, and didst set him over the works of Thy hands: Thou hast put all things in subjection under his feet. For in that He put all in subjection under him, he left nothing that is not put under him. But now we see not yet all things put under him (man). But we see Jesus, who was made a little lower than the angels for the suffering of death, crowned with glory and honor; that He by the grace of God should taste death for every man."

Heb. 2:5-9  Jesus is the first man to be in God's image, but He is not the last. What He is we also shall be; that is the purpose of His redemption. He was tempted in all points as we are. We are tempted in all points as He was. What He is by His grace we are becoming.

Perhaps in spirit we have stood with our adorable Christ as He in His rejection tasted death for every man. but have we stood with Him in His exaltation, where He sits far above principalities and powers and might and dominion and every name that is named, not only in this age but in the ages to come, highly exalted and given a name that is above every name, that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven and things in earth and things under the earth, and that every tongue should confess that He is Lord to the glory of God the Father? The purpose of the sufferings of the Christ of God is revealed by the glory of the things that follow His travail. In like manner the purpose of the suffering of all who are His is revealed in the words, "If we suffer, we shall also reign with Him." 2 Tim. 2:12

Christians everywhere, like Israel of old, stagger on in their blindness, reveling in the acts of God, but remaining perennial strangers to the wonder of His ways. Why is it, my brother, that thou canst not see that "God hath reconciled all things unto Himself? Why do thine ears remain closed to the voice of His Spirit as He speaks the message that "God will have all men to be saved and come to the knowledge of the truth"? Why can we not hear the mystery of His will, which He has made known unto us and which He hath purposed in Himself - that "in the dispensation of the fullness of times He might gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven, and which are on earth, even in Him?" Eph. 1:10  Weymouth has so beautifully portrayed the message of this scripture in these words: "This is in harmony with God's merciful purpose for the government of the world when the times are ripe for it - the purpose which He cherished in His own mind of restoring the whole creation to find its one Head in Christ; yes, things in heaven and things on earth, to find their one Head in Him." That which He hath purposed in Himself the unbelief of man can never undo.

When we were dead in trespasses and sins, He quickened us together with Christ (by grace are we saved). He raised us up together and made us sit in heavenly places in Christ Jesus. But to what purpose did He so marvelously demonstrate to us the wonder of His grace? There can be only one answer to that great question: "That in the ages to come He might shew the exceeding riches of His grace in His kingdom toward us through Jesus Christ," Compare Eph. 2:5-8. It was by grace that you were saved, my brother. Paul keeps reminding our believing hearts of that fact that He might the more clearly reveal to our tradition-ridden minds that, if it was through grace alone that we were saved, then we should not think it either impossible or strange that in the ages to come His grace shall freely reach all men and touch everything in the universe with the eternal life of Him from whom all things come, by whom all things exist, and in whom all things end.

Of the increase of His government and peace there shall be no end. There shall be no end to its increase in this age, no end to its increase in the age to come, and no end to its increase in the ages of the ages. His increase shall reach far beyond the measure of man's mind until planet after planet, star after star, galaxy after galaxy throughout the vast rock strewn sidereal shall taste the increase of His government and the glory of His restoration and no inharmonious chord is heard in all God's universe forever, but order, interdependence and unity, where Christ is all in all.

THE KINGDOM OF GOD AND THE KINGDOMS OF THIS WORLD

"And there were great voices in heaven, saying. The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdom of our Lord, and of His Christ; and He shall reign forever and ever. (Rev. 11:15)
Watchman, tell us of the night—
What its signs of promise are.
Traveler, o'er yon mountain height
See that glory beaming star?
Watchman, does its beauteous ray
Aught of hope or joy foretell?
Traveler, yes, it brings the day.
Promised day of Israel.

Watchman, tell us of the night;
Higher yet that star ascends.
Traveler, blessedness and light,
Peace and truth its course portends.
Watchman, will its beams alone
Gild the spot that gave them birth?
Traveler, ages are its own;
See, its glory fills the earth.

Watchman, tell us! Does the morning
Of fair Zion's glory dawn?
Have the signs that mark its coming
Yet upon thy pathway shone?
Traveler, yes. Arise! Look round thee!
ight is breaking in the skies!
Gird thy bridal robes around thee!
Morning dawns! Arise! Arise!

With the ever increasing and rapidly multiplying signs about us, all of which signal from one end of heaven to the other that the age is ending and the coming of the Lord draws nigh, I thought it both good and profitable to rehearse some of the many statements the Lord has made. These all, being fulfilled in order, now loudly proclaim that we have almost reached the end of man's six days of misrule and inequitable government. The kingdoms of this world are swiftly passing away, having fulfilled their purpose that they might make way for Christ's kingdom, which shall never pass away and shall never be destroyed.

The kingdoms of this world from the beginning of time were all designed in the wisdom of God to continue for a little space and then pass away and be no more. They were made to endure for a little moment during the long period of the world's night, after which they must be overthrown, each in his own order, until the King of kings shall come, whose dominion is an everlasting dominion and His kingdom that which shall not and cannot be destroyed.

A man must have a blind soul, indeed, if he cannot see that Daniel's prophecies concerning the kingdoms of this world have all been fulfilled to the letter with the exception of that final kingdom of living stone, which shall never be destroyed, but which will increase and expand until it has filled the whole earth. I am sure, from the unfolding revelation of scripture, that His kingdom will expand and fill the whole earth and finally the entire universe as well. The vastness of the heavens, teeming with rock strewn planets and stars, now keep their lonely night vigil, waiting like mother earth for the times of the restitution of all things, even the day when the Lord will restore and make the heavens new and the kingdom of God will spread from the earth into the vastness of the limitless universe.

The Old Testament abounds with living promises of a coming kingdom of heaven that will displace all the kingdoms of the world and fill the earth with its magnificent glory.

Eye hath not seen it, my gentle boy;
Ear hath not heard its deep songs of joy.
Dreams cannot picture a world so fair;
Sorrow and death may not enter there.

It has always been a conundrum to me to find that a truth so prominently set forth in Holy Scripture should be so seldom preached in our day and then mentioned as a sort of inconsequential misnomer. The light, frivolous orations we hear from the pulpits seldom contain any vital message - certainly no kingdom message. The Bible all too often is opened as a matter of form, a text is read, and a few words are spoken to tickle the ears of the hearers, but as for any real searching out of kingdom truth, there is practically none.

The intention of a world wide kingdom was in the omniscient mind of the omnipotent Lord from the very beginning. Adam, created and made in the image of God, was given dominion over the whole earth. He was to have dominion over the fish of the sea, the fowls of the air, and every living thing that moved upon the face of the earth. It is clear also that this dominion was not to be given to Adam alone, but to all his posterity. Therefore the plural word is used, "Let them have dominion." Gen. 1:26

It must always be remembered that the immutable God never changes or alters His purposes. His intentions in the beginning are His intentions now and forever. If for a small moment some event, such as man's transgression, seems to have delayed or thwarted His intention, we must never forget that omniscient wisdom foresaw that event - nay, not only foresaw it, but purposed and planned it. The childish doctrine, born of ignorance and misunderstanding, contending that Adam's transgression was an unforeseen tragedy that ruined God's plan, should be rejected by all as inconsistent with the Father, who is perfect in wisdom, full of understanding, omnipotent in power, omnipresent in being, and above all else immutable in purpose. When the apostle Paul by inspiration spoke of the transgression and fall of man, he stated the facts as they really were when he said, "The creature was made subject to vanity, not willingly, but by reason of Him (God) who hath subjected the same in hope." Rom. 8:2. The hope, of course, was that Adamic man, advancing into sonship and the image of God through the experimental knowledge of good and evil, should deliver the entire creation from the bondage of corruption, sin and death into the glorious freedom of the sons of God. It was a marvelous purpose divinely executed, infinite in wisdom and full of understanding.

There were no mistakes made in Eden. Every detail was in harmony with a master plan for the working out of an eternal purpose. I may be wrong, but I think I discern a measure of satisfaction in the words of the Omniscient immediately following the transgression. "Behold, the man is become as one of us to know good and evil." Gen. 3:22. Thousands of years later Paul, his spirit basking in holy unction, uttered these inspired words: "Strong meat belongeth to them that are of full age, even those who by reason of use have their senses exercised to discern both good and evil." Heb. 5:14 It is not God's intention that we should know merely the difference between good and evil. It is God's determination that we should know both good and evil. And we, having been delivered from evil by the life blood of Jesus Christ, shall never again fall there into. Because of our experimental knowledge of the power of evil, understanding will enlighten our minds for eternity. Experience is always the only true teacher.

Having established that nothing comes upon the Omniscient unawares, but all purposes are planned by Him, let us also remember that the kingdoms of this world, weak and evil as they have always been, were the resolution and design of the Father. He it is who raises up mighty kings and kingdoms and disposes of them again when their purpose is fulfilled. He has power to raise up men like Daniel and Joseph and He has power to exalt the basest of men. Dan. 4:17. "The powers that be are ordained of God." Rom. 13:1 Our Lord Jesus Christ, being aware that the Empire of the Caesars was raised up by God, confounded His adversaries by saying, "Render to Caesar the things that are Caesar's," and again, though He owed no taxes for the existing government, He said, "Lest we offend, this give for thee and Me."

It is certain that all of us chafe betimes under the misrule of bad government so prevalent in the world. We despise the evil men and seducers that everywhere wax worse and worse. We hate the lawlessness and corruption in high places, but all unknown to us the darkness of injustice, inequity and unrighteousness is teaching us something of justice, equity and righteousness. If we are not learning our lessons, then woe be to us, for only those who are taught by these evils will be able to reign in equity and unsullied goodness in the kingdom of righteousness to come. The man who has suffered evil and in its place returns good is of God. He who has suffered evil and returns evil for evil is a corrupt and fallen man, but he who returns evil for good is of the devil.

Concerning man's coming glory and dominion over the earth David, rejoicing in heart, wrote, "Thou hast made him a little lower than the angels, and hast crowned him with glory and honor. Thou madest him to have dominion over the works of Thy hands; Thou hast put all things under his feet." Psa. 8:5, 6 Paul, adding even greater force and explanation to David's statement, wrote, "For unto the angels hath He not put in subjection the world to come, whereof we speak. But one in a certain place testified, saying, What is man, that Thou art mindful of him? or the son of man that Thou visitest him? Thou madest him a little lower than the angels; Thou crownedst him with glory and honor, and didst set him over the works of Thy hands: Thou hast put all things in subjection under his feet. For in that He puts all things in subjection under him, He left nothing that is not put under him. But now (at present) we see not yet all things put under him. But we see Jesus, who was made a little lower than the angels for the suffering of death, crowned with glory and honor; that He by the grace of God should taste death for every man. For it became Him, for whom are all things, and by whom are all things, in bringing many sons unto glory, to make the captain of their salvation perfect through sufferings." Heb. 2:5-10. These remarkable passages not only make plain God's purpose for man — that is, that he might be given dominion over all things — but they also make very clear why it was that man must first suffer the humiliation of the fall and come under the tyrannical kingdoms and dominions of this present evil world. Only by suffering injustice will he learn justice. Only by enduring inequity will he learn equity. Only by feeling the pains of unrighteousness will he learn righteousness.

If we are to have a kingdom, first there must be a king. Then there must be a domain and finally there must be laws. Thus Eden was earth's first manifestation of the kingdom of God. God was the king. Eden was the domain. The law was, "In the day thou eatest thereof, thou shall surely die." The moment the law was broken, Adam himself was put away and condemned to earn his bread by the sweat of his face and, Adam being driven out from his kingdom, the kingdoms of this world and the six days of man's carnal and unrighteous rule began.

When Jesus Christ died and rose again, He redeemed man that in his regenerate state and renewed mind he might once again inherit the promise originally given to him: "Let Us give them dominion." The title deed and security to this dominion is now held by our Lord Jesus Christ, who during all this age of grace has been preparing sons in His likeness that they might be given rulership in His kingdom in the age directly following the age of grace. Thus it was that Daniel beheld the kingdoms of this world endure until "the Ancient of days came, and judgment was given to the saints of the most High; and the time came when the saints possessed the kingdom." Dan. 7:22. Again, following the destruction of the kingdoms of this world, Daniel was told that "the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey Him." Dan. 7:27 At the sounding of the seventh and last trumpet (Rev. 11:15), there appears to be a very great stir in the leavens as great voices sound forth, saying, "The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdom of our Lord, and of His Christ: and He shall reign forever and ever."

The book of Daniel is a most remarkable book. Its pages give an excellent record of secular history and in so doing gives an exact prophetic forecast of the existence and progress of the kingdoms of this world as they were to arise in their order. The singular thing about the first vision of the book of Daniel is that it came in a dream to Nebuchadnezzar and was later amid great ceremony interpreted by Daniel the prophet. The second vision (Dan. 7), which is an enlargement of the first, was entrusted to Daniel in the reign of Belshazzar.

It would be well here for us to take particular notice of the events as they are recorded in Daniel chapter two. Nebuchadnezzar had dreamed a strange dream that greatly troubled his spirit. Being unable to interpret the dream himself, he called in all the wise men of Babylon to interpret the dream for him. (Dan. 2:2-13) Nebuchadnezzar insisted he had forgotten the dream and that it was gone from him. This unlikely story may have been true or it may not have been, but we may be sure the king was not unaware of the trickery of Chaldeans and astrologers. Thus to make certain these self-styled wise men were not deceiving him, he demanded that they both tell him the dream and give the interpretation of it. Otherwise they would be destroyed and their houses made a dung hill. Whether Nebuchadnezzar had forgotten the dream or was only pretending to have done so matters little. The truth is that his irrational demand was indeed a foolproof way of avoiding deception.

After the edict was given that the wise men should be destroyed, Daniel went to Arioch, who had been assigned the task of execution, and asked for a stay. He then required of the king that he would "give him time" and he would give him the interpretation. Daniel then went to his three friends, Hananiah, Mishael, and Azariah, who with Daniel took the matter to God in prayer. The secret was then made known to Daniel, who went to the king and expounded both the dream and the interpretation to him. Surely this is a remarkable affair. The Lord must be teaching us something very special, for here we have a triple confirmation of a very important prophetic vision. First the vision was given to Nebuchadnezzar, who straightway avowed that he had forgotten it. Second the same vision was given to Daniel, and third, the dream, after being expounded to Nebuchadnezzar, was recognized by the king as being the exact representation of all that he had seen. I know of no other place in scripture where such a remarkable thing occurred. Joseph interpreted dreams after being told the dream, but only here do we find a man both restating and interpreting a vision that was received and forgotten by another. This illuminating vision was of exceptional importance because it forecast the outline and succession of the kingdoms of this world from Daniel's day right down to the millennial day when the God of heaven will set up a universal kingdom which will break in pieces and devour all other kingdoms that were before it.

The vision seen by both Nebuchadnezzar and Daniel was as follows: "Thou, O king, sawest, and behold a great image. This great image, whose brightness was excellent, stood before thee; and the form thereof was terrible. This image's head was of gold, his breast and arms of silver, his belly and thighs of brass, his legs of iron, his feet part of iron and part of clay. Thou sawest till that a stone was cut out without hands, which smote the image upon his feet that were of iron and clay, and brake them to pieces. Then was the iron, the clay, the brass, the silver, and the gold, broken to pieces together, and became like the chaff of the summer threshing floors; and the wind carried them away, that place was found for them: and the stone that smote the image became a great mountain, and filled the whole earth." Dan. 1:31-35

The interpretation of this vision was given by Daniel. (Dan. 2:36-45) In his interpretation he shows that four great world empires would arise in succession. Secular history has proved these to be Babylon, Medo-Persia, Greece and Rome, and history will also eventually prove that the final kingdom, the stone cut out without hands, is the kingdom of God, for which all creation in every age has patiently groaned. With this in mind, Daniel, after having described the succession of the kingdoms of this world, described with inspired glory the glory of that coming reign which will never be destroyed. "And in the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed; and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand forever. Forasmuch as thou sawest that the stone was cut out of the mountain without hands, and that it brake in pieces the iron, the brass, the clay, the silver, and the gold; the great God hath made known to the king what shall come to pass hereafter: and the dream is certain and the interpretation thereof sure." Dan. 2:44-45

It should not be necessary here to rehearse in detail the conquests of these four great world empires lest we be guilty of tediously repeating many things that are already well known to most readers. There are, however, a few worthy considerations that are seldom, if ever, mentioned. First, the vision must be considered as one vision. The whole vision is Babylon, past, present and future. Nebuchadnezzar, the king of Babylon, was the golden head of the entire Babylon system from beginning to end. It is most important that we understand that Babylon's golden head is the supreme authority of every empire and kingdom in all times, dispensations and ages with the exception of that final age when Christ, the living stone, becomes head. The vision is one vision and the image is one image. The empire of Medo-Persia represented by silver, the empire of Greece represented by brass, the empire of Rome represented by iron and the iron and clay representing a mixture of democracies, state churches, dictatorships, emperors and kingdoms are all under one head. It is Babylon. It is a head of gold. Gold ruled then as it does now. As the love of money is the root of all evil, so the rise and fall of empires is in hope of worldly gain in perfect deference to Babylon's head of gold.

Not only has this been true of the political systems of the world, but it is equally true of the ecclesiastical system as well. It was true when Tetzel filled the Pope's coffers with the indulgences of the poor and ignorant... people and it is true of the church of the twentieth century. It is true of those ambitious pastors and radio preachers who capitalize on every opportunity to make their appeals for more and more gold to carry on their worldly schemes to make more and more proselytes. The inspired words of Revelation are literally true of the entire ecclesiastical system. "Thou sayest, I am rich and increased with goods, and have need of nothing; and knowest not that thou art wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked." Rev. 3:17 Long ago the Pope of Rome remarked thus to Thomas Aquinas, "Well, Thomas, the church can no longer say, 'Silver and gold have I none.' " To this Aquinas adroitly replied, "And neither can it say, 'Rise up and walk.' "

All the kingdoms of this present world, whether they be under the rule of emperors, kings, dictators or democracies, are ruled by the golden head of Babylon. The Greek, the Medo-Persian, the Roman empire, together with all the offshoots of Rome that have persisted through the centuries, consisting of feet and toes of iron and clay; are all part of the great image, of which Babylon is the head. Babylon means confusion. Thus it has been and thus it will always be that wherever empires or kingdoms or church systems are dependent upon gold for their very existence they must all be classed as Babylon. All the unrest in the world at the present time is caused by man's lust for gold. The world is full of plenty, but all manner of shortages are connived that more and more gold may be added to the already bulging fortunes of those who presently possess so much that ten thousand lifetimes could not exhaust their wealth. How different was the attitude of Paul, who taught, "Having food and raiment, let us be content."

In our day the golden head of Babylon is even more prominent than it was in the days of Nebuchadnezzar, but the words of James are soon to be fulfilled: "Go to now, ye rich men, weep and howl for your miseries that shall come upon you. Your riches are corrupted, and your garments are moth eaten. Your gold and silver is cankered; and the rust of them shall be a witness against you, and shall eat your flesh as it were fire. Ye have heaped treasure together for the last days ... Ye have lived in pleasure on the earth, and been wanton; ye have nourished your hearts, as in a day of slaughter. Ye have condemned and killed the just; and he doth not resist you." James 5:13, 5, 6 The hour is at hand when the kingdom of God will make dust of all former kingdoms and righteousness, equity and truth will fill the whole earth.

It must be noted that this great vision does not end with the fall of Rome as an empire, here represented as legs of iron (a possible allusion to the eastern and western sections of the Roman domain), but it continues on down to the feet and the toes, which are described as being part iron and part clay. The feet and the toes are also a definite part of Rome and they continue until they are destroyed by the stone cut from the mountain without hands. My understanding of great spiritual matters is often woefully small; nevertheless it is my opinion that the feet and toes of the image represent Rome as its power is continued under the papacy, for it is a fact that for a thousand years ecclesiastical Rome exercised as much power over Europe as did the pagan Caesars. In the iron and clay of the feet and toes we have the nominal, almost pagan, church of Rome wedded to the state or the kingdoms of this world. Thus Daniel says, "They shall mingle themselves with the seed of men; but they shall not cleave one to another, even as iron is not mixed with clay." Dan. 2:43 This great evil had its beginning about 316 A.D. when Christianity became the state religion of Rome and the church was treated to the obnoxious sight of Roman emperors presiding over church councils. Constantine made munificent grants to churches and even exercised the authority of the law in the propagation of Christianity. To his administration of state and civil affairs was added the control and management of the church. Instead of rebuking the emperor for his meddling, they welcomed him as the Bishop of bishops. Thus Christianity had embraced the protection of a semi-heathen state, and Christianity had suffered its greatest possible degradation in the patronage of a worldly potentate. Thus began the period of the iron mingled with clay and it continues to this day.

It is generally known by all informed persons that for centuries after the fall of the Roman Empire the Roman popes ruled over the kings of Europe, setting up what kings they would and putting down whom they would, casting into prison and putting to death all who opposed them, and exalting whom they would. This evil condition continues with variations to this day. It is an exasperating but undeniable fact that we in our day see the President of Protestant United States, the Prime Minister of Canada, the heads of European governments, even high authorities from communist Russia, and saddest of all, the Queen of England, making their journey to Rome to visit and receive the blessing of the Roman pope. Thank God, the hour is near when the little stone will smite the feet of the image and it will become as dust and be no more.
The vision of the four beasts, described in Daniel, chapter 7, is an enlargement on the vision of the image. You will notice that, while the first three beasts are likened to a lion, a bear, and a leopard, the fourth is not likened to any beast, but described thus: "Behold a fourth beast, dreadful and terrible, and strong exceedingly; and it had great iron teeth: it devoured and brake in pieces, and stamped the residue with the feet of it: and it was diverse from all the beasts that were before it: and it had ten horns." Dan. 7:7 The ten horns would represent the nations over which Rome held power, and among them rose up a little horn, which had eyes like the eyes of a man, and a mouth speaking great things. Dan. 7:8. This is undoubtedly papal Rome. Martin Luther was not wrong when he declared the Pope, or little horn, to be antichrist. Many great and blasphemous things have been spoken by the mouth of this "little horn". Among the blasphemous assertions of this little horn was the claim that the Pope was equal to God and the representative of Christ on earth. Please compare this statement with 2 Thess. 2:3,4. Vatican City, a sovereign state of one hundred eight point seven acres and a population of one thousand, includes the Vatican and St. Peter's Cathedral. Surely this tiny state, exercising authority that has engulfed a large portion of the world, is rightly described as a "little horn" whose mouth speaks great things.

The ancient kingdom of Israel is the only kingdom since the fall of Adam that God recognized as being His kingdom. All others are the kingdoms of this world, and except for the over-ruling authority of God, the kingdoms of this world are controlled by the prince of this world. See Luke 4:5-7. But their time is fixed and limited and will end at the time appointed by the Father. Evil as these kingdoms are and have been, they are permitted by God. As Paul has said, "The powers that be are ordained of God." Rom. 13:1 Imperfection, inequity, mis-rule and the exceeding sinfulness of sin are part of the lesson man must suffer and learn as he comes to the knowledge of good and evil. Man's inability to establish a perfect government is due to his own weakness and carnality. No matter how good and noble his intentions may be he will always succumb to the dreadful authority of Babylon's head of gold.

Satan, taking advantage of man's ignorance of the knowledge of good and evil, has always succeeded in making good appear to be evil and evil appear to be good. He has misrepresented and maligne d God's glorious mind and character and blinded men completely to His eternal purpose. Our fallen, broken, and blinded creation has for centuries plodded its weary way, ever trying by human effort to attain something great, but always falling helplessly and painfully from the cliff it was trying to scale. In man's hope for a better day even his best endeavors have proved fruitless, and the golden age of which he dreamed is farther away now than ever it was. The groaning creation appears to be generally unaware that the stone Daniel saw cut from the mountain without hands is soon to make a sudden end of all the kingdoms of this world. Smitten by the smiting stone, they will become as the dust of the summer threshing floor and the wind, which represents the Spirit of God, will disperse and drive them all away. Then will that stone, which is Christ, together with the en-Christed, fill the whole earth with His glory and His reign; for thus the vision declares, "In the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed: and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand forever." (Dan. 2:44,45) See also Dan. 7:9-14.

No book in the entire Bible sheds more light on the progress of the kingdoms of this world than does the book of Daniel. Gradually the mysteries surrounding the prophecies begin to clear up as we see them being fulfilled. Divine wisdom and understanding have purposely concealed truth under its mysterious veils of types and shadows, but time unfolds the mysteries and, as the shadows flee away, we find ourselves beholding face to face the glory of revelation. The kingdoms of this world that in God's purpose were given their transient power over the earth are passing swiftly away. We have reached the hour in time when the whole system of Babylon is disintegrating. Even the blindest man can see the truth of this. The feet of the image, composed of iron mingled with miry clay, are crumbling rapidly. Their final collapse and destruction awaits only a slight tap on the clay feet and the entire Babylon structure will crash and crumble and become as the fine dust of the summer threshing floor, and it shall be no more forever. "Come out of her, My people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues," for strong is the Lord who judges her!

The account of the final collapse of Babylon or the kingdoms of this world is distinctly portrayed in Revelation, chapter 18. In it we vividly behold the utter corruption of the entire religio-political system. The call of God to His saints is heard, bidding them to separate themselves from it and all that pertains to it. The weeping and wailing of the people who have made themselves rich through the abundance of her delicacies is foremost and the final rejoicing of the saints is heard, praising God that at last an enemy of God and mistress of all confusion and iniquity has been thoroughly and eternally overthrown.

"After these things I saw another angel come down from heaven, having great power; and the earth was lightened with his glory. And he cried mightily with a strong voice, saying, Babylon the great is fallen, is fallen and is become the habitation of devils, and the hold of every foul spirit, and a cage of every unclean and hateful bird. For all nations have drunk of the wine of the wrath of her fornication, and the kings of the earth have committed fornication with her, and the merchants of the earth are waxed rich through the abundance of her delicacies. And I heard another voice from heaven, saying, Come out of her. My people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues. For her sins have reached unto heaven, and God hath remembered her iniquities. Reward her even as she rewarded you, and double unto her double according to her works: in the cup which she hath filled fill to her double. How much she hath glorified herself, and lived deliciously, so much torment and sorrow give her: for she saith in her heart, I sit a queen, and am no widow, and shall see no sorrow. Therefore shall her plagues come in one day, death, and mourning, and famine; and she shall be utterly burned with fire: for strong is the Lord God who judgeth her. And the kings of the earth, who have committed fornication and lived deliciously with her, shall bewail and lament for her, when they shall see the smoke of her burning, standing afar off for the fear of her torment, saying, alas, alas, that great city Babylon, that mighty city! for in one hour is thy judgment come! And the merchants of the earth shall weep and mourn over her; for no man buyeth their merchandise any more: the merchandise of gold, and silver, and precious stones, and of pearls, and fine linen, and purple, and silk, and scarlet, and all thine wood, and all manner vessels of ivory, and all manner vessels of most precious wood, and of brass, and iron, and marble, and cinnamon, and odors, and ointments, and frankincense, and wine, and oil, and fine flour, and wheat, and beasts, and sheep, and horses, and chariots, and slaves, and souls of men.

"And the fruits that thy soul lusted after are departed from thee, and all things which were dainty and goodly are departed from thee, and thou shalt find them no more at all. The merchants of these things, which were made rich by her, shall stand afar off for the fear of her torment, weeping and wailing and saying, Alas, alas, that great city, wherein we were made rich all that had ships in the sea by reason of her costliness! For in one hour is she made desolate.

"Rejoice over her, thou heaven, and ye holy apostles and prophets, for God hath avenged you on her. And a mighty angel took up a stone like a great millstone, and cast it into the sea, saying, Thus with violence shall that great city Babylon be thrown down, and shall be found no more at all. And the voice of harpers, and musicians, and of pipers, and trumpeters, shall be heard no more at all in thee; and no craftsman, of whatsoever craft he be, shall be found any more in thee; and the sound of a millstone shall be heard no more at all in thee; and the light of a candle shall shine no more at all in thee: for thy merchants were the great men of the earth; for thy sorceries were all nations deceived. And in her was found the blood of prophets, and of saints, and of all that were slain upon the earth." Rev. 18

Thus with violence end the kingdoms of this world and great Mystery Babylon, that golden head, which for centuries has ruled all nations, bringing under her dominion all religious systems, binding the professing church with the chains of tradition and bringing into slavish subjection all who are unaware of her whoredoms. She is the mystery of iniquity. She is the mystery of lawlessness. She is the mystery of confusion. She is the author of every war and she is the author of every religious denomination and the root cause of every division. She is horrible darkness and unspeakable confusion.

My heart's desire and prayer to God is that He will give the Spirit of understanding to all who read these lines. For twenty years I have prayed that God would open the eyes of His saints to see by the Spirit what Babylon really is. Times without number I have sought to show God's dear people the cunning mystery of ecclesiastical Babylon, warning continually of the danger of remaining in her fold. Oh that God's people would awaken and obey the Father's call, "Come out of her, My people," that God may be their Father and they may be His sons and daughters. I solemnly warn and admonish the people of God that it is not possible to attain to sonship or a life that is controlled by the Spirit as long as their lives are under the influence of this Satanic system, which is doomed to such utter and complete destruction. Not only are the kingdoms of the world doomed to desolation, but the whole church system, identified as it is with the world system, is also doomed to irreparable dissolution and ruin. If you obey God and come out of it, you will be spared her woes; but if you remain in it, you will be condemned with it. For what other reason does the Lord call to His people, saying, "Come out of her, My people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues?"

In Revelation, chapter 17, we have the shameful picture of a drunken harlot seated upon a scarlet colored beast. One of the seven angels talked with John, saying, "Come hither; I will shew into thee the judgment of the great whore that sitteth upon many waters: with whom the kings of the earth have committed fornication. So he carried me away in the spirit into the wilderness: and I saw a woman sit upon a scarlet colored beast, full of the names of blasphemy, having seven heads and ten horns. And the woman was arrayed in purple and scarlet color, and decked with gold, and precious stones, and pearls, having a golden cup in her hand full of abominations and filthiness of her fornication: and upon her forehead was a name written, Mystery, Babylon the Great, the mother of harlots and abominations of the earth. And I saw the woman drunken with the blood of the saints, and with the blood of the martyrs of Jesus: And when I saw her, I wondered with great admiration."

The representation here depicted is that of the entire body of the organized church of our day and all preceding days, whether Greek, Roman, or Protestant. In Bible symbolism God's people have always been represented as a woman. Israel was also represented as a woman. For examples of this we may compare Ezekiel, chapter 6, and Ephesians 5:22-32. The woman of Revelation is seen riding a beast. A beast is the symbol of world power as we have already seen from Daniel, chapter 7. What else, then, can a woman, seated on a beast, symbolize but a church supported and carried by world powers? Is not this the true picture of every organized, state church in the world, whether Roman Catholic, Greek Orthodox, or Protestant? And is the same thing not largely true among all denominations? Are they not all "incorporated" and their ministers registered with the government of the world? Even if they are not, their lives are still tied to the beast system, which controls their understanding, their beliefs and their lives. We must be blind, indeed, if we cannot see that the whole church system is apostate and that the church as an outward, visible human system is a wretched failure. She is Babylon, the mother of harlots and abominations of the earth. God has an elect people on the earth. He always has had; they are like the seven thousand elect saints who in the days of Elijah had not bowed the knee to Baal. Even so the elect today do not bow the knee to Babylon.

It is well said that this Babylon woman is drunken with the blood of the saints. The blood of saints is the life of saints. She has sapped and sucked their spiritual life away and left them in abject poverty. Have you never wondered why it is your preacher seldom, if ever, tells you anything that you have not already heard a hundred times or more? He may use different texts, but always the same old sermons. Well, it is because the harlot system has sapped away his spiritual life and the poor fellow has nothing to offer. This evil harlot in her past has not only become intoxicated with the blood of the saints, but she has also martyred millions in the past and in many countries she martyrs them still, some by death and others by excommunication and disgrace. I am not wrong, but speak forth words of truth and soberness, when I tell you that the church system of the twentieth century, even as in times past, is part of the world system and is one with the kingdoms of this world. Here is the iron mingled with the clay.

The great final act in the drama of Nebuchadnezzar's vision was seen to be a stone cut from the mountain without hands, which smote the image of this world's systems. It smote the image, not on the golden head nor on its silver shoulders, its brazen thighs nor its iron legs, but on the rotten, eroding feet of iron and clay. A building is no better than its foundation even if its turret is pure gold. The towering image of the political and ecclesiastical kingdoms of this world is standing on unsubstantial, eroding feet. It is not founded on a rock, but on a rope of sand, a house of cards, that will tremble and break when the test comes. They have mingled themselves with the seed of men. It is a union that cannot abide and was never intended to last. Therefore in the great vision Daniel explained, "Thou sawest till that a stone was cut without hands, which smote the image upon his feet that were of iron and clay, and brake them to pieces. Then was the iron, the clay, the brass, silver, and the gold, broken to pieces together, and became like the chaff of the summer threshing floors; and the wind carried them away, that no place was found for them: and the stone that smote the image became a great mountain, and filled the whole earth." Dan. 2:34, 35 Thus with violence shall Babylon be thrown down and come to its end. The whole Babylon system will end whether it be political or ecclesiastical. Never will it exist again. Therefore, “Come out of her, My people, that ye receive not of her plagues."

The mighty Medes their battle flags unfurled
To find a place of glory in the sun,
And proudly trampled 'neath their marching feet
The crumpled might of once great Babylon!
The tidal wave of Greece rolled out the west
And, as the waters of its rage recede,
It carried back with fate's relentlessness
The smashed and broken empire of the Mede. 'Til by the side of Tiber's winding banks
A sleepy giant girded for the fray.
And Caesars laughed, and scoffed at heaven's Christ,
While legions thundered down the Appian Way!
And Roman eagles screamed defiantly
And tore to shreds the vaunted might of Greece,
Then turned again with blood drenched hands to war Against disciples of the Prince of Peace.
The heavens trembled; and the ocean tide
Of human waves rolled once again in rage.
And buried in the shifting sands of time
The proudest, mightiest empire of the age.
So perished Rome; her forum voices stilled;
She met her doom in God's appointed hour.
Oh, Christ, can man distort Thy purposes
And take to self Thy glory and Thy power?
And so throughout the march of ages past
The tide of empire flows — then ebbs away.
The pomp and grandeur of its yesteryear
Are buried in its shifting sands today.
But strong and firm throughout the passing years
I see a rock that stands out on the shore,
A Rock of ages, cleft for you and me;
A Rock that will endure for evermore!
Oh, Christ, our life, our strength, our Rock divine.
Before Thy might the oceans stand in awe.
No decrease Thine; for this increasing stone
Was chiseled from the mountain Daniel saw.
The raging, tumbling seas of time may roll
'Til earth's proud empires crumble and decay
And Thou alone shall triumph, Prince of Peace,
When all the storms of life have rolled away.

THE KINGDOM OF GOD

At the time of the complete destruction of the kingdoms of this world the long awaited kingdom of God will be set up and established in the entire earth. In the vision we have been discussing we are given a brief but dramatic description of the setting up of the kingdom of God. Thus Daniel's interpretation continues: "And in the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom which shall never be destroyed: and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand forever." Dan. 2:44
Now the stone cut from the mountain without hands, that smote the feet of the image, is Christ. He is the stone that the builders rejected. The builders of the nations and the builders of the kingdoms of this earth have rejected Christ's headship, and to an incredible degree He has been rejected of the church system as well. Do we not find Him 'outside' the church of Laodicea? Do we not hear Him knocking and saying, "If any man hear My voice and open the door, I will come in to him"? He is, indeed, the stone that has been set at naught by all the builders of all time, and He is the stone which in the end of this age will destroy all the kingdoms and systems of this world.

It will not be our place to elaborate now, but all true saints must be aware of this sacred secret - that God's blessed Christ must include both the Head and the body, Jesus Christ the Head and all the sons of God His body. This Christ in completeness is the stone, which will smite the feet of the dark kingdoms of this world, and the saints will take the kingdom and reign with Christ forever and ever. (Dan. 7:22)

The vision of the great image in Daniel, chapter 2, and the vision of the four beasts of Daniel, chapter 7, complement each other. The latter is a further explanation of the former. In both of these visions Daniel saw the casting down of the kingdoms of this world and the setting up of the kingdom of God. Therefore we have these words in Dan. 7:9: "I beheld till the thrones were cast down, and the Ancient of days did sit, whose garment was white as snow, and the hair of His head was like the pure wool: His throne was like the fiery flame, and His wheels as burning fire. A fiery stream issued and came forth from before Him; thousand thousands ministered unto Him, and ten thousand times ten thousand stood before Him: the judgment was set, and the books were opened." Then again the vision continues: "I saw in the night visions, and behold, one like the Son of man (compare Rev. 1:3) came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the Ancient of days, and they brought Him near before Him. And there was given Him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages, should serve Him: His dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and His kingdom that which shall not be destroyed." Dan. 7:13, 14

"And the kingdom, the dominion, and the greatness of the kingdoms under the whole heavens shall he given to the people of the saints of the most High; their kingdom shall be an everlasting kingdom and all dominions shall serve and obey them. This was the end of the matter. As for me, Daniel, my thoughts greatly upset me and my face changed color; but I kept the matter in my mind." Dan. 7:27, 28 (Goodspeed)

"I, John, who also am your brother and companion in tribulation and in the kingdom and patience of Jesus Christ, was in the isle that is called Patmos for the word of God and for the testimony of Jesus Christ. I was in the Spirit on the Lord's day, and heard behind me a great voice, as of a trumpet, saying, I am Alpha and Omega, the first and the last:. And I turned to see the voice that spake with me. And being turned, I saw seven golden candlesticks; and in the midst of the seven candlesticks one like unto the Son of man, clothed with a garment down to the foot, and girt about the paps with a golden girdle. His head and His hairs were white like wool, as white as snow; and His eyes were as a flame of fire; and His feet like unto fine brass, as if they burned in a furnace; and His voice as the sound of many waters. And he had in his right hand seven stars; and out of His mouth went a sharp two-edged sword: and His countenance was as the sun shineth in his strength. And when I saw Him, I fell at His feet as dead. And He laid His right hand upon me, saying unto me. Fear not; I am the first and the last: I am He that liveth and was dead; and, behold, I am alive for evermore. Amen; and have the keys of hell and of death." Rev. 1:9-18

"And after these things I heard a great voice of much people in heaven, saying, Alleluia; Salvation, and glory, and honor, and power, unto the Lord our God: For true and righteous are His judgments: for He hath judged the great whore, which did corrupt the earth with her fornication, and hath avenged the blood of His servants at her hands. And again they said, Alleluia. And her smoke rose up for ever and ever." Rev. 19:1-3

"And I saw heaven opened, and behold a white horse; and He that sat upon him was called Faithful and True, and in righteousness He doth judge and make war. His eyes were as a flame of fire, and on His head were many crowns; and He had a name written, that no man knew, but He himself. And He was clothed in a vesture dipped in blood: and His name is called The Word of God. And the armies, which were in heaven, followed Him upon white horses, clothed in fine linen, white and clean. And out of His mouth goeth a sharp sword, that with it
He should smite the nations: and He shall rule them with a rod of iron: and he treadeth the winepress of the fierceness and wrath of Almighty God. And He hath on His vesture and on His thigh a name written, King of Kings, and Lord of Lords." Rev. 19:11-16

"And I saw the beast, and the kings of the earth, and their armies, gathered together to make war against Him that sat on the horse, and against His army. And the beast was taken, and with him the false prophet that wrought miracles before him, with which he deceived them that had received the mark of the beast, and them that worshipped his image. These both were cast alive into a lake of fire burning with brimstone." Rev. 19:19, 20

"And I saw in the night visions, and, behold, one like the Son of man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the Ancient of days, and they brought Him near before Him. And there was given Him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages should serve Him: His dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and His kingdom that which shall not be destroyed. . . And the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey Him." Dan. 7:13, 14, 27 Note: The one like the Son of man is the body of Christ, the sons of God. The Ancient of days is Jesus Christ, the Head.

"And I saw an angel come down from heaven, having the key of the bottomless pit and a great chain in his hand. And he laid hold on the dragon, that old serpent, which is the Devil, and Satan, and bound him a thousand years, and cast him into the bottomless pit, and shut him up, and set a seal upon him, that he should deceive the nations no more, till the thousand years should be fulfilled: and after that he must be loosed a little season. And I saw thrones, and they that sat upon them, and judgment was given unto them: (the saints of the most High): and I saw the souls of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the word of God, and which had not worshipped the beast, neither his image, neither had received his mark upon their foreheads, or in their hands; and they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years. Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection: on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with Him a thousand years." Rev. 20:1-6

"I am the vine and ye are the branches," saith the Lord. John 15:5 "And there shall come forth a rod out of the stem of Jesse, and a Branch shall grow out of his roots: And the Spirit of the Lord shall rest upon Him, the spirit of wisdom and understanding, the spirit of counsel and might, the spirit of knowledge and the fear of the. Lord; and shall make Him of quick understanding in the fear of the Lord: and He shall not judge after the sight of His eyes, neither reprove after the hearing of His ears: But with righteousness shall He judge the poor, and reprove with equity the meek of the earth: and He shall smite the earth with the rod of His mouth, and with the breath of His lips shall He slay the wicked. And righteousness shall be the girdle of His loins, and faithfulness the girdle of His reins. The wolf also shall dwell with the lamb, and the leopard shall lie down with the kid; and the calf and the young lion and the falling together; and a little child shall lead them. And the cow and the bear shall feed; their young ones shall lie down together: and the lion shall eat straw like the ox. And the suckling child shall play on the hole of the asp, and the weaned child shall put his hand on the cockatrice' den. They shall not hurt nor destroy in all My holy mountain: for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea." Isa. 11:1-9

"Of the increase of His government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon His kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth even for ever. The zeal of the Lord of hosts will perform this." Isa. 9:7

"And it shall come to pass in that day, that the Lord shall punish the host of the high ones that are on high, and the kings of the earth upon the earth. And they shall be gathered together, as prisoners are gathered together in the pit, and shall be shut up in the prison, and after many days shall they be visited. Then the moon shall be confounded, and the sun ashamed, when the Lord of hosts shall reign in mount Zion, and in Jerusalem, and before His ancients gloriously." Isa. 24:21-23

"Therefore shall the strong people glorify Thee, the city of the terrible nations shall fear Thee. For Thou hast been a strength to the poor, a strength to the needy in his distress, a refuge from the storm, a shadow from the heat, when the blast of the terrible ones is as a storm against the wall. Thou shall bring down the noise of strangers, as the heat in a dry place; even the heat with the shadow of a cloud: the branch of the terrible ones shall be brought low. And in this mountain shall the Lord of hosts make unto all people a feast of fat things, a feast of wines on the lees, of fat things full of marrow, of wines on the lees well refined. And He will destroy in this mountain the face of the covering cast over all people, and the veil that is spread over all nations. He will swallow up death in victory; and the Lord God will wipe away tears from off all faces; and the rebuke of His people shall He take away from off all the earth; for the Lord hath spoken it," Isa. 25:3-8

"Behold, I shew you a mystery; we shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump: for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed." 1 Cor. 15:51, 52

"Thy dead men shall live, together with My dead body shall they arise. Awake and sing, ye that dwell in the dust: for thy dew is as the dew of herbs, and the earth shall cast out the dead."  Isa. 26:19

"The wilderness and the solitary place shall be glad for them; and the desert shall rejoice, and blossom as the rose. It shall bloom abundantly, and rejoice even with joy and singing: the glory of Lebanon shall be given unto it, the excellency of Carmel and Sharon, they shall see the glory of the Lord, and the excellency of our God. Strengthen ye the weak hands, and confirm the feeble knees. Say to them that are of a fearful heart, fear not: behold, your God will come with vengeance, even God with a recompense; He will come and save you. Then shall the eyes of the blind be opened, and the ears of the deaf shall be unstopped. Then shall the lame man leap as an hart, and the tongue of the dumb sing: for in the wilderness shall waters break out, and streams in the desert. And the parched ground shall become a pool, and the thirsty land springs of water: in the habituation of dragons, where each lay, shall be grass with reeds and rushes. And an highway shall be there, and a way, and it shall be called The way of holiness; the unclean shall not pass over it; but it shall be for those: the wayfaring men, though fools, shall not err therein. No lion shall be there, nor any ravenous beast shall go up thereon, it shall not be found there; but the redeemed shall walk there: And the ransomed of the Lord shall return, and come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads: they shall obtain joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away." Isa. 35:1-10

"Every valley shall be exalted, and every mountain and hill made low: and the crooked shall be made straight, and the rough places plain."  Isa. 40:4 "I will plant in the wilderness the cedar, the shittah tree, and the myrtle, and the oil tree: I will set in the desert the fir tree, and the pine, and the box tree together: that they may see, and know, and consider, that the hand of the Lord hath done this, and the Holy One of Israel hath created it." Isa. 41:19

"Behold My servant, whom I uphold; Mine elect, in whom My soul delighteth; I have put My Spirit upon him: he shall bring forth judgment to the Gentiles. He shall not cry, nor lift up, nor cause his voice to be heard in the street. A bruised reed shall he not break, and the smoking flax shall he not quench: he shall bring forth judgment unto truth. He shall not fail nor be discouraged, till he have set judgment in the earth: and the isles shall wait for his law."  Isa. 42:1-4

"And the Lord shall be king over all the earth: in that day shall there be one Lord, and His name one. All the land shall be turned as a plain from Geba to Rimmon south of Jerusalem: and it shall be lifted up, and inhabited in her place, from Benjamin's gate unto the place of the first gate, unto the corner gate, and from the tower of Hananeel unto the king's winepresses. And men shall dwell in it, and there shall be no more utter destruction; but Jerusalem shall be safely inhabited. And this shall be the plague wherewith the Lord will smite all the people that have fought against Jerusalem; their flesh shall consume away while they stand upon their feet, and their eyes shall consume away in their holes, and their tongue shall consume away in their mouth. And it shall come to pass in that day, that a great tumult from the Lord shall be among them; and they shall lay hold every one on the hand of his neighbor, and his hand shall rise up against the hand of his neighbor. And Judah also shall fight at Jerusalem; and the wealth of all the heathen round about shall be gathered together, gold, and silver, and apparel, in great abundance. And so shall be the plague of the horse, of the mule, of the camel, and of the ass, and of all the beasts that shall be in these tents, as this plague.
"And it shall come to pass, that every one that is left of all the nations which came against Jerusalem shall even go up from year to year to worship the King, the Lord of hosts, and to keep the feast of tabernacles. And it shall be, that whoso will not come up of all the families of the earth into Jerusalem, to worship the King, the Lord of hosts, even upon them shall be no rain. And if the family of Egypt go not up, and come not, that have no rain; there shall be the plague, wherewith the Lord will smite the heathen that come not up to keep the feast of tabernacles. This shall be the punishment of Egypt, and the punishment of all nations that come not up to keep the feast of tabernacles. In that day shall there be upon the bells of the horses, holiness unto the Lord; and the pots of the Lord’s house shall be like the bowls before the altar. Yea, every pot in Jerusalem and in Judah shall be holiness unto the Lord of hosts: and all they that sacrifice shall come and take them, and seethe therein; and in that day there shall be no more the Canaanite in the house of the Lord of hosts.” Zech. 14:9-21.

"And in that day shall thou say, O Lord, I will praise Thee; though Thou wast angry with me, thine anger is turned away, and Thou comfortedst me. Behold, God is my salvation; I will trust, and not be afraid: for the Lord Jehovah is my strength and my song; He also is become my salvation. Therefore with joy shall ye draw water out of the wells of salvation. And in that day shall ye say, Praise the Lord, call upon His name, declare His doings among the people, make mention that His name is exalted. Sing unto the Lord; for He hath done excellent things: this is known in all the earth. Cry out and shout, thou inhabitant of Zion; for great is the Holy One of Israel in the midst of thee." Isa. 12

"Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters, and he that hath no money; come ye, buy, and eat; yea, come, buy wine and milk without money and without price. Wherefore do ye spend money for that which is not bread? and your labor for that which satisfieth not? Hearken diligently unto Me, and eat ye that which is good, and let your soul delight itself with fatness. Incline your ear, and come unto Me: hear, and your soul shall live; and I will make an everlasting covenant with you, even the sure mercies of David. Behold, I have given him for a witness to the people, a leader and commander of the people. Behold, thou shalt call a nation that thou knowest not, and nations that knew not thee shall run unto thee because of the Lord thy God, and for the Holy One of Israel; for He hath glorified thee. Seek ye the Lord while He may be found, call ye upon him while He is near: let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts: and let him return unto the Lord, and He will have mercy upon him; and to our God, for He will abundantly pardon. For My thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways My ways, saith the Lord. For as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are My ways higher than your ways, and My thoughts than your thoughts. For as the rain cometh down, and the snow from heaven, and returneth not thither, but watereth the earth, and maketh it bring forth and bud. that it may give seed to the sower, and bread to the eater: so shall My word be that goeth forth out of My mouth: it shall not return unto Me void, but shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I have sent it. For ye shall go out with joy, and be led forth with peace: the mountains and hills shall break forth before you into singing, and all the trees of the field shall clap their hands. Instead of the thorn shall come up the fir tree, and instead of the brier shall come up the myrtle tree: and it shall be to the Lord for a name, for an everlasting sign that shall not be cut off." Isa. 55

"After this manner therefore pray ye: Our Father which art in heaven, Hallowed be Thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread. And forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors. And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil: For Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory forever. Amen." Matt. 6:9-13

In the light of such a profound array of scriptures as those we have just considered, I am at a complete loss to understand how anyone who knows God at all could fail to grasp the living hope that a radiant age of splendor, in which the Son of God Himself will reign supreme on an illustrious, exalted throne here on earth, is coming. In that blessed age of righteousness and peace the sons of God will reign with Him for a thousand years of blessedness. Enlightening as is this array of scriptures, they are but a small fraction of the kingdom promises contained in Holy Writ.

The hope of an age of dignification and grandeur in which Christ Himself will reign supreme with His saints is woven into the warp and woof of Holy Scripture. Abraham, we are told in Genesis, looked for it and saw it afar off. To Judah the promise was given: "The scepter shall not depart from Judah. nor a law-giver from between his feet, until Shiloh come; and unto Him shall the gathering of the people be." Gen. 49:10 To David this promise was given: "Of the fruit of thy body will I set upon thy throne." Psa. 132:11 The kingdom of Christ was the theme of the prophets, as we have seen from the above scriptures. When Jesus Christ the King appeared in person. His sermons. His miracles, and every detail of His marvelous life were a living prophecy, a prophetic parable of the glory of the kingdom age to come. When His disciples asked Him to teach them how to pray. He said, "When ye pray, say... Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth as it is done in heaven... For Thine is the kingdom, the power, and the glory forever. Amen."

The entire dispensation of grace (Eph. 3:2) has been set aside, not in the vain hope of the conversion of the world, as the preachers are always imagining, but for the distinct purpose of "calling out a people for His name." Acts 15:13-18 These called out and elect saints, who have been in preparation for two thousand years, are the body of Christ, the sons of God, whom God has chosen and ordained to sit with Him in His throne. They are the fullness and completeness of Him who everywhere fills the universe with Himself.

In the blindness of church tradition, the preachers have taught the people that the hope of creation is to die and go to heaven or go to glory by the medium of the rapture, but anyone studying God's word with care will find that heaven is not the theme of the Old Testament and it is not the theme of the New Testament. In fact there is a noticeable absence of any teaching on the subject. The theme of both the Old and New Testaments is the kingdom of God, a kingdom as literal as that of Nebuchadnezzar, Cyrus, Alexander, or Caesar. The difference will be that those men were merely mortal men, possessed with carnal minds, but the glory that excels in the kingdom of God will be that the King will not be carnal, but spiritual; not mortal, but immortal; not passing, but permanent; not of time, but of eternity. His sharp, two-edged sword will not be stained with the blood of His enemies. It is instead that same sharp, two-edged sword which is the word of God. With it and by its transforming power He will smite the nations, not in the bloody conflict and seething hate of war, but as he smote the people at Pentecost, bringing them to repentance and the joy of salvation. He will pierce the conscience of the people and cause them to cry, "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" He will prick them as Saul of Tarsus was pricked and He will save them as he was saved. His coming will be the time of the latter rain and the whole earth will feel the glory and power of Christ and His brethren, the sons of God. The lame will leap as the hart. The deaf will hear the music of redemption. The tongue of the dumb shall sing the praises of the Lamb that sitteth upon the throne. The wolf will lie down with the lamb in peace and friendship. The knowledge of the Lord will fill the earth and the inhabitant shall not say, "I am sick," Nothing shall hurt nor destroy in all God's holy mountain.

No one who ever lived can be compared to our incomparable Christ, for He is King of kings and Lord of lords. Mohammed is dead - dead as a door nail. Buddha is dead - dead as a stone. Confucius is dead, as are all the others who for a little moment held captive the minds of their followers. But not so with our Christ! He is alive forevermore, by many infallible proofs. He holds the keys of death and Hades. At the sound of His voice with the trumpet of God all who are in the graves, even the false christs themselves will arise to stand before Him. He ever liveth. He only hath immortality. He only is eternal. In Him is life. He is the light. From Him everything comes, by Him everything exists, and in Him everything ends. There never was a birth like His. There never was a life like His. Others have died on crosses even as He, but He died for all the world and everything in it. In that He died, He died unto sin once, but in that He liveth, He liveth unto God. None had a resurrection such as He nor an ascension such as His, nor will any return to earth with such majesty as He. When He comes, His throne will be waiting for Him, and, when He reigns, all the world of all ages will know that there never was such a kingdom as His. He shall reign from sea to sea and all nations shall serve and obey Him.

How glorious is the theme! I would not miss it for a million worlds such as the one in which we now live. It is no wonder to me that Jesus refused the paltry kingdoms of this world when Satan offered them to Him. Knowing as I do the hope that lies before us, I would refuse earth's kingdoms even as He did, and so would you.

Dearly beloved brethren, let us lay aside every weight and the sin that doth so easily beset us and let us run with patience the race that is set before us and, forsaking all else, cleave only to Him. Thy kingdom come! Thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven! Amen and Amen and Amen!
HOW REVELATION UNFOLDS THE MYSTERIES

In the hearts of millions of people in this hour there is an inward knowledge that the world is now seeing the final impressive moments of the great drama that has occupied earth's vast theatre for the past six thousand years. It is my earnest longing and continual prayer to God that all who read the lines which follow may feel their spirits arrested and awakened by the wisdom and power of that great omniscient Person of whom our Lord Jesus fervently spoke, saying, "When He, the Spirit of truth, is come, He will guide you into all truth; for He shall not speak of Himself; but whatsoever He shall hear, that shall He speak: and He will show you things to come. He shall glorify Me: for He shall receive of Mine, and shall show it unto you." John 16: 13, 14 If God's people could but see the limitless store of wisdom and knowledge offered to us here, they would quickly abandon the vanities of earth and religion, cleanse their temple, and become the continual abiding place of this heavenly person-age.

The earth was without form, and void; and darkness was upon the face of the deep until that hour of which it is written, "The Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters." Then God said, "Let there be light: and there was light. And God saw the light that it was good." Gen. 1: 2-4 The same mysterious pattern followed by our God in creation is followed in the regeneration of every man. In the unregenerated and unconverted state our lives, our hearts, our spirits, our souls, and our minds are all without form and void, and darkness, gross darkness, outer darkness that can be felt, shrouds our beings as a thick cloud until the day comes in the grace and wisdom of God that the Holy Spirit moves like a breath from heaven upon us, dispelling the covering clouds of darkness and causing the Sun (Son) of righteousness to shine into the vain, void wilderness of our hopeless hearts.

What man knoweth the things of a man save the spirit of man that is in him? Even so the things of God knoweth no man, but the Spirit of God. Well did Jesus know all our human limitations. Well did He know that our understanding could not possibly ascend beyond the things of man. He did not leave us thus comfortless and confined, but promised in words that cannot fail, "When He, the Spirit of truth, is come, He will guide you into all truth." And yet again, "When the Comforter is come, whom I will send unto you from the Father, even the Spirit of truth, which proceedeth from the Father, He shall testify of Me." John 15:26

It is the Spirit that quickeneth (maketh alive); the flesh (with all its learning and natural understanding) profiteth nothing. John 6: 63 As a brilliant light dispels the darkness of a dank and gloomy cave, so the light of the Holy Spirit, shining in the sullen darkness of the human heart, obliterates the gloom of death and breaks the chains of darkness that saints may joyfully proclaim, "The city had no need of the sun, neither of the moon, to shine in it: for the glory of God did lighten it, and the Lamb is the light thereof." Rev. 21: 23 "For God, who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, hath shined in our hearts, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ." 1 Cor. 4:6 Be merciful unto us, 0 God, and bless us, and cause Thy face to shine upon us, "that Thy way may be known upon the earth, Thy saving health among all the nations. Let the people praise Thee, 0 God; let all the people praise Thee. 0 let the nations be glad and sing for joy: for Thou shalt judge the people righteously, and govern the nations upon earth. Let the people praise Thee, 0 God; let all the people praise Thee. Then shall the earth yield her increase; and God, even our God, shall bless us. God shall bless us, and all the ends of the earth shall fear Him." Psa. 67
I solemnly tell every person who reads these lines that where the things of God are concerned human knowledge is insufficient. The institutions of learning devised by the cleverness and art of men can never point a man to life. They are capable only of partaking of the tree of human knowledge, which is the tree of the knowledge of good and evil. Scientists and educators vainly imagine that, given sufficient knowledge, every evil can be abolished from the earth, but their darkened minds will not let them see that the more man partakes of human knowledge the deeper he sinks into the sea of corruption and violence. He does not know that the death-dealing pollution of the land, the sea, and the air, with all its attendant train of sickness and disease, stems from the noxious fertility of his own corrupt and polluted mind, which with gluttonous and voracious appetite has feasted long upon the tree of human wisdom and carnal understanding. The more men eat of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil the more the jaws of death take hold upon us until at last, if man were allowed to continue, no flesh would be saved. But for the sake of the elect the days of man's ravenous appetite for the tree of the knowledge of good and evil shall be shortened.

"There was a man of the Pharisees, named Nicodemus, a ruler of the Jews. The same came to Jesus by night, and said unto Him, Rabbi, we know that Thou art a teacher come from God: for no man can do these miracles that Thou doest, except God be with him. Jesus answered and said unto him, Verily, verily I say unto thee, Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God." John 3:1-3 I know what Jesus meant when He made the significant and all important statement, "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God", and many people now reading these lines know from personal experience the mystery of the truth He spoke. But you who now understand the mystery of the new birth will readily concede that you did not understand it until its truth became experience in your heart. Furthermore, you will have found that even now it is quite beyond your power to explain this blessed experience to unregenerate men. You may tell them of the necessity of being born again. You may patiently explain the wonderful work accomplished by the Holy Spirit in your life when you believed on Christ, but for each man the understanding of the new birth must await the hour when he himself is touched by that kingdom of God from above.

Have you ever listened to a man preach or heard him teach on a subject that was beyond his personal experience? It is pitiful to listen while unregenerate men try to explain the new birth, but in their blindness they try, and even the unregenerate listener can discern that the speaker does not have the experience he is trying to explain, or should I say, explain away. Not long after I had received the baptism of the Holy Spirit, I heard a minister preach on the subject. He had not gone very far in his explanation before I and many others knew that he had never received the experience at all. He was trying desperately to make the word of God confirm his experience rather than seeking an experience that conformed to the word of God.

It is completely impossible to see the kingdom until its new life has touched you from above. It is Jesus Christ and He alone who opens the eyes of men who are blind from birth. It is God's only begotten Son who gives the life of the ages to men dead in trespasses and sins. The new birth defies all explanation in the natural realm. Every son of Adam, born as he is in trespasses and sins, is hermetically sealed in the realm and kingdom of death until he is touched by the life of the resurrected Son of God. In Him is life, and the life is the light of men. Just think of that beautiful truth! "In Him was life; and the life was the light of men." John 1:4. Everything everywhere outside of Him belongs to the realm of death and, because it belongs to the realm of death, it likewise belongs to the realm of darkness. It was into this realm of outer darkness and death that Adam went when he partook of that strange tree of the knowledge of good and evil. God, his Father, had already told him which trees were good and which were evil, but man is never satisfied to believe God. He must always reach out his inquisitive hand to prove for himself whether or not God is speaking the truth. Hence, when he partook of that which God had said was evil, then he died, as God had spoken, and we all died in him. Thus death passed upon all men, for all have sinned. Has mankind not fully proved throughout the centuries that he is in truth the son of Adam? Which of all God's commandments have we not broken, justifying ourselves in having done so even as Adam seemed to do.

"The dead know not anything." Eccles. 9: 5. Furthermore, the dead see not anything, nor do they hear or feel anything. How then can a natural man who is dead in trespasses and sins (Eph. 2:1) hope to see or understand the things that belong to the wonderful realm of life, since death has closed his eyes to them? It is Christ and Christ alone who raises the dead. It matters not to Him nor to His resurrection power whether those dead be corpses buried in the earth or whether they be men walking on top of the ground, dead while they live.
"Let the dead bury their dead," said Jesus, because He understood the mystery I seek now to explain. Well did the Son of God know that outside of Him both the man who was being buried and the men who cast the earth into his grave belonged to the realm of death and were alike dead.

In Him is life! In Him is life. and, when He comes into our hearts, then His life becomes the life of men. John: 4, 5. It is when that life from above, which is Jesus Christ, touches us in the deadness and death of our walking tomb that we are born from above. We are born again. We receive again the life that was in Adam before he partook of the tree of death. "If any man thirst, let him come unto Me and drink," said Jesus. And again, "Whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst: but the water that I shall give him shall be in him a well of water springing up into everlasting life." John 4:14

Amid the unbelief of a sinful world, the doubt and fear, the bigotry and hate of the religious multitudes of His day, Jesus Christ, the Son of God, rose to His feet at the great feast of tabernacles and cried with a loud voice that all the world might hear, "If any man thirst, let him come unto Me, and drink. He that believeth on Me, as the scripture hath said, out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water. This spake He of the Spirit, which they that believe on Him should receive: for the Holy Ghost was not yet given, because Jesus was not yet glorified." John 7: 37-39

Ah, sweet mystery of the ages, that a man dead in sins, his soul covered with darkness as a thick cloud, should be lighted with the light which Jesus Christ is and be touched with His life, which knows no death! Who can but marvel that we should be thus born from above, born anew with the life of the Son of God? Surely the scripture is doubly true when it boldly affirms, "When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall we also appear with Him in glory." To men now dead in trespasses and sins He calls, "I am the bread of life... This is the bread which cometh down from heaven, that a man may eat thereof, and not die. I am the living bread, which came down from heaven: if any man eat of this bread, he shall live forever: and the bread that I will give is my flesh, which I will give for the life of the world." John 6: 48, 50, 51

For many months my spirit has longed with a God-given desire to help men see that there is only one life in the universe, and that one life is Jesus Christ. In Him is life, and outside of Him even that which men call life is death. Many millions of God's people have stumbled over the scripture we have quoted above. "If any man eat this bread, he shall live forever." John 6:51. The Jews stumbled over it and argued and fought about it. "Abraham," they said, "is dead and the prophets are dead, and Thou sayest, If a man keep My sayings, he shall never see death." The mistake the Jews were making sprang from their faulty understanding of what life is. They thought, as Christians also do, that this living and breathing that we now enjoy is life. They, as men today, were content to believe that all men not in their graves had life and only those beneath the ground were dead. But this is not the truth, and Jesus more than all others knew it was not so. He knew, as Paul also forcefully stated, that "she that liveth in pleasure is dead while she liveth," and taught the same when He said, "Let the dead bury their dead." Everything outside of Christ is death. May God make this truth real to your hearts! Not only is the spirit dead in trespasses and sins, but the body, too, is "the body of this death". Rom. 7: 24 Furthermore, I must testify, as the scripture also bears record, that even unto those whose spirits have been reborn, never to die again, the apostle Paul distinctly said, "The body is dead because of sin, but the spirit is alive (life) because of righteousness." Rom. 8:10 When Jesus taught that those who partook of Him would never die (John 6: 50), He was not saying that they would never go into the grave; otherwise He would not later have said, "I will raise him up at the last day." John 6:54. But He was saying that, once a man receives the life of Christ, that life will never depart from him. The grave does not and cannot separate a man from the life that Jesus gives. His life is the only life there is anywhere.

The only life you have and the only life you ever will have is the life that Jesus gave you when you believed on Him. "I give unto them eternal life (the life of the ages), and they shall never perish." John 10:28 May God, the giver of all light and understanding, open our minds to see that the life which Jesus is and the life which Jesus gives has nothing in common with that frail, flickering candle of which James spoke, saying, "What is your life? It is even a vapor that appeareth for a little time, and then vanisheth away." Jas. 4:14 "All flesh," said Peter, "is as grass, and all the glory of man as the flower of grass. The grass withereth, and the flower thereof falleth away." 1 Pet. 1:24 Surely this misty shadow that men call life is not one and the same thing with that life which Jesus spoke of as enduring forever! No! It is not this vanishing flower, this withering grass, this flickering candle, that Jesus said would live forever. "The life that never ends, the life of the ages, is the life that He gives to you and me when we believe. When we believe on Him, He gives us Himself. He comes within to be our life."
"He that followeth Me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life." The tomb to me holds no terror at all. Christians who lie buried in the grave are no more in death than they were when they walked on the earth, for the hour is coming in which all who are in the graves shall hear His voice and shall come forth.

To every saint of God there must come a time when the truth that Christ is all in all dawns as the morning on the meadows of His soul. He is the truth. He is the light. He is the way. He is the life. He is the resurrection. He is wisdom. He is understanding. He is goodness. He is righteousness. He is the Alpha and the Omega. He is the A and the Z. He is the beginning and the end. It is He who liveth and was dead and, behold, is alive forevermore. All truth must come to the heart of mankind by revelation from above. To incorporate these truths into your theories and doctrines will not do. Christ and all He is and does must come as a light shining in the darkness, a living revelation and reality from on high. "It is the spirit that quickeneth; the flesh profiteth nothing: The words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life." John 6: 63

"Whom do men say that I the Son of man am?" Jesus once enquired of His disciples; and their reply showed clearly how varied and useless are the deductions of the natural mind. "Some say that Thou art John the Baptist: some, Elias: and others, Jeremias, or one of the prophets." "But whom say ye that I am?" He asked. To this Peter replied with great conviction, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." Matt. 16:13-16

What a world of difference there is between the theories and conclusions of men and the heavenly revelation of the Holy Spirit as it shines into our hearts, bringing the knowledge of the glory of God from the very face of Jesus Christ! And Jesus, hearing Peter's words, joyfully exulted, "Blessed art thou, Simon Bar-jona: for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but My Father which is in heaven." Matt. 16:17 At this moment Jesus gave forth a revelation of His own. It was a revelation from God concerning the ministry of this lowly man. Turning to Peter, He said, "Thou art Peter, and upon this rock will I build My church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." Matt. 16:18 Thus you will see that even a God-given ministry cannot be recognized except by revelation from on high. Thousands of men today are claiming to be great ministries, exalting self with many high-sounding names as they point to their spectacular programs, but it just may be that Christ does not know them in spite of all their great works. It is unto all such as these that He will say, "I never knew you," (Matt. 7:23), but Peter He knew by the Holy Spirit.

We stated above that there must come a time when the truth is revealed to us from heaven that Christ is all and in all; and for that heaven sent understanding we beseech Thee, 0, Lord! Open our eyes as the eyes of Gehazi were opened when Elisha prayed. (2 Kings 6:17) Enlighten our understanding as you did when Jesus opened their understanding that they might understand the scripture. (Luke 24:45) Remember again the prayer of Paul, who prayed, "The eyes of your understanding being enlightened, that ye may know what is the hope of His calling, and what the riches of the glory of His inheritance in the saints." Eph. 1:18 Open our eyes and send the Holy Spirit to reveal Jesus Christ that we, with those who stood in the holy mount, may see no man but Jesus only. (Matt. 17:8) Take us, 0 Lord, beyond the realm of the natural mind. Deliver us from man's way of looking at things. Remember again Thy promise, "When He, the Spirit of truth, is come, He will guide you into all truth", that He may abide in our hearts of whom it is written, "He will receive of Mine and shall show it unto you." John 16:14

It would be very simple to fill this book with instance after instance from Holy Scripture, which loudly and beautifully proclaim the glory of eternal things as the Holy Spirit opens and reveals them to our hearts. Search where you will in the Old Testament or the New and you will find ever increasing evidence of the transforming power of spiritual revelation. "No man can see God and live," the Word declares; but may I ask this solemn question: Have you ever known of a man who, upon seeing God, dropped dead? As it is faithfully true that no man can see God and live, it is also equally certain that no man can see God and die. And, because this statement is true, we must search in greater depth for a right understanding of this wonderful fact. The truth is that, the moment God in any form is revealed to man, right there and then that man is completely changed. Old things pass away and die; all things become living and new. The old life and the old loves, together with old theories and all human understanding, shrivel up and pass away, but from the deadness and outer darkness of their tomb shines forth a life in the image of Him who revealed Himself. Old things have passed away; behold, all things are new! Is not this Paul's experience when he said, "I am crucified with Christ: nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me: and the life which I now live in the flesh I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me, and gave Himself for me." Gal. 2: 20
No man hath seen God at any time. How is it then that Moses saw God, Job saw God, and Isaiah saw God? Again we must conclude that the real truth of the statement lies beneath the surface. No man hath seen God at any time nor is it possible for a natural man with natural eyes to see God at any time. Our physical eyes are restricted to the natural realm. But, when the blessed Christ, who opened the eyes of the man blind from birth, passes our way, then our eyes, being touched from above, behold that which is invisible, our ears are made to hear that which is inaudible, and the tongue of the dumb is loosed to give glory to God in the speech of men and angels.

Job was a good man. By the testimony of the Lord he was a perfect man and upright, one who feared God and kept clear of all evil. But let it be known that the goodness he possessed was on the level of men; the perfection he had was the perfection of the natural man; the awe, the respect, the reverence he had for God was that of a good-living, God-fearing man, righteous in excess of any about him. But, when the day came that God revealed Himself, spoke to him out of the whirlwind, then all his righteousness fell apart as rotten and filthy rags. His long cherished goodness languished in the dust and ashes of nothingness. Every argument he had presented before God and men to support and bolster his self-righteous claim made him the more ashamed and ready to drink the cup of humiliation to the dregs; and, when at last he found the courage to open his mouth, the words he uttered sprang from the heart of a new man. The old Job with his personal righteousness had passed away. The old high-minded Job had died, and from the ashes of his dead self a new man came forth in resurrection in the image and likeness of the Lord who had revealed Himself. "I know that Thou canst do everything," he wept in his adoration, "and that no thought can be withholden from Thee. Who is he that hideth counsel without knowledge? Therefore have I uttered that I understood not; things too wonderful for me, which I knew not. Hear, I beseech Thee, and I will speak: I will demand (ask) of Thee, and declare Thou unto me. I have heard of Thee by the hearing of the ear; but now mine eye seeth Thee. Wherefore I abhor myself, and repent in dust and ashes." Job 42: 2-6

No man can see God and live. No man can remain as he used to be. The revelation of the Almighty in whatsoever form it may be given will kill the beast of your old self to make way for the new man in the image of Jesus Christ. "Wisdom hath builded her house, she hath hewn out her seven pillars: She hath killed her beasts; she hath mingled her wine; she hath also furnished her table." Prov. 9: 1, 2 The killing of the beast of self is the one thing above all else always accomplished by the revelation of God to our hearts. "For I know that in me, that is, in my flesh, dwelleth no good thing." Rom. 7:18 It is wrong, very, very wrong and very unscriptural, for any man to pray to God for ability to do better, and, because this oft repeated prayer is wrong, foundationally and fundamentally wrong, it can never be answered by the God of righteousness. Oh how often in the past I have prayed that I might be a better man; And oh how often it seemed that instead of being better I was worse! How often I have promised myself that I would do better in the future only to find that there was no ability in me to do better or to be better! God open our minds that we may clearly see that goodness cannot spring from corruption nor can righteousness rise from unrighteousness. Can a bitter fountain send forth sweet waters, or a corrupt tree bear good fruit? Righteousness that grows on the tree of unrighteousness is that self-righteousness of which the Lord has said, "All our righteousnesses are as filthy rags." Can we satisfy God with filthy rags? Can that which is crooked be made straight? Can that which is old be made new, or that which is wanting be numbered? God is not interested in our being better or doing better or in our improving ourselves. All these things are the righteousness of the beast of self. God hates it all and will not accept it. There is but one righteousness. Christ is our righteousness and God has faith in Him.

That God has faith in the righteousness of His Son Paul plainly stated when he wrote to the Romans, saying, "But now the righteousness of God without the law is manifested, being witnessed by the law and the prophets; even the righteousness of God by faith of Jesus Christ unto all and upon all them that believe: for there is no difference; for all have sinned and come short of the glory of God; being justified freely by His grace through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus: whom God hath set forth to be a propitiation through faith in His blood, to declare His righteousness for the remission of sins that are past, through the forbearance of God; to declare, I say, at this time His righteousness: that He might be just, and the justifier of him which believeth in Jesus" Rom. 3:21-26 When Paul says here, "Whom God hath set forth to be a propitiation through faith in His blood," he means that God Himself had faith in the blood of His Son as sufficient to propitiate man (not God) and reconcile man to God. Propitiate means to appease or dispose to kindness one who is offended. Nowhere in scripture do we ever find that God is offended or that God needs to be reconciled to man. It is man who is offended, man who is estranged, and man who must be reconciled.

Our failure to see the purpose of the fall leads us into all manner of error and misunderstanding. There is a divine purpose in the fall of man and unimaginable blessings for future ages will devolve from it. God our Father has never once blamed man for the fall, but takes the responsibility for it Himself when He says, "The creature was made subject to vanity, not willingly, but by reason of Him who hath subjected the same in hope!" There is no blame attached to the fall. It is not a matter of blame either to God or man. It is a matter of understanding the infinite purpose of God. With what profound words of inspiration the poet wrote:

I sorrow if I shock you, for I seek To comfort and inspire. I see around
A silent company of doubting souls;
But I may challenge any one of them
To quote the meanest blessing of his life,
And prove that evil did not make the gift,
Or bear it from the Giver's hand.

Because man above all God's creatures has suffered in this divine process of making man in God's image, the perfection of Christ is offered as a perfect satisfaction to him (man), a satisfaction in which the Father has perfect confidence to propitiate him and reconcile him to God. Thus it is that Jesus Christ is God's propitiation toward man. This is the grace of God and He, the Father, has faith in the blood of His Son to accomplish the good and perfect act of reconciling man to Himself, giving men the righteousness of God as they receive His only begotten Son.

Again I say that all such vital truth as this lies as dead and dormant as the natural mind itself until that moment sublime in which the glory light of revelation shines into our hearts and we understand and comprehend in the revealing light of the Lord. We cannot overcome the flesh because we are flesh, and the flesh cannot overcome or conquer itself. Stop trying to be better or do better or to become more like Jesus. It simply cannot be done. That which is born of the flesh is flesh and always will be. That which is born of the Spirit is spirit and always will be. Marvel not that Jesus said, "Ye must be born again."

Year after year the millions of earth celebrate Christmas, but Christ to the vast majority of men is nothing more than an historic babe. The day of His birth is naught but a convenient occasion for drunken revelry and much feasting of the flesh. And why, you ask, is this the case? Simply because the natural man can never see beyond the veil of the flesh. His eyes can never look into the world of the Spirit. But, when the Holy Spirit, who moved upon the waters in Gen. 1, reveals to our hearts that Christ is God's Son, by whom and for whom all things were created and made, then our eyes are opened as the eyes of Jacob were opened on that famous night when from his pillow of stone a ladder reached from the lowly earth to the vaulted heavens while angels ascended and descended on that stairway to the skies. And when fearful, trembling Jacob awakened from his dreaming, the words of revelation started from his stammering lips, "Surely God was in this place, and I knew it not." Gen. 28:16

"How is it that Thou, being a Jew, askest drink of me who am a woman of Samaria?" demanded the careworn woman who drew her water from Jacob's well. "If thou knewest the gift of God, and who it is that saith to thee, Give me to drink; thou wouldst have asked of Him, and He would have given thee living water," replied the Lord. Back and forth the conversation went of Jacob and the fathers, of wells and waters until the Wisdom of God said to the woman, "Go, call thy husband, and come hither." "I have no husband," protested the woman, to which the Savior in grace replied, "Thou hast well said, I have no husband: For thou hast had five husbands, and he whom thou now hast is not thy husband. In that saiest thou truly," protested the woman, to which the Savior in grace replied, "Thou hast well said, I have no husband: For thou hast had five husbands, and he whom thou now hast is not thy husband. In that saidst thou truly." I have always loved Christ for this statement of kindness, gentleness and truth, but it came as such a shock to the spirit of the woman that she immediately knew that this kindly man with whom she spoke was something much more than a tactful gentleman, but one in whom was the knowledge of God. It was with unconcealed astonishment that she ventured the words, "Sir, I perceive that Thou art a prophet." Understanding was beginning to dawn upon her darkened mind. The light of the Son of righteousness was dispelling the thick clouds of the outer darkness in which she long had dwelt. "Our fathers worshipped in this mountain," she confidently affirmed, "but you say that in Jerusalem is the place where men ought to worship." "Woman, believe Me," He answered, "the hour cometh when ye shall neither in this mountain, nor yet at Jerusalem, worship the Father. Ye worship ye know not what: we know what we worship, for salvation is of the Jews. But the hour cometh, and now is, when the true worshippers shall worship the Father in spirit and in truth: for the Father seeketh such to worship Him. God is a Spirit: and they that worship Him must worship Him in spirit and in truth." "I know that Messias cometh, which is called the Christ," ventured the woman, "and when He is come, He will tell us all things." "I that speak unto thee am He," was Christ's revealing reply. And she, who moments before had said in the darkness of her heart,

"How is it that Thou, being a Jew, askest drink of me who am a woman of Samaria," now ran off with the message on her trembling lips, "Come see a man who told me all things that ever I did: is not this the Christ?"

Revelation from God opens the mind to the realm of the Spirit that weary men on the pillows of stone may receive the message of God from an open heaven, and the eyes of women benighted by sin may behold in the dusty traveler the Savior of all mankind.

For centuries now men have studied the doctrine of the resurrection. Theologians (if there be such a thing) have filled pages and books with the arguments pro and con to prove that Christ did or did not arise from the dead. Many of their arguments are sensible and undeniable, but it is one thing to prove that nineteen hundred years ago a man called Jesus rose from the dead, and it is another thing entirely when the truth that He is alive forevermore comes flooding into the darkness of the soul from the glory world on high. Thomas had heard the promise of the resurrection from the lips of Jesus Himself, but he like all the others wondered what the rising from the dead could mean. Mark 9:10. Peter saw with his own eyes that the body of Jesus was missing from the tomb, yet he departed, wondering in himself. Luke 24:12. Sweet and gentle Mary, who perhaps had heard more about the resurrection than any other, seeing a man who she thought was the gardener, mournfully sobbed out this plaintive request, "Sir, if thou hast borne Him hence, tell me where thou hast laid Him, and I will take Him away." With one word and one only the Lord addressed her, "Mary" But that one word dispelled all darkness and misunderstanding from her troubled soul, and she knew, even as angels knew, that He was alive. I am sure, had all the silver tongued orators of earth been present to describe the wonders of that moment, their speeches would have been as sounding brass and tinkling cymbal compared to her one triumphant word of revelation, "Rabboni." (John 20:16)

0 Rabboni! Rabboni! Thou Son of the living God! Thou art the resurrection and the life. Thou wast alive; Thou wast dead; and, behold, Thou art alive forevermore and in Thy nail-pierced hand dost hold in triumph the keys of hell and death. 0 death, where is thy sting? 0 grave, where is thy victory? 0 gates of hell, thou shalt not prevail, for the Redeemer of Israel and the Saviour of the world holds in His triumphant hand thy key. "Lift up your heads, 0 ye gates: and be ye lifted up, ye everlasting doors; and the King of glory shall come in. Who is this King of glory? The Lord strong and mighty, the Lord mighty in battle. Lift up your heads, 0 ye gates, even lift them up, ye everlasting doors; and the King of glory shall come in. Who is this King of glory? The Lord of hosts, He is the King of glory." Psa. 24:7-10

And Thomas, too, poor doubting man, who was not with them when Jesus came, could not drive his doubts away nor calm his awful fears though his dearest friends told him with great assurance that Jesus was not only alive, but had appeared to them all. "Except I see in His hands the print of the nails and thrust my hand into His side, I will not believe" he despondently moaned. And Jesus eight days later, standing in the midst though the doors were locked and the windows barred, said to Thomas, "Reach hither thy finger and behold My hands; and reach hither thy hand and thrust it into My side; and be not faithless, but believing." But Thomas, the light of revelation streaming from heaven into his doubting heart, no longer needing any of these things, cried out with the eloquence of heaven,

"My Lord and my God!" (John 20:28) That awe-filled statement, my Lord and my God, is more, far more, than an acceptance of the fact of the resurrection. This, I am sure, was the first time in his life that he had known by the Spirit that Jesus was both Lord and God. For three years he had seen indisputable evidence that Jesus was the Son of God. This bold man would no doubt have willingly given his life for Jesus and the truth He preached, but, 0 friend, it is one thing to be convinced of a truth with the intellect. It is another thing to have it revealed by the Spirit of God. "When it pleased God, who separated me from my mother's womb, and called me by His grace, to reveal His Son in me, that I might preach Him among the heathen," said Paul, "immediately I conferred not with flesh and blood." Gal. 1:15, 16

Dear man of God; dear woman of God; dear friend and brother of mine! Is your Jesus, even though He be Jesus of Nazareth, only an historic Jesus who, men and even devils admit, was the Son of God? Or has your raptured soul in the glory light of revelation cried out with Mary, "Rabboni!" Or with Thomas, whom men call doubting, breathed the eternal words of revelation, "My Lord and my God!" There is such a world of difference between the letter and the Spirit! There is such a contrast between the cold, dead acceptance of a fact and the warm pulsating vitality of the living reality which comes when the Holy Spirit takes the things of God and shows them unto us!

Two men looked through prison bars;
One saw mud; the other saw stars.

It is ever thus, and what we see and know and clearly understand will depend upon our relationship with that wonderful Holy Spirit sent forth by Jesus Christ to guide us into all truth. I think the poem by John Whittier, which we will quote here, though needing careful reading and concentration, shows very clearly the difference between those who rejoice in the letter with its outward show and those who dwell in the reality of the Spirit and the light of heaven.

THE MYSTIC CHRISTMAS

"All hail!" the bells of Christmas rang;
"All hail!" the monks at Christmas sang;
The merry monks who kept with cheer
The gladdest day of all their year.
But still apart unmoved thereat
A pious elder brother sat
Silent in his accustomed place,
With God's sweet peace upon his face.

"Why sitt'st thou thus?" his brethren cried.
"It is the blessed Christmas-tide;
The Christmas lights are all aglow;
The sacred lilies bud and blow.

Without the happy children sing,
And all God's creatures hail the morn,
On which the holy Christ was born.

"Rejoice with us; no more rebuke
Our gladness with thy quiet look."
The gray monk answered: "Keep, I pray,
Even as ye list the Lord's birthday.

"Let heathen Yule fires flicker red
Where thronged refectory feasts are spread;
With mystery-play and mask and mime
And wait-song speed the holy time.

"The blindest faith may haply save;
The Lord accepts the things we have,
And reverence howsoe'er it strays
May find at last the shining ways.
"They needs must grope who cannot see;
The blade before the ear must be;
As ye are feeling, I have felt,
And where ye dwell I too have dwelt.

"But now, beyond the things of sense,
Beyond occasions and events,
I know, through God's exceeding grace,
Release from form and time and place.

"I listen, from no mortal tongue,
To hear the song the angels sung;
And wait within myself to know
The Christmas lilies bud and blow.

"The outward symbols disappear
From him whose inward sight is clear;
And small must be the choice of days
To him who fills them all with praise!

"Keep while you need it, brothers mine,
With honest zeal your Christmas sign;
But judge not him who every morn Feels in his heart the Christ, new-born."

I am afraid I am becoming a little impatient with the multiplicity of words and sentences. There must come a time when men enter in. I grow a little weary of hearing people talk about the sonship message. Sonship is much more than a message. It is a relationship. It is the relationship of a son to his Father. It is the spirit of adoption that in adoring contemplation causes the spirit to recite again and again, "Thou are my Father and I am Thy son. Thou knowest me and lovedst me before the foundation of the ages. What wilt Thou have me to do, O heavenly Father, for I do only those things that please Thee" As the months pass swiftly by, my spirit has been made urgently aware of an extreme need among the people of God. The greatest need Christians have is to hear the truth unfolded by the Spirit, and, having heard it by the Spirit, to embrace it with understanding and to enter in to it in experience. Many centuries ago Jesus taught us that the key of knowledge was to enter in. This He taught when He said, "Woe unto you, lawyers, for ye have taken away the key of knowledge: ye entered not in yourselves, and them that were entering in ye hindered." Luke 11:52 Would you not say then that the key of knowledge is to enter in? God's people stand still and progress not at all century after century, because they hear and rehear the truth but fail to enter in to partake of the feast that is spread before them. Publicans and harlots come and enter in to the kingdom of God by faith while those who have the promises waste their time dissecting and deciphering instead of believing and receiving.

The way to sonship is not doing, but dying. It is not a spirit of pride that speculates covetously of the personal glories to be attained as a manifested Son of God, but a broken and a contrite heart that the Lord will not despise. If perchance you wonder at the statement I have made above, I must tell you with great sadness of spirit that I have observed a multitude both of men and women whose only interest in sonship was their hope of personal exaltation. Sonship, to them, is something to be attained because they imagine it will produce in their lives all manner of spectacular things. They will then heal all the sick. They will see signs and wonders. They will be admired and honored of all men and nothing will be beyond their power. They are not unlike the seventy who returned from their ministry among the lost ten tribes of the house of Israel. Back they came from far and distant places, rejoicing greatly that even the demons were subject to them through Christ's name. And Jesus said, "Rejoice not that the demons are subject to you, but that your names are written in heaven." This is truth hidden from wise and prudent men, but revealed to us who are babes by our Lord. See also Luke 10:17-
We should, I think, care not a straw for doing or for any sort of accomplishment. Our care and concern should be for being and that being a Son of God. The moment the light dawns upon your spirit that God our Father is working all things according to the counsel of His will, then your soul will respond with the words of that first begotten Son, "I do only the things that please the Father." What other work is of any possible value, seeing that He is the architect and builder of an eternal temple from which He will govern the universe throughout unending ages?

If you will cease from your frantic rushing here and there, working, as you think, for the Lord, if you will cease for a few weeks from your church activity, from your do-gooding, your almsgiving, and from a thousand other things that have caught Christians up in this end time whirlwind of religious excitement and pseudo devotion, and if in the place of all this you will seek the face of Christ with fasting and prayer, if you desire of Him that He will give you a broken spirit and a heart that is obedient to His hidden will, then understanding will begin to possess you and bring light from heaven to your heart. Furthermore you will see why it was that Jesus warned men like you and me, saying, "Many will come to Me in that day, saying, 'Lord! Lord! Have we not prophesied in Thy name, and in Thy name cast out devils, and in Thy name done many wonderful works? Then I will profess unto them, I never knew you. Depart from Me, ye that work iniquity." Matt. 7:22, 23

Christians are always saying, "But how could Christ say to people who have cast out devils and healed sick and done great works, "I never knew you?" Well, the answer is very simple. God, the author and finisher of our faith, does not thank men for doing that which He did not instruct them to do. It is rebellion for one to attempt to build into His temple that which is not on the divine blueprint. Iniquity, wherever the word is found in scripture, means not sin, but rebellion. Search and you will see that this is so. Preachers and evangelists of the twentieth century are foremost in this iniquity. Preachers and miracle workers above all others fit the description Jesus faithfully gave in the scripture we have quoted. Those who diligently seek the face of Christ will soon find themselves drifting away from the carnality of modern religious activity. By their fruits you shall know them, and, if you will dismount from their bandwagon long enough to take a prayerful look, you will soon conclude that, if all the people were being healed who they say are being healed, there would be few sick left in the nation; but the truth is that there is more sickness and disease than ever in history. Something is wrong somewhere. If the multitudes were being saved in such numbers as they claim, whole cities would be rejoicing in the love of Christ; but, instead, evil men and seducers are waxing worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived. The thing that men now term revival is not the work of the Holy Spirit, but the work of their own hands. There are many who will say, "In Thy name we have cast out demons, and in Thy name done many wonderful works." Blind and foolish is the man who, being so obviously warned by Christ, yet falls prey to the cunning craftiness whereby they lie in wait to deceive.

We are living in the end of the age. This is the age of Laodicea. These are the final hours of that lukewarm age. Have you not heard the message of the hour? It is a message that singles out the individual, a message peculiar only to this age and different from that of any other age. The message is to "any man", a message that abandons the multitude to their religious play, to their church creeds and their church Christs, a message that says, "Behold, I stand at the door and knock: if any man hear my voice and open the door, I will come in to him and sup with him and he with Me." Rev. 3:20-23 The church of the last day is the church of the individual. It is the individual believer with a personal relationship to Christ. For the man who will forsake all else and sup with Christ this is an age of glory, an hour of preparation such as we have never known. This is a time when the Spirit of God is speaking to you as an individual. He seeks to sup and dine and feast with you apart from all the confusion about us. It is a glorious day when we see the promise that is ours in this hour. As I have prepared the pages of this little book, I have frequently felt the melting presence of the Holy Spirit urging God's people to enter in to the glories that lie just beyond the veil of their own flesh.

Enoch was the seventh from Adam. As you and I are citizens of the kingdom of God, we, too, are therefore the seventh from Adam and should, I believe, have many things in common with that man Enoch, of whom so little is spoken in the Bible, but of whom a world of truth and revelation is unfolded in this one sentence: "Enoch walked with God, and he was not, for God took him." Gen. 22:24 The long lost Book of Jasher, twice mentioned in the pages of Holy Scripture (2 Sam. 1:18 and Josh. 10:13), bears valuable historical record of some of the marvelous events in the life of Enoch. I undertake here to quote the story as it is recorded in this book, fervently hoping that those who read will reverently behold the awesome estate for which God is preparing those who may truly be called the seventh from Adam. The following record I quote from the Book of Jasher.

"And Enoch lived sixty-five years and he begat Methuselah; and Enoch walked with God after he begat Methuselah, and he served the Lord, and despised the evil ways of men. And the soul of Enoch was wrapped up in the instruction of the Lord, in knowledge and in understanding; and he wisely retired from the sons of men, and secreted himself from them for many days. And it was at the expiration of many years, whilst he was serving the Lord, and praying before Him in his house, that an angel of the Lord called to him from heaven, and he said, Here am I. And he said, Rise, go forth from thy house and from the place where thou dost hide thyself, and appear to the sons of men in order that thou mayest teach them the way in which they should go, and the work that they must accomplish to enter in the ways of God.

"And Enoch rose up according to the word of the Lord, and went forth from his house, from his place and from the chamber in which he was concealed; and he went to the sons of men and taught them the ways of the Lord, and at that time assembled the sons of men and acquainted them with the instruction of the Lord. And he ordered it to be proclaimed in all the places where the sons of men dwelt, saying. Where is the man who wishes to know the ways of the Lord and good works? Let him come to Enoch. And all the sons of men then assembled to him, for all who desired this thing went to Enoch and Enoch reigned over the sons of men according to the word of the Lord, and they came and bowed to him and they heard his word. And the Spirit of God was upon Enoch, and he taught all his men the Wisdom of God and His ways, and the sons of men served the Lord all the days of Enoch, and they came to hear his wisdom.

"And all the kings of the sons of men, both first and last, together with their princes and judges, came to Enoch when they heard of his wisdom, and they bowed down to him, and they also required of Enoch to reign over them, to which he consented. And they assembled in all one hundred and thirty kings and princes, and they made Enoch king over them, and they were all under his power and command. And Enoch taught them wisdom, knowledge, and the ways of the Lord; and he made peace amongst them, and peace was throughout the earth during the life of Enoch. And Enoch reigned over the sons of men two hundred and forty-three years, and he did justice and righteousness with all his people, and he led them in the ways of the Lord.

"And these are the generations of Enoch: Methuselah, Elisha, and Elimelech, three sons; and their sisters were Meica and Nahmah; and Methuselah lived eighty-seven years and he begat Lamech. And it was in the fifty-sixth year of the life of Lamech when Adam died; nine hundred and thirty years old was he at his death, and his two sons, with Enoch and Methuselah his son, buried him with great pomp as at the burial of kings, in the cave which God had told him. And in that place all the sons of men made a great mourning and weeping on account of Adam; it has therefore become a custom among the sons of men to this day. And Adam died because he ate of the tree of knowledge; he and his children after him, as the Lord God had spoken. And it was in the year of Adam's death which was the two hundred and forty-third year of the reign of Enoch, in that time Enoch resolved to separate himself from the sons of men and to secrete himself as at first in order to serve the Lord.

"And Enoch did so, but did not entirely secrete himself from them, but kept away from the sons of men three days and then went to them for one day. And during the three days that he was in his chamber, he prayed to, and praised the Lord his God, and the day on which he went and appeared to his subjects he taught them the ways of the Lord, and all they asked him about the Lord he told them. And he did in this manner for many years, and he afterward concealed himself for six days, and appeared to his people one day in seven; and after that once in a month, and then once a year, until all the kings and princes and sons of men sought for him, and desired again to see the face of Enoch, and to hear his word; but they could not, as all the sons of men were greatly afraid of Enoch, and they feared to approach him on account of the Godlike awe that was seated upon his countenance; therefore no man could look at him, fearing he might be punished and die.

"And all the kings and princes resolved to assemble the sons of men, and to come to Enoch, thinking that they might all speak to him at the time when he should come forth amongst them, and they did so. And the day came when Enoch went forth and they all assembled and came to him, and Enoch spoke to them the words of the Lord and he taught them wisdom and knowledge, and they bowed down before him and they said, May the king live, may the king live! And in some time after, when the kings and princes and sons of men were speaking to Enoch, and Enoch was teaching them the ways of God behold, an angel of the Lord then called unto Enoch from heaven, and wished to bring him up to heaven to make him reign there over the sons of God, as he had reigned over the sons of men on earth.

"When at that time Enoch heard this, he went and assembled all the inhabitants of the earth, and taught them wisdom and knowledge and gave them divine instructions, and he said to them, I have been required to ascend into heaven; I therefore do not know the day of my going. And now therefore I will teach you wisdom and knowledge and will give you instruction before I leave you, how to act upon earth whereby you may live; and he did so. And he taught them wisdom and knowledge, and gave them instruction, and he reproved them, and he placed before them statutes and judgments to do upon earth, and he made peace among them, and he taught them everlasting life, and dwelt with them some time teaching them these things. And at that time the sons of men were with Enoch, and Enoch was speaking to them, and they lifted up their eyes and the likeness of a great horse descending from heaven, and the horse paced the air. And they told Enoch what they had seen, and Enoch said to them. On my account does this horse descend upon the earth; the time is come when I must go from you and I shall no more be seen by you. And the horse descended at that time and stood before Enoch, and all the sons of men that were with Enoch saw him. And Enoch then again ordered a voice to be proclaimed, saying, Where is the man who delighteth to know the ways of the Lord his God, let him come this day to Enoch before he is taken from us. And all the sons of men assembled and came to Enoch that day; and all the kings of the earth with their princes and counselors remained with him that day; and Enoch then taught the sons of men wisdom and knowledge, and gave them divine instruction; and he bade them serve the Lord and walk in His ways all the days of their lives, and he continued to make peace among them.

"And it was after this that he rose up and rode upon the horse; and he went forth and all the sons of men went after him, about eight hundred thousand men; and they went with him one day's journey. And the second day he said to them, Return home to your tents, why will ye go? Perhaps you may die. And some of them went from him, and those that remained went with him six day's journey; and Enoch said to them every day, Return to your tents, lest ye die; but they were not willing to return, and they went with him. And on the sixth day some of the men remained and clung to him, and they said to him, We will go with thee to the place where thou goest: as the Lord liveth, only death shall separate us. And they urged him so much to go with him that he ceased speaking to them; and they went after him and would not return.

"And when the kings returned, they caused a census to be taken in order to know the number of the remaining men that went with Enoch; and it was upon the seventh day that Enoch ascended into heaven in a whirlwind, with horses and chariots of fire. And on the eighth day all the kings that had been with Enoch sent to bring back the number of men that were with Enoch, in that place from which he ascended to heaven. And all those kings went to the place and they found the earth there filled with snow, and upon the snow were large stones of snow, and one said to the other. Come, let us break through this snow and see; perhaps the men that remained with Enoch are dead, and are now under the stones of snow. And they searched but could not find him, for he had ascended into heaven."26 message to one another and to all mankind, "Holy, holy, holy is the Lord of hosts: the whole earth is full of His glory." The prophet Isaiah, that holy man from whose lips had poured forth mighty utterance of prophetic truth, upon beholding the glory of the Lord, cried, "Woe is me! for I am undone; because I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips: for mine eyes have seen the King, the Lord of hosts." Isa. 6:5

If then the fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom, the beginning of knowledge, and the beginning of strength; if it is a fountain of life and the way by which we depart from the realm of death; if such reverence and respect for God brings strong confidence, the instruction of wisdom and understanding, and by it saints abide satisfied and free from fear of evil, then the fear of God, the elements of which are reverence and deep respect, must become first and foremost in all our understanding of Him. All God's people must surely have noticed that holy men, even in the presence of angels, fall down in fear, but in the presence of God even angels, glorious in wisdom and power, cover their faces before His matchless glory and holiness. There is a tragic abundance of lightness among professing Christians, which should never be. Therefore much of Babylon's mis-named worship is abomination to the Lord. I believe firmly in the Pentecostal experience. It is as old as the church age. Yet the lightness and frivolity that has developed among these people through the changing years is indeed incredible.

The fear of the Lord brings wisdom and knowledge and the increase of these attributes multiplies the fear of the Lord. Every true revelation will mightily increase respect for our all-glorious heavenly Father. Even to consider His attributes fills the saints with reverence and godly fear. To learn that God is omnipotent, omniscient, immutable, eternal, compassionate, full of loving kindness and tender mercies causes men to bow in awe before Him. Such characteristics do not abide naturally in us and they do not exist apart from Him. Wonderful as these divine perfections are, they are only the beginning of wisdom, but when our spiritual eyes behold and our spiritual minds begin to grasp things which in other ages were not revealed to men, but which are now being unfolded to those who walk in humility before Him, then our love and respect for our exalted heavenly Father grows exceedingly. Then even the slightest lightness or thought of disrespect toward Him appalls our souls, causing us to cringe in spirit. Let our ransomed beings be like unto those mighty cherubim, glorious in strength and power, who cry one to another, "Holy, holy, holy is the Lord of hosts; the whole earth is full of His glory." Let wicked men who know Him not wag their idle tongues to curse and blaspheme that holy name which is above every name, but let no word of lightness or disrespect soil our lips or bring dishonor to Him before whom all creation will one day bow to confess on bended knee that Jesus Christ is Lord to the glory of God the Father.

The nature of blasphemy is not generally understood among the children of God. The common conception of blasphemy seems to be that it is merely using profane language in which the name of God or of Christ is involved. This is indeed a form of blasphemy, but by no means its fullest extent. Blasphemy comprises "any attempt to lessen reverence for the name of Jehovah." (Funk and Wagnall) It consists of any irreverent act or any irreverent word. The woman who recently threw the Bible on the floor and stamped on it is guilty of blasphemy. The craze that is sweeping Italy for wearing "Jesus jeans" is blasphemy and gross irreverence. The following paragraph is a quotation from the Saskatoon Star-Phoenix, Dec. 3, 1974: "Jesus jeans started things with its advertisements containing Biblical quotations such as, 'If you love me, follow me,' next to almost nude starlets." This is blasphemy and is a dire warning to us all that sooner than we think the wrath of God in final judgment will fall upon all who involve themselves in such things. Well did the apostle Jude describe them in the eighth verse of his epistle. "Likewise also these filthy dreamers defile the flesh, despise dominion, and speak evil of dignities... Woe to them! For they have gone in the way of Cain, and ran greedily after the error of Balaam for reward, and perished in the gainsaying of Core. These are... raging waves of the sea, foaming out their own shame; wandering stars, to whom is reserved the blackness of darkness forever." Jude 8-13.
Many religious groups of the present hour show great disrespect and irreverence in the names they have adopted for themselves. Such names as The God Squad, Jesus Freaks, and others of like mien are an affront to God and in my opinion are names of blasphemy. However well-meaning a person may be, it is blasphemy to write scripture texts on the walls of latrines amid all the filthy poetry and prose that appears there. "Unto the pure all things are pure: but unto them that are defiled and unbelieving is nothing pure; but even their mind and conscience is defiled." Titus 1:15

The world is getting worse while the thoughts and imaginations of men's hearts are only evil continually. Even while we wonder if there is any further depth of iniquity to which men can go, some greater evil crops up to spread its noxious seed all over the world. The pit from which such evils come is bottomless. It is called in scripture the bottomless pit. Therefore there can be no end to the vile smoke of corruption that ascends from it. John saw three unclean spirits like frogs come out of the mouth of the dragon, out of the mouth of the Beast, and out of the mouth of the false prophet. (Rev. 16:13) I shall not make any attempt to interpret the meaning of this verse, because I do not know its full meaning, but even a blind man can see that uncleanness in all its aspects is being poured out upon the world. Man is not content to defile his own flesh and destroy his own soul, but he adds sin to sin and evil to evil by delighting to blaspheme that worthy name which is above every name and before which all knees will one day bow of things in heaven and things in earth and things under the earth.

I write these things, holy brethren, because God has not called us unto uncleanness, but unto holiness. I Thess. 4:7. Anna Jameson wrote, "Blessed is the memory of those who have kept themselves unspotted from the world - yea, more blessed and more dear the memory of those who have kept themselves unspotted in the world." Reverence is a sign of strength; irreverence is the surest sign of weakness. No man will rise high who jeers at sacred things. The fine loyalties of life must be reverenced or they will be foresworn in the day of trial. I write these things, holy brethren, because of the subject of this message. No man may hope to be a partaker of the mystery of Christ unless and until he has cast the shoes from off his feet to tread the way of holiness that leads wayfaring men to their place in Christ. "An highway shall be there, and a way, and it shall be called the way of holiness; the unclean shall not pass over it; but it shall be for those: the wayfaring men, though fools, shall not err therein." Isa. 35:8

Holy! Holy! Holy! All the saints adore Thee!
Casting down their golden crowns beside the glassy sea.
Cherubim and seraphim, falling down before Thee,
Which wert and art and evermore shalt be.
Holy! Holy! Holy! Though the darkness hide Thee,
Though the eye of sinful man Thy glory may not see.
Only Thou art holy; there is none beside Thee,
Perfect in power, in love and purity.

Learn to look away from man, whose breath is in his nostrils. Who is Paul and who is Apollos but ministers by whom we have believed? Hold no man's person in admiration. Look beyond men to Christ, from the glory of whose presence the eternal light glistens, sending its rays to gladden every humble heart. Yea, look to Him whose light is brighter than a thousand suns. When you behold Him transfigured before you, even such eminent men as Moses and Elijah will depart and your wondering eyes will see no man but Jesus only. Matt. 17:1-8. When He walks with you, your heart will burn within you as He talks to you by the way and opens to your spirit the mysteries kept secret and hidden since the world began.

Only faintly now do our eyes behold the splendor of the realm we are approaching, but if we approach softly with reverence and godly fear, not disrespectfully and thoughtlessly as nosey children prying into some sacred thing, then the Lord of glory will meet us and will be a Father unto us and we shall be sons of God unto whom the Father will reveal the secrets we need to know. Thus shall we come into that same image and be sharers with Christ of the glory laid up in store for us before the world began.

The mystery of Christ! What could be more solemn or sacred than that? Wonderful is the revelation of Jesus Christ, the son of God, to the hearts of sinful men, but to the saint of God there is a revelation of Christ that is greater far than this — an understanding so tremendous in its aspects that those who grasp it will be thought by some to be presumptuous blasphemers. Unworthy is man to open the book and break the seven seals thereof, and my own soul weeps much because my lips are unworthy to proclaim the high and exalted things that are clearly written for us to see and believe. I do not say they are written for all men to see, but they are there for the elect to see and, once having seen them, we may partake of them by the faith that is given them of God.

The Christ theme, my beloved friends, did not begin with the manger of Bethlehem nor yet with the annunciation of the angel Gabriel, who came to announce the birth of God's Christ. Long centuries before the birth of Jesus Christ at Bethlehem, the prophets foretold the coming of Him who was to be the Redeemer of Israel and the Savior of the world. "Behold My servant whom I uphold; mine elect, in whom My soul delighteth; I have put My spirit upon Him: He shall bring forth judgment to the Gentiles. He shall not cry, nor lift up, nor cause His voice to be heard in the street. A bruised reed shall He not break, and the smoking flax shall He not quench: He shall bring forth judgment unto truth. He shall not fail nor be discouraged, till He have set judgment in the earth: and the isles shall wait for His law." Isa. 42:1-4. With many such prophecies did the Spirit speak of the coming of the Just One, who was to redeem His people from their sin and make so great an atonement before God that all the world would be reconciled unto Him.

It is not our place here to search out or unfold the many ways the Old Testament spoke of the coming of God's Christ, but an earnest searcher may find Him in practically every chapter of the Old Testament if we look for Him in type, prefigure, allegory or prophesy. So sure is this truth that many generations of Israel earnestly looked for the coming of the Messiah. When Herod questioned them as to where the Christ-child should be born, they replied without the slightest hesitation that He should be born in Bethlehem of Judea, and were quick to note the prophecy of Micah, "And thou, Bethlehem, in the land of Juda, art not the least among the princes of Juda: for out of thee shall come a Governor, that shall rule My people Israel." Matt. 2:6. We stated that the Christ theme did not begin at Bethlehem. The Old Testament prophecies concerning the coming of the Just One can be numbered in the hundreds and I would say, without attempting a count, that the types and allegories foreshadowing the coming of Christ far outnumbered the prophecies. Many and varied as were the prophecies that foretold the coming of the Just One, it is true that all prophecies which concerned His coming as the despised and rejected Savior were fulfilled to the letter when He came the first time. Other Old Testament prophecies concerning the glory of His coming kingdom must await that wonderful day when He shall come to be glorified in His saints and admired in all them that believe. 2 Thess. 1:10.

Having settled in our minds that the Christ theme did not begin at Bethlehem, I propose to show that it did not end there either. The completeness of God's glorious Christ must of necessity be the central theme of the whole Bible and the hope of all creation, for it is in Him that all fullness must eventually dwell. By God's Christ peace has been made through the blood which was shed upon the cross, as Paul clearly stated: "Having made peace through the blood of His cross, by Him to reconcile all things unto Himself, by Him, I say, whether they be things in earth, or things in heaven. And you, that were sometime alienated and enemies in your mind by wicked works, yet now hath He reconciled in the body of His flesh through death, to present you holy and unblameable and unreproveable in His sight." Col. 1:20-22.

As the writings of the New Testament progress, we see a theme unfold before our wondering eyes, which in the strictest sense can only be a New Testament truth. That blessed theme, which angels desire to look into, is the truth concerning a mystical body, which God is now forming. The sacred scriptures bear witness that this mystical body is the body of Christ. The true church is the ecclesia. The ecclesia consists of the called out ones. These holy saints are those whom Christ has called out of sin, out of the world, out of the world's church systems, and completely out of Babylon. They stand before God in the end of the age as a mystical company that has not only been called out of the world, but called unto Christ. The true church (not the false one) is the mystical body of Christ. Scripture after scripture unfolds, adds to and builds up that sacred truth. Thus Paul distinctly writes, "By (in) one Spirit are we all baptized into one body." We do not make our entrance into this glorious realm by signing a membership card or by a handshake at the end of an evangelistic meeting. We come through the "washing of regeneration and the renewing of the Holy Ghost." If we do not come in by this door, we do not come in at all. Many tens of thousands of so-called conversions are nothing more than human reformations. There has been no repentance before God and no faith toward Jesus Christ and there has been no entrance of the Holy Spirit to implant the Christ seed within. I greatly fear that a large portion of the revivals today are revivals only in name. The main theme is not repentance toward God and faith toward Christ, but how much more money is needed to carry on the ministry of the exalted preacher in the midst.

CHRIST IN THE BELIEVER

When a man repents and turns to God, the Spirit of Christ comes into that man. Christ in you is the hope of glory. With all the holy awe, the reverence and fear that I feel in my soul, I aver that, when anyone comes to Christ in repentance, the Christ seed is as truly planted within his spirit as the Christ seed was implanted within the womb of the blessed virgin in the long ago. If Christ be in you, then, though the body is still dead because of original sin, the spirit has become alive because of righteousness, that is, the righteousness of Christ. And the day will come, when the work is complete, that the Spirit of Him who raised Jesus from the dead will also make alive your mortal body, even as it is written: "This corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality. So when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory." 1 Cor. 15:53-54.

How wonderful it is that these tremendous and almost incredible statements concerning Christ and His body were made by men like Paul and are not doctrines that originated with me! I am convinced that it took grace on the part of Paul to unfold the unspeakable things which man is not worthy to utter. Things, which cannot be grasped by the natural mind, must be revealed by the Holy Spirit. Therefore Paul, unfolding them plainly, states, "For I say, through the grace given unto me, to every man that is among you, not to think of himself more highly than he ought to think; but to think soberly, according as God hath dealt to every man the measure of faith." Rom. 12:3. He said that, my friends, because he knew the profound statements that were to follow and he knew that, unless there was a spirit of humility and reverence, the hearers would never understand.

Paul then continued: "For as we have many members in one body, and all members have not the same office, so we, being many, are one body in Christ, and every one members one of another." Rom. 12:4, 5. There is no passage in the New Testament more powerful than this as it concerns God's Christ, for in this passage it is shown beyond doubt that just as the human body is a body of many members so also God's Christ is a body of many members. But the enormous significance of these words is magnified when we grasp the truth that Jesus Christ of Nazareth, the Son of God, born in the manger, crucified, risen and ascended to heaven, is Himself the head of the Christ body. Col. 1:18.

All natural things have spiritual counterparts and spiritual meanings. Everything God does follows a distinct pattern and every natural pattern has a corresponding spiritual one. Thus we plainly observe that every man consists of two things in particular - a head and a body. If one had only a head, he would be incomplete and could not endure. If he had only a body and no head, he would be incomplete and useless. Therefore to make a complete man there must be both the head and the body and the two must be joined inseparably together into one glorious being. Now when a child is born, the head is born first. Then follows the body with all its many members — the shoulders, the arms, the torso, the legs, and finally the feet. The feet are born last and also the quickest and easiest, but there is neither fullness nor completeness until the head and the body stand complete and entire as one.

Take the shoes from off your feet, 0 saint of God, for the ground on which we stand is holy. Put away all lightness and foolishness that with heads bowed down and hearts uplifted in worship God's Holy Spirit may reveal how the head, which came forth from the womb almost two thousand years ago, and the body, which has been in preparation ever since the day of Pentecost, is indeed but one Christ. Without that blessed body which through the ages He has been preparing in secret in the lowest parts of the earth (Psa. 139:15), God's Christ would be incomplete. This was clearly shown by Paul when he said, "(God) hath put all things under His feet, and gave Him to be the head overall things to the church, which is His body, the fullness (completeness) of Him that filleth all in all:" Eph. 1:22, 23.

The translation of this passage by Weymouth is even more enlightening. It reads as follows: "God has put all things under His feet, and has appointed Him universal and supreme Head of the church, which is His body, the completeness of Him who everywhere fills the universe with Himself." Thus Paul definitely shows that the body of Christ is the completeness of God's Christ. For this reason I said above that the Christ theme did not end at Bethlehem. There the revelation of the head was given, but the body of that same Christ has been developing throughout the entire church age that God's glorious Christ may stand complete at the end of this age, not as Christ and the Bride as so many suppose, but as Christ the head and Christ the body, the male, the man, Jesus the head, with all His many brethren, the body. Jesus was the first born of many brethren (Rom. 8:29), or as Weymouth puts it, "the first born of a vast family of sons," the sons of God, the joint heirs with Christ. It is Christ the head and Christ the body that forms the completeness of Christ, the fullness of Him that filleth all in all. "This is My beloved Son in whom I am well pleased." Such was the heavenly spectacle that John beheld when he was on lonely Patmos and the heavens were opened to him.

We miss so much vital truth by our careless scanning of the Bible. It may be beneficial at times to read the scripture as a narrative, but there are times when we must search out its hidden meaning by the help of that blessed Holy Spirit who has been sent by the Father to guide us into all truth. No book ever written even remotely compares to the Bible. Its burning message of truth reaches and arrests men on whatsoever level they dwell. As our understanding rises, so rises its message of truth. The things concerning the outer court are understood by those who dwell therein. The wonderful communion of the holy place is enjoyed by those who dwell within its holy place and they desire no more to walk without. But the supernal glories of the holy of holies belongs to him who in garments of glory and beauty treads its holy sanctuary. The "unspeakable things" that belong to the third heaven cannot be uttered or expressed to those who dwell in a lower realm. For this reason Paul said, "I knew a man in Christ (please note, in Christ) above fourteen years ago, (whether in the body, I cannot tell; or whether out of the body, I cannot tell: God knoweth;) such an one caught up to the third heaven. And I knew such a man . . . how that he was caught up into paradise, and heard unspeakable words, which it is not lawful for a man to utter." 2 Cor. 12:2-4.

You have possibly noticed that, when Peter, James and John were with Jesus on the Mount of Transfiguration, they, too, saw unspeakable things, which were unlawful to be uttered. That is evidently the reason Jesus warned them never to mention the experience until He was risen from the dead. No man can receive the message of the transfiguration until he is first risen with Christ in regeneration, and even then his understanding is very limited. The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God, neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned. When the Holy Spirit was sent into the world to fill the hearts and lives of all who believe, the heavenly promise was given, "He will guide you into all truth." John 16:13. And again, "He shall glorify Me: for He shall receive of mine, and shall show it unto you." John 16:14.

To the natural man the Bible is a foolish book, the reason being that the book is spiritual while he is carnal. The carnal man cannot understand the things of the Spirit. Much less can he receive them. We must carry this point a step farther, however, for the same principle that applies to the carnal man applies also to the carnal Christian who has been willing to accept as final truth the ideas taught him from the beginning, but who has been unwilling to ask the Lord to reveal the unsearchable riches of Christ. Let us pay heed to the word unsearchable. It should be clear that, if these riches are unsearchable, then there remains no possibility of our discovering them by study, by schools of learning, by preaching or any other way. Our only hope of discovering them is to come before God as an empty, undone vessel, a literal know-nothing, seeking that the Holy Spirit would receive of Christ and show them unto us. John 16:14. He who comes to God in such a manner as this will sooner or later find heaven opening to him, perhaps only a tiny break in the clouds at first, but as light is received and walked in, the murky clouds race off in crowds, the sun shines ever more brightly from his sea of glory and the path of the just becomes as the shining light that shineth more and more until the day is full.

Ah, my brother and my sister, if you would know God and see the glory He has prepared for those that love Him, you must void yourself of earthly learning. You will find yourself unlearning a thousand things you once were sure you knew. Knowledge puffeth up, but love buildeth up, for "we know nothing yet as we ought to know, but if any man love God, the same is known of Him"

With these thoughts filling our hearts perhaps we can approach with unshod feet the heavenly wonders John saw that day on lonely Patmos, where he had been exiled for preaching things which carnal men can never understand. He begins his narrative by saying, "I was in the Spirit on the Lord's day." Rev. 1:10. I may be wrong, but I do not think John was referring to Saturday or Sunday when he spoke of the Lord's day. Though the vision probably occurred on one of those days, it matters little, but John was in the Spirit, and in spirit he was carried beyond the day of grace to the day of the Lord. There he saw God's plan unfolding as no sainthad ever seen before. In spirit he stood at the end of this age of grace to see with wondering eyes the mystery of Christ in completeness. His inspired vision beheld the fulfillment of the words, "Behold I and the children which God hath given Me." Heb. 2:13. For two thousand years of grace the purpose of God had gone irresistibly forward. The temple "not made with hands" had been rising to form an habitation for God in the Spirit. Through the crucible of suffering and the scourging which every son receiveth God had prepared Himself a vast family of sons that the scripture might be fulfilled which is written, "That He might be the first born among many brethren." Rom. 8:29. That is to say, that Jesus, the first born and oldest Son of God, might be the head of that vast family of younger sons who were to be revealed in the extremity of the age as the body of God's Son.
Christ the head and Christ the body form one glorious Christ, "for as the body is one, and hath many members, and all the members of that one body, being many, are one body, so also is Christ." Cor. 12:12. "For as we have many members in one body, and all members have not the same office: so we, being many, are one body in Christ, and every one members one of another." Rom. 12:4, 5. Hallelujah, my brethren! Is he not

When John on the great day of revelation heard the awe inspiring words, "I am Alpha and Omega, the first and the last," he turned to see who was speaking and, being turned, he saw seven golden candlesticks, and in the midst of the candlesticks one like unto the Son of man. Rev. 1:13. How inadequate and unworthy I feel to even try to explain such a scene as this, much less to expound the awesome words, "I am the first and the last." John did not say he saw the Son of man, the Jesus with whom he was so familiar and upon whose bosom he had leaned, but he said, "I saw one like unto the Son of man." You have surely read these words:
"We know that, when He shall appear, we shall be like Him, for we shall see Him as He is." John 3:2. The voice of the glorious Alpha and Omega was to John the sound of many waters. Waters in scripture signify people and tongues and nations. Rev. 17:15. The sound as of many waters indicates beyond doubt that the one like unto the Son of man was not one, but many. It was one in the sense that the body was one. It was many in the sense that the body has many members, for as the body is one but has many members, so also is Christ. 1 Cor. 12:12. John was seeing both the Alpha, who appeared as the head two thousand years ago, and the Omega, the body that appears at the end of this age. The Alpha and the Omega are one even as the many letters of the alphabet form one alphabet or as the many members of the body form one body. The appearance of that body, now joined to the head, is one like unto the Son of man.

Words are helpless, hopeless and inadequate when necessity demands that we explain the things of the Spirit.
In spirit we see the invisible, hear the inaudible, and understand the incomprehensible. What man knoweth the things of God save the Spirit of God that is in him? How therefore can we hope to explain with human words what we see in the Spirit? But blessed are your eyes, for they see, and your ears, for they hear.

My brethren, I see the fullness of Christ, not as He appeared at Bethlehem, nor even as He appeared at the resurrection, but the fullness of Christ as He appears at the end of the age when the body is resurrected and Christ the head and Christ the body stand together, filling all things, the head as white as wool, the eyes a flame of fire, the body clothed with a garment down to the foot, a golden girdle about the breast, and the feet - the glorious feet which we the saints of the twentieth century are - the last to be born, appearing as brass that is burned and purified in a furnace of fire. Never before had any man seen the things John saw as he was in the Spirit that day. It was the fullness of God's Christ which he beheld, the wonder which centuries before holy angels had desired to look into. It was the completeness of Him who everywhere fills the universe with Himself, the head and the body together, the fullness of God's wonderful Christ.
My soul doth magnify the Lord and my spirit doth rejoice in God, my Savior, and my voice is lifted up on high to sing with David, the prophet of the Lord, "When I consider Thy heavens, the work of Thy fingers, the moon and the stars, which Thou hast ordained; what is man that Thou art mindful of him? and the son of man, that Thou visitest him? For Thou hast made him a little lower than the angels, and hast crowned him with glory and honor. Thou madest him to have dominion over the works of Thy hands; Thou hast put all things under his feet."

Psa. 8:3-6. And Paul the apostle, taking up the theme centuries later when the Christ vision was more nearly complete, continued: "It is not to angels that God has assigned the sovereignty of that coming world of which we speak. But, as we know, a psalmist has exclaimed, How poor a creature is man, and yet Thou dost visit him? For Thou hast made him a little lower than the angels; with glory and honor Thou hast crowned him, and set him over the works of Thy hands. Thou hast put everything in subjection under his feet. For this subjecting of the universe to man implies the leaving of nothing not subject to him. But we do not as yet see the universe subject to him. But we do see Him who was made for a little while lower than the angels - even Jesus - because of His suffering of death crowned with glory and honor, that by God's grace He might taste death for every man. For it is fitting that He for whom and through whom all things exist, in bringing many sons to glory: should perfect by suffering the Prince Leader of their salvation. For both He who sanctifies and those whom He is sanctifying have all one Father; and for this reason He is not ashamed to speak of them as His brothers; as when He says: 'I will proclaim Thy name to my brothers; In the midst of the congregation I will hymn Thy praises' (Psa. 22:22); and again, 'I will be one whose trust reposes in God' (Psa. 18:2; Isa. 12:2); and again, 'Here am I, and here are the children (sons) God has given Me' (Isa. 8:18);" Heb. 2: 5-13. Weymouth.

I exhort all who hear these truths to earnestly look to God for wisdom, light, and understanding. What I have spoken is beyond the scope of the natural mind. How can human mind comprehend the truth that "Christ is in you?" To the natural mind such truth may even sound childish and silly, yet the Holy Spirit will reveal its depths to those who ask Him, diligently searching out the truth and awaiting His instruction. But we shall go much farther than this by saying that, great as is the truth of "Christ in you" and glorious beyond the scope of all but the spiritual mind, the truth that you are "in Christ" is fathomless in its depths and lofty beyond the highest eminence. If "Christ in man" is the hope of glory, as the scripture says it is (Col. 1:27), then man in Christ must certainly be the glory. In Christ! In Christ! Think of the glory of the expression! "God was in Christ" the word declares. And now - mystery of mysteries - He is saying that His people are also in Christ. Then we are told, "God was in Christ reconciling the world to Himself," and now "if any man be in Christ he is a new creation." 2 Cor. 5:17. Certainly he must be a new creation, for he has entered the realm where God dwells. No longer is he of the earth earthy, but one spirit with the Lord from heaven. Herein is the prayer of Jesus fulfilled, "I in them, and Thou in Me, that they may be made perfect in one." John 17:23. This oneness is no unity of doctrine or belief as the church system would have us think, but individual members baptized into one body and that body the body of Christ.

In the beginning of the present age God manifested His first Son, the oldest and most illustrious son and head of His glorious Christ. But in the extremity of the age, when the dead in Christ shall rise, He will manifest the fullness of His Christ, the illustrious head and the glorious body together. This is the temple of the Lord, the habitation of God through the Spirit. It is no wonder that John, when he beheld this wonderful sight, fell down as a dead man. Even the thought of its glory slays us. The old creation dies within. The Adamic nature is reckoned as dead and the carnal mind is recognized as an enemy of God. The spirit takes wings to join in the voice that is as the sound of many waters. To the listening ears of the beloved John the voice of the one like unto the Son of man was as the voice of many, and had his eyes been able to penetrate the more excellent glory that surrounded the heavenly scene, I am sure he would have observed that this was not one Son of man, but a vast multitude of sons. The body is one, but has many members, and all the members of that body, being many, are one body; so also is Christ. Elect of God, can you not see it? Not Adam as he was at the first, but Adam as he is at last. Not the Son of man as He was at first, but the Son of man as He is at last. For thus saith the Lord, "I am the first and the last; I am the beginning and the end; I am the Alpha and the Omega." This is God's glorious Christ. This is the bridegroom for whom the bride will be prepared in the millennial age.
This is He who must reign until He has put all enemies under His feet and who, when all things are subdued under Him, will Himself deliver up the kingdom to God, the Father, that God may be all and in all.

"For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive but every man in his own order: Christ the first fruits; afterwards they that are Christ's at His coming. Then cometh the end, when He shall have delivered up the kingdom to God, even the Father; when He shall have put down all rule and all authority and power. For He must reign till He hath put all enemies under His feet." 1 Cor. 15:22-25.

Christ filleth all in all. Eph. 1:23. He filleth the universe with Himself. (Weymouth). If our eyes could now be opened to see the glory of the fullness of God's Christ, I believe we would see a form like unto the Son of man, reaching from earth to heaven, and should we come near to look more closely, we would see that every cell in that enormous body is an individual in-Christed saint - many members of one body and one Christ, for as the body is one and has many members, so also is Christ. It is with trepidation and awe that I use the word in-Christed, but use it I must, for we have become members of God's Christ, of His body, of His flesh and of His bones.

A WORD TO THE WISE

Paul the apostle taught us to suffer the word of exhortation. Heb. 13: 22. None of us, it seems, ever attains the place where we no longer need to be exhorted. We are all creatures of habit, so much so that we are inclined to tread and retread our familiar paths, journeying from year to year and decade-to-decade in the ever deepening ruts of our tradition, wearing them ever deeper as the years go by. But the path of the just is not a rut; neither is it a well-paved highway over which millions pass day by day on their journey heavenward. The path of the just is not a road at all, but a path that leads out into territory where few feet have ever trod. The path of the just is a path over which most Christians refuse to walk. They much prefer the well-traveled roads of traditional religion. They feel secure where the crowd is and they enjoy the friendship and excitement that goes on all about them. Century after century Christians have walked in traditional paths, never venturing to go beyond the fringes of their realm or to cross the boundaries that have been set for them by others. They love to feel that there is a fence around them and they feel sure that, if they abide within its perimeter, they will be safe and all will be well.

While this type of traditionalism may seem well and good to the majority of believers, I think even the most cautious individual will agree that the scripture plainly speaks of realms which "eye hath not seen and ear hath not heard, neither have entered the heart of man." Over and over God's word sets forth mysteries that must be explored. The kingdom of God is a foremost mystery. The more its mystery is brought into the light of prayer and the word of God, the more glorious it appears, but one of our first discoveries will be that the kingdom of God is an unfolding mystery, - and we must affirm here and now that all mysteries are mysteries that unfold gradually, carefully and wonderfully as the days and years go by. So it is with the mystery of Christ, the mystery of Christ in you, the mystery of the resurrection, the mystery of the body of Christ, the mystery of the bride. At first sight they are like hard little seeds, lying hard and dry before the planting, perhaps the seed of a flower, a vegetable, a fruit tree, a mighty oak, or a noxious weed. We hold the tiny seed of a flower in our hand. It may be the seed of a rose, a pansy, or any one of a thousand exotic flowers, but we do not know what manner of plant will come forth from this tiny brown thing that lies so dry and dead before our eyes. We cannot see its magnificent beauty nor can we touch its fragile petals or smell the fragrance of its perfume, but they are there. All their glorious splendor will unfold as the days or years pass by.

The hard little seed must first be planted in the ground. It must undergo a form of death and resurrection. It must be softened by the moisture, warmed by the sun, and nourished by the husbandman until it appears a thing of beauty and fragrance upon the earth. Surely one unlearned would be inclined to say that this flower of such great beauty could not have sprung from a thing so insignificant as a seed. But spring from a seed it did, and if you will look closely, you will now see that it, too, has borne seed, ready to reproduce itself in another plant in another day. How hard it is to understand that the lifeless little brown acorn contains in itself all the glory of the towering oak tree! Yet this is a thing of truth and fact. Not one element of that mighty tree which towers toward the sky was missing in the little seed that fell into the ground and died.
Not only is this true in the realm of trees and plants; it is also true that the microscopic seed of man contains in itself all the elements of the man that shall be, even to the coloring of the eyes and the shade of the skin. These things are all great mysteries and no scientific mind on earth can understand them. Some will make a feeble attempt to explain them, but understand them they cannot.

If the mystery of natural things can be so great, how much greater must be the mystery of spiritual things! Jesus once said to Nicodemus, "If I have told you of earthly things, and ye believe not, how shall ye believe if I tell you of heavenly things?" The mystery of Christ, the mystery of the kingdom, the mystery of Christ in you and you in Christ, and the mystery of godliness — these are all heavenly things. No man can understand them by the vain prying of the natural mind, because the natural mind is an earthly thing. The scripture teaches us that all spiritual knowledge must come by revelation, "for the things of God knoweth no man, but God hath revealed them to us by His Spirit, for the Spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God."

Now, dear saints of God, this brings us to an important thought. I must confess that I have often been distressed by the lack of understanding among the people of God. Somehow so many seem to "miss the point." At times I have sought God with fasting and prayer for help to make the message as plain as possible, but have found that, while a few people grasp the truth by the Spirit, the majority read the message, lay it aside, and think they know it. In fact they have failed to grasp its truth or to have entered into its precincts. For this reason I exhort you not to throw these messages away, but after you have read them, lay them aside and reread them later on. If you reread them six months or year from now, you will be amazed to see how the truth has grown in your heart. You will see and understand many things you did not notice at your first reading. These little Page booklets are circulated for no other reason than to bring God's people into a more vital union with Himself and His eternal purpose. Every one is filled with truth and truth that can be grasped and entered into if we wait on God and look for inspiration.

May I exhort all to reread and reconsider the message entitled The Meaning of the Cross, March, 1968. This message describes vividly how, before the world began, God the Father took all foundation the experience of the believer the moment he sees by faith what God has done, and the moment he sees that he is crucified with Christ, because God placed him in Christ and then crucified Him, then he reckons himself dead to sin and alive unto God.

I make a special point of this because it has been a distress to me to find people still indulging in the old fruitless war of trying to overcome the carnal nature, trying to get the victory over the old man, trying to suppress carnality. My brethren, the moment you see by faith that our old man is crucified with Him, your battles are over. "Knowing this," Paul wrote, "that our old man is crucified with Him, that the body of sin might be destroyed, that henceforth we should not serve sin." Rom. 6:6. I long to see God's people living in this victorious realm, for why need you struggle to crucify that which has already hung on the cross of Christ? I exhort you to reread this special number. If you do not have it in your possession, we can supply it free of charge.

I trust from month to month to be able to give a few words of exhortation concerning the writings. Even the subject of this present number, which points out our identification with Christ, is so easy to miss and fail to grasp. God's people must learn to live and act in vital union with Christ, because God has made us members of Him. Let us not live as the world lives or even as ordinary Christians live, but let us grow up into Christ, who is the head and "from whom the whole body, fittedly framed together, groweth up to an holy temple in the Lord." We are not to live in chambering and wantonness, or in envy, or in strife, or in pride and foolishness. We are not to promote the Babylon system or rejoice in its works, but let us consider Him and follow Him. Let us lay aside every weight and the sins that so easily beset us and let us run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith. Let us endure the cross and despise the shame that we, too, may sit with Him in His glory. Let us deliberately "lay aside every weight" while we diligently "lay hold on life", our eternal joy and crown.

THE MYSTERY OF CHRIST AND OUR RELATIONSHIP TO HIM

TREASURES OF TRUTH, Volume 3, The Mystery of Christ and Our Union With Him [George R. Hawtin] ~ BOOK
"What man knoweth the things of a man, save the spirit of man that is in him? Even so the things of God knoweth no man, but the Spirit of God." 1 Cor. 2:11. It would be impossible for the creatures of the animal world to comprehend the things of the human world because these two realms are separated the one from the other by an impassable gulf over which neither creation can pass. Even so the things of God can no man know because the realm of God is as high above the human realm as heaven is high above the earth. Though we are so stranded and limited in our understanding of Him, and a great gulf lies between us, that gulf is only impassable to those who desire to live in the realm of the flesh and of the carnal mind. The gulf is not impassable to those who seek to live in the realm of the Spirit, for "we have received, not the spirit of the world, but the spirit which is of God; that we might know the things that are freely given to us of God:" 1 Cor. 2:12.

Again it is written, "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love Him. But God hath revealed them unto us by His Spirit: for the Spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God." 1 Cor. 2:9, 10 Our faith must never stand on the wisdom of men. If we allow ourselves to stand upon such an unsure foundation as that, then we have no faith at all, or what we have is groundless and fruitless. The wisdom, which we speak, is not the wisdom of men. Faith cannot be built upon that. The wisdom, which we speak is the wisdom of God, a wisdom which none of the princes of this world ever knew. It is God's intention to destroy the wisdom of the wise and bring to nothing the understanding of the prudent. Therefore, He asks, "Where is the wise? Where is the scribe? Where is the disputer of this world? Hath not God made foolish the wisdom of this world?" 1 Cor. 1:19, 20.

When we endeavor to receive the revelation of infinite truth, we are often brought into conflict with that element of human wisdom, which asserts itself within us. It is then above all other times that unbelief raises its ugly head to shout aloud that these things cannot be. The wisdom of this world questions in unbelief, "How can man be one with man? How can saints be joined together in one body? How can they be knit together and bonded together in one?" "It is impossible," the flesh declares in unbelief. "Such a thing is contrary to reason and contrary to nature and opposed to all wisdom." Since, then, they cannot believe that man can be joined together in perfect unity, how much less can their minds believe that God Himself can become one with man and men become members of His body, of His flesh and of His bones, of His Spirit, and of His mind! How can man, born in sin and shapen in iniquity, be made to drink of the Spirit of God and live by Him? "The Bible sounds foolish," unbelievers have told me, and so it does to some, but has not the Lord Himself declared this very fact to be so when He says, "The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God, for they axe foolishness unto him; neither can he know them, for they are spiritually discerned." Then again it is stated for all of us to hear that "the wisdom of man is foolishness with God." David, pondering the wisdom of God, wrote, "Such knowledge is too wonderful for me; it is high, I cannot attain unto it." No, indeed! We cannot attain, for man himself is incapable of finding the way. Better far that we quickly abandon our human efforts lest we sink into the mire of unbelief.

It is when we reach the place where we willingly abandon all our human struggles, human efforts, and human dependencies, casting ourselves upon Jesus Christ who is the truth, the light, and the way, that we hear the Master saying, "When He, the Spirit of truth, is come, He will guide you into all truth; for He shall not speak of Himself, but He shall receive of Mine, and show them unto you." That is the method by which the Father of lights reveals the hidden things of God to the human heart. That is how the invisible things of Him from the creation of the world are clearly seen by spiritual men, and secrets kept hidden from ages and generations are revealed unto us by the Holy Ghost.

No man who ever lived has fully grasped the completeness and the greatness of the work of reconciliation which God wrought in Christ when He made peace between man and God and brought us nigh by the blood that was shed on the cross. By the shedding of that blood He has reconciled all things unto Himself, whether they be things in heaven, or things in earth, and you who were sometimes alienated and enemies in your minds, yet now has He reconciled and brought you nigh unto God. See Col. 1:20-22.

Faith is manifest in utter confidence in that which God has accomplished. Faith is not the product of the human heart, for it is written: "For by grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God." Eph. 2:8. Faith cometh by hearing and hearing by the word of God. When the spirit hears what God says, then faith grasps the lifeline that is anchored in Him who is within the veil, and we are lifted up into His realm. Only by revelation can we know Him and grasp the things He has to say. When the light of the Holy Spirit shines in, the mists that long have hung like a cloud over our minds, obscuring the glory of the celestial hills, are cleared away. Then the things, which were once unseen become clearly visible and the mysteries, which in time past baffled the mind, are unfolded and made plain. That which once was seen through a glass darkly is now seen face to face, and that which once was known only in part is now known as we are known.

Many times during my life I have had the joy of driving through the magnificent Canadian Rockies. The sight of their rugged, immovable grandeur has filled my soul with reverence, awe and wonder until I have marveled at the omnipotence and wisdom of God and wondered what power could have placed them there. On one of these occasions I was accompanied by a brother who had never driven through the mountains before and to my great disappointment almost the whole drive was shrouded in rain and mist. Mile after mile we journeyed and nothing could be seen except the black surface of the road upon which we drove, but the brother by my side drove merrily along, completely oblivious to the magnificence of the shrouded glory all about him, never dreaming that the mists were hiding some of the grandest scenery in all the world. As we drove along, he noticed I had grown quite quiet and, turning to me with a puzzled look, he said, "You don't enjoy this, do you?" "Well, no," I replied, "I don't, because those mists are hiding such beautiful scenery from us." Mankind in his unbelief goes along through life just like that, happy and content to hear the humming wheels on the hard surface of the road, never knowing at all that the mists of the natural mind are obscuring glories such as eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man. Once the Spirit of God has parted the veil and the spiritual eye has beheld that which lies within, there can be no turning back. Neither can our eyes ever be content with the vain visions of earth, nor our ears satisfied with the discordant note of its songs.

"Eye hath not seen it, my gentle boy.
Ear hath not heard its deep songs of joy.
Dreams cannot picture a world so fair;
Sorrow and death may not enter there.
Time hath not breathed on its fadeless bloom;
Far beyond the cloud and beyond the tomb,
It is there, my child, it is there."

Beautiful are these sacred words my mother sang to me when I was too small to fully grasp the beauty of their meaning, but since the Holy Spirit has come, I have found that even in this present world it is possible to stand on some spiritual Pisgah as Moses did and view the glory of the promised land from Gilead unto the palm trees of Zoar, or stand on some mount of transfiguration with Christ, as the disciples did, to behold in miniature the glory of the Son of man coming in His kingdom.

"There is a wisdom that may only be uttered among the mature - a wisdom, however, not deriving from the present age nor from the powers who are in control of this age, though their days are numbered. We speak God's wisdom in a mystery - that hidden wisdom which, before the world began, God purposed for our glory; a wisdom which not one of the powers who control the present age have learned, for if they had learned it, they would not have crucified the Lord of glory." 1 Cor. 2:6-8 (Weymouth). "As therefore you have received Christ, even Jesus our Lord, live and act in vital union with him; having the roots of your being firmly planted in Him, and continually building yourselves up in Him, and always being increasingly confirmed in the faith as you were taught it, and abounding in it with thanksgiving." Col. 2:6, 7. Weymouth.

My great concern as I unfold these truths is that readers and believers will fail to grasp them by the living faith of God. I am concerned and afraid that many who read will lay the book down or throw it away and forget to walk in the light that has been shed upon their path even as a man looks at his face in a mirror and walks away, forgetting what manner of man he is. The truth concerning the Christ body and our identity with Him is not one to be read with a sigh and then laid aside while we watch a football game, a sex scene, or a murder on the boob tube, but if we want to make heavenly treasures our eternal prize, we must cast our earthly garments from us and run with patience the race that is set before us. We must lay aside every weight and every besetting sin. We must put off all filthy communication, together with anger, wrath, envy, and every form of irreverence and blasphemy, looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith, who for the joy that was set before Him set us an example in that He endured the cross, despised the shame, and is now set down at the right hand of the majesty on high. We have no time to play church or play religion and we have no time to lose. Great tribulation has already settled down upon the earth, and I shall be surprised indeed if this decade passes away before the kingdom of God will come. The recession we are in will probably develop into a depression. The depression will bring a war, which will end with the battle of Armageddon, and that battle will end with the coming of Christ with His saints to put down all rule and authority. "But the saints of the most High shall take the kingdom, and possess the kingdom for ever, even forever and ever." Dan. 7:18. "Until the Ancient of days came, and judgment was given to the saints of the most High; and the time came that saints possessed the kingdom. . . . And the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey Him." Dan. 7:22, 27.

I exhort, therefore, that prayers, intercessions, fastings, readings be made in our devotion toward God and that in all fastings and prayers the mind of Christ should be earnestly coveted and sought. We have no need to be ignorant concerning the things that are coming upon the earth, but we remain in ignorance if we continue as so many do - seeking God in our spare time while devoting our time and energy to the golden god of this age, which golden god men earnestly seek because gold alone of all gods will purchase things that can be consumed upon our flesh.

The more I read the book of Colossians, the more enthralled I become with its message. It is so far reaching in that it clearly shows that "God hath reconciled all things unto Himself." The inspired writer then goes on to show how we can be delivered here and now from the flesh and every evil work, pointing out in so many remarkable ways our total identification with the Lord Jesus Christ. It tells us how to set our affections on things above and not on things of the earth and how we can identify ourselves with Christ in death, in resurrection and ascension. If Christians would lay aside their seeking of earthly gain, would lay aside their gossip and foolishness, would throw their televisions to the moles and the bats, turn their eyes away from the vile scenes of earth and begin looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of their faith, they would not know themselves in a year's time. Whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved and, being saved by His grace, will be pointed to a cross - his own - which he must take up to follow Christ, joining in heart and spirit that great generation of crucified men who follow the footsteps of their Lord.

I walked one day along a country road,
And there a stranger journeyed, too,
Bent low beneath the burden of His load.
It was a cross, a cross, I knew.

I cried, "Lord Jesus," and He spoke my name;
I saw His hands all bruised and torn.
I stooped to kiss away the marks of shame,
The shame for me that He had borne.

"Take up thy cross and follow me,"
I heard the blessed Saviour call.
How can I make a lesser sacrifice,
When Jesus gave His all?

My cross I'll carry till the crown appears;
The way I journey soon will end,
And God Himself shall wipe away all tears
And friend hold fellowship with friend.

Paul in Colossians explained that peace has been made through the blood of His cross, that men who were enemies and aliens have been reconciled to God and to each other that all may be presented faultless before
His majesty with exceeding joy. In this book we are told that men who once were enemies have been knit together (Col. 2: 2), or as Weymouth says, welded together - welded together into one body and one Christ. The knowledge of it makes my ransomed soul sing for joy:

Crown Him with many crowns,
The Lord upon His throne!
Hark how the heavenly anthem drowns
All music but its own.
Arise, my soul, and sing
Of Him who died for thee;
And crown Him as thy matchless King
For all eternity.

We stated above that every one who has come into Christ is commanded to live and act in vital union with Him. Col. 2:6, 7. I remind you that we are speaking specifically to those people who above all others become vitally interested and fully absorbed in every aspect of this glorious mystery. To demonstrate our relationship to the Christ body the apostle seems to exhaust every means at his disposal that the fact of our holy union with Christ might be made clear. Thus, after telling us to walk in vital communion with Him, he then exhorts us to become rooted and built up in Him (Col. 2:7), and in yet another verse to be grounded and settled (1:23). David in one of his psalms sang that he was like a tree planted by the rivers of water, whose root would not wither, and therefore he would never be moved. It seems to me to be a very wonderful thing to be on a journey where we stand by faith, walk by faith, and run with patience while at the same time we are being rooted and grounded and not moved away from the hope of our calling. Only God Himself could devise such a blessed mystery as that! Wouldn't you agree?

Now this state of being rooted and grounded in Christ and not moved away is a most wonderful thing. On beautiful Vancouver Island in Cathedral Grove there stands a mighty fir tree. It is much more than a thousand years old. It was a flourishing young tree when Alfred the Great reigned on the English throne in A.D. 871. It was still standing there when the Battle of Hastings was fought in 1066. Its roots were becoming more grounded and settled when the Magna Carta was signed in 1215. In 1492 when Columbus was on his way to America, it was stretching its mighty arms to heaven, and if it could have heard the news in 1815, it would have heard of the Battle of Waterloo. It was rooted there while the armies of the North and the South were locked in battle in 1860-65, and today its mighty arms, nourished and built up because it is rooted and grounded, are lifted up to heaven while the rustle of its boughs murmur a ceaseless praise to God on high.

Love sought its shade at eventide
To breathe its earliest vows,
And age was pleased at height of noon
To rest beneath its boughs.
The dormouse loved its dangling twigs;
The birds sweet music bore.
It stood a glory in itself,
A blessing evermore.

Thus shall they be who as members of Christ's body are rooted and grounded in Him. From Him we draw our life as roots draw their food and sustenance from the earth, and it is by the life of Him that we are built up and grow to be a holy temple in the Lord, an habitation for God through the Spirit. The necessity, the benefit and the blessing of thus being rooted and grounded in the Christ is beyond estimation or any word of expression. There must come a time in your life, dear saint of God, when you stand rooted and grounded in Him even though every other tree in the forest has fallen and been uprooted by the withering storms that beat furiously about you. You must have noticed at times how some of the mightiest trees are actually standing upon great immovable rocks. Here before our eyes a lesson is given whereby we see the saint rooted and grounded firmly to the Rock of Ages, and, being rooted and grounded in Him, we are forever settled, never to be carried away by the winds of doctrine, storms of fate, or whirlwinds of testing. My saintly friend, if you depend on man, you receive only what man can give. If you wait for man to feed you, you forget that he also must be fed. When you ask others to pray for you, you forget that they, too, have need of prayer, but the man who is grounded and settled and built up in Christ will find the life of God flowing in his own spirit, his soul, and his body, which in truth belong to God.

We are at the hour in history when we will no longer be able to depend upon ourselves, much less on others, for our strength and sustenance. The hour has come when tribulation is sweeping away every refuge of lies. Its turbulent floods are eroding the sandy foundations from beneath our feet. The old dependencies of meetings, forms and ceremonies are at their end. If you have trusted in men for your strength, they will be taken away from you. If you have depended on others for your spiritual bread, they will be removed far from you; and all this will be that through the fires and floods of tribulation the badly soiled garments of the Laodicean age will be cleansed and made white in the blood of the Lamb.

The tribulations, which are now gripping the entire earth, are the birth pangs of the kingdom of God. God is calling upon the in-Christed saints to become more firmly rooted and grounded in Him so that amid the coming floods they will not be moved away from the hope of His calling. Long ago David, the man who through the dreadful tempests of life had learned to trust only in God to sustain him, wrote these wonderful words: "God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble. Therefore will not we fear, though the earth be moved, and though the mountains be carried into the midst of the sea; though the waters thereof roar and be troubled, though the mountains shake with the swelling thereof." Psa. 46:1, 2. Wonderful were the words he spoke and wonderful was the deliverance God gave him, but God has reserved for you and me to see that day when the earth will be removed and the mountains carried into the midst of the sea. These are the things that are now coming in fury upon the world, and when it is over, every man who has become rooted and grounded in Christ will be standing unmoved - not moved away from the hope of his calling.

Strong and firm through the passing years
I see a rock that stands out on the shore,
A rock of ages, cleft for you and me,
A rock that will endure forevermore.
The raging, tumbling seas of time may roll
Till earth's proud empires crumble and decay,
And Thou alone shalt triumph, Prince of Peace,
When all the storms of life have rolled away.
C.S.P.

It would be of utmost profit for any of us to diligently study the oft repeated scriptural term "in Christ" and "in Him". The mists and darkness of the age have obscured the meaning of those beautiful phrases from all but a few, but those words - in Christ and in Him - my saintly friend, have reference to a very special class of people, and that special people are the in Christ people. They are the people who are members in particular of His body, of His flesh, and of His bones. We will take a little space here to refresh our minds concerning some of these beautiful statements where the term "in Christ" is involved and then we will see that those who bear the designation "in Christ" are by no means the ordinary rank and file of believers.

One of the most outstanding texts in which the expression "in Christ" is used is 2 Cor. 5:17. "If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature. Old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new." The church system has become accustomed to noticing a particular text of scripture without regard to what is taught either before the text or after it. By this careless method men can make the Bible say anything they wish it to say. Many a preacher in our day stands up before a congregation to read a text of scripture, or perhaps half a text, or even one word, then closes his Bible, puts an elastic band around it, and begins to preach his sermon. The truth of the matter is that all he is really doing is using a particular text as a diving board or a launching pad from which to launch his sermon. Preaching from a text is in my opinion the poorest and most juvenile type of preaching that can be imagined.

With this thought in mind we might notice some of the words that precede this text, "If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature." Through the whole of the previous four chapters Paul has been building up to a point of experience which he here calls the in Christ experience. In chapter one he begins telling about the trials of the Christian way, showing how through them we are always caused to triumph in Christ. In chapter three he proceeds to talk about the law that ministered death to those who heard it and the coming of the Spirit who changed the unregenerate heart which the law could only condemn. He tells how the face of Moses shone when he received the law, which could only minister death, and from this fact he shows how much more glorious the ministration of the Spirit of life must be. He ends the chapter with these profound words of truth: "Now the Lord is that Spirit: and where the Spirit of the Lord is (or, where the Spirit is Lord) there is liberty. But we all, with open (unveiled) face beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord." Then, speaking of the trials of the way in chapter four, trials which are ordained by God to bring about the fullness of the in Christ position, he goes on to say, "We have this treasure in earthen vessels, that the excellency of the power may be of God, and not of us." Verse 7. From there he speaks of the living faith in these saints, who now know that, if the earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. That house not made with hands, my friends, is really My Father's house, the mystical body of Christ, which is the habitation of God through the Spirit.

It seems to me that the book of 2 Corinthians is a highly spiritual book, pointing us to our goal in Christ. In chapter five many things are told us about walking by faith rather than by sight, even showing how it is possible for one to be absent from the body and at home with the Lord. It is with all this promise of higher and more exalted experience that he comes to this in Christ verse, saying, "If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature (creation)." I sincerely believe that the term "in Christ" must be applied on different levels of meaning. There is a small sense in which a new believer may be spoken of as in Christ, but he will have years of trial before he will come into the realm of which Paul is speaking here. To me, to be in Christ means much more than to be a mere believer, wonderful as that may be. That Jesus Christ should come into the heart of a repentant and believing sinner is a thing too wonderful to explain. It is something that has to be believed and experienced, but to explain such a heavenly wonder is beyond the ability of teacher, sage, apostle or prophet. An aura of mystery surrounds our being begotten of God, and because it is divine, it is totally beyond human expression. Wonderful as is this regenerating power of the Spirit of Christ within, we must ever remember that this blessed experience is only the hope of glory. When Jesus Christ comes into our hearts, this is not the end of the matter or the fullness of the in Christ experience. It is really only the beginning, as it is written, "As many as received Him, to them gave He power to become the sons of God." John 1:12. Our justification before God, our knowledge of sins forgiven, is little more than a blessed hope of glory to come. When I speak of the glory to come, I do not speak of heaven or even of the kingdom, but the real glory that is to come is our place in the temple, which is His body. The sons of God are the body of Christ, the sonship company, which is the body of Christ.

Christ the head and Christ the body together compose the fullness of Christ. Therefore "Christ in you", the repentant sinner's experience, is the hope of a greater glory which will be ours if we are refined by much chastening and scourging which every mature son must receive that we may be included in the Christ body. That, to me, is the true meaning of the phrase "in Christ". Christ in us is the hope of glory, but we in Christ is the glory, that the excellency of the power may be of Christ and not of us.

I do not wish to appear to be "splitting hairs" nor do I wish to invent doctrines, but to me it is increasingly significant that our Lord began His ministry as Jesus of Nazareth, then He is known to many as Jesus Christ or Jesus, the Christ, but Paul often favors the title, Christ Jesus. "Thou shalt call His name Jesus, for He shall save His people from their sins," but to see Him as the Christ is to see Him as God's anointed, the One tested and prepared to take the government of the kingdom and to reign. There appears to be a progression here, does there not, from Jesus to Jesus Christ to Christ Jesus? And I think the same progression is ordained to take place in the life of every believer from "Christ in you", the hope of glory, to that perfect state of "you in Christ", which is the glory.

My thought is that we should never use the term "in Christ" with lightness as though it were some simple means of salutation, but we should understand rather that to be in Christ is the ultimate goal of every Christian. It is the true glory for which we hoped. To be included in Christ, to be a true member of His body, the Christ body, is without doubt the great mystery, the hope and the prize of this present age. The body of Christ is the
I greatly fear that my explanation of the Christ body is very weak and perhaps tends more to mar the glory and beauty of that heavenly mansion than to succeed in describing and displaying it. Nevertheless, the spiritual man will grasp the significance of our position in Christ and will discern that to be a member of that holy temple is the prize of the age of grace. Notice Paul's great desire and longing to be in Christ as he wrote these words to the Philippians: 'What things were gain to me, those I counted loss for Christ. Yea doubtless, and I count all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord: for whom I have suffered the loss of all things, and do count them but dung that I may win Christ and be found in Him (that is, in Christ), not having mine own righteousness, which is of the law, but that which is through the faith of Christ, the righteousness which is of God by faith.' Phil. 3:7-9. Then, after having expressed his burning desire to be associated with Christ in death and resurrection, he concludes the thought with these significant words: "I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus." Verse 14.

To be in Christ Jesus is the high calling of God. If the Lord has any higher calling than this for the believer, then He has not as yet revealed it. It seems reasonable to believe that if a man of Paul's age and Christian experience was still laying aside every earthly weight and pressing toward the mark, which he speaks of as in Christ Jesus, then it must indeed be a very high mark and a very high calling. Because of the gravity of the calling he exhorts us all with these significant words: "Let us therefore, as many as be perfect, be thus minded." Verse 15. The term perfect here means mature. As many as be mature be thus minded. By thus minded he means that we should have the same mind as he had and the same fervent desire to reach the goal in Christ, that we should count all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus, the Lord, and count every earthly thing as dung that we may win Christ and be found in Him... that is, in Christ.

We are very near the end of the age. The multitudes who will be saved and cleansed during the great tribulation, which even now casts its shadow all about us, will not be included in the in Christ company. The in Christ company are those who have in their foreheads the Father's name, but the multitude who will be saved during the great tribulation now developing on the earth will be those who stand before the throne with palms in their hands, a multitude which no man can number of every kindred and tribe and nation who have come out of great tribulation and made their garments white in the blood of the Lamb. Rev. 7:9-15.

I exhort the saints therefore to lay aside every weight and the sin, which so easily besets them. Begin to reckon the things of this present realm as vile refuse, for this world's fading glory is nothing more than that. Do not set your heart on any prize but this - to be found in Him (in Christ). This attitude of heart demands prayer and fasting. It demands the laying aside of every weight that we, being stripped of all impediments, may run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith, who for the joy set before Him endured the cross, despised the shame, and is set down at the right hand of the majesty on high, henceforth expecting till His enemies be made His footstool.

No passage of scripture in the New Testament is more capable of revealing our position in Christ than the wonderful prayer of Jesus in the seventeenth chapter of John. Notice how in the very heart of His intercession Jesus said, "Thou, Father, art in Me, and I in Thee ..." John 17:21. It is one thing for the Father to be in Him; it is a thing of greater glory still for Jesus to be in the Father. It is the hope of glory that Christ should be in me, but it is the glory itself that I should be in Him. Jesus considered that for Himself to be in God the Father was the glory, the greatest of all glories. This He makes plain in verses 22, 23 by saying, "And the glory which Thou gavest Me I have given them, that they may be one, even as We are one: I in them, and Thou in Me, that they may be made perfect in one; ... Father, I will that they also, whom Thou hast given Me, be with Me where I am." Verse 24. And where was that? Why it was in the Father, of course. "That they may behold My glory, which Thou hast given me: for Thou lovedst Me before the foundation of the world."

To further develop this theme let us notice a few more places where this term is used and see the significance of what is said. First, "there is therefore now no condemnation to them that are in Christ Jesus ... For the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death." Rom. 8:1, 2. The book of Romans is a progressive book. In chapter one the Gentile world is condemned. In chapter two the Israelitish world is condemned. In chapter three, justification by faith is introduced, and in chapter four, grace is shown to be entirely without human effort. In chapter five the believer is justified by faith in Christ and in chapter six he is shown his personal identity with Christ in death and resurrection. In chapter seven the justified man makes the distressing discovery that he is possessed of a carnal nature - a nature so contrary to God that it besets and hinders his every effort to walk with God; and though I hesitate to say so, I must confess that the vast majority of Christians, even those who were baptized with the Spirit, stop in the seventh chapter of Romans and never get any farther than that realm where they are continually at war with their carnal nature. To their amazement and chagrin they find that when they would do good, evil is present with them. These are the people who are always trying to overcome their carnality, but never succeed because "trying to overcome" is not God's way of victory over the flesh. So Paul leaves the seventh chapter of Romans with these words: "0 wretched man that I am! Who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" With the beginning of chapter eight the revelation of the new life in Christ Jesus is given to the apostle. Therefore he says, "There is therefore now no condemnation to them who are in Christ Jesus... for the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus has made me free from the law of sin and death."

We are forced to the conclusion, then, that those blessed believers who through faith and identification with Christ in death and resurrection have reached the realm where their lives are continually ordered by the Spirit and have died to self as Christ died to self have reached the in Christ realm, and God Himself recognizes them as in Christ Jesus. Christ was in Paul long before Paul came to the blessedness of the Rom. 8:1 experience. It is certainly true that as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God. In Christ Jesus is the realm of no condemnation. In Christ Jesus is the prize of the high calling.

Now secondly, to be in Christ signifies that we have reached a place where carnal divisions are at an end. In Christ there are no sects and no denominations, no Jew, no Gentile, no bond, no free. "For ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus. For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ. There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female: for ye are all one in Christ Jesus. And if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise." Gal. 3:26-29. People who cling to sectarianism miss so much. "I am of Paul, I am of Appolos, I am of Cephas, I am of Christ," is the very spirit of sectarianism. To be in bondage to that spirit is to be kept in spiritual infancy. Paul distinctly said, "... For whereas there is among you envying, and strife, and divisions, are ye not carnal, and walk as men? For while one saith, I am of Paul; and another, I am of Appolos; are ye not carnal?" 1 Cor. 3:3, 4. For a Christian to remain in denominations and sects where there is division and strife continually is to condemn himself to spiritual infancy and to render himself quite incapable of partaking of anything stronger than milk. Paul knew this when he said, "I, brethren, could not speak unto you as unto spiritual, but as unto babes in Christ. I have fed you with milk, and not with meat: for hitherto ye were not able to bear it, neither yet now are ye able." 1 Cor. 3:1.

Due to the lateness of the hour there is no time to lose. It is time to come out of spiritual Babylon. It is time to come out from among them and be separate and touch not the unclean thing that God may be a Father unto us and we may be His sons and daughters. Therefore we must conclude that all who are in Christ live in a spiritual realm without and beyond the sects and divisions of our time.

Thirdly, it is the in Christ company who are partakers of the first part of the resurrection. "For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord, that we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord shall not prevent them which are asleep. For the Lord Himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of an archangel, and with the trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first." 1 Thess. 4: 15, 16. It will not be long now before this greatest event of all ages takes place — the resurrection of the mystical body of Christ. The dead in Christ shall rise first. The resurrection will certainly include all mankind eventually, "for the hour will come when all who are in the graves shall hear the voice of the Son of God and shall come forth; they that have done good unto the resurrection of (aionian) life; and they that have done evil unto (aionian) damnation (destruction)." John 5: 28, 29. No event of the past will equal the first resurrection. It was of this resurrection Paul spoke, saying, "Behold, I show you a mystery; We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump; for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed. For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality. So when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written. Death is swallowed up in victory." 1 Cor. 15: 51-53.

The time of the first resurrection is at the sounding of the last trumpet. The sounding of the last trumpet is recorded in Rev. 11:15. The sounding of the last trumpet indicates the end of the great tribulation, for at the sounding of this trumpet great voices were heard in heaven saying, "The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and of His Christ." Personally, I do not believe in a pre-tribulation rapture. There is every evidence to believe that the tribulation has already begun. There will be a resurrection and the saints, when He comes, will rise from their graves and be caught up to meet Him in the air. They will go out to meet Him and usher Him in in all His glory, that when He comes all the saints may come with Him. The last trumpet is at the end of the tribulation and at its sounding the dead in Christ arise.

In Christ the fullness of God's nature dwells embodied, and in Him we are made complete. Col. 2:9. Weymouth. Circumcision signifies the cutting away of the flesh, and in Him we are circumcised. Col. 2:11. Weymouth. In Him we are crucified. In Him we are buried. In Him we are raised from the dead to become a member of Him in resurrection.

"And to you - dead as you once were in your transgressions and in the uncircumcision of your natural state - He has nevertheless given you life with Him, having forgiven us all our transgressions. The bond, with its requirements, which was in force against us and hostile to us, He cancelled and cleared it out of the way, nailing it to His cross. And the hostile princes and rulers He stripped off from Himself, and boldly displayed them as His conquests, when by the cross He triumphed over them. Therefore suffer no one to sit in judgment on you as to eating or drinking or with regard to a festival, a new moon, or a Sabbath. These were a shadow of things that were to come, but the substance belongs to Christ." Col. 2:13-17. Weymouth.

The mystery of Christ is the greatest mystery of all the ages, but we are soon to see it unfold. It must surely have been at the sounding of the seventh trumpet that John heard a voice "as a trumpet" talking and the heavenly voices saying, "I am Alpha and Omega, the first and the last." When John turned to see who it was that spoke, he saw one like the Son of man, whose voice was as the sound of many waters. Many waters signify many people, many sons. He fell as a dead man from the glory of what he saw, for this was the fullness of the man Christ Jesus. It was the Christ as He will appear at the end of this age, Christ the head and Christ the body forming one Christ, the Christ of God. Then shall we hear the Savior say, "Here am I and the sons which Thou hast given Me." Amen.

THE CHRIST BODY...SUPREME MYSTERY OF THE AGES

The original purpose of Almighty God, so clearly set forth in the words of Gen. 1: 26, "Let us make man in our image and after our likeness," was an intention as immutable and unwavering as the God who spoke it. The truth that God is immutable and with Him there is no variableness, neither shadow of turning (James 1:17), is not merely a doctrine of scripture but a truth that should be so thoroughly embraced by every child of God that the reality of it grips his spiritual being, enlightening the eyes and giving understanding to the heart. The very fact that God is immutable (unchanging) in all His ways and purposes is just as important as the knowledge that He is almighty, or that He is all wise, or that He is omnipresent. What hope or trust would be lent the believer in times when sorrow and tribulation like sea billows rolled over him, besetting his way with doubt and fear, if he could not look up into the face of a God of love and say from the depths of his troubled being, "Thou art the God of light; with Thee there is no variableness, neither shadow of turning. Thou changes! not; Thy compassions they fail not. As Thou hast been Thou forever wilt be?" The ways of mankind may be as changeable as the moon, but the purposes of God are as constant as the stars. Centuries after the Almighty had made His immutable promises to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, Moses stood trembling before the burning bush with head bowed in awe. He heard the voice of the Lord proclaiming, "Draw not nigh hither: put off thy shoes from off thy feet, for the place whereon thou standest is holy ground." What new revelation could Moses now expect from the lips of the Almighty? We will never guess what this old man of fourscore years must have wondered in that dreadful but wonderful moment, but if he were expecting something new, he was to be disappointed, because the word that flowed from the lips divine was the now familiar utterance, "I am the God of thy fathers, the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob. And Moses hid his face; for he was afraid to look upon God." Exod. 3:5, 6.

Those words must have been awesome, perhaps even troublesome, because we poor human beings are so changeable in all our ways that we are inclined to forget that He who is immutable never changes. Long years of waiting often make us forget that the Lord never deviates from His original intentions. Man may be tempted to think that God has forgotten His ancient promises, that they are all hopelessly washed up and of no future value, but this is never so. Through decades, through centuries and millennia of time, the voice of God comes ringing like a trumpet in the soul of the believer, "I am the Lord; I change not." All things are working together for good to them that love God, to them who are the "the called," according to His purpose. Moses was a man of like frailties as ourselves, and, apart from the smoking flax of his faith, this bruised reed of a man must have had as good reason as any other man to imagine with sorrow that God had forgotten His promise to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. Here they were centuries later a great nation of many people, all descendants of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, but far removed from the land God had promised them, and, instead of being the heirs of the promised blessing, they were naught but groveling slaves to a cruel nation that oppressed and hated them, day after day performing menial tasks with hard and bitter labor for a people who were enemies of God and strangers to His covenants. Gone were the promises of greatness and glory, and the hope that in their seed all the nations of the earth would be blessed seemed to mock them as idle tales, meet for the ribald songs of the drunken and the taunts of unbelieving taskmasters.

What now would be the message of this dreadful voice in the wilderness, the voice of God, who spoke from the burning bush? What new purpose would be His intention now? Methinks this old man in shepherd's garb did not expect to hear Him say, "I am the God of Abraham, and of Isaac, and of Jacob," but, if he thought the immutable God could forget His promise, he was now awakened to his error. God suffers long and is kind, but He never forgets, and His saints will always find that the dreary wilderness of lingering days and nights that lie between the giving of a promise and the fulfillment thereof are part of the process of fulfilling the promise in the inscrutable way He had planned. Oh, how often I have heard men say "God is through with Israel. They failed, and so God cast them off and started something new." Yet I hear the voice of Paul come ringing o'er the hills of time, crying, "Hath God cast away His people? God forbid... God hath not cast away His people which He foreknew." Rom. 11:1, 2. Then later in the passage he says, "If the casting away of them be the reconciling of the world, what shall the receiving of them be but life from the dead?" Rom. 11:15. Again in similar words we ask today, "Has God changed His original intention? Have His words divine fallen to the ground to be trampled under the feet of unbelief? Did the immutable One, the almighty Maker of the universe, propose that which He had no power to fulfill when in infinite wisdom His word proclaimed, "Let us make man in our image and after our likeness, and let them have dominion?" Nay, nay, a million times nay! As no jot or tittle shall fail of the law till all is fulfilled, so shall no jot or tittle fail from the promise of Him who is immutable until all is fulfilled.

Open our eyes, 0 Lord unchanging, that Thy saints may behold as Thou dost behold. Let them stand with Thee in faith atop the lofty mountain of Thine exalted vision that they may ponder the limitless years of Thy unfolding purpose. Let their eyes behold the corn of wheat that fell into the ground to die. Let them understand that, as day comes forth out of darkness, so life springs forth from the realms of death, first the blade, then the ear, and afterward the full corn in the ear. Open the eyes of our understanding to see clearly that, before the full corn in the ear appears, there must be a seed to fall into the ground and die, for, if it die not, there can be no blade, there can be no ear, nor can the full corn of all mankind be in the ear.

Oh, that saints today would stand with God, who is our light, that through His eyes they might see the ever maturing progress of His unalterable fiat, "Let us make man in our image and after our likeness!" Then would they behold the glorious end God had in view and stand no more to weep as mourners do at the grave of a creation whose first appointed step on the path to the image of God was to fall into the ground and die. Too long, too long have men walked in darkness, knowing not that the apparent calamities of Eden were in fact and truth well devised steps proceeding from the mind that is infinite that man through the valley of the shadow of death might come to the moment of resurrection when death is swallowed up in life, corruption puts on incorruption, and mortality betakes of immortality, - well devised steps, I say, for thus saith the Lord God omniscient and immutable, "The creature was made subject to vanity, not willingly, but by reason of Him who hath subjected the same in hope. Because the creature itself also shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God." Rom. 8:20, 21. Therefore with Paul all who have understanding "reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory that shall be revealed, for the earnest expectation of the creature (creation) waiteth for the manifestation of the sons of God."

Look up from thy weeping then and see no more the fast closed tomb of all the sons of the first Adam, a creation that God intended should fall into the ground and die. Yonder, near to Calvary's hill, there is an open tomb from which the last man Adam has risen in victory, having forever abolished death, bringing to light both light and immortality. 2 Tim. 1:10. He is risen to become the first fruits of all who slept. To err is human, and I may be wrong, but deep within me I believe the place where the first man Adam died and was buried is the self same place from which the last man Adam arose from the dead to become the first fruits of them that slept.

Four thousand years had passed away ere God in triumph that Deity alone can know proclaimed in a voice of thunder, "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased." Four thousand years with its suffering and death had come and gone, but now at last the first man is presented complete in God's image and after His likeness. The first man of millions more to follow, as numerous as the stars above, was presented perfect and entire in God's image when the voice of the Father proclaimed the word, "In Him I am well pleased." It pleased the Father that in Him should all fullness dwell, and, having made peace through the blood of His cross, by Him to reconcile all things to Himself, by Him, I say, whether they be things in earth or things in heaven."

And what shall we say of the dominion God had promised to men in His own image? Had not His lips declared, "Let us give them dominion?" Hear the words of this blessed first Son of God as He in triumph proclaims, "All power is given unto Me in heaven and in earth," and with these words He declared that all who would believe on Him should be saved. Men are always talking about what they were saved "from." I am inclined to think that Jesus Christ our Lord and God our heavenly Father are more concerned about what we are saved "to." Hear then the words of inspiration that fell from the lips of Paul, that man who was pressing forward to obtain the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus, and what could that be but sonship?

"In my opinion whatever we may have to go through now is less than nothing compared with the magnificent future God has planned for us. The whole creation is on tiptoe to see the wonderful sight of the sons of God coming into their own. The world of creation cannot as yet see reality, not because it chooses to be blind, but because in God's purpose it has been so limited - yet it has been given hope. And the hope is that in the end the whole of created life will be rescued from the tyranny of change and decay, and have its share in that magnificent liberty which can only belong to the children of God! It is plain to anyone with eyes to see that at the present time all created life groans in a sort of universal travail. And it is plain, too, that we who have a foretaste of the Spirit are in a state of painful tension, while we wait for that redemption of our bodies which will mean that at last we have realized our full sonship in Him. We were saved by this hope, but in our moments of impatience let us remember that hope always means waiting for something we haven't yet got. But if we hope for something we cannot see, then we must settle down to wait for it in patience." Rom. 8:18-25. Phillips Translation.

"In the face of all this, what is there left to say? If God is for us, who can be against us? He that did not hesitate to spare His own Son but gave Him up for us all - can we not trust such a God to give us, with Him, everything else that we need? Who would dare to accuse us, whom God has chosen? The judge Himself has declared us free from sin. Who is in a position to condemn? Only Christ, and Christ died for us, Christ rose for us, Christ reigns in power for us, Christ prays for us! Can anything separate us from the love of Christ? Can trouble, pain or persecution? Can lack of clothes and food, danger to life and limb, the threat of force of arms? Indeed some of us know the truth of that ancient text: For Thy sake we are killed all the day long; we are accounted as sheep for the slaughter. No, in all things we win an overwhelming victory through Him who has proved His love for us. I have become absolutely convinced that neither death nor life, neither messenger of heaven nor monarch of earth, neither what happens today or what may happen tomorrow, neither a power from on high nor a power from below, nor anything else in God's whole world has any power to separate us from the love of God in Jesus Christ our Lord!" Rom. 8:31-39. Phillips Translation
THE MYSTERY OF GOD — CHRIST

We love to speak of Jesus Christ the Lord, but, oh, there is so much to be said, and who among us has power to unfold the glorious mystery of Christ? As the great plan of God - "Let us make man in our image" - unfolds, it must unfold in God's own order, first the blade, then the ear, and afterward the full corn in the ear. Oh, that God would reveal to every seeking heart this greatest mystery of all mysteries, the mystery of Christ! In the long, long process of bringing all creation into the image of God it is God's intention first of all to bring to the fullness of perfection that anointed one, for the anointed one is the Christ. Heavenly Father, Thou knowest that I speak with reverence almost infinite when I consider that Thy Christ, through whom all the universe will be reconciled, consists of many more than He who was at first proclaimed Thine only begotten Son. Thou hast proclaimed Him to be both Lord and Christ, the supreme and lordly head of the body, but unto us who are now coming into "that same image" and likeness Thou hast said, "Ye are the body of Christ. Ye are members of the Christ, yea, members in particular." 1 Cor. 12:27. Yea, Thou hast said, "Ye are the fullness, 'the completeness of Him who everywhere fills the universe with Himself.'" Eph. 1: 23. Weymouth.

Let us then with a reverence born of the Spirit of God begin to explore these celestial fields, the eyes of our understanding being so enlightened that we may begin to see the extent of the glorious fullness of God's Christ. God's Christ is the greatest mystery of all the ages, and no man can see its sacred glory until God in mercy reveals it unto him. All education and learning will fail us. Sermons of men will sell us short. Only by the Holy Ghost can the eyes of our understanding behold the mystery and only by that same Spirit of God can we become a part of it.

Christ is the visible representation of the invisible God, the first-born of all creation, for in Him was created the universe of things in heaven and on earth, things seen and unseen, thrones, dominions, principalities, powers - all were created and exist through Him. He is before all things, and in and through Him the universe is one harmonious whole. Moreover, He is the Head of His body, the church. He is the beginning, firstborn from among the dead, in order that He Himself may in all things occupy the foremost place, for it was the Father's gracious will that the whole of the divine perfections should dwell in Him. And God purposed through Him to reconcile the universe to Himself, making peace through His blood, which was shed upon the cross, to reconcile to Himself through Him, I say, things on earth and things in heaven. As the wonderful pattern begins to unfold before the eyes of our understanding, we see with a light that only His Spirit can give that God's Christ, when seen in His glorious completeness, consists of both the head and the body together. That first glorious Son, who four thousand years after Adam was owned by the Father as "My beloved Son in whom I am well pleased," is the head, but that vast family of sons, who through the centuries have been coming into "that same image", these are the body of that same Christ. God has proclaimed them to be members of His body, of His flesh and of His bones and has made them all to drink into one Spirit. Paul has distinctly taught us through the wisdom of the Holy Spirit that by (in) one Spirit are we all baptized into one body (the Christ body), for the body is not one member, but many (1 Cor. 12:13, 14), whether we be Jew or Gentile, whether we be bond or free, and have been all made to drink into one Spirit; for, as the body is one and has many members, and all the members of that one body, being many, are one body, so also is Christ.

There are tremendous depths here, my brethren, for this is the mystery above all mysteries. Our God in these last days is speaking to His elect sons, revealing to them that they are members of His Christ, yea, that they are enchristed. This is the mystery that exceeds all the mysteries of the ages. So great is this mystery that men will accuse me of blasphemy because I proclaim it. Yet it was of this very truth that Paul wrote when He said, "I am made a minister, according to the dispensation of God which is given to me for you, to fulfill the word of God; even the mystery which hath been hid from ages and generations, but is now made manifest to His saints: to whom God would make known what is the riches of the glory of this mystery among the Gentiles (nations); which is Christ in you, the hope of glory." Col. 1: 25-27.

I pray that you may pause here to request the mercies of heaven that God would give you the spirit of wisdom and understanding in the knowledge of Him that you may see what glory such a calling entails. For far too long we have lightly used the expression "in Christ." We have formed the childish habit of signing our letters "Yours in Christ," never realizing what in Christ really means. My beloved, to be in Christ means much more than simply being a Christian. In Christ, as used in the Holy Scripture, refers to our being vitally joined to that first born Son, whom God hath made both Lord and Christ. As our bodies are joined to our heads, so the enchristed are one with the Christ, because they with Jesus ARE GOD'S CHRIST. The term in Christ is used many times in God's word, but the term Christ in you is used many times also. Let us think of the depth of the meaning it conveys and no more pass it by as nothing more than a pretty expression. What does it mean to you when the scripture says, "God was in Christ?" Why, the fact that God dwelt in Him was what made Him God's Christ! What then are we to conclude since God has said Christ is in you? Is it not this indwelling that makes you a member of God's Christ, making you one with the anointed? He is the firstborn of many brethren and those many brethren constitute the fullness of Christ. Jesus, the oldest brother, is the head; the many brethren are the body, and they (the head and the body) together form God's Christ. Indeed it is a great mystery. No wonder Paul said it was the greatest of all mysteries! Nor is it any marvel that the all-wise God hid it from ages and generations of men that He might make it known in the last days. Now the mystery is being made manifest to His saints, for to them alone God would make known what is the riches of the glory of this mystery, which is Christ in you. The mystery Christ in you is the hope of glory. It is an unspeakable glory for those who are called and chosen and faithful, and upon its certainty rests the hope of the entire creation of things in heaven and things on earth.

Once more we must review the scripture to make sure that we comprehend, at least in part, the import of its truth. It is clear from Paul's words to the Colossians that he feels the tremendous depth of his own teaching. Therefore, with the clearest possible emphasis he declares that the mystery, Christ in you, has been completely hidden from all ages and generations of the past and was only in his day beginning to be made manifest to the saints. Col. 1:26. This mystery, Christ in you, is the beginning of the mystery, you in Christ. So profound is this mystery that, though it be understood by the Spirit within, words fail to speak its truth to the mind. The truth that has been hidden for ages and dispensations is this: God is still in this age forming and preparing His Christ. We cannot overemphasize the importance of this truth, "because He hath appointed a day, in which He will judge the world in righteousness by that man whom He hath ordained..." Acts 17:31. Dare we wonder, then that He with infinite care through ages of time prepares His Christ in secret and in fullness for the boundless work of the ages to come?

It is with the utmost reverence and with great humility of mind, looking to Jesus Christ with adoring adulation, that I endeavor to make known to God's elect that God's glorious Christ is not one, but many. The fullness of Christ does not consist of Jesus of Nazareth and Him alone, but of Jesus together with a multitude of elect sons, who by His grace are coming into that same image. 2 Cor. 3:15. We have read the scripture, which plainly states that "as the body is one and hath many members, and all the members of that body, being many, are one body, so also is Christ." 1 Cor. 12:12. The apostle here is plainly showing that the individual members of God's Christ, though many, form but one Christ. This many membered Christ is "that man" whom God hath chosen and by whom He will govern the world in righteousness. Acts 17:31.

It is not uncommon to find that the Lord speaks of a multitude as one. For example, in Hosea 11:1 He says, "When Israel was a child (singular), I loved him (singular), and called My son (Israel) out of Egypt." I am aware that this last reference to My son is also prophetic and has a definite reference to Jesus Christ, but it also definitely refers to Israel as a nation, whom God here calls My son, as the verse following plainly shows. In exactly the same way that we speak of a nation as one or of the church as one, so also is God's Christ, many membered, yet one Christ and one body. God would not make mention of the body of Christ if the many membered body did not constitute the fullness of His Christ. The human body, which we now possess, is the greatest possible type and picture of that spiritual organism which is the body of Christ. In this the scripture is very plain, saying with the greatest possible clarity, "As the body is one and hath many members, and all the members of that one body, being many, are one body, so also is Christ."

That the physical body has many members while it is but one body we may clearly see from the following scientific statement. "Man's body has nine hundred muscles, one thousand miles of blood vessels, three hundred fifty main arteries, one million five hundred thousand sweat glands. The lungs are composed of seven million, seven hundred thousand cells. At seventy years of age the heart has lifted by its throbs five hundred thousand tons of blood. The nervous system has three trillion nerve cells. The blood has thirty million white corpuscles and one hundred million red ones. Each minute in every man's body some one hundred fifty million radio-active carbon atoms go pop, releasing a total energy of twenty-one million electron volts. The heart beats seventy times per minute, four thousand times per day, thirty-seven million times per year, and two billion times in sixty-five years. It is estimated that, could man build a computer that could do the work of the human brain, a space as large as Rockefeller center would be needed. It would take three lifetimes to wire it, three-quarters of the electrical power of New York City to drive it, and the Hudson River to cool it. Man's brain is most impressive and extremely complex. It contains many more nerve lines than all the telephone lines in the world put together. The electrical signals from two hundred thousand living thermometer cells, a half million pressure sensing cells, three or four million pain sensing cells, plus the signals from the eyes, nose and ears, as well as the areas sensitive to taste and touch, are all routed to the brain. An amazing example of miniaturization, the brain sorts, stores, and acts upon these myriad impulses. Who built this fantastic computer? The answer is God:

From the foregoing trivial example, which touches only the minutest function of the many membered, many organed human body and displays in some tiny detail the harmonious workings of the whole, perhaps our hearts can be enlightened to catch a glimpse of the wonders of that Christ, whom God through the ages has been bringing to completion. First to be born was Jesus of Nazareth the Head, in whom dwelleth all the fullness of wisdom and knowledge of God, and we. God's blessed sons, born in the extremity of the age and coming into that same image, are the many members, the body of Christ. These, the Head and the body together, are God's Christ.

The things I am saying are hard to write and difficult to utter, because church tradition has dulled our ears that we cannot hear. It has blinded our eyes to truth so that we cannot see with our eyes, nor hear with our ears, nor understand with our hearts, but should one live a thousand years twice told, he could never comprehend these mysteries with the mind, for great is the mystery of godliness.

There is but one body, and one Spirit, and one hope of our calling, even as there is one Lord, one faith, one baptism, and one God and Father of all, who is above all, through all, and in us all. For this reason Jesus, when He ascended up on high, led captivity captive and completeness of Him who filleth all in all, has been coming forth member by member through these ages of the ages, forming and bringing His Christ to fullness? The Head He completed two thousand years ago when Christ Jesus was raised from the dead and exalted to His throne, but the body, which is the completeness of Him who filleth all in all, has been coming forth member by member through these ages of time to be declared at last, as Jesus was at first, "My beloved sons, in whom I am well pleased."

God's people are greatly hindered from seeing this truth in any fullness because they continually confuse the harlot church system with the true and mystical church, which is Christ's body. One need only to mention the word church and all eyes immediately turn toward the system with all its abominable enormities, its denominations, its sects, its false ministries, its pseudo-gifts and its multitudinous divisions, but, if you will turn your eyes away from this, you will discover one like the Son of man, rising from the present disorder, standing tall and glorious in the image of Christ. This is the mystical and elect church in which there has never been a division or a schism. This is the building of God, the true church, the true body, the house not made with hands. This is the habitation in which God dwells, even as your spirit dwells in you. "You are a building which has been reared on the foundation of the apostles and prophets, the cornerstone being Christ Jesus Himself, in union with whom the whole fabric, truly bonded together, is rising so as to form a holy sanctuary in the Lord; in whom you also are being built up together to become a fixed abode for God through the Spirit." Eph. 2:20-22. Weymouth. "God has put all things under His feet, and has appointed Him universal and supreme Head of the church, which is His body, the completeness of Him who everywhere fills the universe with Himself." Eph. 1:23. Weymouth.

You will have noticed that the scripture quoted above is definitely saying that the body of Christ is the completeness of Him, who fills the universe with Himself. Surely these are ponderous words of truth, clearly Peter answered and said, Thou art the Christ. Perhaps the most familiar passage is found in Matt. 16:13-20, in which Jesus asked His disciples, "Whom say ye that I am?" And Simon Peter answered and said, Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God. Jesus quickly affirmed that such a revelation of truth could not possibly come by the way of flesh and blood, but only by the inspiration of God. "Flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto you, but My Father which is in heaven." This statement, though perfectly true in the case of this despised man, would have been blasphemy had it been uttered by anyone else, and the high priest, chained by the darkness of his own carnal mind, could see nothing beyond the outer veil. He saw Jesus only as a man, not as the Christ as Peter had seen or as my Lord and my God as Thomas had done. He, poor blind soul, was doomed to see only as a natural man. It was for this very reason that Jesus in love had prayed for him, together with the others, saying, "Father, forgive them for they know not what they do."

There were many people associated with Jesus during all His life on earth who saw naught in Him but the son of Joseph and Mary. Even some of His disciples did not recognize Him as the Christ. Certainly Thomas did not appear to have this knowledge until that night of revelation when Jesus revealed Himself to him, and Thomas, standing aghast at the revelation, cried out in amazement, "My Lord and my God!" Then charged He His disciples that they should tell no man that He was Jesus the Christ" Matt. 16:20. Jesus is His name; Christ is His title. The natural man cannot receive any spiritual thing unless that truth is revealed to him by God's Spirit; otherwise it will be tramped underfoot as worthless as readily as swine trample precious gems beneath their feet.

When Jesus was questioned before the high priest, He was asked, "Art Thou the Christ, the Son of the blessed?" Mark 14:61. Jesus replied, "I am: and ye shall see the Son of man sitting on the right hand of power, and coming in the clouds of heaven." Verse 62. It will be perfectly clear that, had the question been, "Art Thou Jesus," and He had replied in the affirmative, there would have been no uproar or dissent at all. But the question was not "Art Thou Jesus," but, "Art Thou ^Christ," and the moment Jesus answered in the affirmative He was accused of blasphemy, because the title Christ declares that He is the anointed, the Messiah, the Deliverer of Israel and the Savior of the whole world. The high priest was not ignorant of the fact that long ago David prophesied, saying, "The Lord said unto my Lord, sit Thou at My right hand, until I make Thine enemies thy footstool," and no doubt he immediately connected the prophecy of David with the words of Jesus, "Ye shall see the Son of man sitting on the right hand of power, and coming in the clouds of heaven." This statement, though perfectly true in the case of this despised man, would have been blasphemy had it been uttered by anyone else, and the high priest, chained by the darkness of his own carnal mind, could see nothing beyond the outer veil. He saw Jesus only as a man, not as the Christ as Peter had seen or as my Lord and my God as Thomas had done. He, poor blind soul, was doomed to see only as a natural man. It was for this very reason that Jesus in love had prayed for him, together with the others, saying, "Father, forgive them for they know not what they do."
Since, then, the Christ is a title, signifying His exalted office, we may conclude that the importance of that office is greatly magnified when the appellation Jesus Christ, wherein the name Jesus is placed before the office, is reversed to read Christ Jesus, wherein the title is placed before the name. This occurs at least forty times in the New Testament. Jesus, the Christ, the Messiah, the Lord, who Himself on so many occasions preferred the title, Son of man, was the first man to come into the image and likeness of God. He is the beginning of the fulfillment of God's earliest declaration, "Let us make man in our image and after our likeness." Gen. 1:26. Furthermore, He who now sits on the right hand of power is the first to fulfill God's decree, "Let us give them dominion." "All power is given unto Me in heaven and in earth," Jesus said. Matt. 28:18. He is the beginning, the first born from among the dead, or, from among the dead ones. Ponder the significance of that statement. "He is the beginning." Col. 1:18. Does not a beginning definitely tell us that there is much more yet to come? Do not the words the first born signify that all the dead are to be raised to life through Him to be brought into that same imaged "He brightly reflects God's glory and is the exact representation of His being, and upholds the universe by His all-powerful word. After securing man's purification from sin, He took His seat at the right hand of the Majesty on high, having become as far superior to the angels as the name He possesses by inheritance is more excellent than theirs." Heb. 1:3, 4. Weymouth.

If God's people could comprehend some of the fathomless depths of the first chapter of the book of Hebrews, they would find themselves well on the road to understanding the magnificent glories, which God is preparing for those who love Him. We would see that this Jesus, whom God hath made both Lord and Christ, was indeed the beginning and only the beginning of the fulfillment of the fiat of Gen. 1:26, "Let us make man in our image." Jesus is both the first born from the dead and He is the first born of all who sleep. He is the first born of many brothers who are to share His glory and His image. These even now in their imperfect and insignificant condition He speaks of as the body of Christ and members in particular. 1 Cor. 21: 27. These are the Christ body. He is the head of the body and in all things He shall have the preeminence, yet these are the body of which He is the Head. God through John declared, "As He is, so are we in this world." 1 John 4:17. "All who are led by God's Spirit are God's sons. You did not receive the spirit of slavery again, inspiring terror; but you did receive the spirit of adopted sons - in which spirit we cry 'Abba! Father!' The Spirit Himself bears witness with our own spirits that we are the children of God; and if children, then heirs too - heirs of God and coheirs with Christ; if indeed we share Christ's sufferings in order to share also His glory. Why, the sufferings of the present I deem not worth considering compared with the glory soon to be disclosed to us. All creation is yearning, longing to see the manifestation of the sons of God. For the creation was made subject to futility, not of its own choice, but by the will of Him who so subjected it; yet with the hope that at last the creation itself would be set free from the thraldom of decay to enjoy the liberty that comes with the glory of the children of God. For we know that the whole creation is moaning in the pangs of childbirth until this hour.

And more than that, we ourselves, though we possess the Spirit as a foretaste of bliss, yet we ourselves inwardly moan as we wait for full sonship in the redemption of our bodies." Rom. 8:14-23, Weymouth." "Now we know that for those who love God He makes all things work together for good, for those who are called according to the divine purpose. Those whom He has foreknown He has also predestined to share the likeness of His Son, that He might be the Eldest in a vast family of brothers; and those whom He has predestined He has also called; and those whom He has called He has also acquitted; and those whom He has acquitted He has also glorified." Rom. 8:28-30. Weymouth.

These inspired statements become crystal clear once we have apprehended God's true purpose. Nothing can separate us from the love of God and no power in heaven or in earth can let or hinder the eternal will of Him whose intention was in the beginning not only to make man, but to make him in the image of God. The steps are very clear - foreknowledge, predestination, calling, justification, and final glorification, members of His body, the Christ body, members of His flesh and of His bones. These chosen people have drunk deeply of His Spirit, for it is in one Spirit that all the members are united with the body. They are baptized into His body. They are members in particular of God's Christ, God's anointed, God's Messiah, by whom God filleth all in all, or, as Weymouth puts it, "God hath appointed Him universal and supreme head of the church, which is His body, the completeness of Him who everywhere fills the universe with Himself." Eph. 1:23.

We mentioned above how good it would be if God's elect people could comprehend the depths of the first chapter of Hebrews, for if they could but see to what honor and glory God has promoted His first perfected Son, then they would see to some extent what honor He is preparing to bestow on those other sons who through the centuries have been coming into that same image of Christ. Those other sons are members of His body, yea, members of that body of which He is the Head. The Holy Spirit wishes us to see in the statements of Hebrews, chapter one, that, by displaying the greatness of the first Son, Christ Jesus, He is actually revealing the magnificent glory God has in store for us. If this had not been the case, there would have been no point in Paul's commencing chapter two with the warning, "Therefore we ought to give the more earnest heed to the things which we have heard, lest at any time we let them slip. For if the word spoken by angels was steadfast, and every transgression and disobedience received a just recompense of reward, how shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation?..." The great salvation he speaks of here is the hope of sonship spoken of in chapter one. "How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation" is not a text for sinners, but a sobering question directed to men and women who have heard the call to sonship and have seen their predestined end in Christ and who are now being called to a faithfulness far removed from neglect, as it is written: "...and they that are with Him are called, and chosen, and faithful." Rev. 17:14.

Paul further attests to the greatness of our calling to sonship and consequently our call as members of the Christ body when in the words of David he asks, "What is man that Thou art mindful of him? or the son of man, that Thou visitest him?" Heb. 2:6. "Thou hast made him for a little while lower than the angels; with glory and honor Thou hast crowned him! and hast set him over the works of Thy hands. Thou hast put everything in subjection under his feet. For this subjecting of the universe to man implies the leaving of nothing not subject to him. But we do not as yet see the universe subject to him (man). But we do see Him who was made for a little while lower than the angels - even Jesus - because of His suffering of death crowned with glory and honor, that by God's grace He might taste death for every man." Heb. 2:6-9. Weymouth.

Why did Paul say we do not as yet see the universe subject to him (man), but we do see Jesus? Simply because Jesus Christ is the forerunner, the pioneer, the apostle, the first Son, the beginning, and the first born from the dead. He is the first Son to be exalted through the terrible sufferings of the realm of death and, seeing Him, we know that the promise to all others is certain, for it was not of Adam alone of whom God spoke, saying, "Let us make man in our image and after our likeness, and let us give them dominion," but the promise was to all the sons of men, of whom the first Son, Jesus Christ, is now exalted and has taken His seat at the right hand of power. We see Jesus and by seeing Him we know the glory God has in store for those who follow Him just as the first flower of spring is the herald of millions to follow.

To write such things as these often fills my heart with dread. Everywhere and at all times there are foolish persons who seem to be void of any sense of reverence. They do not realize how terrible are the words, "The place whereon thou standest is holy ground." They have not learned that, should any one of us come into the presence of God, we like John would fall down at His feet as dead men. Everywhere I find men and women who seem to brag about the "sonship message." They do not talk in humble tones nor stand in awe and the fear of the Lord, but in a spirit of boasting and pride they toy with the truth of sonship as children toy with things of play. My heart always sinks to the lowest depths when I hear glib talk of "sonship groups." People who talk like that have never yet seen how high a calling sonship is. Some of these little groups even go so far as to speak of themselves as manifested sons. They do not know of what they speak nor whereof they affirm. Other presumptuous people have gone so far as to offer courses purporting to teach how to become a manifested Son of God. Let us turn our eyes and our hearts away from all such presumptuous ignorance and pride and with the spirit of humility start looking unto Jesus who alone is the author and finisher of our faith.

Let no one believe that the filthy or unclean have any part in any of these things. People who are laden with sex sins, who are unholy and defiled, who are partakers with the world and who fit in with the untoward spirit of the times - all such must come to repentance before they need speak of the things which God has reserved for them that love Him. These are the last days. Perilous times encompass the world and fall heavy upon us all. Men are lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful and unholy, without natural affection, trucebreakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God, having a form of godliness but denying the power thereof. From all such we must turn away and have no part with them.

There are thousands today who are playing church, who even profess to be speaking in tongues and to have certain gifts of the Spirit, who profess that they know God, but in works they deny Him, being abominable and disobedient and unto every good work reprobate. The thing above all else that is so sadly lacking in these perilous times is godly sorrow that worketh repentance unto salvation not to be repented of. The sorrow of the world only works death. Those who are being cleansed by Christ and made ready for that glorious sonship in Him must separate themselves from the world and all its tinsel glamour as did the first Son, of whom it is written that He was holy, harmless, undefiled and separate from sinners and made higher than the heavens. Heb. 7:26. Philistines have no place in the house of God; neither has Mammon, the god of wealth, any place in the hearts of God’s people. Cleanse your hands, ye sinners, and purify your hearts, ye double-minded. Be afflicted and mourn and weep. Let your laughter be turned to mourning and your joy into heaviness. Then you will draw nigh to God and He will draw nigh to you.

It should never be forgotten that we, though called, are yet exhorted to give diligence to make our calling and election sure. 2 Pet. 1:10. Let no man rest on his oars, thinking that he can merrily float with the current of the world right into the glory of reigning with Christ. We have a promise to reign with Him, but the promise is, “If we suffer with Him, we will reign with Him. If we deny Him, He will deny us,” that is to say, if we deny Him and refuse to suffer with Him, there will be no place for us to reign. He will deny that to us.

Paul, writing to the Romans, gave five progressive steps, which lead to glorification. “Whom He did foreknow, He also did predestinate; whom He did predestinate, then He also called; whom He called, them He also justified, and whom He justified, them He also glorified.” Rom. 8:29, 30. These are the five steps - foreknowledge, predestination, calling, justification, and glorification. It seems to me that any man can fail at any one of these points. Otherwise why would the Lord have said, “Many are called, but few are chosen?” And why would it be written in Rev. 17:14, “They that are with Him are called and chosen and faithful?”

There is only one sure way to gain an abundant entrance into the kingdom of God. Peter tells us of it in his second epistle, Chapter 1:3-11. “According as His divine power hath given unto us all things that pertain unto life and godliness, through the knowledge of Him that hath called us to glory and virtue: whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises: that by these ye might be partakers of the divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust. And beside this, giving all diligence, add to your faith virtue; and to virtue knowledge; and to knowledge temperance; and to temperance patience; and to patience godliness; and to godliness brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness charity. For if these things be in you and abound, they make you that ye shall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. But he that lacketh these things is blind, and cannot see afar off, and hath forgotten that he was purged from his old sins. Wherefore the rather, brethren, give diligence to make your calling and election sure: for if ye do these things, ye shall never fail: for so an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.” With these few words we are exhorted to walk in harmony with Christ Jesus our Lord and to turn aside from the spirit of this evil age in which money has become the god of this world. Money is the god which men worship and adore and which they trust to supply all their needs. Let us who seek first the kingdom of God go on to perfection in Him. Let us strip for this spiritual race and run it with much patience, for it is through faith, patience and endurance that the prize is at last attained.

The appellation, the Christ, is used eighteen times in the New Testament. The definite article the distinguishes Him as God's anointed and separates Him from all that is false and from those deceivers who will come saying, "I am Christ," by whom many will be deceived. Jesus, who loved the title Son of man, was the first man to come in the image of God. He whom men crucified was He whom God raised from the dead and proclaimed to be both Lord and Christ. Acts 2:36. "He brightly reflects God's glory and is the express image of His person, and, when He had purged us of our sin, He sat down at the right hand of the Majesty on high. He is the visible representation of the invisible God.” Col. 1:15. Weymouth. The whole of divine perfections dwell in Him. Col. 1:20. And He is the head of the true and mystical church, which is in truth the Christ body, for the body is not one member, but many. The body is also one with the Head. Neither Head nor body can exist or function the one without the other. While the mind has its home in the head, the heart has its home in the body. The Head and the body together constitute the fullness of Christ (Eph. 4:13), even the completeness of Him who in the end will fill the universe with Himself. And we are complete in Him, from whom the whole body by joints and bands is knit together to become the habitation of God through the Spirit. The true body of Christ has been rising through millennia of time without a schism and without a division. It has been rising upon the sure foundation of the apostles and prophets and, when it is completed at the now imminent first resurrection, that true body will be the temple of the Lord, a fixed abode for God through the Spirit.

When the word of God speaks of Christ Jesus as being the head stone of the corner (Psa. 118:22, 1 Pet. 2: 7), it is not speaking of a stone in the lower corner of the foundation. It is speaking of the capstone or the head stone as the capstone would appear at the pinnacle of a pyramid. The capstone is of necessity the last stone to be placed in the building and, when that is done, the building is complete. So also it will be that, when the body of living stones, even the body of Christ, is complete, then Jesus Christ the Head will take His place as the head stone and this complete body of the Christ will form the everlasting habitation of God through the Spirit. This will be "My Father's house" of many mansions, each mansion a believer, each believer a living stone, each living stone a member of the Christ body. This is the house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. 2 Cor. 5: 1. This is the holy temple of the Lord (Eph. 2:21), the completeness of Him who will fill the universe with Himself and govern the universe in the timelessness that is to be.

It was God's will and purpose that through His Christ He would reconcile the world to Himself. It is certain that God did reconcile the world to Himself when Jesus, the Christ, died, for Paul wrote with great assurance, "And having made peace through the blood of His cross, by Him to reconcile all things unto Himself; by Him, I say, whether they be things in earth or things in heaven." Col. 1:20. We must point out, however, that, though the reconciliation is complete, fully paid for and forever settled, yet the carrying out of its universal message awaits the complete ness and the fullness of the Christ body. This, if I err not, is certain, because Paul by the Spirit has definitely said that God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto Himself, but it is unto us (the members of the Christ body) that He has committed the word of reconciliation (2 Cor. 5:19), and we, knowing the completeness of His work, pray men in Christ's stead, "Be ye reconciled to God." Verse 20. Multitudes of God's saints would be greatly enlightened could their hearts embrace God's plan for the ages. God's dear people are thrown into dreadful turmoil and they attempt to accomplish all manner of presumptuous things because they do not know God's plan for the ages. The harlot church has filled their minds with the crude notion that all who are saved must be saved in this age or be lost forever. So often we hear men say, "The day of grace is almost ended." This error is quoted as though it were a scripture text, yet nothing contains less truth than this idle statement. The truth is that God's grace has only appeared to men (Titus 3:11), but it is not until the ages to come, the kingdom age and the dispensation of the fullness of times, that God will begin to manifest the fullness of His grace. This is why Paul prayed earnestly that the eyes of our understanding might be enlightened - so that we might see that "in the ages to come He might show the exceeding riches of His grace in His kindness toward us through Christ Jesus." Eph. 2:7. And for this reason he was also able to say that in the dispensation of the fullness of times He might gather together in one all things in Christ. Eph. 1:10.

It should be very evident to all who read that before the Lord can complete the work of reconciliation, He must first bring to completeness His glorious Christ, both the Head and the body as one together. I cannot over-emphasize the importance of this truth, because God Himself has spoken, saying that the body is the fullness of Him (or the completeness of Him) who is to fill all in all. See Eph. 1:22, 23. Therefore God must bring about this fullness, this completeness of His Christ, both the Head and the body in one Christ, before the work of reconciliation accomplished by Christ Jesus can be carried out to its universal fulfillment. Much is the labor of God the Father in bringing His sons to perfection, even to the image of Jesus Christ. Thus it will be seen that the first work to be accomplished in the reconciling of the universe must be to fully reconcile those elect persons who were foreknown, predestinated, called, justified, and glorified in Him. Before the broader work of reconciliation begins, the implements of His work must be fully prepared and, since it is by God's Christ that the world will be reconciled, then it is the Christ who must be first brought to perfection and fullness.

To these things the word of the Lord bears faithful witness, showing clearly that the first ones to be reconciled were the members of the body of Christ, for saith Paul, "All things are of God, who hath (first) reconciled us to Himself by Jesus Christ, and (secondly) hath given unto us the ministry of reconciliation." 2 Cor. 5:18. It is clear therefore that, after we, the members of the body of Christ, have been reconciled and made complete in Him, a completeness that comes with the redemption of our bodies at the first resurrection (Rom. 8: 23), then the work of the reconciliation of all the rest of creation will begin in earnest, "To wit, that God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto Himself, not imputing their trespasses unto them; and hath committed unto us the word of reconciliation. Now then we are ambassadors for Christ, as though God did beseech you BY US: we pray you in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled to God." 2 Cor. 5:19, 20.

TREASURES OF TRUTH, Volume 3, The Mystery of Christ and Our Union With Him [George R. Hawtin] ~ BOOK 40
This is the fellowship of the mystery (Eph. 3:9, 10), which from the beginning hath been hid in God, who created all things by Jesus Christ: to the intent that now unto the principalities and powers in heavenly places might be known by the church (the true church, which is His body) the manifold wisdom of God. Weymouth, translating this passage, appears to add much to its force clearly showing that by the church, which is the true body of Christ, the Lord will show to principalities and powers and rulers in the heavenly realms the endless aspects of His own wisdom. "To me who am less than the least of all the saints has this work been graciously entrusted - to proclaim to the Gentiles the gospel of the exhaustless wealth of Christ, and to show all men in a clear light what my stewardship is. It is the stewardship of the truth which from all the ages lay concealed in the mind of God, the Creator of all things - concealed in order that the church might now be used to display to the powers and authorities in the heavenly realms the innumerable aspects of God's wisdom. Such was the eternal purpose, which He had formed in Christ Jesus our Lord, in whom we have this bold and confident access through our faith in Him." Eph. 3:8-12. Weymouth. In the book of Hebrews, chapter ten and verse five, we have this remarkable statement: "Wherefore when He cometh into the world, He saith, Sacrifice and offering Thou wouldst not, but a body hast Thou prepared me." Then, after saying, "In burnt offerings and sacrifices for sin Thou hast had no pleasure," he shows that this one who is coming in a body, first the earthly body of Jesus of Nazareth and then the glorious fullness of the body of Christ, is coming, not to offer sacrifice and offering, but to "do Thy will, 0 God" (Verse 9), by the which will we are sanctified in the offering of the body of Jesus Christ once for all. The moment this one has come and is revealed who offers no meaningless sacrifice, but who does God's will, then all former things are done away, for, "He taketh away the first that He may establish the second." Verse 9. Then Christ Jesus becomes the high priest of good things to come by a greater and more per feet tabernacle not made with hands. Heb. 9:11. The greater and more perfect tabernacle not made with hands is the body of Christ, which is the fullness and the completion of Him who fills the universe with Himself.

Jesus, the Son of God, is the Head of the Christ body. Col. 2:18. In birth the head is born first, so the appearance of Jesus, the Head, at the beginning of the age was perfect assurance that the body of Christ, which is His fullness, would during this age come forth from the womb to stand complete in Him on Mt. Zion to govern the world in righteousness through ages to come. Triumphant are the words of Him who is the first born of many brethren (Rom. 8:29) as He stands in the end of the age, saying, "Here am I and the children (sons) which Thou hast given Me," each blessed son having come to the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ. Many saints in ages past have beheld scenes of extreme glory in the realm of the Spirit. So glorious were the visions of Daniel that he fell as one dead in the heavenly presence and remained as one sick certain days. Paul described the scenes of the third heaven as unspeakable things, which it was not lawful for a man to utter. But to John was revealed the magnificent glory of seeing the fullness of Christ as He will stand in completeness on the Lord's day. John saw not the lonely man of Galilee, but "one like the Son of man," whose voice was as the sound of many waters. Waters signify peoples, and in this case the type is abundantly accurate, signifying that the body of Christ is not one member, but many; yet it is but one body - a spiritual organism through which flows the harmony of God. To endeavor to enlarge on this supernal mystery of the ages, which John was privileged to behold, would only detract from its glory. Therefore we shall quote the words from Holy Writ and leave its lesson to be revealed to all who read and understand.

John was in the Spirit on the Lord's day, that is, he was transported in the Spirit beyond the age of grace right over to the end of the age. In spirit he heard a mighty voice as the sound of a trumpet speaking and saying, "I am Alpha and Omega, the first and the last: and, What thou seest, write in a book, and send it to the seven churches which are in Asia; ...And I turned to see the voice which spake with me. And, being turned, I saw seven golden candlesticks; And in the midst of the seven candlesticks one like unto the Son of man, clothed with a garment down to the foot, and girt about the paps with a golden girdle. His head and His hairs were white like wool, as white as snow; and His eyes were as a flame of fire; and His feet like unto fine brass, as if they burned in a furnace; and His voice as the sound of many waters. And He had in His right hand seven stars: and out of His mouth went a sharp two-edged sword; and His countenance was as the sun shineth in his strength. And when I saw Him, I fell at His feet as dead. And He laid His right hand upon me, saying unto me, Fear not; I am the first and the last: I am He that liveth and was head; and, behold, I am alive for evermore, Amen; and have the keys of hell and of death." Rev. 2:10-18.
Frail and paltry, yes, even demeaning, are the efforts of men to describe a glory which eye hath not seen or ear heard, neither has entered into the heart of man, but which can only be revealed by His Spirit, who searcheth out even the deep things of God. Nevertheless, this is the mystery, which has been hidden from ages and generations, now to be revealed to God's saints: The mystery, Christ in you, the hope of glory and the hope of all creation.

CHAPTER ONE
THE MEANING OF THE CROSS

Almighty Lord, in whom dwelleth the wisdom and knowledge of the universe, flood Thou my soul with understanding from above. Open now my eyes that I may plainly behold secrets of truth long hidden in Thee. Remove the darkling veil from my heart that light divine may shine upon me, and grant to my spirit the breath of inspiration that I may understand the truths that are written here. Amen!

"In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. The same was in the beginning with God. All things were made by Him; and without Him was not anything made that was made. In Him was life; and the life was the light of men. And the light shineth in darkness; and the darkness comprehended it not." John 1:1-5. These inspired words of truth must be the most sublime statement to ever proceed from the mind of God, to be written by the pen of any scribe, or to be spoken by the inspired lips of any prophet. The unshakable, indisputable knowledge that before all things was God almighty, all wise, unchanging and eternal, is knowledge so assuring that it dispels every uncertainty of life and the dismal confusion of mind that hangs like a smoggy pall over the hearts of all those unhappy people who are not thus assured. The first statement of truth ever vouch-safed to man was the simple word of assurance, "In the beginning God". Upon this truth hangs the eternal hope of the billions of mankind who have inhabited this earth. Remove God from the eternal portrait and nothing remains but a formless void with clouds and darkness upon the face of all the deep. Take God out of the Genesis of all things and purposelessness crowns our lives with confusion and unbelief, making life's highway a slippery slope, every harbor a whirlpool, and our rocks but sinking sand.

See with what holy assurance the heart is filled when it casts its anchor in such a certain rock as this: "For by Him were all things created, that are in heaven, and that are in earth, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers: all things were created by Him and/or Him: And He is before all things, and by Him all things consist." Col. 1:16-17. Your whole outlook on life will change from one of confusion and dread to one of blessed assurance and confidence with the entrance of the divine understanding that all things are vassals of His power, His dominion, and His control. Nothing exists without His consent. None acts without His permission or prospers without His blessing. In His omnipotent hand the nations of the earth in all their vaunted might and power are but dust upon the balances, soon to be dusted off the scales that the final reckoning might proceed as planned. You will not spend sleepless nights worrying about Communism when your heart rests assured that God, for hidden purposes comprehended only by infinite wisdom, has raised its godless head for a little moment to purge the filth and corruption from the sons of Zion. He who has raised it up will cast it down and break it to shivers beneath His feet when His purpose in it has been fulfilled. Then shall it, as Babylon, be as the chaff of the summer threshing floor, trodden neath the foot of man and driven by the wind away.

In my opinion the most sinister thing in the earth today is the nearly universal desire of the church system, which is Mystery Babylon, to sit beneath the abominable shadow of one great earthly head. The day is drawing ever nearer when possibly all the religious systems of earth will come under the control of the Pope of Rome and all the kings and rulers of the earth will give their power and authority to the Beast. Nothing any man can do by work, or prayer, or battle can let or hinder this device because divine wisdom has decreed that thus it must certainly be. What assurance fills the heart of the faithful as they rejoice in the wonder of God's plan! Abiding in the eternal rock, they fearlessly await the fiery trials soon to fall upon the whole earth in the assurance that the true church shall be purified and made white in preparation for the reign of Christ that will encompass the whole earth to cure its every disease when the curse has finished its evil day.

THE CERTAINTY OF GOD'S PURPOSE

Before the ages began or ever the world was. God almighty, omniscient, and immutable, charted the course of all things. The ages in their ever ascending and majestic purposes were all planned by Him. The increasing light and revelation of each one was planned with infinite care to display its own part in the spectrum of eternal truth that heaven and earth and things under the earth might rejoice together in the ends of the ages because of the everlasting fullness of Him who everywhere fills the universe with Himself.

With God nothing has been left to chance. Absolutely nothing. Omniscient wisdom, omnipotent power, infinite love, and boundless grace can leave nothing, nothing, I say, to chance, nor can such power, wisdom, and grace leave anything to the bungling minds of carnal men. Men sometimes ask me whether or not I believe in a second chance for sinners. My answer is always the same. "No, I do not believe in a second chance, and neither do I believe in a first chance, for God leaves nothing to chance." Men come to God when God calls them. As Jesus said, "No man can come to Me, except the Father which hath sent Me draw him:" John 6:44. And again: "All that the Father giveth Me shall come to Me; and him that cometh to Me I will in no wise cast out." John 6:37. Just as the draft of a nation calls its young men to military service when their turn comes, so also God calls men when their turn comes, and when He calls or draws them, none can dodge the draft. They have naught to do but respond.

The day of your birth was arranged before the worlds began. The reins of your life are as certainly in the divine hand as were those in Pharaoh, Moses, or Paul. The day of your death is even now appointed and all the pills and skills of man will fail to lengthen your days. Your downsittings and uprisings are all known to Him and your thoughts afar off. Even the very hairs of your head are all numbered. How much more, then, are the days of your life?

THE CERTAINTY OF THE FALL AND THE PLAN OF REDEMPTION

The fall of man in the Garden of Eden was part of God's eternal plan. By it God set in motion the mighty edict of Gen. 1:26, - "Let us make man in our image and after our likeness, and let us give him dominion." Such blessed understanding gives credence to the apostle's revelation; "For the earnest expectation of the creature waiteth for the manifestation of the sons of God. For the creature was made subject to vanity, not willingly, but by reason of Him who hath subjected the same in hope." Rom. 8:19,20. To consider this blessed fact further would be beyond the scope of our present writing and would in itself take much time and space. Nevertheless, let every man on earth assuredly know that the fall of man and all the dire consequences that have followed did not fall unexpectedly upon an unsuspecting God, but every detail of it from beginning to end was foreknown by the infinite mind of Him who inspired Paul to say, "Our light affliction which is but for a moment is working for us a. far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." And again, through that same inspired man, it was written, "all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to His purpose." Let us with utmost confidence rest assured then that our almighty Lord knows what He is doing. He who is the First and the Last must of necessity be all intermediate things as well, and He who is the Alpha and the Omega must include all the other letters as well.

There is not the slightest uncertainty about anything that God has to say concerning the entrance of sin into the world. His all-inclusive statement is this: "All have sinned and come short of the glory of God." Rom. 3:23. And "there is none righteous, no, not one." Rom. 3:10. In the first chapter of Romans all the world is proven guilty before God. In the second and third chapters all Israel is proven guilty before God, for by the law shall no flesh be justified. In the fourth and fifth chapters works of any kind are excluded from God's plan of salvation and faith in Christ is exalted and proven to be God's plan for the salvation of the whole world.

It is of utmost importance in our relationship to God that we see all things as He sees them and not as men understand them with their natural minds. Always remember that the "natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God, for they are foolishness unto him; neither can he know them because they are spiritually discerned." I Cor. 2:14. Let every man know that divine revelation does not reach us through the classrooms of college or university. Greek and Hebrew, the languages of the Bible, will help us but little, for man can never comprehend the purposes of God until God moves upon the face of the deep and the breath of inspiration from above floods his heart with the truth and the knowledge of the Lord.

Because God is God, all the wisdom and understanding of the universe dwells in Him. We must expect Him to say many things and state many facts that the human mind cannot comprehend nor pry into. It is the inspiration of the Almighty that giveth understanding. The wayfaring man, though a fool, can comprehend any of the things of God in that moment when the divine light from above shines upon them. Paul prayed that spiritual revelation would be given to the people, saying, "That the God of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of glory, may give unto you the spirit of wisdom and revelation in the knowledge of Him: the eyes of your understanding being enlightened; that ye may know what is the hope of His calling ..." Eph. 1:17,18.

And again, "... that ye might be filled with the knowledge of His will in all wisdom and spiritual understanding." Col. 1:9. "Open mine eyes," said David, "that I may behold wonderful things out of Thy law." So, you see, spiritual understanding is not given to the learned and lettered of this age, but to those blessed ones upon whom God has breathed the spirit of understanding from on high. How often we discover that God's way of reasoning does not make sense to our thinking! At all such times we should steadfastly remember how He said, "My thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways My ways, for as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are My ways higher than your ways, and My thoughts than your thoughts." Isa. 55:8,9. Even the saintly Peter once wrote of our brother Paul in these words: "And account that the long-suffering of our Lord is salvation; even as our beloved brother Paul also according to the wisdom given unto him hath written unto you; As also in all his epistles, speaking in them of these things: in which are some things hard to be understood, which they that are unlearned and unstable wrest, as they do also the other scriptures, unto their own destruction." 2 Pet. 3:15,16.

One of the many hard things of which Paul wrote may be found in Heb. 7:9,10, but, before quoting it, I must point out that the understanding of this one statement will prove vital to the understanding of all else that shall be said in this writing. This is what he wrote: "And as I may so say, Levi also, who receiveth tithes, paid tithes in Abraham. For he (Levi) was yet in the loins of his father when Melchisedec met him." You will readily remember that Abraham was Levi's great grandfather and that, at the time when Abraham met Melchisedec and paid tithes to him (Gen. 14:17-20) even Isaac, Abraham's son, was not yet born. Yet Paul, inspired by the Holy Spirit, clearly states that Levi, the great grandson of Abraham, paid tithes to Melchisedec, because he (Levi) was in the loins of his father (Abraham) when Melchisedec met him. This is certainly not human reasoning. Human reasoning, I think, would scoff at such a notion. Yet this is the reasoning of God, for it is God and God alone who understands the generations of man, comprehending with all knowledge how life is passed in succession from one generation to another. Such secrets, delivered to us by the disposition of angels, (Acts 7:53); are to be believed in the Spirit and need not to be probed into by the carnal mind, which is God's enemy. They are the secret truths of the Almighty, we adore them and despise them not by our own vain processes of human reasoning.

Now since we have seen by divine wisdom that Levi, the great grandson, was in fact in the loins of Abraham, his great grandfather, a hundred years or more before his birth, it should become easier for us to grasp the significance of a statement vastly more important to all mankind. In 1 Cor. 15:22 Paul wrote, saying, "In Adam all die." In exactly the same manner that Levi, though yet unborn, was present in his grandfather Abraham's loins when he paid tithes to Melchisedec, so you and I, yea, and all the world besides, were there in our father Adam's loins when he sinned in the garden of Eden. With him and in him we sinned, yea, and with him and in him we partook of the penalty of sin, for it is written, "Death passed upon all men for that all had sinned." Rom. 5:12. When was it that all men sinned?

The truth is that they sinned while yet in the loins of their father Adam on that day when he partook of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil. In A dam all die, for God had said to Adam, "In the day ye eat thereof, ye shall surely die." And because of this death passed upon all men, for all have sinned. Thus death reigned from Adam to Moses, even over them who had not sinned after the similitude of Adam's transgression. Rom. 5:14. "Sin is the transgression of the law, but it is not necessary to prove that a man is a lawbreaker to prove he is a sinner. All who sinned in Adam were born with the sentence of death already upon them and the death process had begun its work in them before ever they came forth from the womb. The indubitable fact that we are the children of Adam is proof enough of our need of a Savior, for "in Adam all die, but in Christ shall all be made alive." And we may say with confidence that all in the second phrase is as all-inclusive as the all in the first phrase.

The many people who read these lines have on many occasions seen the traits of a mother or father manifested in a son or a daughter, and we may confidently say that just as frequently we have seen grandfathers and grandmothers manifested in their grandchildren unto many generations. Times without number we have heard the expression, "I can see your grandmother in you," or "You are just like your father." My son does not walk as I walk. He walks like his grandfather. My daughter looks like her mother and acts like her father. We have become accustomed to seeing parents manifest in their children, but God saw the reverse. He saw children in their parents, not as a fleeting likeness but as a divine reality, so that when He formed Adam of the dust of the ground, He placed in his paternal loins the seed of the entire human race. Thus it is truly written, "in Adam all die."

It will not be difficult for any man to see that, had Adam been slain in the Garden of Eden before ever a child was begotten by him, all the billions of his posterity would also have died when he died, neither could they ever have seen the light of day. Let our minds then grasp the simple truth that when he sinned in the Garden of Eden, all his posterity sinned in him and the same death that passed upon him because of his sin passed likewise upon us all, even to the last man of Adam's race, for all have sinned.

A good tree bringeth not forth corrupt fruit, neither doth a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit. Of a thorn men do not gather figs, nor of a bramble bush gather they grapes.

There is always an element of eternal mystery wherever the mind and wisdom of God is concerned. Each succeeding generation spends lifetime after lifetime probing the hidden depths of the many branches of science. Men of learning in each age pass their knowledge on to the generation to come, but each in his order reaches the end of his days knowing that he has done little more than brush the surface of knowledge. Beyond him still lie the hidden depths that only omniscience can unlock. Since then natural things in a natural world defy our finite understanding, how much more do things of the Spirit defy all natural understanding. God's thoughts being so far above our thoughts and His ways above our ways! For thus saith the Lord, "As heaven is higher than the earth, so are My ways higher than your ways and My thoughts than your thoughts." Beautiful, indeed, is the revelation that follows the above truth. "As the rain cometh down and the snow from heaven, and returneth not thither, but watereth the earth, and maketh it bring forth and bud,...so shall My word be that goeth forth out of My mouth..." Isa. 55:10,11. It is when the spirit of revelation from above falls like rain upon the baked earth of human understanding that the light of God dawns in our hearts and the barren clods burst forth with a harvest of eternal truth. Let us never try to understand truths by the understanding of our natural minds, but let us rather pray, "Open mine eyes that I may behold wondrous things out of Thy law." Then will the rain of revelation fill the open vessels of the spirit. God will say, "let there be light" and light divine there will be.

Can the natural mind ever fathom the depths of the eternal truth that God was in Christ reconciling the world unto Himself? 2 Cor. 5:19. Can we grasp the significance of the words of Jesus, "That they all may be one, as Thou, Father, art in Me and / in Thee; that they may be one in Us, that the world may believe that Thou has sent me”? John 17:21. If now by God's Spirit we can understand even in part how God was in His Son, how the Son was in the Father, or how we the children of God are in the Father and in His Son, then that same spirit of understanding will show us how Levi was in Abraham's loins when Melchisedec met him, and how you and I were in Adam, our father, when he sinned, causing death and carnality to pass upon us all, for that all have sinned. Oh, the depth of the wisdom and understanding of God! How unsearchable are His judgments and His ways past finding out!

THE LAST ADAM

It is written, "The first Adam was made a living soul; the last Adam was made a quickening (life-giving) spirit." 1 Cor. 15:45. There is a deep and hidden mystery in the strange words, the last Adam. The natural mind would conclude that, if there were two Adams coming four thousand years apart, the first of these being the first Adam, it would of necessity follow that the next Adam would be the second Adam as is the case in 1 Cor. 15:47. Our Lord Jesus Christ is here called the last Adam. This simple statement, which on the surface seems almost irrelevant and scarcely worthy of our notice, is in fact pregnant with meaning, full of wisdom and understanding. It portrays as nothing else can the wonders of Christ's redemption, the marvels of the cross, and the completeness of the work that God by His Son has done for a world of sinful men, bringing by His cross abounding life and freedom from carnality to the millions of Christians who see in Him the end of Adam's race.

By way of illustration I shall now try to point out in what way our Lord Jesus Christ was the last Adam. In my father's family there were three sons and two daughters. Of the three sons the second died as a young man, the youngest married but begat no children, and of my father's marriage were born two daughters and four sons. Had it been, however, that my father had also died childless as did the other members of his family, then we, his sons, would not have been born and he would have been the last Hawtin. He would have been the last of the line.

There could have been no other. Now God has declared that our Lord Jesus Christ should be the last Adam. I cannot explain how divine power can accomplish such wonders, but God has decreed that all men of all ages should be included in Him. God has gathered up all the members of Adam's sinful race out of the past, out of the present, and out of the future, and included them all in Christ, the last Adam. Death passed upon all men, for all men sinned in the first Adam. Therefore by one divine and omnipotent stroke God has included all men in His Son, declaring Him to be the last Adam, the end of the fallen Adamic creation, and, having included all men in Christ, the last Adam. He crucified Him. He nailed Him to the accursed tree that it may now be literally and truthfully proclaimed by all men of Adam's race, "I am crucified with Christ". I am crucified with Christ, and nothing I can do or say will ever alter such an historic fact. God Himself, without my knowledge and before I ever saw the light of day, included me in Christ, the last Adam, even as He included me in the first Adam, and, having included me in the last Adam, He crucified Him and me in Him. Behold, then, upon what glorious foundation our faith rests. Christ has indeed become the Savior of all men, especially of those who believe, because all who believe shall find both here and now that every benefit of the cross has become operative in their lives. Not only will they find forgiveness of sin in their present walk but they will be delivered from all the power of carnality as we shall presently show.

In moments of meditation I thought upon the cross of Christ and wondered why it was that God should have placed such emphasis and significance in the cross. Why should He include all men in His Son and, having done so, declare that this was the last Adam, the end of the old creation? And, having included all the old and fallen creation in Him, God hung Him upon a cross until His life was gone out of Him and all the world was dead in Him. So in spirit I beheld that the cross of Christ was the great ex (X) that crosses and cancels out all things that belong to the old creation, declaring their demise in the three most significant words ever spoken, "it is finished". Thus by the cross of Christ God declares the finish of the old creation in which all men live in carnality and end in death, and, having done so. He declares the last Adam of the old creation to be the author and first fruit of an entirely new creation, the first fruit of them that slept.

THE NEW CREATION

When Christ, the last Adam, died and all the old creation died in Him, the creation to follow must of necessity be a new creation, and for this certain reason it is written, "If any man be in Christ, he is a new creation; old things have passed away and, behold, all things are become new. For in that He died He died unto sin once, but in that He liveth He liveth unto God."

I am perfectly aware that these profound truths will be misunderstood by many and some will wrest them to their own destruction in their carnal and wicked endeavor to abrogate repentance of sin and annul all holiness of life, as some men in their zeal to display the grace of God have done, living in sin and turning the grace of God into lasciviousness. Jude 4. These gracious truths are not now written to men of corrupt minds who have no desire to walk in the truth, but to all who walk in love, serving God because they love Him and not in fear of some dreadful judgment that hangs like an awesome terror before their eyes. It is not to such as this that we now write, but to those children of the most high God who, seeing their infinite identity with Christ, are able to say in all truth and righteousness, "As He is, so are we in this world." 1 John 4:17.

Those who read these lines with the revelation and understanding of the Almighty upon their minds will discover a new experience taking place in their hearts - as definite and spiritual an experience as they have ever had, yes, as definite as their conversion and the peace that came when they believed that the blood of Jesus Christ His Son cleansed their hearts from all sin. Let us never read these truths and lightly cast them aside, but while reading them earnestly pray that the eyes of our understanding may be enlightened; that we may know what is the hope of His calling, and what the riches of the glory of His inheritance in the saints, and what is the exceeding greatness of His power to us who believe, according to the working of His mighty power which He wrought in Christ Jesus when He raised Him from the dead, and set Him at His own right hand in the heavenly places. See Eph. 1:17-20.

Wonderful as it is to know that with Him we died, it is of surpassing wonder to know that in Him we were buried, in Him we have already risen from the dead, in Him we ascended, and in Him we are seated at the right hand of the majesty on high. You will surely say of me that I hold little respect for the vast mass of church tradition, but we must surely agree that, like the Pharisees and scribes of old, we have "made the truth of God of none effect by our tradition." Therefore, the sooner we abandon tradition and lift our hearts to heaven for inspiration the sooner we will come to know and experience all that God has promised in Christ, and, knowing what He has promised, shall enter here and now the grace that has been so freely proffered to all mankind.

THE IMMORTAL PROMISE

We said above that God almighty and all wise leaves nothing to chance. By His divine power He has made all things certain, leaving the work of His Christ as an historic fact and foundation for our faith, and we, having believed the work He has fully accomplished, become partakers with Him in whom we died and rose again. God's people manifest their unbelief by the things they preach and say and sing. How often I have sung with the multitude, "I can, I will, I do believe that Jesus died for me". You might as well sing, "I can, I will, I do believe that Caesar Augustus reigned in Rome". The real truth is that these are historic, indisputable facts. Jesus did die for me just as surely as Moses led Israel out of Egypt. There is no need to try to whip up faith at all in such a truth as this. Faith does not rest on make-believe, as the preachers erroneously imagine. Faith rests upon the certain foundation of what God immutable has said.

Faith cometh by hearing the word of God, or, as Weymouth so purely translates it, "Faith, then, comes from a message heard and that message from the lips of Christ." Rom. 10-17. I think the general idea of faith today is commensurate with that of the four hundred prophets of Baal, who vainly imagined that by loud and united shouting and jumping up and down upon the altar they could whip up enough faith to make the fire fall on the sacrifice. How different was the prayer of Elijah! He knew the fire would fall because his faith rested, not on shouting and jumping up and down upon the altar they could whip up enough faith to make the fire fall on the commensurate with that of the four hundred prophets of Baal, who vainly imagined that by loud and united

"... God, willing more abundantly to shew unto the heirs of promise the immutability of His counsel, confirmed it by an oath: that by two immutable things (God's promise and God's oath), in which it was impossible for God to lie, we might have strong consolation, who have fled for refuge to lay hold upon the hope set before us: which hope we have as an anchor of the soul, both sure and steadfast, and which entereth into that within the veil."

Heb. 6:17-19. "That within the veil" is Jesus Christ Himself. Upon such a certain foundation we now stand, holding an immovable anchorsteadfastly cast in the mighty rock, Christ Jesus, who even now within the inner veil is seated at God's right hand. Having these immutable promises let us with faith lay hold on the promise God has set before us.

I AM CRUCIFIED

Let us consider further the work of the cross and of the Christ who died upon it that our minds may be enlarged and we might better understand how this last Adam included in Himself every person and everything that belonged to the old creation, putting it all out of the way, nailing it to His cross. In thus crucifying the whole world in His Son, He robbed principalities and powers and all rulers of darkness of the fearful power they held over us by reason of the fall. By His death He blotted out and made ineffective every ordinance that was against us, because laws are not made for dead men nor do they apply to men of the new creation who, with Him, have risen to newness of life, but to those only who still live as members of the old creation. Please read Col. 2:9-17.

When Paul wrote his letter to the Galatians, he wrote to a people who had begun to live a wonderful life in the Spirit but who, through false teaching by certain Judaizers, had reverted to ordinances of the old creation. They who were identified with Christ and His new creation were now trying to bring about perfection by the do's and don'ts of a law. So Paul with severe rebuke wrote, "0 foolish Galatians, who hath bewitched you, that ye should not obey the truth, before whose eyes Jesus Christ hath been evidently set forth, crucified among you?" Gal. 3:1. Weymouth in his original translation uses this eloquent expression. "You foolish Galatians! Whose sophistry has bewitched you, - you to whom Jesus Christ has been vividly portrayed as on the cross? Answer me this one thing. Is it on the ground of your obedience to the law that you received the Spirit, or is it because when you heard you believed?"

Did you notice that Paul said here, "You to whom Christ has been vividly portrayed as on the cross? The message of the crucified life had been taught to these Galatians and they, having believed it, received the Holy Spirit and walked in newness of life as a new creation, but they, like the wretched tradition-ridden church system of today, lost hold of the truth of their true position in Christ to fuss and bother with a law that was made for men who belonged to the old creation and lived their lives on the other side of the cross. The apostle by the wisdom imparted to him prefaced the above statement with his own testimony as to the work of the cross in his life saying, "I am crucified with Christ; nevertheless, I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me: and the life which I now live in the flesh, I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me, and gave Himself for me. Gal. 2:20. Paul was not living the crucified life and reckoning his old self dead because of his titanic efforts to make himself believe that he was crucified, but he stood in this holy state by the faith of the Son of God, or shall we say because he had perfect faith, as I too now have, that, when God put His only begotten Son on the cross. He also put all the world on the cross in Him and with Him, and that, when He placed Him in the tomb, He buried the last Adam, and every man who belonged to that creation He buried with Him. Thus when Paul said, "I am crucified with Christ," his faith was resting not on an experience he attained at some altar of prayer, but upon what God had done for him and for us all long before any of us knew that Jesus was the Christ.

It is upon such a certain foundation that our faith now rests - not upon what we experienced at an altar service, but upon what God did in His Son Jesus Christ when He wrapped up all the old creation in Him and nailed Him to the accursed tree. Ah, wonder of wonders! No marvel it is that Paul in exultation shouted a fiat that will echo on and on through eternal ages: "God forbid that I should glory save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom the world is crucified unto me and unto the world." Gal. 6:14.

I was crucified with Christ long, long before I saw the light of day or breathed my first breath in this world. Men on yonder street who have never read a page of God's holy truth were included there in the last Adam. In Him they were nailed with all their carnality to the cross. In that moment when God's truth floods like a ray of dawn into my heart, revealing what God actually accomplished in His cross, and teaching me that I myself was there in Him, then all my struggling with the old nature is at an end, and in amazement before that heavenly things cross. A new day dawns upon our weary spirits in this certain knowledge that the God omnipotent and omniscient included me in His Son when He nailed Him and all the world in Him to the cross. A new day dawns upon our weary spirits in this certain knowledge that the old things have passed away and the glory of a new creation bursts upon us. If any man be in Christ, he is a new creation. He has to be. He cannot help but be because for him the old passed away when he with Christ was nailed to the accursed tree, and all the signs that the old still exists are neither reality nor truth, but darkness and error that hide themselves in unbelief.

Meditate at great length upon this statement of Paul until the revelation of the Almighty gives understanding: "I am crucified with Christ; nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me; and the life that I now live in the flesh I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me and gave Himself for me." Gal. 2:20. Paul's crucifixion with Christ was an accomplished fact. Naught was there to do but believe it. Yet he said, "I live, (or, I am alive,) but it is not I, but Christ." It was the old self, the old nature, the old Adam that was crucified and died, but it is the new creation that comes forth from the tomb in resurrection. The apostle in the glory and wonder of the truth that was revealed to him scarcely knew how to put in words the marvel of his own revelation. "Nevertheless I live," he says, "yet not I, but Christ; and the life that I now live in the flesh, I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me and gave Himself for me." As the glory and wonder of the truth bursts upon our spirits, we find ourselves repeating in awe, "It is sown in corruption; it is raised in incorruption: It is sown in dishonor; it is raised in glory: It is sown in weakness; it is raised in power: It is sown a natural body; it is raised a spiritual body." 1 Cor. 15:42-44. For the first man Adam was made a living soul, but the last Adam a life-giving spirit.

Let all who now read these lines assuredly know that, when Jesus Christ was crucified, you were crucified in Him. Nothing that belonged to the old creation was omitted. Even its laws and ordinances were nailed to the cross, for they were given to govern the old creation. Therefore, He blotted out the handwriting of ordinances that was against us, which was contrary to us, and took it out of the way, nailing it to his cross. Col. 2:14. For centuries faithful men and women have longed for the assurance that their old carnal self was done away that they might walk in newness of life. Well, the good news we now bring is that the crucifixion has taken place and need never occur again. God in admiration looks upon it as already accomplished and the realization of the truth of it, as rays of dawn, bursts upon our liberated spirits while the heavenly choirs sing within the mansions of our new created being. "Nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ," - Christ the anointed, Christ the end of the old creation, and Christ the beginning of the new.

THE OLD MAN IS CRUCIFIED

Our old man is simply we ourselves as we were under the old Adam creation. When Adam was made, he was made in the image of God, and according to the scripture only "a little lower than the angels." Heb. 2:7. He lived and walked after the Spirit with little or no dependence at all upon natural or physical things. But once he sinned, all this changed and he who began with the nature of God and was but a little lower than the angels now found himself but little higher than the beasts with the predominant part of his nature more in accord with the beasts of the field than with the God who created him. Nebuchadnezzar typified this very condition when for seven times (representing the seven dispensations) he lived with the beasts of the field, ate straw like an ox, slept outside on the wet grass, and his fingernails grew like claws and the hair of his head like bird feathers until seven times passed over him. See Daniel, chapter 4. Can we say anything better of the Sodom in which we now live where every device is connived and invented to give satisfaction to the realm of the flesh whether it be sex, strong drink, marijuana, L.S.D., tobacco, or a thousand other evils. Sodomites and adulterers have dared to invade the pulpits in our day, pretending to speak of heavenly things while manifesting the nature of beasts and sporting themselves with their own deceivings. 2 Pet. 2:12-14. Ah, sinful generation! How shall you escape the damnation of hell?

All the corruption in the world is the manifestation of the nature of the fallen first Adam. He is the old Adam. None of his wretchedness can pass beyond the cross. None of his corruption can be carried over into the new creation. None can walk in newness of life until the cross of Christ has ended the old. There never can be a new man until the cross of Christ has taken the life of the old man. It is not until old things pass away that all things become new. You cannot know the joy of being a new creation while the old creation still persists. The cross of Christ must be the giant "X" that marks out the old forever. The tomb must be the burial place of the old man. Even his grave clothes must remain in the tomb. Without the cross there can be no resurrection. It is impossible. Can you not see? It is the cross that takes the life of the old. It is the resurrection that brings forth the new. Those who die in Him to end the old rise with Him to begin the new. Thus it is written: "If any man be in Christ, he is a new creation; old things are passed away, and, behold, all things are become new." 2 Cor. 5:17.

In the scripture where Paul states that our old man is crucified with Him he uses this definite expression: "knowing this, that our old man is crucified with Him, that the body of sin might be destroyed, that henceforth we should not serve sin. For he that is dead is freed from sin."

"Rom. 6:6,7. We must take time here to consider these two important words, 'knowing this.' The indisputable fact is that very, very few Christians do know this - that their old man is crucified. The real truth is that they do not know it. They neither know nor understand that two thousand years ago God took us, our old nature, our old man, and everything that belonged to the old creation and putting it all in Jesus Christ, crucified Him. He put Him to death. He executed Him, for crucifixion is execution as certainly as is the guillotine, the electric chair, the gas chamber, or the hangman's noose. The wages of sin is death and every man of Adam's race died the death in Him when He was nailed to the accursed tree, for it is written, "Cursed is everyone that hangeth upon a tree."

Know this, then: our old man is crucified with Him. It is not something to be done in the future. It is done. It was done on that day when the sun withdrew his shining at noon and horrible darkness gripped the world in awesome dread until Jesus in agony cried, "My God, My God! Why hast Thou forsaken Me?" And then, as though to write finis to all that was of the old, the earth quaked and reeled like a drunkard. The mighty immovable rocks rent and split. The veil of the temple, so strong that six yoke of oxen could not pull it apart, which in type represented the flesh, was struck by a hand divine that tore it apart from top to bottom. "It is finished," cried the last Adam; and it was finished. The old creation was finished, the old man was finished, the flesh was finished, the law was finished, and the ordinances were finished. All was to be forever buried that from the tomb a new creation would spring up. "And this is in harmony with God's merciful purpose for the government of the world when the times are ripe for it, the purpose which He has cherished in His own mind of restoring the whole creation to find its one head in Christ; yes, things in heaven and things on earth, to find their one head in Him." Eph. 1:9,10. (Weymouth). Knowing this! Knowing this! That our old man is crucified with Him! Do you know it, my friend? Do you know it? Do you know that God accomplished it for you before you were born? Your faith this moment in that long accomplished fact sets the bells of the new creation ringing in your heart. Knowing this, knowing this, that our old man is crucified with Him!

Many who now read will find a question arising in their hearts. You will be saying to me, "If it is true that I am crucified and my old man is crucified, why is it that I yet see evidences of carnality remaining in my heart and spoiling my walk every day that I live? Why am I so often beset with anger, impatience, and lusts of many kinds, all of which seem to deny that my old man is crucified?" Because of carnal symptoms everywhere I am loath to believe and I cannot say, 'I know my old nature is crucified.' Let all the faithful forever know that it is God's word that is the truth. The symptoms therefore are but lies. All that is not of the truth is a lie, and no lie is of the truth.

Many years ago a trifling incident occurred in my life that for some reason made an indelible impression upon my mind. Consequently I never forgot it. As a boy I lived in the great wheat belt of Saskatchewan. The part of the province where we farmed was commonly known as the bald-headed prairie. No trees grew there at all except where a farmer had planted a shelter belt around his yard. As a result I grew up with no knowledge of trees whatever. At about twenty years of age it was my pleasure to spend a summer in the forest to the northeast, where trees abounded everywhere. It was early spring when I arrived and the million trees stood leafless and dead. One day for no reason that I can remember I took my axe and cut down a little tree and, picking it up, I dragged it into the yard, leaving it lying dead upon the ground. It is not necessary that I present arguments here to convince you that, the moment my axe had cut through the trunk of that tree, its life was ended forever. It was dead and no power on earth could ever restore its life. But spring was beginning to bustle about and the sound of her mystic garments could be heard in all the land. Happy little crocuses awoke from their sleep and, smiling up at every passerby, invited all to admire their pretty dress. All the trees on all the hills began to open their thousand leaves and waved a welcome to the returning songbirds who rejoiced with
As I considered this strange phenomenon, I knew beyond any doubt that the tree was dead. It had been dead from the moment it had been severed from its root. But there were the symptoms, the buds and the leaves, telling me that it was not dead after all, but just as much alive as any standing tree. Now the truth is that the tree was cut down. No one could deny that. It was dead; that was also certain. The lie was the symptoms, the flourishing leaves that insisted that it was still alive. In spite of every sign of life, however, I knew and you know that it was dead, knowing this, that days before I had cut it down with my axe. And sure enough, in a very few days the leaves dried up and no sign of life remained. It is this lying wonder that the believer often sees long after he believes that our old man is crucified.

RECKONING

We are told by the Lord to reckon ourselves dead to sin but alive unto God. Rom. 6:11. Reckoning is something that is done with figures, and in all parts of the world it is the same. Two plus two equals four and three times four is twelve in any country. It is also true that that which is executed is dead. That which was crucified no longer lives. This, I believe, is cardinal truth. It must never be passed over lightly. It is when the symptoms declare that the old man lives and when we ourselves contemplate the inconsistencies, the incongruities, and the carnality that still persists in our own lives that we are to begin our reckoning. We are not to point to those flourishing leaves and insist that the tree of the old nature is not dead after all, but we are to point to the cross and reckon that there the axe was laid to the root of the tree, and it is dead no matter what evidence may be produced to the contrary. It is because we know that the old man was crucified with Him that the body of sin might be destroyed that we are now able to do our reckoning - reckoning ourselves dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto God.

To enrich our understanding we here quote four paragraphs from the deeply spiritual teaching of our Chinese brother, Watchman Nee, concerning the truth of reckoning. Quote: "What does reckoning mean? 'Reckoning' in Greek means doing accounts, bookkeeping. Accounting is the only thing in the world we humans can do correctly. An artist paints a landscape. Can he do it with perfect accuracy? Can the historian vouch for the absolute accuracy of any record, or the map-maker for the perfect correctness of any map? They can make, at best, fair approximations. Even in every day speech, when we try to tell some incident with the best intention to be honest and truthful, we cannot speak with complete accuracy. It is mostly a case of exaggeration or under-statement, of one word too much or too little. What then can a man do that is utterly reliable? Arithmetic! There is no scope for error there. One chair plus one chair equals two chairs. That is true in London and it is true in Cape Town. If you travel west to New York or east to Singapore it is still the same. All the world over and for all time, one plus one equals two. One plus one is two in heaven and earth and hell.

Why does God say we are to reckon ourselves dead? Because we are dead. Let us keep to the analogy of accounting. Suppose I have fifteen shillings in my pocket, what do I enter in my account-book? Can I enter fourteen shillings and sixpence or fifteen shillings and sixpence? No, I must enter in my account-book that which is in fact in my pocket. Accounting is the reckoning of facts, not fancies. Even so, it is because I am really dead that God tells me to account it so. God could not ask me to put down in my account-book what was not true. He could not ask me to reckon that I am dead if I am still alive. For such mental gymnastics the word 'reckoning' would be inappropriate; we might rather speak of 'misreckoning'!

"Reckoning is not a form of make-believe. It does not mean that, having found that I have only twelve shillings in my pocket, I hope that by entering fifteen shillings incorrectly in my account-book such 'reckoning' will somehow remedy the deficiency. It won't. If I have only twelve shillings, yet try to reckon to myself: 'I have fifteen shillings; I have fifteen shillings; I have fifteen shillings,' do you think that the mental effort involved will in any way affect the sum that is in my pocket? Not a bit of it! Reckoning will not make twelve shillings into fifteen shillings, nor will it make what is untrue true. But if, on the other hand, it is a fact that I have fifteen shillings in my pocket, then with great ease and assurance I can enter fifteen shillings in my account-book. God tells us to reckon ourselves dead, not that by the process of reckoning we may become dead, but because we are dead. He never told us to reckon what was not a fact.

"Having said, then, that revelation leads spontaneously to reckoning, we must not lose sight of the fact that we are presented with a command: 'Reckon ye...' There is a definite attitude to be taken. God asks us to do the account, to put down 'I have died' and then to abide by it. Why? Because it is a fact. When the Lord Jesus was on the cross, I was there in Him. Therefore I reckon it to be true. I reckon and declare that I have died in Him. Paul said, "Reckon ye yourselves to be dead unto sin, but alive unto God." How is this possible? "In Christ Jesus." Never forget that it is always and only true in Christ. If you look at yourself you will think death is not there, but it is a question of faith not in yourself but in Him. You look to the Lord, and know what He has done. "Lord, I believe in Thee. I reckon upon the fact in Thee! Stand there all the day." End of quote. From the book The Normal Christian Life.

You will not have to reckon too often before you find that any besetting carnality is falling off and losing its hold upon you. Why, it seems to me that the truth that with him I died should now deliver me even from any fear of death, for why should I fear that which has already been accomplished? Those who die by faith with Him have accomplished the first death. Upon all such the second death hath no power. I am brought to believe that even death itself is for us but a lie, and this, forsooth, may be the reason that both Paul and Jesus often use the term 'sleep' instead of 'death.' Paul said, "If we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with Him." 1 Thess. 4:14. And again: "And many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake..." Dan. 12:2. And yet again: "...We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed." 1 Cor. 15:51. Death is for those who fail to identify themselves with the cross of Christ; sleep is for those who do. Carnality, debauchery, and sin persist in those who cannot see that the cross ended the old creation. Newness of life and sonship are for those who can.

When Satan points you to the evidence of carnality in your life, you must look at the cross and reckon that it was there death was accomplished and your old man, your old nature, your flesh, your carnality, was crucified with Him and in Him. The evidence of carnality that now presents itself is a lying wonder that must be reckoned dead and forever abolished. It is here that our understanding is enlightened by Paul's words to the Galatians, who, instead of reckoning themselves dead, were trying to regulate their carnal ways by the restrictions of the law. But this cannot and must not be. "They that are Christ's have crucified the flesh with its affections and lusts." Gal. 5:24. They reckon the work accomplished. This is the only way to deal with the flesh. Rules and regulations may seem to inhibit the flesh, but actually they only cater to it. Touch not, taste not, handle not may seem to be wise instruction, but a whole lifetime of such inhibition leaves the flesh, the old nature, and the old man as much alive as ever. Crucifixion alone destroys the power of the old nature. So, when Paul says, "They that are Christ's have crucified the flesh with its affections and lusts," he is teaching that all such people do believe the truth that the old nature was crucified with Christ. They reckon it so; they believe it so; and because they believe this truth, the very truth itself operates in their lives. Carnality is on the cross and the life they now live in the flesh is by the faith of the Son of God, a living explicit faith in what Christ accomplished when He included all the old creation in Himself on the cross, a faith that brings the long awaited victory over all sin and carnality and lifts us to the mountain peak of overcoming.

Every mention of the cross brings us face to face with the resurrection. Our knowledge that old things have passed away at the cross turns our eyes to the glory of new things. What good would it be to have the old pass away if there were nothing new to replace it? Therefore we greatly rejoice in the knowledge that, just as surely as old things pass away, behold, all things become new. If any man be in Christ, he is a new creation because the old creation died on the cross. "I am crucified unto the world," Paul said, "and the world is crucified unto me." Both the world and I were on the cross at the same time, so a double crucifixion has been accomplished here. I am crucified to everything that belongs to the old realm that I may make my entrance into the new realm. The world likewise was crucified that it might be divested of any power over me.

The further we go with this thought the clearer our understanding becomes. Our minds can now readily grasp this sacred thought: "If ye then be risen with Christ, seek those things which are above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God. Set your affections on things above, not on things on the earth. For ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God. When Christ, who is our life shall appear, then shall ye also appear with Him in glory." Col. 3:1-4. Fornication, uncleanness, inordinate affection, evil concupiscence, covetousness, idolatry, adultery (Col. 3:5), and all such things are powerless in the presence of dead men. Therefore reckon yourselves to be dead unto sin, but alive unto God. Mortify (put to death) these things, not by fighting them, not to striving to inhibit them, but by reckoning them to be where they actually belong - not corrupting your life, but on the cross. This is the way to victory; this is the way of the Spirit and the way of faith. For this reason it is written, "This I say then; Walk in the Spirit, and ye shall not fulfill the lusts of the flesh." Gal. 5:16.

THE FLESH IS CRUCIFIED

In the book, Two Realms, we have taken much care to describe the flesh, showing what it is, how it operates, and in what way the whole world with everything in it depends upon the five senses of the flesh for its very existence. We have seen that all who live after the flesh find death to be their only reward. But now the truth is made plain before us that the flesh with all its affections and lusts was nailed to the cross with our Lord Jesus Christ when He died so long ago. Just as certainly as the death of Christ is an historic fact, so also it is an historic fact that I died with Him, my old nature died with Him, and my flesh with all its affections and lusts was nailed to the cross with Him then. In realization of this indisputable fact I stand in utter amazement as I behold the vain efforts of millions of Christians who for centuries have vainly tried to somehow muster enough faith to nail the flesh with all its works to the cross and be rid of carnality forever. But this we cannot do. Why try to do what God has already done? Why should I try to attain what God attained for me when He included me, together with my flesh and all my fleshy nature and all the world besides in His son, and, having done so. He crucified Him and all sin and carnality with Him?

If I put a thousand dollars in the pocket of my coat and someone throws the coat into the fire, will I ever have that thousand dollars again? Never! It is gone irretrievably and I will see it no more. And is it not just as true that, when God placed the world in His Son, together with the flesh, the old man, and my very self, He crucified Him? Dare we in unbelief tempt God by saying that all that was included in Him did not die with Him? I tell you, nay! When the Son of God was crucified, I was crucified; my old man (Adamic nature) was crucified; my flesh was crucified; and even the laws that governed me under the old realm were nailed to His cross. Col. 2:14. It is by faith and confidence in what God has done for us that the victory is ours. It is when our hearts are assured that God did this great work at the cross of Christ that we begin our reckoning that we are dead indeed to sin, but alive unto God.

THE OPERATION OF GOD

There is a beautiful statement made in Col. 2:12: "Buried with Him in baptism, wherein also ye are risen with Him through faith of the operation of God, who raised Him from the dead." Crucifixion, burial, and resurrection are all the operation of God and it is in the operation of God that we are asked to place our confidence. We are to have confidence in what God did, not in what we do or what we can accomplish by what we imagine to be faith. God Himself has done this mighty work. It was His operation at the cross of Christ. Our confidence in what God did, the operation of God, is the very foundation stone of our faith. Here our reckoning begins. Upon this rock we stand to proclaim to ourselves, to God, and if need be to principalities and powers, "I am crucified with Christ." I am crucified because I was crucified. My old nature is crucified because it was crucified at Calvary. My flesh is crucified because it was crucified when He was crucified.

Henceforth our whole outlook becomes new. If any man be in Christ, he is a new creation. Old things have passed away, and, behold, all things have become new.
It is the cross that writes finis to the old. It is the resurrection that opens wide the gates to the new. Nothing of the old can possibly pass by the cross nor enter into the realm where all things are become new. Identification with His death spells the end to all that is old. Identification with His resurrection proclaims the beginning of all that is new. No man can live the crucified life until he reckons with absolute assurance that, when Christ died, he died with Him in Him. No man can live the resurrected life until he reckons with absolute assurance that, when Christ rose, he rose in him and with him. Henceforth, if any man be in Christ, he is a new creation. Old things are passed away and, behold, all things are become new.

BORN OF THE INCORRUPTIBLE SEED

When Nicodemus spoke with our Lord Jesus Christ on that memorable night when he came to inquire the way that leads to the kingdom of God, he was given a statement so revolutionary that he was stunned into awkward questioning by the daring truth of it. He was not told of a life that had to be made over or of efforts that had to be made on his part that he might attain the kingdom of God and be found worthy to enter it; he was told of a completely new life, a completely new generation. Except a man be born again, he could not see the kingdom of God. The kingdom of God was a realm he had not heard of before. Men born of flesh and blood could not enter it, but only men born of the Spirit. Except a man be born of the spirit, he could not see the kingdom nor understand it, much less enter into it. All men are the seed of Adam. The first Adam was given power to generate a whole race after the flesh, the level of death unto which he had fallen. The last Adam was given power to generate a new race, a new creation, after the Spirit. Two dreadful statements are made concerning the first Adam and all his generation after the flesh: First, 'in Adam all die', and second, 'if ye live after the flesh, ye shall die'. But of the last Adam, Jesus Christ, the Head of the new creation, it is said, "in Christ shall all be made alive." And again, "If ye through the Spirit do mortify the deeds of the body, ye shall live." Your birth in the flesh as a child of Adam fitted you only to live as a dying man in a corruptible and dying creation, for in Adam all die; but the birth from heaven is a spiritual birth of which the last Adam, Jesus Christ, is the eternal Author and Finisher. In Christ shall all be made alive.

In that marvelous fiat at the opening of John’s gospel - "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God" - much more is involved than that which meets the casual eye. The Word here is in the Greek the Logos. In the beginning was the Logos. We do not have a word in English that is the direct equivalent of Logos. In fact, it is well nigh impossible to express its meaning by even the use of a sentence or a paragraph. The Logos is the Word spoken, but it is more than that. It is the living spoken Word, and yet more than that it is a living person speaking a living word. Dr. Adam dark says it should remain untranslated. It was the Logos who spoke the words, "Let there be light," and there was light. It was the Logos who before the tomb of Lazarus said, "Lazarus, come forth," and he came forth.

Peter in his epistle used the word Logos when he said, "Being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word (Logos) of God, which liveth and abideth forever." The corruptible seed is the seed of Adam by which we are born after the flesh. The incorruptible seed is the Logos, the living, speaking Word, by which we are born from above, a new creation after the Spirit. "All flesh is as grass, and all the glory of man as the flower of grass. The grass withereth, and the flower thereof falleth away. But the word of the Lord (the Logos), endureth forever. And this is the word (Logos) which by the gospel is preached unto you." 1 Pet. 1:23-25.

Identification with Christ in the cross ends all that belongs to the Adam generation. Identification with Him in the resurrection is the beginning of the new creation. We will need revelation to grasp it, but the new birth is actually the beginning of the resurrection. By it we are raised to newness of life. Through the operation of God we become a new creation, born not after the flesh but after the Spirit, born of the incorruptible seed that liveth and abideth forever. Reckon yourselves dead to the old creation after the flesh but alive as members of the new creation after the Spirit. As everything about the Adamic creation savored of the flesh and ended in death, so now everything of the new creation savors of the Spirit and is a river of eternal life. It is not wisdom or patience or holiness or faith that you need. It is Christ. From henceforth, if any man be in Christ, he is a new creation.
Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us that we should be called the sons of God; and behold the greatness of the Father's good pleasure that, in that place where once Adam's fallen creation, born after the flesh, lay dying, now should reign the many brethren of the new creation, born of the eternal Logos, a race of in-Christed men.

CHAPTER TWO
THE CROSS AND THE DEATH OF SELF

The moment any man identifies himself with the cross of Christ, he enters into an entirely new realm. He has passed from death across to life. He has renounced his citizenship in this present evil world and all his allegiance to it to become a citizen of the eternal realm. Because in Christ he died, he has become part of the eternal and can never more die. He has seen the precious promises of God in Christ our Lord and, having embraced them, he has become a stranger and a pilgrim in the earth, for "they who say such things declare plainly that they seek a country. And truly, if they had been mindful of that country from whence they came out, they might have had opportunity to have returned. But now they desire a better country, that is, an heavenly: wherefore God is not ashamed to be called their God: for He hath prepared for them a city." Heb. 11:14-16.

Until we are identified with the cross of Christ, we are citizens of this present evil age. This is the world and this is the country to which we belong. We are citizens of it; we feel at home in it. We speak its language; we covet its ways; and perhaps it is not strange that we desire to remain as we are. But, when the eye of faith has caught sight of that better country, we become restless until we partake of our new and heavenly citizenship, God's heavenly country, a realm whose inhabitants are part of the eternal and cannot die. Borne from the perfume of earth's drooping lilies to the realm where flowers never fade, we become citizens of a better country, a heavenly sphere, a place where old things pass away and, behold, all things become new. It is here at the great divide of the cross that the saints of God learn the full force of the message. "Whosoever will save his life shall lose it, and whosoever will lose his life for My sake (by identifying himself with Christ) shall find it." Here at the cross the corn of wheat falls into the ground and dies, and, in dying, it brings forth fruit to life eternal. He who remains on earth's side of the cross of Christ will find his life to be a fading leaf that in the autumn time will wither and pass away with all the fashion of this age. In saving his life, he has lost it. It is not the seed that is preserved in the bin that brings forth fruit unto life eternal, but the seed that falls into the ground and dies. The man who embraces the cross of Christ is the man who, by losing his life, has saved it. In giving his life away, he has kept it unto life eternal. In the natural world that which is kept is saved and that which is given away is lost; but in the realm of God that which is kept is lost and that which is yielded up is saved.

0 cross that liftest up my head,
I dare not ask to hide from thee:
I lay in dust life's glory dead
And from the ground there blossoms red Life that shall endless be.

How well the apostle John wrote, "The world passeth away, and the lusts thereof: but he that doeth the will of God abideth forever." 1 John 2:17. And how splendidly did the translator, Philips, render the passage in these words: "Never give your hearts to this world or to any of the things in it. A man cannot love the Father and love the world at the same time. For the whole world system, based as it is on men's primitive desires, their greedy ambitions and the glamour of all they think splendid, is not derived from the Father at all, but from the world itself. The world and all its passionate desires will one day disappear. But the man who is following God's will is part of the permanent and cannot die."

The permanent is the eternal. And God is the eternal. The man who has reckoned himself crucified with Christ has shared in His death; and he who has shared in His death is in like manner a partaker here and now of the life that raised Jesus from the dead, a sharer and a partaker of His resurrection. I call all heaven and earth to witness the truth of these words: He who has shared in Christ's death and shared in His resurrection has shared in Him as well. He has become a member of the in Christ company. He has become bone of His resurrected bone, flesh of His resurrected flesh, spirit of His resurrected spirit. Being one with Christ, he has become part of and one with His mystical and eternal body. So one with Christ has he become that he no longer considers himself in any way apart from Christ. In holy awe he embraces the solemn but wonderful truth, "I am crucified with Christ; nevertheless, I live: yet not I, but Christ, liveth in me, and the life that I now live in the flesh, I live by the faith of the Son of God who loved me and gave Himself for me." Who can frustrate such marvelous grace of God? How can that which is formed say to Him that formed it, "Why hast thou made me thus?" This is God's doing and it is marvelous in our eyes.

He who writes these lines testifies to those who read them that it is eternally settled in heaven that all who by faith have died with Christ have now become part of the eternal. Neither can they die any more. Their bodies may sleep in the dust as they wait for the morning, but death with its sting has passed away, and victory has been snatched from the yawning jaws of the tomb. Death's cruel proboscis, filled with the deadly venom of sin, can sting us never more. "Verily, verily, I say unto you. He that heareth My word, and believeth on Him that sent Me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation; but is passed from death unto life." John 5:24. Moffatt in his translation of this vital passage of truth uses these illuminating words: "Truly, truly I tell you, he who listens to My word and believes Him that sent Me has eternal life; he will incur no sentence of judgment; he has already passed from death across to life." He has passed from death across to life! My God, My God!

What words are these that Thou hast left us to believe? Since, then, we have passed from death across to life. is it any wonder that we should discover ourselves to be citizens of the true and eternal realm? By the cross of Christ we have "crossed over". We have passed from the realm where all is death to the realm where all is life. Our citizenship in this present age has been cancelled and we have taken out a new citizenship in the eternal and undying realm. For this reason Paul wrote, saying, "Your conversation is in heaven"; and again, "Ye are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow citizens with the saints, and of the household of God."

Many people who read these lines were once citizens of another country. Many of you have put a borderline or an ocean between the land of your birth and the land of your adoption. Many of you were of different speech and different custom, but you crossed over. You changed your citizenship and your allegiance from one country to another. You renounced your former citizenship in favor of the new one you were embracing. This by way of illustration is what we have done in the spiritual realm when by the cross of Christ we cancelled our allegiance to this present world system, its customs and its conversation, to become partakers of a new and heavenly citizenship, speakers of its new language, revelators of the beauty of its customs, the justice of its laws, the wonders of its truth, and the glory of its endless life. It is the cross of Christ that makes the difference. The cross is forever the dividing line between all that is old and all that is new, separating the old life from the new, the old citizenship from the new, and the old allegiance from the new. It is the cross of Christ that divides between the old nature and the new. It separates the life that is after the flesh from the life that is after the Spirit. There the old life dies and the new life in Christ begins. There we bid adieu to the flesh, the world, and the devil to live after the Spirit, the New World, and Jesus Christ. There and there alone old things pass away and all things become new. The way of the cross leads home.

It would be impossible to enumerate the eternal benefits vouchsafed to those who with painstaking and prayer consider the worth of their heavenly citizenship. Whenever a man entertains the thought of changing his citizenship, he must spend hours or days or even years in consideration of it. Could a Belgian, a German, or an Englishman lightly become a citizen of China or India without much thought, or could a Chinese become an American without consideration of the vast changes in culture and language?

Breathes there a man with soul so dead
Who never to himself has said,
This is my home, my native land?
Whose heart has ne'er within him burned,
As home his footsteps he has turned
From wandering on a foreign strand?

Yet there must be no divided allegiance when our citizenship is transferred from one nation of earth to another. The story is told that Emperor William of Germany once refused to give audience to a prominent American citizen who presented himself as a German-American. Refusing the audience, he said, "I know Americans; I know Germans; but German-Americans I =do not know." Do not pass that statement off as the haughty words of some stuffy old drone. There is much more truth in them than we imagine. I am speaking neither lies nor fiction when I declare that the vast multitude of professing Christians today are Adam-Christ Christians. While they are claiming to be crucified with Christ and citizens of His realm, they insist on maintaining their connections with the realm of Adam. They are like the seven sons of Sceva who tried to cast out a demon by saying, "We adjure you by Jesus whom Paul preaches to come out of him." To this the evil spirit replied, "Paul I know, and Jesus I know, but who are you?" That is indeed a very good question. Who are you? What is a German-American, a Chinese-Indian, or a French-Canadian? There is no such thing though we are forever using the term. With great sadness of heart I am convinced that the whole church system with all its profession, its exaltation of gifts, its claims of revelation and authority with God, manifests continually that Adam-Christ relationship. God knows Adam and all his citizens. God knows Christ and all His citizens. But who, pray tell, are you?

The hour has come in this the end of the age when we must declare ourselves citizens of one realm or the other. God Himself is dividing the tractable sheep from the ornery goats. We must belong to Christ or belong to Adam. We must dwell either on earth's side of the cross or on heaven's side. We cannot serve God and Mammon (the god of riches). We cannot love the Lord our God with all our heart and soul and mind while dancing around the golden calf, shouting, "These be thy gods, 0 Israel."

How easy it is for people to deny their Christian profession by the things they do! We are neither saved by the good we do nor lost by the bad we have done, but, if salvation is anything at all, it will vitally affect all that we do henceforth. Otherwise we have gained nothing whatsoever. We do not become crucified with Christ because of the evil we suddenly stop or deny ourselves, but, once a man is truly identified with Christ in His cross, there will be a vast change in everything that concerns his daily life. Otherwise how could it possibly be said that old things pass away and all things become new? Those who possess the understanding of the natural mind can never differentiate between the uselessness of a life filled with do's and don'ts and the beauty of a life whose joy it is to please the Father because of the indwelling Christ. Christianity is not an imitation of Christ; it is the life of Christ in me. It is the not I but Christ life. This is the place of victory and this the only life that is pleasing to God. Centuries ago David, the king of Israel, said, "I will set no wicked thing before mine eyes; I hate the work of them that turn aside; it shall not cleave to me." Psa. 101:3. He refused to look at evil things, not to attain a crucified life, but because he had attained it.

Can there be found in all the universe a more possessive, blinding, or deceiving devil than the devil of self? Our Lord Jesus Christ once called the people and His disciples together to press home to their needy hearts a truth so profound that I greatly fear it has been lost, misunderstood, and overlooked from the beginning of time unto this very hour. This is the truth He told them on that day: "Whosoever will come after Me, let him deny Himself, and take up his cross, and follow Me." Mark 8:34. "Let him deny himself!" Let him deny self. It is self, self, always self that stands between you and true discipleship. It is the friendly hand of self that holds you back from your cross and refuses to let you take it up daily to follow Christ. My brother, have you ever listened to the mocking crowd who stood at the foot of the cross of Jesus Christ? Then listen for a moment to their vain and blasphemous clamor as they cry, "He saved others; Himself He cannot save." With great solemnity of heart and mind we must now aver that never before nor since have the heckling voices of a blind and senseless rabble spoken greater truth than this. "He saved others; Himself He could not save." You cannot save others and save yourself as well. Would God that those who preach the gospel of Christ would learn this divine secret: that it is the self-life that stands between them and the full manifestation of the purpose of God in their lives. It is self that stands between men and the will of God. It is self that stands between them and the cross, between them and God, and, if such a contradiction of terms is possible, we may now say your self is the greatest enemy of yourself.

The first law in all the world is self-preservation. Tiny insects almost too small to be seen scurry off into hiding to protect and save themselves. The instinct of every animal of the field and every bird of the air is to save and protect itself, and in man, too, perhaps above all other, is the ever present instinct to protect and preserve himself. This preservation of life and limb is a God-given instinct in all creatures great and small, but in man, alas, it does not end with the simple preservation of life and limb, but with miserly covetousness it struggles to preserve all evil tendencies as well, which must be consigned to the cross of Christ if we would be His disciples in truth.
In his remarkable book, Born Crucified, the author, L. E. Maxwell, makes the following potent observation: Quote: Even though the believer has emerged from the muddle and mixedness of Romans 7 through Paul's command, 'Reckon ye also yourselves to be dead indeed unto sin', the fact remains that he will discover many ways in which self seeks satisfaction through the as yet unredeemed spheres of his being. The flesh, the body, all our mortal coil, is evidently still present in Romans 8. That chapter presents many ways in which mortification must set in. The victorious believer will become aware of many forms of self, which must yet be dealt with. We shall discover in our service for Christ, self-confidence and self-esteem; in the slightest suffering, self-saving and self-pity; in the least misunderstanding, self-defense and self-vindication; in our station in life, self-seeking and self-centeredness; in the smallest trials, self-inspection and self-accusation; in the daily routine, self-pleasing and self-choosing; in our relationships, self-assertiveness and self-respect; in our education, self-boasting and self-expression; in our desires, self-indulgence and self-satisfaction; in our successes, self-admiration and self-congratulation; in our failures, self-excusing and self-justification; in our spiritual attainments, self-righteousness and self-complacency; in our public ministry, self-reflection and self-glory; in life as a whole, self-love and selfishness. The flesh is an "I" specialist. These are but a few of the multiplied forms of the flesh to be discovered and taken to the cross. In the palace of Wurtzung hangs a hall of glass. It is called the hall of a thousand mirrors. You enter. A thousand hands are stretched out to meet you, a thousand smiles greet your smile, a thousand eyes will weep when you weep; but they are all your hands, your smiles, your tears. What a picture of selfish man! Self all around, self-multiplied, and self-deceived. End quote.

Centuries ago Paul, by the divine wisdom given unto him, wrote these words of truth: "We then that are strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak, and not to please ourselves. — For even Christ pleased not Himself; but, as it is written. The reproaches of them that reproached thee fell on me. — Now the God of patience and consolation grant you to be likeminded one toward another according to Christ Jesus; that ye may with one mind and one mouth glorify God..." Rom. 15: 1, 3, 5, 6. Think diligently of what the apostle has told us here in speaking thus: "Even Christ pleased not Him-Self; as it is written, The reproaches of them that reproached thee fell on me." Oh, how I hate to be reproached for that of which I am not guilty, and how quickly either you or I will spring to self-defense to declare our justification and our righteousness! But our blessed Lord did not so. He permitted Himself to be reproached and maltreated with the guilt and sin of the whole world, and He, bearing it upon His own innocent head, was led as a lamb to the slaughter; and as a sheep before her shearers is dumb, so He opened not His mouth. He was taken from prison and from judgment; and who shall declare His generation? For He was cut off out of the land of the living; for the transgression of My people was He stricken, smitten of God, and afflicted. Yet, while all these reproaches, which rightly belonged to you and me, were falling upon Him, He raised not His voice in self-defense nor did He please Hun-self by proving His innocence and our guilt.

May God almighty grant henceforth that, when on occasion we would valiantly spring to the defense of self, we would remember instead the meaning of the cross and cherish the day when self was marched down the via dolorosa to be crucified with Christ and rendered dead to all the ailments of the Adamic creation. It is when the diseases of the Adamic nature would descend from the cross to beset our souls and defile our spirits that the hour of reckoning begins. Here the words of Paul flood our beings with victory, "Reckon ye also yourselves to be dead indeed unto sin", the fact remains that he will discover many ways in which self seeks satisfaction through the as yet unredeemed spheres of his being. might be raised in His glory and likeness, "for thou sowest not the body which shall be, but bare grain, but God giveth it a body as it has pleased Him." 1 Cor. 15:37, 38. Let every son of God herald the message, "I am crucified with Christ; nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ."

It is God and God alone who can point out the wretchedness of self. Self, weak, feeble, selfish self, will never condemn itself. Even the most useless of men are often full of self-esteem. The most dissolute and unbelieving of men exult in many forms of self-righteousness. The most criminal of men is full of self-vindicating. And how disgusting are those vain-glorious preachers who leave their listeners more enamored with themselves than with the Lord they profess to proclaim! We will not have to search long to find any number of men and women who, while loudly proclaiming their complete dedication to God, are found at close range to be full of self and self-ambition. Times without number have preachers and people alike come crying, "We want God, brother, we want God. We want God at any cost." But when you tell them the way they must take - always the way of the cross - they go away in our day as the rich young ruler did in his, because the way of the cross runs completely counter to the riches they love so dearly. Sonship they want, but the cross they shun. In the outward cross where Jesus died they glory, but in the cross where their self would die they glory not at all. They hear the words, "If Thou be the Son of God, save Thy self and come down from the cross," but in attempting this they shun the cross and forfeit their sonship. It is he who loses his life that saves it and keeps it unto life eternal.

It is easy enough to sing, "I'll go with Him through the garden," but do those lusty singers bestir themselves from their comfortable beds at two or three a.m. when the Spirit whispers, "Wait on Me?" I greatly fear the Spirit's voice has been so often drowned by their sleepiness and love of self that His call has grown faint and dim and is heard no more. Time there is for friends, for visiting, for pleasure, for tickling their ears with endless frothy sermons, time to absorb the wind of rot and filth, madness, lies, hate, violence, unbelief, and make-believe that daily and nightly with phantom figure fill their parlor with the insanity of the carnal mind, thence to issue forth upon the world as a whirlwind of violence, assassination, unbelief, and immorality such as the world has never known. Shame on them that the Spirit's voice became so dim that they could lightly build again the thing which they once destroyed to make themselves transgressors. (Gal. 2:18) Shame on them that they have come down from the cross and brought these evils down with them.

But no man can be a Son of God and save him-self. That is impossible. Well do I know that some who read these truths will cast them aside and possibly cast me aside for teaching them, but, if this be my cross, I shall not descend from it to grasp their hand. "Now is the judgment of this world: Now, now, now, shall the prince of this world be cast out. And I, if I be crucified (lifted up from the earth), will draw all men unto me." John 12:31, 32. Oh foolish man, believest thou that the judgment is reserved for some far off day when Christ has said, "Wow is the judgment of the world; now shall the prince of this world be cast out?" The time has come for the "I" to be lifted up and crucified, even in this day when above all days the ambition of every man is ever to save him-self from the cross. Sons of God they would hope to be, but self they are determined to save.

When the hour of the crucifixion of our Lord drew near, Jesus began "to show unto His disciples how that He must go into Jerusalem, and suffer many things of the elders and chief priests and scribes, and be killed, and be raised again the third day. Then Peter took Him, and began to rebuke Him, saying, Be it far from Thee, Lord: this shall not be unto Thee. But He turned and said unto Peter, Get thee behind Me, Satan; thou art an offence unto Me; for thou savorest not the things that be of God, but those that be of men. Then said Jesus unto His disciples, If any man will come after Me, let him deny him-self, and take up his cross and follow Me." Matt. 16:21-24. Both self and Satan dread and hate the cross. They will run to the right hand or to the left to avoid it. They will turn their backs upon it or try to climb over it, but never will they embrace it. The cross is the death knell of self, and self is the arch enemy of the cross. The cross is the eternal undoing of the self-life but from it the Christ-life is born. The cross is death to the "I", but it is the beginning of the "not I, but Christ."

When our Lord began to show His disciples that He would soon go to the cross to suffer and be killed, Peter began to rebuke Him. Where did He find the senseless courage that would dare to rebuке the Lord? Well, the answer seems dreadfully and awfully evident - far, far too clear to be a comfort to any of us. He got his courage as well as his thoughts from Satan himself. Well does this enemy of God, this adversary of redemption and of all mankind, know that, in that sacred and holy hour when the "I" is crucified and nailed to the cross, all his power and all his authority and sway in that life is broken forever. His hope is thwarted and his work destroyed.
in every life that has been identified with Christ in His cross. Once a man has become identified with the cross of Christ and the "I" of self has been reckoned in death with Him, then shall it be even as our Lord in omniscient wisdom has declared: "The prince of this world cometh and findeth nothing in me." Satan has no power at all when self is gone. Then he has no more power in your life or mine than he had in the life of our Lord Jesus Christ. When the "I" is crucified with Christ, from then on it is not I, but Christ.

How unspeakably wonderful the hour for any man when Satan, coming to tempt and destroy him, shall find nothing in him upon which he can lay hold, for all that is of the world has been crucified with Christ! Every evil with which he tempted him in times past has been reckoned dead with Christ. The lust of the flesh is mortified. The lust of the eye is dead. The pride of life is nailed to the cross. What then can Satan ever find in the man who has thus been identified with his Lord? Upon what can he lay hold to tempt and destroy since all things of Adam have been crucified with Christ?

Is it any wonder, then, that the friendly hand of self, yea, the friendly hand of Satan, was so quickly extended to withhold our Lord from the cross? "This shall not be done unto Thee," said Peter. "You must not talk that way, Lord. You must save yourself from the cross. Don't go to Jerusalem. Don't let them take you. Let us fight against it with the sword, if necessary, or call twelve legions of angels to save yourself from the cross." Save yourself, save your self is the eternal cry! Escape the cross! Turn aside! Turn back! You are far too good to die! "Thou savorest not the things which be of God, but those things which be of men," was the reply of the Master. Think of it, man of God! Think of it, sister in Christ! The friendly voice of your best friends, the affectionate exhortations of your closest relatives, the kindly advice of your trusted pastor, the experienced word of those who are older and wiser would all seek to turn you aside from the cross and bid you save self. You may seek to save others, but yourself you cannot save. If you would be a Son of God, you cannot and must not "come down from the cross." How simple it would be in hunger to turn the stones into bread! How delightful, when the rabble came to arrest the Savior, the disciples asked, "Shall we smite with the sword?" Luke 22:49. And Peter, filled with impatience and wrath, disdaining to await a reply, drew his sword and manfully began to defend the Lord from His cross. What infinite loss would we all have suffered had he succeeded or had twelve legions of angels descended to deliver Him on that day!

It can be neither human imagination nor the wisdom of the carnal mind that now warns with no uncertain sound that we are at this moment in the closing hours of the age. In the history of the world there have been many days of transcending importance and eternal significance, each in order bringing forth from the womb of itself the tender bud of a new era in the plan of God. Of unspeakable significance were the events of Eden. The impact of the days of Noah and of the flood that destroyed the sordid earth cannot be weighed in the scales of human understanding. The significance of the call of Abraham cannot be measured by the yard stick of human thought, nor yet the giving of the law by the natural mind. How much less, then, can mortal man with mortal mind understand the wisdom of the Father in giving Christ, the Son of God, to die for sin that all who believe should be justified in his sight and that His blood should cleanse us from our sins, (for without the shedding of blood there is no remission of sins)! And "if the blood of bulls and of goats, and the ashes of a heifer sprinkling the unclean sanctifieth to the purifying of the flesh, how much more shall the blood of Christ, who through the eternal Spirit offered Himself without spot unto God, purge your conscience from dead works to serve the living God?" Heb. 9:13, 14. No man born of woman in any age, regardless of his knowledge or inspiration in these eternal things, can comprehend or encompass the fathomless depths of the Father's wisdom.

But now the loose ends of the ages (see 1 Cor. 10:11, "ends of the ages" [world]) are being drawn into one cord of divine wisdom and revelation and the most significant event and climacteric act of God is about to transpire. The age in which we have lived for two thousand years is about to terminate in a sudden flash of calamity and judgment just as all preceding ages have done and from the struggles of its convulsive travail will come forth the long-awaited kingdom of God. From the tumult and upheaval that is encompassing the whole world in this present hour will come forth the order of the kingdom. From man's reign of sin and inequity will come forth the righteousness and equity of the sons of God. From the ashes of the rule of the carnal mind will arise the justice of the mind of Christ. Instead of the government of selfish politicians, ever intent on satisfying their own ends and seeking their own benefits, will come the selfless reign of the sons of God, filling the earth with justice and equity that nothing shall hurt nor destroy in all God's holy mountain.

Jesus Christ is coming again, and with Him will come all the sons of God who by His grace have come into His image throughout the ages. These sons are the body of the Son of God. This is the in Christ company. This is the fullness of Christ. This body is not the bride as so many have supposed. The bride has not yet been formed. She will be formed after the last Adam is complete, for Adam was first formed, then she. The body of the bridegroom, which is Jesus Christ with all his brothers, must first come to completeness in this age. Afterward shall the bride be formed that at the marriage supper of the Lamb she may become the body and they, the sons, the head. Every bachelor has his own head and also his own body, but when he takes a bride, then he becomes the head and she becomes the body. How wonderful are Thy works. Oh God, and Thy ways past finding out!

Not for the world nor all that is in it would I for one moment miss the glory of the age which is to come. To reign with Christ and with Him to usher in the magnificence of an age that has been the vision of the prophets, the dream of the sages, the purpose of God, and the earnest longing and expectation of all creation is a prize for which we willingly lay down our lives. Yea, it is a reward so precious that for its sake all who see its glory will gladly abandon every influence that would deter them from the cross, and brush aside every friendly hand that would restrain them from death to self and life age-lasting in Him. Words fail me, people of God, to lay before you the truth of all these things. I am in a strait to explain how dire is our need to strip off the grave clothes of self, how urgent our need to consign self to the cross - self with all its earthly bondage, with every earthly weight and every sin that doth so easily beset us. The patience of God is needed to run the race that is set before us as we without ceasing look to Jesus, the Author and Finisher of our faith, who for the joy that was set before Him endured the cross, despising the shame, and is set down at the right hand of the majesty on high.

The darkness of church tradition has blinded the minds of the people of God, causing them to lose their way and come, staggering in blindness, to the end of the age, totally unprepared and unmindful of the true plan of the ages. Would God that the Holy Spirit would impress upon the minds of all who read these things that earth and heaven, men and angels, beasts and all cattle, creeping things and flying fowl are waiting in the shadows for the unfolding of God's kingdom which He has promised since the world began. But far beyond this, would God that every man who speaks of sonship having fixed his hope in Christ, might now be gripped by the almost incredible truth that Christ's kingdom will be ushered in by the sons of God, joint heirs with Christ, men and women who have been changed into His likeness, people who have cast off the works of the flesh, received His mind, delighted in His purpose, and, having slain the fearful Goliath of self and consigned him forever to the cross, have delivered themselves from this evil age that they might reign with Him in that age which is next to come.

The dreadful events that are happening in the world day after day herald with unmistakable voices the certain truth that the coming of the Lord draweth nigh. Violence is so frequent, and so common has become its dread dereliction that it is being accepted by many as a way of life that is scarcely worthy of further concern. Men's hearts have become so hardened to it that they are matter-of-fact about it. Scarcely a newscast is read without the use of the word violence. No day passes without some new terror dismaying the hearts of the people. In God's word you have certainly read, "As it was in the days of Noah, so shall it be in the day when the Son of man cometh." No man familiar with the scripture needs to be reminded that in the days of Noah the earth was filled with violence. Gen. 6:11. The end of the age is rushing in upon us.

The signs of earth and the heralds of heaven proclaim that the kingdom of God is at hand. But the sons of God are a different breed. They are not of this world; neither do they belong to this age. They are in the world, but they are not of it. They are citizens of another realm temporarily stranded here. Their citizenship is in the heavens. Their hopes and aspirations are in the age to come, for here they have no continuing city. They are strangers and pilgrims, dwelling in tents and tabernacles, looking for and hastening unto the coming of the day of God, for God hath prepared for them a kingdom.

During the pioneer days on the western prairies many of the early settlers had homesteaded on land that was not suitable for farming. After many fruitless years great tracts of land were taken over by the government to be fenced in for community pastures. Whenever a settler, whose land lay within this fenced area, did not wish to sell his land, another fence was erected around his farm to keep the ranging animals from damaging his farm or crops, so that while he was fenced in the great pasture, he was also fenced out of it. I think that is the way we are in this present world. We fenced in, and here for a while within the confines of this world system we must remain. We have no control over that; but we are also fenced out by virtue of the blood of Christ, the infilling of the Holy Spirit, and, finally and irrevocably, by our identification with Christ in His cross.

Of course you are busy! Certainly you have to earn your living! You do, indeed, have to pay your taxes and send your children to school! But let me assure you that here and now in this present evil age there is a life hidden with Christ in God that makes your citizenship in the heavenly realm a certainty. There is a realm in Him at your right hand, yea, nearer than hands or feet, where you can live and move and order your life according to the everlasting laws of the kingdom of God to which you have come and to which you belong.

The apostle Paul taught us that we are ambassadors. 2 Cor. 5:20. Now an ambassador is a man sent from one country to another. He is never a citizen of the country where he dwells. The Japanese ambassador to London is not British; he is Japanese. Furthermore he has diplomatic immunity from the laws of the country where he resides. He cannot be searched, arrested, nor taken into custody. We, therefore, as ambassadors of heaven live for a time in this age and in this world, but our allegiance and our citizenship are in the eternal world. Our Lord Himself was fully aware of this when He said, "My kingdom is not of this world." The word world in scripture usually means age. His kingdom did not belong to the age of law nor did it belong to the age of grace, but the coming age is the age of the kingdom of God. That will be His age and the Sabbath of rest.

What, you ask, has this fact to do with the teaching of the cross? What has it to do with the crucifixion of the self-life and the abundant fullness of the kingdom of God? The answer must surely be that they have everything in common, nor can they in any wise be separated. Think, oh man of God, upon this divine and indisputable fact. God, omniscient and almighty, does nothing without reason and purpose. All His works are in wisdom; all His ways are full of understanding. If you will now earnestly consider the purpose of God for the age to come, your spiritual mind will be flooded with the understanding of the Almighty and you will see in the clearest light why it is that the Father in heaven is preparing a people who are in truth the living representation of Jesus Christ, God's first begotten Son. Before the all-wise God ever formed a man or breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, He spoke to His Son whom He had begotten before the ages began, saying, "Let Us make man in Our image and after Our likeness, and let him have dominion ..." That man should have dominion over all the earth and all things in the earth was the purpose of God before ever the world began. That divine purpose has never been changed nor will it ever be, for it is as immutable as the God who made it.

God, in whom dwelleth all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge, knew beforehand that the man He would make and place in the garden would fall into sin and become a slave to himself, his physical flesh, and his carnal mind. Was it not of this very bondage to his own corruption that Paul wrote, saying, "The creature was not willingly, but by reason of Him (God) who hath subjected every creature under his feet, shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children (sons) of God." Rom. 8:20, 21

Let no man vainly think that the past six thousand years in which the world and all mankind have been enslaved by carnality and ruled by the god of self has no place or purpose in the plan of God. Such purposeless vanity as this has no part in the heart of the God of all purpose. I am sure I speak the truth when I say that our heavenly Father in His love and wisdom has for six thousand years been teaching us by His word, by design, and by life-long experience that self and selfishness are the root and branches of every evil in life. Self is the destruction of kings and presidents, of empires and nations, of fathers and mothers, children and homes. Well did Paul say, "The love of money is the root of all evil." And why are men and women so madly in love with money? Because with it they hope to bestow upon self everything that the carnal mind can conceive or desire. Because of the love and lust for money men err from the truth and pierce themselves through with many sorrows. The wealth that self has lusted after as the fulfillment of all its joys has turned to rend them and destroy their hope of sonship in ages to come.

The past six dispensations have been filled with the fruitlessness of the self-life. But the seventh dispensation is God's Sabbath of rest. It is the dispensation of the kingdom of God. In that blessed age the sons of God will reign with Christ over the entire world. No corner of earth will be out of their jurisdiction. No mighty king or dictator will reign in defiance, and no iron curtains will bar the progress of the King of kings and Lord of lords. No selfishness, greed, or inequity will exist in all Christ's vast dominions. There will be no war and no curse, and nothing shall hurt or destroy in all God's holy mountain for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the glory of the Lord as the waters cover the sea.

Hear Oh man of God, and give earnest heed, ye sons! It is now in this dreadful age of greed and selfishness, violence and spoil, that the Father all-glorious is finding a people who has nailed self and selfishness to the cross of Christ. He is picking them out one by one, setting them apart as sheep are set apart from goats and as wheat is separated from the tares. These are being prepared to reign with Him in that kingdom of selflessness, even the kingdom of God. The self and greed that has reigned in the earth for six thousand years will not exist in that wonderful day of the kingdom of God, the seventh dispensation, the day when God and all His creation will rest from the labor and travail of the past. Make no mistake about this: should one carnal mind be among the sons of God in that day, the earth would be brought to the same curse as it is now. But such cannot be, for all who will reign with Him have passed by the way of the cross, delivered forever from self. "Not I, but Christ" is their eternal theme. The way of the cross has led us home.

THE INTRINSIC POWER OF THE BLOOD OF HIS CROSS

All Bible truth is great and precious. No costly gem of earth can compare its value to the priceless worth of truth. Truth and love are two of the greatest powers in the world and, while they walk hand in hand, they can neither be refuted nor overcome. Truth without love is sometimes intolerant and can be oppressive and even persecuting as may be seen in those scripture quoting Jews who in malice and envy brought an adulterous woman to Jesus (John 8:2-11), but truth and love together as was manifested there in Jesus are wiser than a serpent and harmless as a dove. Where mercy and truth meet together, righteousness and peace kiss each other, truth springs out of the earth and righteousness looks down from heaven. Then the Lord shall give that which is good; and our land shall yield her increase. Righteousness shall go before us and shall set us in the way of His steps.

Truth is much more than a blessed virtue. Truth is a person and that person is Jesus Christ, the Son of God. "I am the way, the truth, and the life," Jesus said (John 14:6), and no man who ever lived has been able to gainsay that claim. Falsehood and error arise in their momentary impermanence only to vanish as a shadow away, but truth, like love, never faileth and will abide as a mighty rock when heaven and earth have passed away and time shall be no more. It was Goethe who said, "It is easier to perceive error than to find truth, for the former lies on the surface and is easily seen while the latter lies in the depths where few are willing to search for it."

In the vast gamut of truth embraced by the Holy Scriptures no part nor phase thereof is in any way more outstanding or dominant than the truth concerning the precious blood of Jesus Christ. This great and eternal verity shines with ever increasing brilliance, blazing as an imperishable sun of righteousness from Eden's perfumed gardens of the long ago to the jasper walls of the New Jerusalem soon to come, from Adam's covering of skin and Abel's humble sacrifice of the firstfruits of his flock to the very throne of God itself where living creatures, glorious in power and might, announce the presence of the Lamb that was slain, who is worthy to take the book and open the seven seals thereof. Before Him heavenly beings fall in worship, singing the everlasting song so old and yet so new, "Thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the seals thereof: for Thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by Thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation," Rev. 5:9,10. This glad song of joy they hymned before the feet of their Creator because through the blood of the Lamb and the word of their testimony Satan, their foe, was defeated and forever cast down. Rev. 12:11.

In a manner peculiar to God all truth is clothed in mystery. The greater and more important the truth the greater the mystery it unfolds. Even in this natural realm blood is undoubtedly among the most profound mysteries of the universe. Its hidden secrets are so great that I know not how anyone could ponder its composition and life-giving ministry and yet fail to see the mastermind of an omniscient creator. In one simple statement of truth the word of God clearly shows that the blood is the life of all flesh. "But the flesh with the life thereof, which is the blood thereof, shall ye not eat." Gen. 9:4. This profound statement is confirmed by the miracle of modern science in the following pronouncement: "Blood is the life stream of the human body. No part of the body can live without this red fluid. Blood carries oxygen and food to every part of the body. It carries carbon dioxide away from the lungs and waste products away from other body organs. It also fights disease germs that enter the body."

An adult of one hundred sixty pounds has about five quarts of blood. A child of eighty pounds has about half that amount. This life-giving fluid is divided into four main parts - red blood cells, white cells, platelets, and plasma. The plasma is a straw-colored liquid making up about fifty-five percent of the blood volume. The other parts of the blood float in the plasma. The blood contains thirty million white cells or corpuscles and one hundred trillion red corpuscles. The blood of the human body flows through an estimated one thousand miles of main arteries, and it is estimated that, if all the blood vessels were laid end to end, they would total one hundred thousand miles in length. The blood, flowing through this vast network of arteries and blood vessels, carries food and life to every part of the body. The liver and kidneys then purify the blood of its wastes and the lungs remove the carbon dioxide and replenish the oxygen. After this purifying process is complete, the blood proceeds again on its life-giving mission to every part of the body.

The heart is the great central pumping station for the blood. It beats seventy times per minute, forty-two hundred times an hour, one hundred thousand times a day, and thirty-seven million times each year. At the age of sixty-five the heart has beat two billion times and at the age of seventy it has lifted by its throbs five hundred thousand tons of blood. A train of tank cars forty miles long would be needed to contain this vast quantity of blood. The complete story of the blood is much too great to be considered further here, but as we contemplate such marvels of God's creation, it is not difficult for us to understand why the Lord has stated so plainly that "the life is in the blood." Nor should we in view of this fact be at a loss to understand the prominence given to the blood throughout the entire plan of God.

Wonderful as is the work and composition of human blood, it is my hope here to direct our thoughts to much higher realms that we may understand at least as well as mortals may how the blood of Christ, who through the eternal Spirit offered Himself without spot to God, purges our conscience from dead works to serve the living God. It has been my blessing of late to have had made real to my heart truth which serves to lift the precious blood of Christ far above a merely natural realm into the realm of the eternal Spirit.

Vast and ever prominent are the teachings of scripture concerning the blood, each in turn pointing to the Lamb of God, whose blood removes the sin of the world. "Almost all things are by the law purged with blood; and without the shedding of blood is no remission." Heb. 9:22. This important statement shines a ray of heavenly light on every sacrifice of the Old Testament from the humble offering of Abel, who brought the firstlings of his flock to God, to the literal rivers of blood shed in the offerings of Solomon at the dedication of the temple of the Lord. His was an offering so vast and incredible that, except our understanding be lifted completely out of the natural realm, the sheer enormity of the procedure would seem to be insanity. Of the time of the dedication of Solomon's temple, which in all its scintillating glory was no more than a feeble type of that spiritual temple, the body of Christ, that for all eternity will be the habitation of God through the Spirit, it is written: "And the king, and all Israel with him, offered sacrifice before the Lord. And Solomon offered a sacrifice of peace offerings, which he offered unto the Lord, two and twenty thousand oxen, and an hundred and twenty thousand sheep. So the king and all the children of Israel dedicated the house of the Lord. The same day did the king hallow the middle of the court that was before the house of the Lord: for there he offered burnt-offerings, and meat-offerings, and the fat of the peace-offerings." 1 Kings 8:62-64. Here in this grand dedication of the temple incredible thousands of clean animals were sacrificed and the blood of those beasts of atonement must have flowed in crimson rivers of life.

All the Old Testament's covenants were sealed with blood. When in Eden the Lord made a covenant with fallen Adam and Eve (Gen. 3:14-19), he sealed the covenant by presenting those hapless transgressors with coats of skin (verse 21) to cover their nakedness. This covering robe was a foreshadow of the righteousness of Christ which was to come through His blood, but before such covering could be given them, the life blood of the sacrifice had to be shed that such a garment might be theirs.
In like manner the covenant with Noah was sealed with blood, for Noah, upon coming forth from the ark, built an altar unto the Lord, and "took of every clean beast, and of every clean fowl, and offered burnt-offerings on the altar. And the Lord smelled a sweet savior; and the Lord said in His heart, I will not again curse the ground for man's sake; for the imagination of man's heart is evil from his youth; neither will I again smile everything living, as I have done. While the earth remaineth, seedtime and harvest, and cold and heat, and summer and winter, and day and night shall not cease." Gen. 8:20-22.

The covenant with Abraham was likewise sealed with blood, as was God's covenant with Moses and Israel the night of the Passover. But greatest and most important of all was the covenant of grace, which God made with all the world, sealing the everlasting covenant with better blood, even the precious blood of our Lord and Savior.

Let it be understood that all the Old Testament ordinances, important as they undoubtedly are, were little more than types and shadows of things, which were to come. 1 Cor. 10:11. The blood of sacrifices which flowed so freely on Israel's altars throughout the Old Testament era were frail, shadowy suggestions of the better blood of Christ which was to come, for it is not possible that the blood of bulls and of goats could take way sins. "For the law having a shadow of good things to come, and not the very image of the things, can never with those sacrifices which they offered year by year continually make the comers thereunto perfect. For then would they not have ceased to be offered? because that the worshippers once purged should have had no more conscience of sins. But in those sacrifices there is remembrance made again of sins every year. For it is not possible that the blood of bulls and of goats should take away sins." Heb. 10:1-4. Because these sacrifices could not remove sin, it follows therefore that all Old Testament sacrifices of blood were merely shadows of better things to come. See also Col. 2:17; Heb. 8:5.

Naught of the blood beasts
On Israel's alters slain
Could give the guilty sinner peace
Or wash away his stain.
But Christ, the heavenly Lamb,
Takes all our sins away;
A sacrifice of nobler strain
And better blood than they.

The many laws and ordinances such as the washing of pots and cups, the keeping of new moons and Sabbaths, were also shadows of things to come, and because they were only shadows and types, they were done away when Christ the anti-type came to fulfill them, purifying the true vessels of His house, which spiritual vessels we believers are. Col. 2:4-23. Note especially Col. 2:17. Even the priests of the Old Testament, decked in all their marvelous regalia of glory and beauty, were themselves dimly perceptible types and shadows of that greater High Priest who was to come. The priests, who offered gifts and sacrifices according to the law, served unto the example and shadow of heavenly things. Heb. 8:4,5. They were the shadows. Christ is the body whose reflection they are.

As it is impossible to completely unfold the reams of truth concerning the blood and its ever increasing, ever maturing prominence throughout holy scripture, we will turn aside from that enormous task to concentrate instead on those things that concern the theme of our message - the precious blood.

The apostle summed up in one concise statement the things which concern the sacrifices and offerings of the Old Testament when he left these inspired words for our edification: "The way into the holiest of all was not yet made manifest, while as the first tabernacle was yet standing: which was a figure for the lime then present, in which were offered both gifts and sacrifices, that could not make him that did the service perfect, as pertaining to the conscience; which stood only in meats and drinks, and divers washings, and carnal ordinances, imposed on them until the time of reformation. But Christ being come an high priest of good things to come, by a greater and more perfect tabernacle (the body of Christ), not made with hands, that is to say, not of this building; neither by the blood of bulls and calves, but by His own blood He entered in once into the holy place, having obtained eternal redemption for us. For if the blood of bulls and of goats, and the ashes of an heifer sprinkling..."
the unclean, sanctifieth to the purifying of the flesh, how much more shall the blood of Christ, who through the eternal Spirit offered Himself without spot to God, purge your conscience from dead works to serve the living God? And for this cause He is the mediator of the New Testament (covenant), that by means of death, for the redemption of the transgressions that were under the first testament, they which are called might receive the promise of eternal inheritance.  Heb. 9:8-15.

This passage forcefully exalts the power of the blood of Christ by contrasting it with the powerless blood of Old Testament animal sacrifices. While it was not possible for the blood of bulls and of goats to take away sins (Heb. 10:4), these sacrifices were offered in faith for the time then being by faithful worshippers looking far into the future to the day when Christ would come and by His precious blood completely remove sin from the universe. Therefore the apostle, reverently writing of these sacrifices, made this blessed observation: "If the blood of bulls and of goats, and the ashes of an heifer sprinkling the unclean, sanctifieth to the purifying of the flesh, how much more shall the blood of Christ, who through the eternal Spirit offered Himself without spot to God, purge your conscience from dead works to serve the living God?"

It was impossible for the blood of Old Testament sacrifices to take away sin because that blood was dead blood. There was no power of life in it; nevertheless because of the faith of the worshippers in that better blood which was to come, those animal sacrifices were accepted by God for the time then present or for the time being, and the worshippers were thus sanctified (Heb. 9:13) because of their faith, and being thus set apart unto God. they patiently awaited the day when the better blood of God's Son, in which was life eternal, would not only remove their sin, but purge their consciences as well by the washing of regeneration and the renewing of the Holy Ghost, which He has shed on us believers abundantly.

If our spiritual minds can grasp the fact that those Old Testament sacrifices served only to sanctify the worshippers by faith, that is, set them aside unto God, but did not take their sins away because only the blood of Jesus Christ cleanses from sin, then we should be able to understand Heb. 9:15, which tells us that Christ is the mediator of the new testament (covenant) and by means of His death the transgressions or transgressors of the Old Testament are redeemed. Therefore Christ, once in the end of the age, hath appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself. Heb. 9:26. What a marvelous climax this is to all sacrifice and offering in that His better blood has put away sin!

Concerning the efficacy of the blood of Jesus Christ, no greater statement of truth was ever made than that given by Paul in Rom. 3:20-26. It needs much more exposition than I have time here to give it, but we catch the force of his message with one brief explanation and search out its hidden depths more extensively as the Holy Spirit reveals its secrets to our hearts. This is his declaration: "Therefore by the deeds of the law there shall no flesh be justified in His sight: for by the law is the knowledge of sin." The deeds of the law with its sacrifices and ordinances could not by themselves justify anyone. The fact is that the law was really given to magnify the knowledge of sin in the world, and in this it did a great and useful work. "But now the righteousness of God without the law is manifested, being witnessed by the law and the prophets." (Both the law and the prophets foretold the coming of the Just One, who would do what the law with its sacraments could never do. That is why Jesus said, "If ye had believed Moses, ye would have believed Me, for he spoke of Me.") Now by the next verse, verse 22, we are told how this righteousness is received by us. "Even the righteousness of God which is by faith of Jesus Christ unto all and upon all them that believe; for there is no difference: for all have sinned, and come short of the glory of God." Verse 22 shows us that the righteousness of God reaches us not by our own faith or the faith of any man, but by the faith of Jesus Christ. To emphasize this fact Paul said, "By grace are ye saved through faith, and that not of yourselves; it is the gift of God." Eph. 2:8. Nothing in God's economy is ever left to chance, for these are most sweeping statements concerning justification and righteousness through His blood.

Notice the inspired words that now follow. "Being justified freely by His grace through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus: whom God hath set forth to be a propitiation through faith in His blood, to declare His (Christ's) righteousness for the remission of sins that are past through the forbearance of God." This twenty-fourth verse tells us that we are justified freely through the grace that is in Christ Jesus. By His blood we have been cleansed from our sins; by His grace we have been forgiven, our conscience purged, and now we stand redeemed and justified in His sight, and this is "that God might be just and the justifier of him that believeth in Christ."

Now verse 24, speaking of Christ Jesus, says, "Whom God hath set forth to be a propitiation through faith in His blood." To propitiate means, "to cause to be favorably disposed." Jesus Christ was set forth or sent forth by God as a propitiation to the world. Let us reverently seek to understand this mystery, for right here lies one of the most glaring mistakes of the entire church system and almost every preacher in it. The church all down through the ages, including all evangelicals of the past and present, have taught that Jesus Christ came to propitiate God and to endeavor to dispose Him to be kind toward His fallen race. If you search in a thousand places, I doubt that you will find one man who does not make this incorrect assertion. How often I have listened to preachers describe Jesus Christ as a lawyer who stands up before God to plead our cause and beg for our lives on the grounds that He, being innocent, died for us and God is propitiated by Him and we are forgiven. This gross misunderstanding of the truth of propitiation is everywhere evident in sermons, in writing and in hymns. Notice how this error is brought out in the words of the hymn:

Five bleeding wounds He bears, Received on Calvary.
They pour effectual prayers;
They strongly plead for me.
Forgive him, 0 forgive, they cry,
Nor let the ransomed sinner die!
The Father hears Him pray,
His dear anointed One;
He cannot turn away
The presence of His Son.
My God is reconciled;
His pardoning voice I hear.

This is church tradition, but it is not the truth. Nowhere in all scripture are we ever taught that God has to be reconciled to the world or to man. God never ever became an enemy of man nor does He need to be reconciled to man. The exact opposite is the truth and always the teaching of scripture. Man is an enemy of God and man must be reconciled to God. Oh that sinners would be told that it was God the Father who gave His Son, not to appease or reconcile Himself, but to appease and reconcile man! Therefore the scripture loudly proclaims, "We beseech you in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled to God."

This is the message that I bring,
A message angels feign would sing:
0 be ye reconciled!
Thus saith my Lord and King,
0 be ye reconciled to God.

Oh, the wonder of it all just to know that God the Father has sent Christ to be His propitiation toward us and that God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto Himself, not imputing their trespasses unto them (2 Cor. 5:19), and has committed unto us the word of reconciliation!

So then, when the great apostle says that God hath sent Christ as a propitiation, he means that He sent Christ to propitiate us and dispose us to kindness and repentance before God and to reconcile us to Himself. The Father did not send Christ to propitiate Himself, though that is the way the church has always erroneously taught propitiation. The truth is that Christ came to propitiate you and me that we might repent of our rebellion and iniquity against Him, believe and be reconciled to God, who has always loved us and been our friend and not our enemy. We might also take notice that in referring to the scripture, "There is one God and one mediator between God and man, the man Christ Jesus," the preachers have also turned this backwards and made Christ to be our mediator with the Father, but that is not what Paul said. He said that the mediator was between God and man, not between man and God. So Christ was sent as a propitiation, a propitiator, or one sent by God the Father to dispose man to repentance and kindness, love and faith toward God.
And now may I shock you further by saying that this text plainly says of Christ, "Whom God hath set forth to be a propitiation through faith in His blood, to declare His righteousness for sins that are past." Let us now ask ourselves this question: Who was it that had this great faith in the blood of Christ? Was it man or God? It was God the Father who had this abounding faith in the blood of His Son Jesus Christ. It was not man. Indeed, man may have faith, but in this text it was not man, but God, who had this boundless faith in the blood of His Son. So complete and astounding was the Father’s faith in the blood of His Son that He openly declared that His righteousness was sufficient to cancel all the sins of the past. Therefore it is plainly stated, "Whom God hath set forth to be a propitiation through faith in His blood, to declare His righteousness for the remission of sins that are past, through the forbearance of God; to declare, I say, at this time His righteousness: that He might be just, and the justifier of him that believeth in Jesus." Verse 26.

The sins of the past, referred to here, are the sins of all past ages, covered with the sacrificial blood, but never removed. It was to this unspeakable marvel of God's grace that the old covenant pointed when the blood of bulls and goats and the ashes of an heifer, sprinkling the unclean, sanctified to the purifying of the flesh (Heb. 9:13) until such time as Christ should come and by the shedding of His better blood, in which was eternal life, thus declare the remission of all the sins of the past, which lesser blood could never cleanse. It was God who had faith in the "life blood" of His Son and because of this He gave Him to be the propitiation for our sins. Thus "God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto Himself, not imputing their trespasses unto them."

With these precious jewels of God's eternal grace and wisdom in our minds let us with humble reverence consider that better blood of Christ, the life blood which Peter devoutly exalts as precious blood. "Forasmuch as ye know that ye were not redeemed with corruptible things, as silver and gold, from your vain conversation received by tradition from your fathers; but with the precious blood of Christ, as of a lamb without blemish and without spot: who verily was foreordained before the foundation of the world, but was manifest in these last times for you." 1 Pet. 1:18-20. The secret of this truth lies in the words of scripture, which clearly teaches that the life is in the blood. We have no record of man's ever having eaten the flesh of animals until after the great flood. Then in these words man was given permission to eat flesh: "Every moving thing that liveth shall be meat for you; even as the green herb have I given you all things."

That permission was followed by this definite command: "But the flesh with the life thereof, which is the blood thereof, shall ye not eat. And surely your blood of your lives will I require; at the hand of every beast will I require it, and at the hand of man; at the hand of every man's brother will I require the life of man." Gen. 9:3-5. This text most surely shows that the life of man is in his blood. The truth is further elaborated in God's instructions to Israel. "And whatsoever man there be of the children of Israel, or of the strangers that sojourn among you, which hunteth and catcheth any beast or fowl that may be eaten; he shall even pour out the blood thereof, and cover it with dust. For it (the blood) is the life of all flesh; the blood of it is for the life thereof:.. for the life of all flesh is the blood thereof" Lev. 17:13, 14. That the life is in the blood and that the life of all flesh is in the blood thereof is a truth that cannot possibly be disputed, for not only does the scripture declare it to be so, but nature itself has taught us all too well that as the blood ebbs from the body of him that is wounded, so also ebbs the life. Without blood there is no life.

The story of creation is far too intricate and wonderful for my little mind to fully grasp, but the scripture, speaking of the creation of Adam and Eve, tells us, "And they were both naked, the man and his wife, and were not ashamed." Gen. 2:25. I understand this to mean that they were naked insofar as any kind of apparel or covering or dress is concerned. They wore no clothing or covering as we know clothing and in this respect and this alone they were naked. Their covering was a glorious covering of heavenly light. It was in truth the light of life promised by our Lord Jesus in John 8:12. "He that followeth Me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life." While they remained in their glorious estate, they needed not earth's shabby coverings of cloth and skin. Light as the brightness and glory of the sun enfolded their beings. Why, a covering of cloth or skin would have been to them a mockery, if not an impossibility. They were made in the image of God, of whom it is written in Psa. 104:2, "Who covereth Thyself with light as with a garment." That covering of light and glory that shone from their hallowed beings was nothing less than the light of God, for the life was the light of men. John 1:4. It surrounded them as a halo of glory. It shone from their faces. It sparkled from their presence. It glistened from their beings. It dwelt within them. Their eyes were as lamps of fire and their glory... were such that no mortal could have stood before them. They were in the image of God, upon which mortality cannot look and live. In body, soul and spirit they were in His likeness and like their Maker they covered themselves with light as with a garment. Psa. 104:2.

Should you find difficulty in perceiving this necessary point of truth, may I direct your attention to the fact that our Lord Jesus Christ throughout the time of His mortality wore a seamless robe, which some hand of love had woven for Him. When He died, Roman soldiers cast lots for His vesture and one of them took it away. His naked, mortal body was then wrapped in linen cloths, which the Bible speaks of as grave clothes, and thus wrapped in cloth He was laid away in the tomb. But wonder of wonders, when upon the glorious resurrection morning Peter and John went into the tomb, they found not the body of the Lord Jesus, but the grave clothes, His only covering, were found lying in the exact position He had lain while in the realm of death. John 20:6, 7. The body cloths lay by themselves and the head wrapping lay by itself just as though our Lord had vanished out of them, for this is what He did. Special mention is made by John that the cloths were not lying together as they might have been had He arisen and disrobed, but the grave clothes lay as though their occupant had vanished out of them, for that is exactly what He did. This one fact is in itself indisputable proof of His resurrection. It permits no possibility of theft or deception. Such innocent, guileless facts speak truth more eloquently than the blast of a trumpet. If Jesus, then, had no seamless robe, for the soldiers had taken it away, and even His grave clothes were left behind Him in the tomb, what garment was it that covered the glorious, incorruptible body of His resurrection? Could we possibly be wrong in saying that His covering was nothing less than that glorious light which is eternal life? Which was Adam's covering before his transgression? Even though Mary, upon seeing Him, thought Him to be the gardener, it only appeared to be so. From that moment on the resurrected, incorruptible Christ, clothed with the light of life, appeared in any form He wished as was clearly stated by Mark (Mark 16:2),

"After this He appeared in another form unto two of them." Many other times the Lord appeared after His resurrection, and there is certainly no hint that He was naked, though it is certain He wore no earthly garment. He was clothed upon in resurrection with the glorious light of life. In this glorious covering Paul saw Him in his Damascus vision, a light brighter than the sun (Acts 26:13-14), and in this way John saw Him in the wonder of His Patmos vision. Rev. 1:16. This, my dearly beloved, is the garment of light. It is the robe of incorruption. It is the garment the saints will wear in their resurrection and incorruption.

You have heard of the light of a candle. You have heard of the light of the stars. You have heard of the light of the sun. But this is the light of life. When men speak of the light of the sun, we understand. When they speak of the light of the moon, we understand. When men speak of the light of the moon, we understand. When they speak of the light of the moon, we understand. May we not now understand the truth of Christ's words: the light of life? I doubt not that my next sentence will be a disturbing jolt to the understanding of many, but the truth as I see it is simply this: Life and light and blood are one and the same thing, manifest on different levels just as vapor and water and ice are one and the same thing on different levels. I am well aware that what I am saying is entirely new and must come as a shock to many. Therefore we will look a little deeper into this important truth, because a proper understanding of it will assist us to grasp the greatness of that prominent Bible theme, the precious blood of Christ. Not only will we better grasp its meaning, but we will know why that precious blood of Christ is the life of all the world. I see no way that we can avoid the conclusion that His life blood is in fact resurrection itself. It redeems from sin, because sin found man in life and brought him to death, but the blood of Christ, which is eternal life, finding man in death, brought life, and that is what redemption is.

Hear now what Paul has to say concerning this glorious covering of light, which we have been considering. Notice particularly his use of the words clothed, unclothed and naked. Note how he shows that our house, which is from heaven, is in fact and truth the life of God. He clearly demonstrates the manner in which our mortality, hitherto clothed with garments of skin and cloth, is in resurrection clothed with incorruption, which is nothing less than life, the life of God, the light of God, eternal life. Thus in 2 Cor. 5:1-4 Paul unfolds the marvelous truth of our true covering, which he calls our house from heaven. "For we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. For in this we groan, earnestly desiring to be clothed upon with our house which is from heaven: If so be that being clothed we shall not be found naked. For we that are in this tabernacle do groan, being burdened: not for that we would be unclothed, but clothed upon, that mortality might be swallowed up of life."
By way of explanation we will notice as follows: Our earthly house is this corruptible, mortal tabernacle, the body in which we now dwell. But, when it is dissolved by death, then in resurrection we will have a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. Not a mansion in the sky, as the preachers are always erroneously telling us, but a new body, a new tabernacle, a body of light, a body of incorruption, a body of immortality. Then Paul states that, after this body of life has been received, we will not be found naked as we are now. We will be no more naked than Jesus was on the mount of transfiguration when His face did shine as the sun and His raiment was white as the light. The glory in which Christ was seen at His transfiguration is an actual revelation of our house, which is from heaven, the covering of light, the light of life. This light of life is the clothing that will cover our nakedness and it is of this very thing that the apostle is speaking when he says, "If so being clothed, we shall not be found naked." 1 Cor. 5:1-4. Paul then goes on to say, "In this we groan, being burdened." How awfully true that is! God help us to bear the groanings of all the world because of the pains, the pangs and disease that ever beset this body of death, this corruptible tabernacle of our mortality and flesh! What a heavy, burdensome load it is to bear! But, says he, we groan, not that we might be unclothed, (the truth is we are already unclothed), but that we might be clothed upon with our house which is from heaven, verse 2, if so be that, being clothed, we shall not be found naked as Adam was and as we are. We groan that the nakedness of our mortality might be swallowed up of life, verse 4, enshrouded in the light of life.

Can we not now see from this what Adam's covering was before his transgression and death? Can we not see from this that his covering was a covering of life and light? Was it not that glorious mantle of the light of life of which Jesus spoke? Was this light of life not a house from heaven as Paul here teaches? Was his body unlike that of the Son of man in His kingdom as we saw plainly manifested at His transfiguration? No! Adam was not naked before his transgression as we know nakedness. He was clothed with light. He was in the image of God and not ashamed. But, when the transgression came, he died, and the departure of his wonderful garment of light was what his death really was. No human tongue could possibly describe the awful nightmare that must have scared his soul when he awoke naked, unclothed, nude, undraped, disrobed and bare. The light of life with which he once shone as an angel had departed from him. "How art thou fallen from heaven, 0 Lucifer, son of the morning! How art thou cut down which did weaken the nations! ...that made the world a wilderness, and destroyed the cities thereof; that opened not the house of his prisoners."

It would be amiss to leave this part of the dissertation without quoting 2 Cor. 5:1-4 from Moffatt's beautiful translation. "I know that if this earthly tent of mine is taken down, I get a home from God, made by no human hands, eternal in the heavens. It makes me sigh, indeed, this yearning to be under cover of my heavenly habitation, since I am sure that once so covered I shall not be naked at the hour of death. I do sigh within this tent of mine with heavy anxiety - not that I want to be stripped, no, but to be under cover of the other, to have my mortal element absorbed by life. I am prepared for this change by God, who has given me the Spirit as its pledge and installment" 2 Cor. 5:1-5. Moffatt.

When our heavenly Father placed Adam in the Garden of Eden, permission was granted him to eat of all the trees of the garden. The only fruit forbidden him was that of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil. Concerning this tree divine instruction had forewarned, "Thou mayest not eat of it, for in the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." The story of the transgression is too well known to need repeating here. How indelibly in our minds is the vivid fact written that both Adam and Eve his wife partook of the fruit God had forbidden them to touch, and just as sure as God's word is true the pains and penalties of death seized upon them. Death is the absence of life. Death in itself is nothing at all. Darkness is the absence of light.

Darkness itself is a non-entity. Thus, when they partook of the forbidden tree, the light of life, the life that hitherto had been their covering, departed from them, and they, standing in the outer darkness of death, were naked, stark naked and terribly ashamed. The light of life that hitherto had been their glorious garment had vanished away and all the life that now remained to them was that tiny, flickering candle of mortality, which now flowed as blood through the veins of their bodies, giving them some small semblance of mortal and physical life while they were still permitted to walk about in death upon the earth.

It is my firm conviction that, when our first parents sinned, they actually died just as God had told them. The light of life departed from them and they were left naked and ashamed, both dead and in outer darkness. They did not begin to die, as so many would have us believe. They actually died. We are wrong in believing that a man is not dead until he goes to the grave. The Bible is very clear in its teaching that the unregenerate man who still walks and breathes is dead in trespasses and sins, even as the woman who lives in pleasure is dead while she lives. Even the regenerate man, who is born again of the Spirit, though alive in spirit, is still said to be physically dead. What could be more definite than Paul's statement in Romans 8:10, where he says, "If Christ be in you, the body is dead (still dead) because of sin; but the Spirit is life (alive) because of righteousness." But, thank God, He does not leave us here, for he goes on to explain that, "if the Spirit of Him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell I you, He that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken (make alive) your mortal bodies by His Spirit that dwelleth in you."

There is no way of avoiding the fact that man at the time of the fall actually died both spiritually and physically. This present existence outside of Christ which men call life is not life at all. It is death. Man is born dead. He lives in the shadow of death and he is dead. He is naked, in outer darkness and ashamed until Christ comes to give him life. In Christ is life and everything outside of Him is death. The grave is nothing more than the final phase of the death experience. Was not this the thought in the mind of our Lord when He said to the young man, "Follow me, and let the dead bury their dead?" Was Jesus not telling us that the men who were carrying the coffin were just as dead as the man who was lying in it, the only difference being that they were not yet lying down?

I am sure that all are aware that water can take on at least three different forms. Its highest form is an invisible vapor, but when the vapor cools, it changes its form and becomes a liquid which we call water. Then, when water cools and reaches the zero point, it changes its form again and becomes a solid which we call ice. Here before our eyes we see three different forms of the same substance.

With reverence and godly respect I now tell you that thus it was with the light of life that once covered Adam as a garment. He lived and moved in eternal life. He himself was light. He, being in God's image, was not unlike the last Adam, of whom it is written, "In Him was life; and the life was the light of men." John 1:1,2. How glorious a being he must have been is beyond my feeble power of description. We can only have some understanding of it as we follow our Lord to the glory of the mount of transfiguration, where three of His disciples became eyewitnesses of what incorruptible man will be in the glory and power of the kingdom of God. "There be some standing here," Jesus said, "who shall not taste of death till they have seen the Son of man coming in His Kingdom." There in the holy mount of transfiguration they beheld Him in the glory of the light of life. This was resurrection life, kingdom life, and incorruptible life. His face did shine as the sun and His garments were white as the light. This beautiful picture tells us what our resurrection garments will be, the glistening life of life that Christ Himself actually is.

The first Adam was created in God's image, and because this is indisputably true, we cannot but believe that he, too, shared much of this same glory. His covering was also that scintillating garment of the light of life, but when the transgression came, the mantle of light forsook him and all that was left of life to him was that flickering flame of mortality sullenly flowing in the blood stream of his body.

Dr. Langmuir, one of Britain's men of science, who, I understand, had part in the invention of the fluorescent light, made this very remarkable statement: "Blood plasma is congealed light." Now, if this be so, then science has discovered in the test tube what I believe the Lord has revealed to me by the Spirit, that is, that the light of life, that covered Adam in his first glorious state, turned inward after his transgression and became a liquid tissue, which we call blood, running in the veins of his body. For this reason the scripture states, "The life is in the blood." Just as invisible vapor congeals and becomes water, even so the life-giving blood is congealed or crystallized light. Since Jesus Christ is the light of life (John 8:12) I see not how there can be any difference between the light which He is and the life which He is.

It must needs follow, therefore, that, when Adam transgressed, the light of life, which was his covering, his true house from heaven, disappeared from him and all that was left was that mortal something which flowed as blood in the veins of his body. This seems to me to be more in the nature of animal life than the life of God, for, when the glorious covering of life departed from him, he was in truth both naked and ashamed. According to 1 Cor. 15:45 Adam was made a living soul. From Greek the statement reads, "The first man Adam was made a zoe psyche (living soul)." Zoe is the life of God. Psuche is natural soul life. This life, zoe, is the life Jesus promised to give to man when He said, "I give unto them eternal life, and they shall never perish," and this, I believe, is the light of life that departed from Adam when he transgressed, leaving him naked, ashamed, and dead. From these assertions it should be clear why the scripture states, "The life is in the blood." But our blood, being devoid of eternal (zoe) life, is in reality dead blood and capable of sustaining only physical (psuche) life until man returns to the dust from whence he came. It is not without significance that, when the bodies of men are to be embalmed, the first act is to remove the corruptible blood that the dead body may be better preserved.

"The wages of sin is death," the scripture states in a simple, understandable statement of fact. There is no gainsaying this truth. "In the day that thou eatest thereof thou shall surely die," the Lord warned Adam. But eat of it he did, and, just as surely as one will die who eats poison, so Adam died in his transgression. The glory of life departed from him. The magnificent covering of light and life was gone and to his consternation and horror he discovered himself naked, and with the discovery of his nakedness came the shame and despair of his defiled condition. In his desperation he hid himself among the trees of the garden while he attempted to sew fig leaves together that he might in some pitiful manner cover his abhorrent nakedness. The glory of the light of life had departed from him and the despair of the darkness of death had seized upon him.

0 man, how far thou hast fallen in thy disobedience, thou who wast clothed with the light of God and, being clothed in His garment of light, thou wast likewise clothed with His life! In disobedience thou didst stretch forth thy hand to partake of that which God had told thee not, and thou didst feel the fearful result of thy sin in that light vanished from thee and gross darkness settled upon thee. The life of God vanished as thy covering and the horrors of death seized upon thee, that thou shouldst henceforth walk in death until God's breath should leave thee and thou shouldst return to the dust from whence thy body came. Henceforth no life at all shall be thine until He doth come who is the Son of God, He in whose veins shall flow the blood of God which is the life of God — not the flickering light of mortality, but the radiance of immortality, eternal life. And through the shedding of that blood, blood better than the blood of Abel because it is sinless and divine, and blood most precious because it is the blood given for the life of the world, all who believe Him will receive eternal life. The life is in the blood and the life that is in His blood is eternal life. By sin death entered into the world. The result of our sin cannot be cancelled nor we delivered from the pains of death until life can once more be given us. The life, eternal life, is in Christ's blood. It is no wonder, therefore, that without the shedding of blood there is no remission of sins. With the shedding of His precious blood, the blood of life, the blood of the everlasting covenant, Christ has brought to light both life and immortality.

"The life is in the blood." Therefore without the shedding of blood there is no remission of sins. What words could possibly tell us more clearly the absolute necessity of the shedding of the blood of Christ that the world through Him might have life? Sinful man has no grain of eternal life in his blood. Every son of Adam is under condemnation, even those who have not sinned after the similitude of Adam's transgression. Rom. 5:14. What then is man to do, since he is dead in trespasses and sins? How will it become possible for him to receive life and live forever?

Fallen man cannot save himself from his dire predicament. He has no life of his own and it is not possible for the blood of bulls and calves to take away his sin. Lord and Christ, to whom can we look but to Thee, for Thou only hast the word of life eternal? Sinful man has no grain of eternal life in his blood. Every son of Adam is under condemnation, even those who have not sinned after the similitude of Adam's transgression. Rom. 5:14. What then is man to do, since he is dead in trespasses and sins? How will it become possible for him to receive life and live forever?

Centuries ago at the time of the fall mother Eve was given the promise, "The seed of the woman shall bruise the head of the serpent." This is not only the first promise of Christ, but it is also the first promise of the virgin birth of Christ. Whatever opinions men may have concerning the virgin birth of Christ, the truth remains that only by a virgin birth could that precious blood better than the blood of Abel be given. If the Savior was no more than the son of a man, that is, the son of Joseph, then His blood possessed no more eternal life than the blood of any other man, but if He was in truth the Son of God, then His blood is the blood of eternal life. It is precious blood and better than the blood of Abel.

Medical science has taught us the remarkable fact that no drop of mother's blood ever enters the veins of the fetus. The blood that flows in your veins is your father's blood, and not that of your mother. This mystery can spring from no other source than from the miraculous hand of God. Before ever the world began, the omniscient Father had prepared the way whereby the Son of God should be born as no other son of man had ever been born. The prophet Isaiah, hundreds of years before the birth of the seed of the woman, proclaimed that more sure word of prophecy, saying, "Behold a virgin shall conceive, and bear a son, and shall call his name Immanuel." Isa. 7:14. Hundreds of years later in fulfillment of this prophecy the angel Gabriel was sent to a virgin in Israel, espoused to a man whose name was Joseph. "And the angel said unto her, Fear not, Mary: for thou hast found favor with God. And, behold, thou shalt conceive in thy womb, and bring forth a son, and shall call His name Jesus. He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest: and the Lord God shall give unto Him the throne of His father David: and He shall reign over the house of Jacob forever; and of His kingdom there shall be no end. Then said Mary unto the angel, How shall this be, seeing I know not a man? And the angel answered and said unto her, The Holy Ghost shall come upon thee, and the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee: therefore also that holy thing which shall be born of thee shall be called the Son of God" Luke 1:30-35.

This is evidence indisputable that Jesus was born of a virgin. He was both the seed of the woman and the Son of God. The blood that flowed in His veins and which was later shed for the remission of sins was the life blood of God. It was therefore better than the blood of Abel, being the precious blood of Christ, the Lamb of God without blemish and without spot, by which sin is remitted and eternal life regained for the believer. Once we grasp the truth that blood is both light and life and that the blood of Christ is far better than the blood of Abel, because it is the perfect life of God, eternal life, then for the first time we can comprehend the indisputable necessity for the shedding of the blood of Christ. Then we can understand why the apostle said, "Without the shedding of blood there is no remission." Heb. 9:22.

While our Lord Jesus Christ walked upon the earth, He alone had eternal life. That eternal life was in His blood and that blood was confined to Himself. Nowhere in scripture do we have any evidence or record that Jesus Christ ever imparted eternal life to any man before His blood was shed. That, it seems to me, would have been impossible "I have a baptism to be baptized with," our Lord had said, "And how am I straitened until it be accomplished." Luke 12:50. Well did our Savior know that, as long as His life-blood still flowed in the veins of His own body, all the rest of humanity must remain dead in trespasses and sins. Well did He know that, until He was baptized with the baptism of death and His life-blood was shed, there could be no resurrection and no life given to the world. When the disciples mourned at the thought of His departure and death, He told them plainly, "It is expedient for you that I go away: for if I go not away, the Comforter will not come unto you; but if I depart, I will send Him unto you." John 16:7. It is the Spirit that quickeneth or make alive. John 6:63. But the Spirit of life could not be given until the blood was shed and the Spirit sent to give life to man. On the night Jesus was betrayed, He took bread, and after He brake it. He said, "Take, eat: this is My body," and taking the cup, He gave thanks and said, "Drink ye all of it; for this is My blood of the new testament (covenant), which is shed for many for the remission of sins." Matt. 26, 28:29.

This new covenant of eternal life was literally confirmed hours later on the cross when our Lord and Savior bowed His head and with the words, "It is finished," on His lips, He gave up the ghost, and when one of the soldiers pierced His side with a spear, blood and water flowed out. With the shedding of that precious blood the life of God flowed forth, even life eternal, shed forth freely that all might receive it. "For God so loved the world, that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life. For God sent not His Son into the world to condemn the world; but that the world through Him might be saved." John 3:16,17.

Hitherto the Holy Spirit, the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus, had not been given to men. The Son of man was not yet glorified. This absence of the Spirit of life in man is made very clear by the fact that Peter himself, in spite of his calling and his ministry, was not a born again Christian nor could he receive the Spirit of life until after the precious life-blood was shed. With great significance Jesus had said to Peter, "Simon, Simon, behold Satan hath desired to have you, that he may sift you as wheat: but I have prayed for thee, that thy faith fail not: and when thou art converted, strengthen thy brethren:" Luke 22:31,32. Simon Peter, though called, had not yet received the spirit of regeneration; neither had any man among them received eternal life, nor could they until the life blood had been shed, the condemnation of death cancelled, and remission of sin thus guaranteed. It was in the evening of the day of the resurrection that Jesus appeared to His disciples. Through the fast locked doors He came and stood in the midst of them. "Peace be unto you," He announced, and as He spoke. He breathed on them and said, "Receive ye the Holy Ghost." These awe-struck, fearful men were the first people in the history of the world to receive the New Testament experience of conversion. There and then at that very moment the Holy Spirit of life quickened and renewed them in Christ. There and then they received that eternal life freely given to all by the releasing of His life-blood.

When our Lord Jesus rose from the dead, He arose without blood in His veins, but He did not arise without life. The precious blood that had drained from His body three days earlier when it was shed on the cross was now manifest as the light of life. That eternal life, which a few days before had been confined to the blood of His body, now, being loosed by death, was shed abroad to become available as eternal life to all who believe. By the shedding of His blood life was given. By the receiving of His life death was cancelled. In the light of life darkness flees away. The wages of sin is death. Life cancels death and remits all sin, for the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord.

Thus, "when the day of Pentecost was fully come, they were all with one accord in one place. And suddenly there came a sound from heaven as of a rushing mighty wind, and it filled all the house where they were sitting. And there appeared unto them cloven tongues like as of fire, and it sat upon each of them. And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and began to speak with other tongues (languages), as the Spirit gave them utterance." Acts 2:1-4. Never had such a phenomenon been known as had now appeared. This mighty gushing forth of the Holy Ghost was in truth the shedding abroad of the life of God. This Miraculous marvel was the direct result of the shedding of the life-blood of God's Son. Peter in his sermon proclaimed, "Jesus of Nazareth, a man approved of God among you by miracles and wonders and signs, which God did by Him in the midst of you. as ye yourselves also know: Him, being delivered by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God, ye have taken, and by wicked hands have crucified and slain: Whom God hath raised up, having loosed the pains of death: because it was not possible that He should be holden of it... This Jesus hath God raised up, whereof we all are witnesses. Therefore being by the right hand of God exalted, and having received of the Father the promise of the Holy Ghost, He hath shed forth this, which ye now see and hear." Acts 2:22-24,32-33.

There is marvelous significance in those three words "shed forth this." It is the Spirit that quickeneth; the flesh profiteth nothing. No life eternal could be shed abroad until the life blood of Christ was shed because the life was in His blood. Wonderful as it is to be saved and to feel the quickening power of the life of God's Son moving upon us, making us new creatures in Him, a greater day is coming in which not only will the spirit feel the power of His life, but the body also will partake of His resurrection. "Behold, I shew you a mystery: We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump; for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed. For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written. Death is swallowed up in victory (or in life)." 1 Cor. 15:51-54. Then shall we all be changed, transformed, transfigured. Our clothing shall no longer be garments of wool or cotton or skin, but we shall be clothed upon with the light of life, for said Christ, "He that followeth Me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life." John 8:12. Then shall our garments be white and glistening. "For we know that if the mere tent, which is our earthly house, is taken down, we have in heaven a building from God, a house not made by human hands, but eternal. In this one, indeed, we sigh, because we long to put on over it our dwelling which comes from heaven — sure that, when we have put it on, we shall not be found unclothed. Yes, we who are in this tent do sigh under our burdens, not that we wish to lay aside our tent, but rather to put the other over it, so that our mortality may be absorbed in life. And He who formed us for this purpose is God, who has given us His Spirit as guarantee." 2 Cor. 5:1-5. (Weymouth)

"And I saw heaven opened, and behold a white horse; and He that sat upon him was called Faithful and True, and in righteousness He doth judge and make war. His eyes were as a flame of fire, and on His head were many crowns; and He had a name written, that no man knew, but He Himself. And he was clothed with a vesture dipped in blood: and His name is called The Word of God. And the armies which were in heaven followed Him upon white horses, clothed in fine linen, white and clean." Rev. 19:11-14. Fine linen is the righteousness of the saints.

In the vastnesses of the Rocky Mountains those who look will see mighty glaciers, and fields of ice and snow. Hundreds of feet thick and sometimes many miles across, these giant expanses of ice lie cradled in the lap of towering mountains or nestled high up on their hoary peaks. In awe and wonder I have gazed upon them, pondering the omnipotent power that placed them there and the eternal wisdom that designed their function. These interminable fields of ice and snow seem in themselves to be devoid of usefulness as they spread confined among the everlasting hills, but if you will look closer you will see that they are not as idle as they appear, for from their endless resources of ice and snow, warmed by the sun and the wind, little streams of water are bursting forth to cascade merrily down the mountainside. Then, joining hands with other little brooks, they become a torrent of precious water which, when joined to many rivulets becomes a river flowing majestically across the endless plains.

Upon its banks great cities lay their foundations, thirsty for its life-giving power. In every house the water flows to quench the thirst, to bathe the body, to cleanse the wounds and make joyful the heart of every man. Across its water course men build immovable dams and the uncomplaining water, racing through the mighty turbines, gives light and power to the people, while other floods, gushing through irrigation systems, fill the land with abundant store and spread our tables with the luxuries of earth, and vapor, rising from its watery bosom, becomes a blessing to all mankind.

In the body of this article on the precious blood I have endeavored to show that ice, water and vapor are in reality one and the same thing. They are a triad, appearing in different forms under varied conditions. It is with respect bordering on fear and trembling that I now suggest that as ice, water and vapor are one and the same thing, appearing in different forms under different conditions, so blood, life and light are also one. Water in the form of ice and snow was confined to the mountain alone, but when it was loosed from its icy grip to flow forth in a different form, all the land was blessed and blessed again. This, I humbly suggest, was the meaning Jesus conveyed when He said, "I have a baptism to be baptized with, and how am I straitened until it be accomplished." Well did our Savior know that, while eternal life was confined to His body in the form of blood, its life-giving power could not become available to all the billions of earth. Thus with steadfast face He hastened to the cross and in the garden agony He prayed that He might through death be delivered from the realm of death, and thus through the pouring out of His blood shed abroad eternal light and eternal life to all the world. On the morning of the resurrection He arose without blood in His veins, but not without life and not without light, for His blood is in truth the light of life. How unutterably true are Peter's words, "Ye are not redeemed with corruptible things, such as silver and gold, ... but with the precious blood of Christ, as of a lamb without blemish and without spot."

It is easy to grasp the fact that ice and water and vapor are one, because they belong to the natural realm. It is not so easy to understand that blood and light and life are one, because they belong to the spiritual realm. But if you will ask the Holy Spirit to help you, you will see that just as blood (I speak only of the blood of Christ), life and light are one, each progressing to a higher form, so mortality, incorruption and immortality are one, each progressing one step higher than the other. Our blessed Lord walked this earth as a mortal in the form of man," but when He arose from the dead. He arose without life-blood in His veins, but clothed upon with life. He arose incorruptible, never again to die or be touched by death in any form. He had flesh and bones, and He even ate before them, for said He, "A spirit hath not flesh and bones as ye see Me have." Thus for forty days He was seen of men. But then came another experience even more glorious than His marvelous resurrection when in the sight of His loved and own He ascended into the realm of eternal light, of whom Paul wrote, "Who only hath immortality, dwelling in the light which no man can approach unto..." 1 Tim. 6:16.

We, too, shall know these glories, for "this corruptible must put on incorruption and this mortal must put on immortality. So when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written. Death is swallowed up in victory." 1 Cor. 15:53-54. We will reign in incorruption with Christ in the glory of His resurrection during the one thousand years of the kingdom of God. After this will come the glory of the ascension and immortality. "But we all, with open face beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord." 2 Cor. 3:18. Is it any wonder the scripture has said, "Without the shedding of blood there is no remission." Heb. 9:22.

On Calvary's hill of sorrow
Where sins demands were paid,
And rays of hope for tomorrow
Across my path were laid,
I see a crimson stream of blood;
It flows from Calvary.
Its waves, which reach the throne of God,
Are sweeping over me.

THE CHILDREN OF THE RESURRECTION

The Word of God frequently uses such meaningful terms as these; children of light, children of darkness, children of Israel, children of Abraham, children of the devil, children of God. Each of these terms has its origin in the omniscience of the divine mind and consequently is full of truth and meaning. Books without number could, I suppose, be written about any one of them. The beautiful designation, children of light, describes God's redeemed and blood-bought children in such a way that they themselves would instinctively flee from all darkness and, as lights set upon a hill, dispel its gloom by their presence. Children of light will certainly be those who walk in that light which is Jesus Christ Himself. "He that followeth Me," said the Savior, "shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life."

As for me, my one ambition for men is that they might become followers of that one true light that Jesus Christ Himself might walk not only with them and beside them, but in them. It is by beholding the light which He is that we are changed from glory to glory into the image of Christ, each degree of glory superseding the glory that shone before it as the glory of the sun, shining in his strength, supersedes the glory of the stars or the moon. My heart is always filled with pain when I see religious books filled with pictures of smiling preachers who are proclaimed, usually by themselves, as notable men, great healers, eloquent preachers, ready writers, superior organizers, - in short. God's men of the hour. We need a little more of the spirit of the beloved Paul who said, "We are the circumcision who worship God in the spirit and rejoice in Christ Jesus, and have no confidence in the flesh. Though I might also have confidence in the flesh. If any other man thinketh that he hath whereof he might trust in the flesh, I more: Circumcised the eighth day, of the stock of Israel, of the tribe of Benjamin, an Hebrew of the Hebrews; as touching the law, a Pharisee; concerning zeal, persecuting the church; touching the righteousness which is in the law, blameless. But what things were gain to me, those I counted loss for Christ, Yea doubtless, and I count all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord: for whom I have suffered the loss of all things, and do count them but dung, that I may win Christ, and be found in Him, not having mine own righteousness, which is of the law, but that which is through the faith of Christ, the righteousness which is of God by faith." Phil. 3:3-9. Let not the shining light reflect me! Let no spot light hold you in its dazzling glare! Let Christ be all and in all that men may never be constrained to say, "How great a man is this! How eloquent! How striking! How godly! How learned! What a wonderful ministry!" Rather far that men, seeing the light which He is, should fall down at His feet with tear-stained faces and cry in adoration, "How great Thou art! How great Thou art!"

Anything anywhere, whether it be person or sermon, talent, gift, ability, or song, that fails to leave men overawed with the presence and glory of Christ belongs not to the realm of the spirit, but to the realm of the natural, the sordid realm of the flesh. What an abomination this make believe church system is in the eyes of God, so full of false advertising and the exalting of men and women as great and notable ones whose appeal we find, after we have seen and heard them, is not to our spirit but to the dimness of our natural mind. How abominable before God is a system so full of pride and boastfulness, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, loving pleasure more than God, dispensing human philosophy instead of truth, and denying not only the blood that bought them but the Christ who shed His blood for them. Church history records that during the dark ages it was doubtful whether in all the world there could be found a congregation gathered together on truly scriptural grounds, and, though my feeble voice will sound as one who mocks or as one crying in a desolate wilderness, it is most doubtful whether in our day there is in all the world any congregation meeting upon truly scriptural grounds. Do not their ministers minister for hire? Are their elders separated unto the Lord and by the Lord? Does the love of God prevail among them? Does the Holy Spirit guide them? No, verily, it is not so. "They err in vision; they stumble in judgment. For all tables are full of vomit and filthiness, so that there is no place clean." Isa. 28:7-8.
The hour has come when all who are children of light must become one with the light. All the teaching the world can produce will utterly fail to bring us to the likeness of Christ. Our only hope is in beholding Him. In Israel's ancient wilderness tabernacle a great veil hung between the Holy Place and the Holy of Holies. The heavenly light of God's presence, the Shekinah or the glory light of God presence, always filled the Holy of Holies, but that glory light was hidden from the priests who ministered in the Holy Place. The veil represents the flesh. No man dared to pass by it except the High Priest, and that but once a year, but when Jesus Christ died upon the cross of Calvary, and you and I died there in Him - at that awful moment when His flesh was rent and His blood was shed - a great miracle occurred in the temple. The veil was rent in twain from top to bottom, opening the way for us all into the Holy of Holies itself, that we might see His face, behold His glory, and by His Spirit be changed into the very light which He is. See Heb. 10:19-22. "Seeing then we have such hope, we use great plainness of speech. And not as Moses, which put a vail over his face, that the children of Israel could not steadfastly look to the end of that which is abolished: But their minds were blinded: for until this day remaineth the same veil untaken away in the reading of the old testament: which veil is done away in Christ. But even unto this day, when Moses is read, the veil is upon their heart. Nevertheless, when it (the heart) shall turn to the Lord, the veil shall be taken away. Now the Lord is that Spirit: and where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty. But we all, with open face (unveiled face), beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord." 2 Cor. 3:12-18.

In chapter one we pointed out, as best we could, how all inclusive was the work that was finished when Jesus Christ, the Son of God, died upon the cross of Calvary. Here God gave His only begotten Son and received His blood as a remission of sins for the whole world. On that memorable day of the cross Jesus Christ did not die alone. My old man was crucified with Him; my flesh was crucified with Him; the world was crucified with Him. The law was nailed to the cross with Him, and I, with you, Oh beloved, was crucified with Christ. There are those now reading these lines who have begun to discover the almost incomprehensible change that began to transform their lives when the full force of the meaning of the cross shone like an eternal ray of truth into their souls. The carnal thing you struggled with yesterday you discover today has already been crucified, yes, crucified with Christ before you were born or saw the light of day, and the new life that has now begun, though you are yet in the body, is lived by the faith of the Son of God who loved you and gave Himself for you. No more shall I be intimidated or brought into bondage by that which was smitten a mortal blow when God nailed my old carnal self with His Christ to the cross of Calvary.

Henceforth the life we now live in the flesh shall not be lived to the lusts of men but lived as God lives in the Spirit. May it please God that all who read these truths shall receive from Him wisdom, light and understanding that they being children of light might also walk in the light of the truth which He is. Let our understandings, darkened as they have been through the centuries of human tradition and the doctrines of men, now be enlightened that we may behold what goodness and mercy was bestowed upon us when God having included all men in the last Adam, nailed Him to the tree and, having offered in sacrifice His priceless Son, He wrote finis to everything that pertains to the old creation. Tearing asunder the dividing veil (Matt. 27:50-53), He opened wide the door that we might live in His presence, and, beholding His face, be changed into that same image from glory to glory. 2 Cor. 3:18.

CHILDREN OF THE RESURRECTION

There was a day when the Sadducees, who deny that there is any resurrection or angel or spirit, came to Jesus, saying, "Master, Moses wrote unto us, If any man's brother die, having a wife, and he died without children, that his brother should take his wife, and raise up seed unto his brother. There were therefore seven brethren: and the first took a wife, and died without children. And the second took her; and in like manner the seven also: and they left no children and died. Last of all the woman died also. Therefore in the resurrection whose wife of them is she? For seven had her to wife. And Jesus answering said unto them. The children of this world marry, and are given in marriage: But they which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead, neither marry, nor are given in marriage: Neither can they die any more: for they are equal unto the angels; and are the children of God, being the CHILDREN OF THE RESURRECTION." Luke 20:27-38.
It is a mistake to tell men about sin, but fail to tell them about the Savior. It is wrong to bring men under condemnation while withholding from them the blessedness of a realm where there is no condemnation. Rom. 8:1. It is folly to magnify the evils of a life after the flesh while failing to portray the glories of a life lived after the Spirit; and it is equally useless, if not hopeless, to preach the crucified life to Christians if we succeed only in hanging them on the cross or leaving them lying dead in the tomb. Let heaven and earth be called to witness that the Via Dolorosa (the way of the cross) is also the way of the resurrection. If there had been no cross, there would have been no burial, and, if there had been no burial, there would have been no resurrection.

The things I now write are of such infinite importance that our failure to see them as a revelation from God will bar our progress to those sublime and eternal peaks of spiritual experience, leaving us in the doldrums of the vat or, worse still, trudging the weary pathway of the uncrucified flesh, hopelessly striving against the dictates of the carnal mind and the old Adam nature. May the divine Spirit of the omniscient God send His rays of revelation into the darkened recesses of our hearts to reveal to each of us what it really means to be in Him. Let the light of God clearly show that all who sinned in the first Adam paid the penalty of death for their sin as they died in the last Adam, Jesus Christ our Lord. Let them also remember that He in whom we died was taken down from His cross and buried in Joseph's new tomb, and we are buried there with Him. Furthermore, let our hearts rejoice in this magnificent confidence; that we who died in Him and were buried in Him also rose in Him triumphant over death, triumphant over the world (age), over the flesh and over the devil, having become, indeed, the children of the resurrection. Hallelujah!

We cannot speak too forcefully, too carefully, or with two great humility concerning our identification with Him. When God says I am in Him, then / am in Him, and no reasoning of the carnal mind will ever alter such an eternal fact. It is good for God's children to be able to give an answer for the hope that dwelleth in them with meekness and fear, but always remember that you do not owe an explanation to any man. Can I ever explain to a carnal mind that I died with Christ? Never! Can I satisfy the reasoning of the Sadducees by explaining to them that, when Christ arose from the dead, I arose from the dead with Him and in Him? I do not owe them an explanation for my hope in Him, and neither will I attempt to give one except I see a heart that is open and longing for the truth.

Our association with church systems means less than nothing; our association with Christ means everything. Our identification with groups, denominations and sects is nothing but a faith destroying fraud; our identification with Jesus Christ is life from the dead. "It is in Him, and through the shedding of His blood, that we have our deliverance - the forgiveness of our offences - so abundant was God's grace, the grace which He, the possessor of all wisdom and understanding, lavished upon us, when He made known to us the secret of His will. And this is in harmony with God's merciful purpose for the government of the world when the times are ripe for it - the purpose which He has cherished in His own mind of restoring the whole creation to find its one Head in Christ; yes, things in heaven and things on earth, to find their one Head in Him." Eph. 1:7-10. (Weymouth)

Can we not see by the Holy Spirit how great is God's plan in Christ and how great is His merciful purpose for all those who dwell in Him through faith in the eternal Logos, that we should abide in Him and He in us? This vain world with all its dreadful violence, its iniquitous taxation, its inequity, its greedy unjust wars, its filthiness after the flesh, its sickness, sorrow, heartache, disease, and death, is soon to lose all its carnal governors and rulers, for the resurrected Christ, together with those blessed children of the resurrection, will reign in splendor over all the earth. This is our inheritance and the beginning of our glory in Him.

Behold further how great a crown of glory divine inspiration has placed upon the heads of all who, identifying themselves with Him, dwell securely in Him, "In Him, too, we have been made heirs having been chosen beforehand in accordance with the intention of Him whose might carries out in everything the design of His own will, so that we should be devoted to the extolling of His glorious attributes - we who were the first to fix our hopes on Christ. And in Him you also, after listening to the word of truth, the gospel of your salvation - having believed in Him - were sealed with the promise of the Holy Spirit; That Spirit being a pledge and foretaste of our inheritance, in anticipation of its full redemption - the inheritance which He has purchased to be specially His for the extolling of His glory." Eph. 1:11-14. (Weymouth) "I always beseech the God of our Lord Jesus Christ - the Father most glorious - to give you a spirit of wisdom and of insight into mysteries through knowledge of Him, the eyes of your heart being enlightened so that you may know what is the hope which His call to you inspires, what the wealth of the glory of His inheritance in the saints, and what the transcendent greatness of His power in us believers as seen in the working of His infinite might when He displayed it in Christ by raising Him from the dead, and seating Him at His own right hand in the heavenly realms, high above all other government and authority and power and dominion, and every title of sovereignty used either in this age or in the age to come. God has put all things under His feet, and has appointed Him universal and supreme Head of the church, which is His Body, the completeness of Him who everywhere fills the universe with Himself. Eph. 1:17-23. (Weymouth)

No wonder Jesus said, "And I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto Me." How little of His plan He could then reveal to His disciples who had not yet received the Spirit! But unto the children of the resurrection He now reveals some of the things concerning that new world, that kingdom age, when a new creation of men with resurrected spirits, resurrected minds and resurrected bodies will reign in splendor with Christ, the first begotten from the dead, for they are the completeness of Him who everywhere fills the universe with Himself.

"O Lord, Thou has searched me, and known me. Thou knowest my downsitting and mine uprising; Thou understandest my thought afar off. Thou compasses! my path and my lying down, and art acquainted with all my ways. For there is not aword in my tongue, but, lo, O Lord, Thou knowest it altogether. Thou hast beset me behind and before, and laid Thine hand upon me. Such knowledge is too wonderful for me; it is high, I cannot attain unto it ... My substance was not hid from Thee, when I was made in secret, and curiously wrought in the lowest parts of the earth. Thine eyes did see my substance, yet being unperfect; and in Thy book all my members were written, which in continuance were fashioned, when as yet there was none of them. How precious also are Thy thoughts unto me, O God! How great is the sum of them!" Psa. 139:1-6, 15-17. The children of the resurrection are the completeness of Him who everywhere fills the universe with Himself. They are the people who are fearfully and wonderfully made into the mystical body of Christ, whose substance was not hid from God when He made them in secret and curiously wrought them in the lowest parts of the earth. These are the people who were written in God's book while they were unperfect and who were fashioned according to God's liking when as yet there was none of them. How can we help but weep with David as we repeat his words of worship, "How precious are Thy thoughts to me, 0 God! How great is the sum of them!"

Identification with Christ in His cross means death in all its completeness to all that is old. There in His cross, as nowhere else, old things pass away. Now that we have come to the end of the church age, we shall have to include among the old things all our Babylonish church system, every ist and ism, every sect and denomination of whatever name it may be. We, the children of the resurrection, must walk out and forsake them all, counting them all as old things that belong to a dying age. The trumpet of God is sounding the blast that proclaims, "Behold, the Bridegroom cometh! ...Go ye out to meet Him." You dear people who are fervently proclaiming that before the coming of the Lord the church system must be restored as it was at Pentecost are figuratively battering your heads against a stone wall. You are as far behind the times as the Judaizers who proclaimed that believers must be circumcised and keep the law before they could be saved. You are like the fervent Apollos who, knowing the baptism of John, preached it and made many disciples, but did not know that twenty years earlier Jesus had died and the Holy Spirit had been poured out at Pentecost. Acts 18:24-28. Your great trouble is that you do not know what the church is. When you speak of the churches (plural), you refer to the church system with all its divisions. The truth is that this wretched thing is not the Church, but the harlot. It is not the Ecclesia of God, but Mystery Babylon. You are clutching the oyster instead of the pearl of great price. You are polishing the mud instead of the diamond. You are cultivating the weeds and not the wheat. The thing you are nurturing is always in trouble and confusion, falsehood and make-believe, because it is the product of the carnal mind.

The church, on the other hand, is something different altogether. It is the mystical body of Christ. It is mystical because no man can point to it and say there it is. It is mystical because God alone knows its members. It is mystical because neither the world system nor the church system assimilates it. It is mystical because it does not belong to this age and, like Noah's dove, can find no rest on earth's turbulent waves and floating filth. The church system with its massive edifices and towering spires is the Ishmael, born after the flesh and the carnal mind. Ishmael, indeed, was to be a great nation, but In Isaac shall they seed be called."
Instead of embracing the impossible task of perfecting the harlot system, instead of trying to convert the world in this age, you would do good to yourself, to the world, and to God if you would lay aside all such vain efforts and come instead with fasting and consecration before God, having no request of your own, but with open heart and ear listening to the voice of the Logos, the living, speaking Word, that He might instruct you concerning your need and acquaint you with His wonderful purpose for the ages and His purpose for you personally. Why are Christians obsessed with the notion that they must always be doing something? God is not interested in your much doing. Do what He bids you and nothing more. The earth with all its works will soon be burned up. It is he that doeth the will of God that abideth forever, not he that is "up and doing".

Wherever did Christians get the idea that God wants to bring everyone in the world to the knowledge of salvation here and now? What makes them imagine that God ever intended to bring all men to the knowledge of the truth in this age? Such belief is not and never has been God's plan. Give ear to the inspired words of the apostle James as He places the plan of God for man's redemption in a veritable nut shell. "Simon hath declared how God at the first did visit the Gentiles, to take out of them a people for His name. And to this agree the words of the prophets; as it is written, after this I will return, and will build again the tabernacle of David, which is fallen down; and I will build again the ruins thereof, and I will set it up: That the residue of men might seek after the Lord, and all the Gentiles upon whom My name is called, saith the Lord, who doeth all these things. Known unto God are all His works from the beginning of the world. ACTS 15:14-18.

The church system as we see it today with all its confusion, pomp and pride, riches and increase of goods coupled with abject spiritual poverty, is the counterpart of the dispensation of law in the days of John the Baptist and Jesus. It is old and ready to vanish away. There was only one message for the Jew of John's day. "Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand", and for this decadent, earthly-minded church system, wretched, miserable, poor, blind, and naked, (Rev. 3:17), there is but one message: "Repent, for the kingdom of God is at hand." "Come out of her. My people" should be the watch cry of every true saint of God, but instead of this there is an almost fanatical frenzy to build up the church system. There is no more hope of building up the church system than there is of restoring the present world order. Both are integral parts of Babylon and both shall be destroyed and not restored.

Long centuries ago Paul wrote, "He who now letteth (hindereth) will let until he be taken out of the way. Then shall that wicked be revealed." Who is it that has hindered the work of that wicked one throughout the entire church age? It was not the church system; but it was the elect children of God who were scattered in it, those who dwelt in it as Daniel, Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego dwelt in Babylon. During the last few years God has begun to remove His elect from the confusion of this multi-headed monstrosity that dares to masquerade as the church. The result has been that iniquity has burst forth both in the Babylon of the world's political systems and in the Babylon of the church system. Corruption of doctrine and truth has fallen into a bottomless pit and sunken to such degradation of ideas that it is a shame of face even to mention them. There is but one message for those elect children who reign with Christ and share His glory. "Come out from among them, and be separate, and touch not the unclean thing. Repent, for the kingdom of God is at hand."

Thus the cross is the end of all that is old. It is the end of the flesh to all who believe its marvelous message. It is the end of the carnal mind, the end of fleshly striving for perfection, the end for us of Babylon's abominable confusion. Yea, even our earthly citizenship comes to an end in the cross. Here we begin to find ourselves increasingly alienated and ostracized from all the ways and the doings of earth. Even its business and politics become a passing show and a mist that the wind driveth away.

This loss of interest in this present age comes as a direct result of the knowledge that old things are indeed passing away. Here we have no continuing city, but we seek one to come whose builder and maker is God. Heb. 13:14. The continuing city, which we seek, is that holy and heavenly Jerusalem, which we ourselves are. The gold of that city includes all that is divine. The silver of that city is redemption. The precious stones are its inhabitants, the living stones, chosen of God and precious. The light of that city is not the light of a candle nor yet the light of the moon or the sun, for the Lord Himself is the light thereof, and all nations shall walk in the light of it.
Let the saints of God arise to the stark but positive reality that the cross has ended all that is old, has ended, I say - not will end. At this very moment every man who now believes in his heart that by the cross of Christ God dealt with and abolished everything pertaining to the old creation shall find deliverance and freedom from all that is old and passing away because of the certain knowledge that God on Golgotha nailed to the accursed tree everything that belonged to Adam's fallen creation. Henceforth all who truly identify themselves with the cross and the last Adam, who died upon it, shall be free indeed from all corrupting things that have hurt and defiled their spirits, bringing them into lifelong bondage. With such wonderful knowledge in our hearts how can we help but proclaim, "God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom the world is crucified unto me, and I unto the world." By the cross I am crucified. The old Adamic "I" is crucified. In the cross the old man was crucified, the flesh was crucified, and the world was crucified. It is executed. It is dead. The executioner's axe has cut off its head. The hangman's noose has broken its neck. The cross has taken its life away, and it shall be no more.

That which immediately follows the cross is not the resurrection, but the burial. It was not enough in the sight of God that the old "I" should be crucified. It did not satisfy him that my flesh was crucified and the world was crucified as well, but, having put an end to it by nailing it to His cross. He wrapped it in grave clothes and buried it in the tomb, putting it out of the way, putting it out of His sight, identifying it with the deadness of the earth from which it sprang. Oh, thou man of God, wherein lies thy faith? Do you not now see that God has in truth caused old things to pass away and that He has by one omnipotent stroke nailed to the cross every crafty enemy of your soul? And since the law has no power over men that are dead. He placed you in Christ and in Him He nailed you to the cross.

Thus, making the law powerless and ineffective. He robbed every principality and evil spirit of the power they held over you, and the law itself with its ordinances, now rendered powerless by reason of your death with Christ, was taken out of the way, being also nailed to the cross. "Blotting out the handwriting of ordinances that was against us, which was contrary to us, and took it out of the way, nailing it to His cross; And having spoiled principalities and powers, He made a show of them openly, triumphing over them in it. Let no man therefore judge you in meat, or in drink, or in respect of an holyday, or of the new moon, or of the Sabbath days: Which were at war against us, which was contrary to us, and took it out of the way, nailing it to His cross; And having spoiled principalities and powers, He made a show of them openly, triumphing over them in it. Wonderful as is the indisputable fact that old things have passed away forever in His cross, it is in the resurrection that the transcending glory of all new things begin. Without the cross there could be no resurrection, for "that which thou sowest is not quickened (made alive) except it die." 1 Cor. 15:36. "But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first-fruits of them that slept. For since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead. For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive." 1 Cor. 15:20-22.

My heart's desire and prayer to God is that we who have seen our identification with Christ in His cross and burial may now also see our identification with Him in His resurrection. The moment divine revelation shows us that everything belonging to the old Adam died with Christ and has in very truth passed away, then in that moment we experience deliverance from every ancient bondage of the old creation. But let us learn here and now that death does not end all, for if there be no resurrection, the Christ died in vain. But Christ is risen from the dead, and become the first-fruits of them that slept. For since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead. For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive." 1 Cor. 15:20-22.
soul of that faith that here and now teaches me that I am a child of the resurrection. Henceforth we look out upon a world that is swiftly passing away, an age that is in the throes of death, an hour that holds no passing interest. The thought of restoring the transient things of the old creation is madness and the efforts of the zealot to do so are a sorrow and sickness to the heart. How earthly and bound by this age were the minds of the Sadducees who hoped to annul the truth of the resurrection by speaking of a woman who had in consecutive order married seven brothers, ending their supposed case with the words, "Therefore, in the resurrection whose wife shall she be, for the seven had her." When Jesus replied to their cunning question. He showed the two great reasons for the million errors that cluster like demons over the minds of men, robbing them of faith and destroying their understanding. "Ye do err," He said, "(1) not knowing the scriptures, nor (2) the power of God. For in the resurrection they neither marry nor are given in marriage, but are as the angels of God in heaven." Matt. 23-33. What a soul destroyer is the natural mind that dares to question the authority of scripture, imagining by its unbelief to make God devoid of power!

At this point in our message one could easily digress into a prolonged analysis of the resurrection. It would be simple to go from scripture to scripture offering proof after indisputable proof that Jesus really did rise from the dead, but however valuable such an exegesis may be to some, it usually has the unfortunate effect of leaving men full of theory but empty of experience. Far too often the resurrection is portrayed as an event of the past or left to be a hope of the distant future far beyond the reach of men in this hour of our greatest need. In the detailed story of the raising of Lazarus from the dead, recorded in the eleventh chapter of John's gospel, the conversation of Jesus and Martha is of foremost interest. "Martha, as soon as she heard that Jesus was coming, went and met Him: but Mary sat still in the house. Then said Martha unto Jesus, Lord, if Thou hadst been here, my brother had not died. But I know, that even now, whatsoever Thou wilt ask of God, God will give it Thee. Jesus saith unto her, Thy brother shall rise again. Martha saith unto Him, I know that he shall rise again in the resurrection at the last day. Jesus said unto her, I am the resurrection, and the life: he that believeth in Me, though he were dead, yet shall he live: And whosoever liveth and believeth in Me shall never die. Believeth thou this?" John 11:20-26.

The words spoken by Martha are typical of the faith of us all. She believed in a resurrection as an event in the distant future even as we also believe. But the great fundamental fact that must engulf our spirits, enlightening our pure minds with revelation from heaven is this: The resurrection is above all else a person and that person is none other than our Lord Jesus Christ who died, who was buried, and who rose again. It is not our belief in the resurrection as an event either past or future that makes us children of the resurrection. It is our identity with Him that makes us one with that resurrection which He both here and now is. What else but this was Jesus daring to teach when He staggered the mind of that humble woman with these words: "He that believeth in Me, though he were dead, yet shall he live, and whosoever liveth and believeth in Me shall never die?" Would you not say that such daring belief identifies you with the risen Christ? Who is it, anyway, of whom He spoke, saying, "Whosoever believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live"? Dare we venture to say that he who has identified himself with Christ's death is not, in fact, dead? Verily I say unto you that such a man has died even as He died. He is crucified with Christ. His old man is crucified. His flesh is crucified. It was the faith of such a man that brought him into the likeness of Christ's death, and it is like precious faith that now identifies him with the resurrected Christ. "If we have been planted together in the likeness of His death, we shall be also in the likeness of His resurrection." Rom. 6:5. Therefore Jesus our Lord said, "He that believeth in Me, though he were dead, yet shall he live." But He went much further to say of this same believing person, "Whosoever liveth and believeth in Me shall never die."

There is a possibility that the day may soon come when devout men will put my body in a coffin and bury me under the ground, but I cannot believe that such an event can be called death to any man who has identified himself with Christ in His death and resurrection. At most and at worst the grave to such a one can be but a sleep, and I think this is the faith Paul embraced when he spoke of that blessed "in Christ" company, saying, "Behold, I shew you a mystery; We shall not all sleep but we shall all be changed." 1 Cor. 15:51. Again, "If we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with Him." 1 Thess. 4:14. And yet again, "For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord, that we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord shall not prevent (precede) them which are asleep." 1 Thess. 4:15. Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection. Upon such the second death hath no power. It would not be possible to say that those believers who through faith have identified themselves with His resurrection were not partakers of the first resurrection. Such reasoning would make the truth void and faith of no effect.

But what shall we say of the second part of Christ's statement to Martha? "Whosoever liveth and believeth in Me shall never die". There is coming a day and that right soon when God will demonstrate to every creature in the universe that this long misunderstood statement is literally true. The hour is at hand when a blood-washed company of people will be swept into immortality without even knowing sleep in the dust of the earth. For thus saith the Lord, "The dead in Christ shall rise first, and we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air..." It is abundantly clear, therefore, that we shall not all sleep. Certainly we shall not and cannot die.

The mighty, eternal, all-embracing events that concern Calvary and the Christ, who died, was buried, and rose again, are the very center and pivot of the whole universe. Each literal event of those dread hours of agony and glory bears symbolic reference to identical experiences that take place in the lives of the blood-bought saints who now through the spirit of revelation identify themselves with the eternal Logos in His death, in His burial, in His resurrection, in His ascension, and in His seat at God's right hand. The revelation of the divine fact of our death with Him and in Him is so real to all who can embrace the truth of it that a definite and wonderful change begins to transform their very life and existence. "I am crucified with Christ," the heart believes. "Nevertheless, I live yet not I, but Christ, liveth in me, and the life which I now live in the flesh I live by the faith of the Son of God who loved me and gave Himself for me." The "I" that I once was is dead; the "I" that now lives is Jesus Christ. No wonder John in rapture exclaimed, "As He is, so are we in this world," 1 John 4:17.

Glorious, indeed, and wonderful beyond human description was the cross of Christ and all that was accomplished there. Sacred and holy beyond the words of the most eloquent tongue was the burial wherein all our Adamic past was buried with Him in the dust from which it sprang, but now I know that the most exciting event of all history, whether it be past, present, or future, was the glory and wonder of the resurrection.

Death could not keep her prey;
Jesus, my Savior.
He tore the bars away;
Jesus, my Lord.
Up from the grave He arose
With a mighty triumph o'er His foes.
He arose a victor from the dark domain,
And He lives forever with His saints to reign.
He arose! He arose! Hallelujah! Christ arose!

The resurrection is the difference between gloomy, dark, and dreadful death and life incorruptible and eternal. The fact that He who died and was buried is forevermore alive is the most transforming reality in all the annals of God. "Why seek ye the living among the dead?" asked the wise and mighty angel. "He is not here. He is risen. Behold the place where they laid Him." "He is risen," echoed the women as they wept with indescribable joy. "Did not our hearts burn within us as He spake with us by the way," rejoiced the men who only moments before were heartsick with bitterness and dread. "He is alive, and hath appeared to Simon," said the eleven who were gathered together. "My Lord and My God," murmured Thomas as his unbelief departed from him.
Wonderful, wonderful beyond description is that historic event, an event proven by more facts than perhaps any other event of history including the crucifixion. However, it is not the historicalness of the event nor the multiplicity of indisputable proofs with which we are principally interested now, but let heaven rejoice and angels and demons and men bear witness that all who by faith have identified themselves with His death and burial are now risen with Him by that same faith to walk in newness of life. At this very moment it is true "that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life." Rom. 6:4.

That you by faith in Him have become a child of the resurrection is no idle theory. It is not that insipid talk of wordy old theologians who love to drown truth in the murky seas of tradition and theory. This is truth that flows from the infinite mind of the eternal Logos. "For if we have been planted together in the likeness of His death, we shall also be in the likeness of His resurrection." "He that believeth in Me, though he were dead, yet shall he live, and whosoever liveth and believeth in Me shall never die." So true and transforming is the fact of our resurrection in Him that men of faith are brought here and now into the realm of reality. To them old things are without doubt passing away and new things are being born. The blessed discovery is soon made that things, which once held them in their iron grip, are losing their power over them. Their business and their bank accounts are losing their significance in the light of the fact that they are no longer children of death in Adam but children of the resurrection in Christ. They understand as never before the significance of the words of Jesus. "If My Kingdom were of this world, then would My servants fight; ...but now My kingdom is not from hence." John 18:36. Our lives in Adam have always been filled with striving and war in a vain effort to preserve our kingdom of death, but now henceforth God's kingdom is our kingdom. I have no interest in preserving this present realm that for 6000 years has been beset by death and futility. Loose your grip upon it, oh man, that you may fully partake of that new creation that even now has begun within the children of the resurrection.

With our entrance into this new creation begins the blossoming of the new mind, even the mind of Christ; and with the coming of the new mind physical transformations appear, for the Lord by the mouth of Paul has said, "Be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind..." Rom. 12:2. This physical renewing will appear first in death to many old lusts that held sway in your body. That which thou sowest is not quickened except it die. Fleshly desires fall away and any effort to revive them will bring spiritual pain. Natural things such as church systems become a heaviness of heart and a weariness of spirit as in the eternal light they appear to be what they really are - the product of the Adamic mind. "My kingdom is not of this world", and, since it is not, then I may no longer think of myself as a citizen of earth, but a citizen of the new realm. Surely men will say, "Thou art beside thyself as did Festus when Paul spoke to him of the resurrection. Acts 26:24. But well might we say, "If I be beside myself, it is to God." 2 Cor. 5:13.

In the hour in which we now live there is no fact more sobering than the knowledge that the end of the age is upon us. Evil forces are mustering on every hand for the dreadful hour of Armageddon. Fearful sights hitherto unknown will presently alarm and terrify the world as blood and fire and vapor of smoke drench the earth in torment and terror. Acts 2:19. Stars like burning mountains shall soon fall from the sky, setting off earthquakes of a violence never before known. Rev. 8:7-10. Waters will turn to blood and over half of mankind will die by war and famine and plagues. Cf. Rev. 6:8 with Rev. 9:18. Then will come the blissful moment of the sounding of the seventh and last trumpet when the in Christ ones, the children of the resurrection, joined by the dead in Christ, shall be caught up to meet the Lord for the beginning of the long awaited kingdom of God. "And the seventh angel sounded; and there were great voices in heaven, saying, The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of His Christ; and He shall reign forever and ever." Rev. 11:15.

CHAPTER FIVE
HE IS RISEN

"The course of bad men lies through darkness dim; they cannot see what makes them stumble: the course of good men, like a ray of dawn, shines on and on to the full light of day." Prov. 4:18,19. (Moffatt)

At the beginning of our walk with God we see through a glass darkly, but for all those who walk faithfully there will come a time when the murky dimness of the dark glass will be taken away and the clear light will shine. No more the darkling veil will obscure, but we shall see face to face, and, beholding the face of the Lord, we are changed into that same image from one glory to the next even as by the Spirit of the Lord. 2 Cor. 3:18.

It is the plan of God that all things with life should grow. It matters not whether the form of life be intricate or simple. The seed of whatsoever sort it be, cast into the ground, springs forth in newness of life, first the blade, then the ear, after that the full corn in the ear. Mark 4:28. The delightful baby given to adoring parents who could love his fresh innocence forever is not destined to remain a tiny infant, but with what delight do parents announce the gaining of a few ounces in weight, the first efforts at crawling, the appearance of a tooth, the first halting step in walking, the first garbled words, the beginning of school, until with joy and sadness blending they see the final adulthood and departure from home. But what apprehension appalls where stalks the sudden fear that their child who had such a beautiful beginning is growing sickly and weak, that faculties are not developing and disease that will stunt the growth and weaken the mind is closing the gates of day!

Since God has ordained that all things should grow and mature and we, His offspring, love to have it so, why is it that the vast multitude of God’s dear children are never expected to pass from infancy to manhood, going from light to light and from experience to experience? Why should it be thought strange that development and change should take place in their lives as with the passing years, new wisdom and understanding of eternal things fill their spiritual minds? Has not God ordained that His offspring should mature from the infancy of little children to the strength and virility of young men and thence to the wisdom and understanding, the love and ripeness of fathers? Is this not the meaning of the beautiful text, "I write unto you, little children, because your sins are forgiven for His name's sake. I write unto you, young men, because ye have overcome the wicked one. I write unto you, fathers, because^ have known Him that is from the beginning." 1 John 2:12-14. The path of the just must be as the shining light that shineth more and more unto the perfect day. Prov. 4:18. If therefore there is no more light in you today and no more bright shining than there was at the beginning, then your light is going out, and somewhere you have chosen your own sweet paths, having forsaken the right way and gone astray. 2 Pet. 2:15.

It is thought to be a bad sign should one change his mind about anything, which was held as truth. But we know nothing yet as we ought to know and, whereas what little we do know we know only in part, we should expect that, as we walk in the light, which is Jesus Christ, and the more brightly it shines upon our pathway, the more the misty clouds will flee from our understanding, the darkness will be dispelled from its secret hiding place, the shadows will will lay aside their misty mantles to beckon us to their lofty heights, "for when that which is perfect is come, then that which is in part shall be done away." 1 Cor. 13:10. Pity the man who resists all change, for such a one never matures beyond the infant years. He seeks to firmly establish himself in the first principles of doctrine and live out the rest of his monotonous days on nothing but the milk of the word. Cf. Heb. 6:1-3. He has never learned that there is strong meat for men of full age. He knows nothing about the honey in the rock, the bread of life of which if a man eat he shall live forever, or the water of life of which if a man drink he shall never die. Contenting himself in defending his juvenile position, he robs himself of spiritual growth, rusting in the fortress of his own building until he dies. He resembles the legendary frog that lived in a well that, thinking all the water in the world, he possessed all the water in the world, believed not when others told him that outside his gloomy hole there were mighty rivers, vast lakes and boundless oceans. To believe such things that frog would have had to change his mind and broaden his understanding, but, like many Christians, this he refused to do.

THE SIGN SON

At the time of the birth of our Lord Jesus Christ there was a man in Jerusalem whose name was Simeon. "And the same man was just and devout, waiting for the consolation of Israel: and the Holy Ghost was upon him. And it was revealed unto him by the Holy Ghost, that he should not see death, before he had seen the Lord's Christ. And he came by the Spirit into the temple: and when the parents brought in the child Jesus, to do for Him after the custom of the law, then took he Him up in his arms, and blessed God, and said. Lord, now lettest Thou Thy servant depart in peace, according to Thy word: For mine eyes have seen Thy salvation, which Thou hast prepared before the face of all people; A light to lighten the Gentiles, and the glory of Thy people Israel. And Joseph and His mother marveled at those things, which were spoken of Him. And Simeon blessed them, and said unto Mary His mother, Behold, this child is set for the fall and rising again of many in Israel; and/or a sign that shall be spoken against." Luke 2:25-34.
The life of Jesus Christ from its beginning on earth to His ascension into heaven was a sign. The miracles He performed both individually and collectively bear this testimony of things to come and manifest forth in sign the glory of a coming age. His life, His death. His burial. His resurrection and ascension display with certainty the path which we, too, must follow and over which we have already traversed farther than we think.

The gospel preached by the apostle Paul was the gospel of the grace of God. It was especially given to him for this age. This he affirms in these words: “For this cause, I, Paul, the prisoner of Jesus Christ for you Gentiles, if ye have heard of the dispensation of the grace of God which is given me to you-ward: how that by revelation He made known unto me the mystery... which in other ages was not made known unto the sons of men as it is now revealed unto His holy apostles and prophets by the Spirit.” Eph. 3:1-5-8. The gospel preached by Jesus was not the gospel of grace but the gospel of the kingdom of God. It is the gospel which will fill the whole earth in the dispensation which is even now at our doors. It will grip the hearts and minds of all men and fill the entire earth with the literal realities of the Sermon on the Mount. The wonders He wrought during His ministry on earth were only the things, which was not the gospel of grace but the gospel of the kingdom of God. It is the gospel which

The gospel of the grace of God which has been preached for almost two thousand years was given not because the Jews rejected Christ, but as a dispensation planned before of God in which he would call and prepare a special company of sons to reign in His kingdom. This mystery was not known in previous ages, but was revealed to the apostles by the Spirit! See Eph. 3:1-6. Though the grace of God will never end, the period we call the dispensation of grace is almost complete. The elect and chosen sons, the in Christ company, prepared of God through the fires of the past two centuries, are now due to come forth from their graves to join the in Christ company that lives and remains unto the coming of the Lord. 1 Thess. 4:14-18. Not all Christians will reign with Christ. That is reserved for the in Christ company. The vast majority of Christians are saved so as by fire.

They have built upon the foundation with naught but wood, hay, and stubble, and when the fire of God tries the work of every Christian, as try it surely will, their works will be burned up, and they will stand naked and empty before Him. But those whose works are as gold, silver, and precious stones will not be hurt by the fire that tries every man. Therefore, if any man’s work abide, he shall receive a reward; but if any man’s work shall be burned, he shall suffer loss: but he himself shall be saved; yet so as by fire. 1 Cor. 3:12-15. People saved so as by fire are not material for sonship nor for reigning in the kingdom of God, for those who are with Him are called and chosen and faithful. Rev. 17:14.

My spirit has been stirred with a knowledge that great changes are taking place in God’s faithful people. To those who follow Christ are the promises given and not to those who follow afar off. “For everyone that hath forsaken houses, or brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands for My name’s sake shall receive an hundredfold, and shall inherit eternal life. But many that are first shall be last, and the last shall be first.” Matt. 19:29.
As God's dear people behold the fearful things that are happening, they have reason for great concern. Nations gird themselves for a struggle that will dwarf all previous conflicts. Morals collapse, right is crucified, and wrong sits on every throne. The church systems embrace with affection the mother of harlots, placing in her hand the golden cup that overflows with the blood of the saints and the martyrs of Jesus. Mighty nations seek a savior to deliver them from their problems and are being made ready to shout hosanna to the Antichrist beast, for He who came in His Father's name they have rejected, but he who comes in his own name they will receive.

Though your eyes behold all these things, let not your heart be troubled, for God is never a whit behind in any of His purposes. Even now He is preparing His people for a wonderful change. Flesh and blood shall not inherit the kingdom of God; therefore; this corruptible must put on incorruption and this mortal must put on immortality. When the sevenfold heat of the burning fiery furnace of tribulation is upon the world, the Shadrachs, Meshachs, and Abed-negos will be ready, for He who hath wrought the selfsame thing is God, who has given us the Spirit as a guarantee.

The magnificent wonders portrayed in the twenty-fourth chapter of Luke are about to burst into reality among us. If you will follow the story through with me; you will see what hour it is, for the early morning of the resurrection day is upon us.

Our blessed Lord had been crucified and His blood, all powerful to redeem an entire universe from sin, had been vicariously shed. Men had not taken His life from Him, but He had laid it down as His Father had showed Him. "Into Thy hands I commit My Spirit," He cried, and so saying He yielded up the Spirit to God. With a spear the soldier pierced His side as the scripture had foretold, and from the wound flowed out blood - blood better than the blood of bulls and goats, blood better far than blood of Abel, the blood of the eternal Son of God shed in His death for the life of all the world, blood not only to atone for all sin of all ages and of all people, but blood that by its very nature would purge the consciences of all mankind in the end. and the consciences of all who would believe even now while we yet live. For if the blood of bulls and goats and the ashes of an heifer sprinkling the unclean sanctifieth to the purifying of the flesh, how much more shall the blood of Christ, who through the eternal Spirit offered Himself without spot to God, purge your conscience from dead works to serve the living God. Heb 9:13-15.

Yea, further. He who was crucified has taught us by His Holy Spirit that we should be crucified that we no more live after the world, but after Him who died and rose again for us. "I am crucified with Christ," said Paul. "Nevertheless I live, yet not I but Christ liveth in me, and the life that I now live in the flesh I live by the faith of the Son of God who loved me and gave Himself for me." All who bear within their breasts the hope of resurrection unto eternal life must face with resolve and hope the cross of crucifixion that all who live should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto Him who died for them and rose again.

A great evil among Christians in our day is that they want to live lives that please themselves. They rebel against the chastening rod and squirm beneath the weight of their afflictions. They sing, "There's a cross for everyone, and there's a cross for me," but they do all in their power to rid themselves of it and cast it aside. A cross is of little value in your life if you hate it and see not the power it holds over your old animal life. It is of no value when you spend your days in self-pity, feeling only the pain and the ache, but seeing not the joy that is set before you. Have we so soon forgotten that "He was oppressed and afflicted, yet He opened not His mouth: He was brought as a lamb to the slaughter, and as a sheep before her shearers is dumb, so He opened not His mouth. He was taken from prison and from judgment and who shall declare His generation, for He was cut off out of the land of the living?"

Child of God, destined to sonship, when will we learn that it is only the flesh with its affections and lusts that must be crucified? The old beast nature inherited from our father Adam when he chose to be after the image of beasts rather than after the image of God is the nature that must go to the cross. If you would be possessor of the seven spirits of sonship, then heed this: "Wisdom hath builded her house; she hath hewn out her seven pillars; she hath killed her beasts." Prov. 9:1-2. The seven pillars are the seven spirits. The beasts killed in sacrifice are the beast nature that must die before the seven Spirits of sonship can be manifest in your life.
How our hearts often ache as we see God's people staggering beneath a cross. Fain would we reach forth our hand and lift it from them. We weep in our helplessness, because God has placed their deliverance just beyond our power that the cross may fulfill its work in their lives unhindered by our lack of understanding. Long ago the apostle Paul exulted, "God forbid that I should glory save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom the world is crucified unto me, and I unto the world." Gal. 6:14. But I wonder what cross Paul was talking about? Was it the wooden cross upon which our Savior hung on the skull-shaped hill? No! The cross in which he gloried was the cross the Savior had laid upon him and now in love lays upon you and me. The wooden cross was taken down and cast away lest men should glory in it, as millions now in ignorance do who wear it on chains about their necks but whose weight upon their shoulders they have never borne. It is the cross that Christ in wisdom lays upon us that kills our beast nature and makes us shout in hope with Paul, "Most gladly, therefore, will I glory in my infirmities that the power of Christ may rest upon me. Therefore I take pleasure in infirmities, in reproaches, in necessities, in persecutions, in distresses for Christ's sake, for when I am weak, then am I strong." 1 Cor. 12:9-10.

How sickening it is to hear God's people complain of little discomforts whose lives are loaded with benefits and multiplied blessings are at their fingertips, whose house abound with comfort and convenience and whose bodies are well clad and abundantly nourished - complain that things are not as they want them or not as good as their neighbors. The Spirit of sonship is not in such people and sonship in the coming age will be denied them, for they have not borne the cross that Christ would lay upon them, but have concocted their own cross through their carnal whining and discontent. Cursed and disobedient children are these who forsake the right way and run greedily after the error of Balaam. The cross is much easier to those who bear it than to those who despondently drag it along.

Down from the rugged cross they had taken our Lord and tenderly laid Him in Joseph's new tomb to await the passing of the Sabbath that they might come and embalm His body and with their sad and bitter memories, their dashed and blighted hopes, leave Him embalmed forever in the tomb. Thus, the Sabbath being now past, as it began to dawn toward the first day of the week, very early in the morning before the sun was up, faithful women came with loving hearts and tender hands bringing spices and ointments and many feet of cloth to embalm His body, for He was dead, and who could escape the power of death? What better then could they do than to show their love with this final act? They would embalm the body and thus preserve it in death as long as possible.

The thoughts here are very real, for I am sure we must realize that all who have followed Him in crucifixion have likewise followed Him in death - death to the carnal mind, death to the natural world, death to the lusts of the flesh. While our crucifixion and death is an act of faith, it is none the less real. The results of faith are in the end as real as a literal cross or a literal tomb where the wicked cease their troubling and the weary are at rest.

There is, however, another form of death into which God's people have been brought. It is the awful bondage and cruel slavery in which countless thousands of God's people now find themselves. They are bound with the grave cloths of form and ceremony, tied and throttled in their spirits by the religious systems of men. The liberty they think they have has become a dreadful bondage as they like slaves bow down to the idol of human systems and grovel in the chains of organized religion. This whole system of Babylon is not only a slave camp; it is a dank and musty tomb. Everywhere there is the abominable smell of death. Even the sermons preached by the ministers are in most cases death unto death instead of life unto life, for while they promise them liberty and freedom, they themselves are the servants of corruption, for of whatsoever a man is overcome of the same is he brought into bondage. The whole system of Babylon has become a habitation of devils and of every unclean and hateful bird. Rev. 18:3. Its house is full of doleful creatures; the owls dwell there and the satyrs dance there. It shall never be inhabited, neither shall any dwell there from generation to generation. Cf. Isa. 13:19-22. It is a grave into which God's people have/alienv and in which they have been held in captivity, bound hand and foot as Lazarus was with grave cloths.

So it was that the dear women came with the loving intention to embalm the body of the Savior, wrap it in grave cloths and leave it there forever. But to their amazement the great stone that had been laid against the door of the tomb was rolled away and the tomb stood open before them. They entered in but found not the body of the Lord Jesus. Much perplexed and in great fear they looked about to find what had become of the body, and Mary stood weeping over the dreadful loss. John 20:11-16.

As the Spirit of revelation and understanding floods our minds, we are left without question as to the meaning of all this. It was the body of Jesus they sought within the confining walls of the tomb. Thus the picture as it concerns us today becomes very clear. Did not Paul say, "Now ye are the body of Christ and members in particular?" 1 Cor. 12:27. A strange and unexplainable thing had happened in the tomb. The body was not found where it was thought to be. Suddenly it had gone. The grave cloths lay unruffled upon the floor as though the body had suddenly melted from them, but they found not the body of the Lord Jesus.

My brother and sister, there is a strange thing happening today, for the body of Christ is mysteriously leaving the old tomb in which it has been confined for many centuries. All through the church system all over the religious world good and well-meaning people are perplexed as to why it is that you have suddenly and strangely been taken from their midst. Why is your pew empty now whereas in time past you were always in it? Even you yourself are at a loss to explain what is happening to you, for some unseen power of life from God is forcing you out of the old paths and out of your old ways. The grave cloths are falling from you and you are vanishing, leaving them in the tomb. People write me in their perplexity, wondering what is happening to them. Some even ask if they did right in leaving the old grave of church organization with its stale sameness, its dead programs, and its lifeless sermons. Ah, my friend, return not thither again into death, for the Spirit of life from above has touched you and changed you and given you a longing to be exactly like Him. A resurrection is taking place and men are arising from the dead in preparation for the change. For, behold, I show you a mystery; we shall not all die, but we shall all be changed, and God is now preparing us for that change which will certainly come and none can hinder it.

The God of all comfort who brought our Lord Jesus from the dead will soon comfort your hearts as He did these women, for His two shining messengers, the Spirit and the word, declare that the long night is ending. It is very early in the resurrection morning and a new day is at hand. "Why seek ye the living among the dead," they asked. And how shall we answer that question? I know that many who read these lines are now doing that very thing, but you will not find them there, for God is calling them forth.

Have we not done as they to seek the living among the dead!" Have we not returned time and again to those dead sects and dead denominations to see if we could somehow find the living? Yes, indeed, we have time and time again. We are insistent that there is still life there, persisting that the dead who remain there are still the body of the Lord. We insist that this is the church and that it will be perfected by the operation of the ministries. But it will not! Just as Jesus called, "Lazarus, come forth," so God, our Father, has called to His own body, "Come out of her, My people," and they are coming forth. Many as Lazarus are still bound hand and foot with grave cloths which must be stripped from them, but others, like Jesus, have come forth, leaving the grave cloths in the dark and dreadful tomb that they might walk in newness of life with Him. Why, oh, why do you insist on seeking the living among the dead? Do now as Jesus commanded. Let the dead bury their dead, but follow thou Me!

HE IS NOT HERE

It is hard to convince men of truth when for years their minds have been convinced in an opposite direction. Even the angels who spoke to the women in the tomb could not easily dispel the darkness that hung like a pall over their minds. The stone was rolled away; that was strange. The tomb was open; there could be no mistaking that. The cloths in which the body had been wrapped lay unruffled where His body had been as though He had faded as a mist from their many folds; that was unexplainable. The body was gone; that was certain. And the appearance of the angels in the tomb made them afraid and bow down their heads in fear. But for all this they were not convinced. Even Peter, having looked with amazement upon the scene, departed, wondering in himself. Luke 24:12. "He is not here," the angels assured them, but still they could not believe. It was too strange, too wonderful, too far beyond their grasp. They had come to embalm a dead body but heard instead that He was living. They had come to the only place on earth where the body could certainly be found, but the angels smiled, "He is not here:"
He is not here. He is not here. It is hard to pierce the darkness of men's minds. It was hard for them then to believe that the body was not in the tomb. It is hard for you now to believe that the true body of Christ has been called out from the death and darkness of the tomb of organized religion. It is well nigh impossible for many to believe that it will never be found there any more. Neither will it be found in that hodge-podge mass of unorganized religion, for the life from the dead that is taking place is beyond the reach and power of the conniving minds of men.

He is not here; yet, as a man who has lost a priceless jewel returns again and again to look and search where he has searched before lest in some way he has overlooked it, even so do we, for we believe not that God is doing a work of a magnitude never before known in that He is calling the body of His elect from the tomb and the ears of all who hear it will tingle.

Would God that Christians could be awakened to see what a cursed age we dwell in, to what depths of iniquity we have fallen in our self-seeking and pride, supposing that gain is godliness; and having ears that itch for sensation, we have added teachers who tickle them for us, ungodly men ordained of old unto condemnation.

Disorder and confusion so reign in the hearts of men that our world has become a literal Babel. Nations are in confusion from the president to the peasant and from the throne to the dungeon. The priest and the prophet have erred through the wine of their fornication, and through strong drink are they turned out of the way. They err in vision. They stumble in judgment. All tables are full of vomit and filthiness so that there is no place clean. They are together turned out of the way and there is none righteous, no, not one. The world system and the church system have become so wed that there is no distinction between them, but one is made to complement the other. The hour of wrath is at hand. The four horsemen of the Apocalypse are riding far and wide. The vials of the wrath of God are being placed in the hands of the mighty angels to be poured without dilution upon the earth. The seals are being opened and the trumpets given to the angels to sound. The time of the dead has come and the time for the coming forth from the tomb. Just as there is a crucifixion by faith and a burial by faith, so also there is a rising from the dead by faith. I have no hesitation in saying that our God is calling His people out of the tomb, and all who insist on searching there for the body of Christ will hear these words: "He is not here."

HE IS RISEN

He is risen! He is alive! What staggering words these must have been to the sorrowing women! Were the angels mocking their sorrow to make their grief more terrible to bear? Or was there a ray of hope that this unheard of thing could possibly be true? Behold with what patience the angels exorted them, saying, "Remember how He spake unto you when He was yet in Galilee, saying, 'The Son of man must be delivered into the hands of sinful men and be crucified, and the third day rise again.'" And they remembered His words and returned from the sepulchre and told all things unto the eleven.

There is nothing on earth that will increase your faith and add to your confidence like remembering the word of the Lord. Those who see by the plan of God that all things are working according to His purpose will never be amazed. They will not flounder nor be alarmed. Has not God spoken long ago that all these things must be? Has He not taught us that the leaven would work in the meal until all is leavened! Has He not pictured a condition at the end of the age in which God would spue out of His mouth a people rich and increased in goods and needing nothing, who know not that they are wretched and miserable and poor and blind and naked? Have we not been told long ago of a harlot system, drunken with the blood of saints and the martyrs of Jesus Christ, and of a time when men could neither buy nor sell except they have the mark of the beast? Why then be amazed? Remember ye not that He told us all these things? Remember ye not that John heard the angelic voices proclaiming, "Come out of her. My peopled Why then should we be amazed that even now thousands of people in all walks of life are hearing that call in their inmost spirits and are going forth from the graves in which they have been buried, going forth unto Him without the camp to a new kind of life and a new kind of relationship with Him which they have not known hitherto.

You wonder why it is that there is such a coming out. You may doubt that they are being called of God. But, if you would but believe God's word and remember what He said, you could not help but believe that the present religious system with all its abominations is indeed the Babylon of the book of Revelation, and, if you remembered the word of the Lord, you, too, would come forth and delay not going unto Him without the camp of the world's religious systems which have a name that they live, and are dead, twice dead, plucked up by the roots. Whether we want to believe it or not, there is a company in the world today who are hearing the call of God to come forth. Like the unknown seven thousand in Israel they pass almost unnoticed, refusing to bow to the image of Babylon. They have departed from their darkness and have left the tomb to go forth unto Him.

Yes, indeed. He is risen, and, upon remembering the words of the Lord, all doubt and unbelief must surely pass away. The stirring in the hearts of the people is not the stirring of a coming revival, but the stirring of a resurrection. It is taking place by faith in preparation for the actuality when the mystery of God is finished and corruption puts on incorruption and mortality puts on immortality. This is the hope of the ages, the blessed hope of the Bible. He is risen! He is risen! And we who have died with Him will live together with Him, and there shall be no default in that. The Bible contains more proof of the resurrection of Jesus than it contains either of His birth or of His death. The largest number of witnesses to establish anything in the courts is seven.

An oral will can be established by seven witnesses. The resurrected Jesus was seen of above five hundred brethren at once and by many infallible proofs He showed himself alive after His passion. Mohammed is dead; Buddha is dead; Confucius is dead; but Jesus Christ is alive, and all who believe in Him are transformed by His Spirit which He sent forth when He returned to His Father in heaven. He is risen! He is alive forevermore, and He holds the keys of death and the grave, saying to Hades, "Lift up your heads, oh ye gates, and be ye lifted up, ye everlasting doors, that the king of glory may come in, for even the gates of hell cannot prevail before Him."

IF YE THEN BE RISEN

A rising from the dead is taking place. There is a coming forth from the tomb to a new kind of life and a new kind of experience, which we have not known before. Unto obedient men today Paul is speaking these magnificent words: "If ye then be risen with Christ, seek those things which are above, where Christ sitteth at the right hand of God." There is a spiritual rising with Christ that precedes the literal resurrection. Those who partake of it will find that their affections are being set upon heavenly things and not on things on the earth. This can be your experience here and now in this present world. It is not enough to grasp the truth of this with one hand while holding fast to earthly things with the other. There must be a separation of loves. The love of the earth and the transient things of the natural must fade away and die, and the love of the permanent and eternal must mature and live. From henceforth you are not the same as you once were. You are risen with Christ and share with Him even now the glory and power of heavenly realms.

Our hearts have thrilled to the story of the raising of Lazarus from the dead, and well they might, for Lazarus, not being raised to immortality, was a special type of our spiritual rising with Christ by faith. Lazarus, who was called forth from the smelly tomb, did not rise in incorruption and immortality, but came forth in mortality bound hand and foot with grave cloths, as many still are who by God's power are coming forth from the graves of the deadness and corruption all about us. He had to be loosed and let go, and the death cloths that bound him taken piece by piece from him, as also it has been with us. Perhaps we have wept for joy as we read the story of Lazarus and of Jesus who said, "I am the resurrection and the life," but the story does not end with his deliverance from the grave, for those who are risen with Christ are seated with Him far above all principality and power. Thus it was that six days before the Passover they made a supper in the house of Mary and Martha. Devout Martha had not died nor been raised to life again, so with her, life continued much as usual there, for it is recorded, "And Martha served." Nor had Mary been raised from the dead; therefore she is still found in that place she loved so well at Jesus' feet. But with Lazarus all was changed. He had passed through an experience that raised him to an entirely new realm. He had died, he had been buried, and he had risen with Christ to an entirely new realm and a completely new life; therefore it is clearly said, "But Lazarus was one that sat at the table with Him." John 16:2.

There is a crucified state where we die with Him, but there is also a resurrected life where we live with Him and sit down with Him in heavenly realms. For this reason Paul said, "If ye then be risen with Christ, seek those things which are above, where Christ sitteth at the right hand of the Father. Set your affections on things above and not on things on the earth, for ye have died and your life is hid with Christ in God. When Christ who is our life shall appear, then shall ye also appear with Him in glory." Col. 3:1-4. Our spiritual rising from the dead is a new relationship with Christ. The grave stands between us and our old life. We were crucified through weakness, but we live by the power of God. We are no longer citizens of this world, but now we desire a better country, that is, an heavenly. Wherefore God is not ashamed to be called our God, for He has prepared for us a city.

As the Passover was the beginning of months to the Jews, so the resurrection from the dead is the beginning of days to all who experience its transforming power. Upon the seventh day of the week God completed His work of a natural creation. Upon the first day of the week He completed the work of a spiritual creation in which men rise to walk in newness of life with Him. It is beginning to dawn toward the first day of the week, and many are now casting away the grave cloths of a life enslaved to a dying realm that they might henceforth live on the resurrection side of the tomb in newness of life with Christ. Unclutch your death grip and let loose your grasp on this present realm that your soul may escape as a bird from the snare of the fowler to rise to a new realm where Christ sitteth in "heavenly places".

THE THIRD DAY

Two sad souls with broken hearts journeyed on resurrection day from Jerusalem to the little village of Emmaus. Heavy and disconsolate they talked together of all the things that had happened. But as they journeyed, they were joined by another who, hearing them, asked, "What manner of communications are these which ye have one with another and are sad?" "Art Thou only a stranger and hast not known the things which have come to pass?" they questioned. "What things?" said He. Then they told Him the story of Jesus of Nazareth, a prophet mighty in word and deed, and of how the chief priests and elders of the nation condemned Him to death and crucified Him, and with naked despair they added, "But we trusted that it had been He which should have redeemed Israel." Then, as though a perplexing ray of hope had added new complications to their dilemma, they continued, "And beside all this today is the third day since these things were done, and certain women also of our company made us astonished which were early at the sepulchre, and when they found not His body, they came saying they had seen a vision of angels which said He was alive." Luke 24:13-23.

Beside all this today is the third day. These words have more significance to us today than to any people since those crestfallen ones walked to Emmaus. To us the third day is the kingdom day. You remember how, when Jesus would return to Judea, His disciples warned Him, saying, "Herod will kill you." But He replied, "Go and tell that fox. Behold, I do cures today and tomorrow, and the third day I will be glorified." Luke 13:32. We may say with reverence and truth that the ministry of Jesus on earth consisted of cures. He healed a leper here, a blind man there. He raised a few dead and cast out many devils; but at the end of His ministry there were still millions of sick and the world still lay in the grip of the prince of the power of the air. So also it has been with the church, for a day is with the Lord as a thousand years. During the first thousand years the church wrought only cures - a revival here, a few miracles there - and during the second thousand years likewise it wrought only cures - a few revivals, some souls saved, some bodies healed, even a few raised from the dead, but only cures - and even now at the end of this second day we may well ask, "When the Son of man cometh, will He find faith on the earth?" But the third day is at hand, blessed be God! And in it Christ will be glorified. In the third twenty-four hour day Christ the head was glorified. In the third thousand year day Christ the body will be glorified. Then shall cures end and permanence begin, for all shall know Him from the least to the greatest.

That we are now living in the dying moments of the second day there can be no doubt and it would only be a weariness to start repeating here the multitudinous signs that herald the hour when the trumpet of the Lord shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall all be changed. But even at this very moment there is a kind of firstfruits of the resurrection that are hearing God's voice and coming forth from their bondage to walk in new realms and to live where Christ lives in the Spirit.
Man's journey to the celestial realm will always be punctuated with revelation and repentance, - revelation that we might catch a glimpse of the glories beyond us and repentance that we might attain them. No height of God has ever been manifest without a sovereign revelation from God's infinite mind, and no height in God has ever been attained without the repentance that revelation demanded.

Once we came under conviction of sin. We were in the world and belonged to the realm of the ungodly, but through the sovereign revelation of the Lord we saw ourselves as sinners in His sight. The unveiling of Christ as the Savior of all mankind was a revelation to our darkened hearts. To attain the salvation, which is in Him, we repented of all things of which we were convicted and found rest and peace in Him. We sang the songs of praise and thanksgiving, rejoicing in our new-found joy. Peace like a river attended our way. We sang of happy rest, of joy-bells ringing in our hearts, and of the blessed assurance we had. The songs of redemption echoed among the thousand corridors of our beings and we were always willing to tell of the change that had been wrought since Jesus came into our hearts.

It was not long, however, before revelation and conviction followed again and again. We heard of a Baptism of the Holy Spirit and we met its higher demands that we might receive its cleansing fire. Various demands of sanctification were made of us and we responded with repentance to the conviction they brought us. On and on God has led us throughout our lives bringing light upon light and conviction upon conviction. Repentance followed repentance always consummating in greater victory and greater freedom in Him.

It is a number of years now since the great revelation shone in a blaze of glory and conviction in our hearts. Let us never forget that, though we had been justified by faith and baptized with the Spirit, practically all of our spiritual existence had been lived in the shallows and misery of church tradition, grievous, slavish tradition that had increased in darkness and density from time immemorable. While our spirits sang songs of freedom and liberty, we were bound in chains and fetters of a midnight hour and knew not that we were in prison. It was a happy day, indeed, when by a sovereign act of God light transcending the light of any earthly sun pierced the heavy darkness of our tradition and shone like a searchlight into our gloomy prison cell. We rejoiced in the light and the revelation of God, wondering in ourselves why it was we had walked in darkness so long while thinking we were in bright light. We could not understand how we could have been so bound while thinking we were free. The light of revelation did not stop with one brief searching gleam. It has shone on and on increasing in light and heat as we approach the fullness of the day. Tremendous demands have been made upon us. We have seen institution after institution disappear. We have been called upon to lay aside understanding after understanding, tradition after tradition, doctrine after doctrine, until we wondered at times if there would be anything left of the temple we had built.

One day during the earthly life of our blessed Lord His disciples took Him on a sightseeing tour of the old temple at Jerusalem. They remarked with evident pride, "Master, see what manner of stones are here!" They were proud of the glory of that ancient place of worship, filled as it was by tradition and history of bygone days. They loved and honored it and almost worshipped the ground on which it stood. Never, never, they thought, would anything ever disturb the peaceful rest of this ancient monument of worship. Their minds must have been greatly puzzled and their faces darkened with astonishment when the Master quietly told them, "I tell you there will not be left one stone upon another that shall not be thrown down." As John the Baptist declared, "The axe is laid to the root of the trees," so Christ was foretelling the hurling down of the rocks of their past traditions. The axe was to be laid not the trunk of the trees nor yet to the branches, for then it might have grown again, but the axe was to be laid to the root of the trees that they might never spring up. Never more would the beasts of the earth harbor in their shade or the birds of the air in their branches.

The stones of the temple were not be carefully removed to allow for modification or rebuilding. They were to be thrown down to the ground and carted away as useless, for the end of that era had surely come. However well an institution may have fulfilled a purpose, once God is through with it, it is washed up and finished. It is ready to vanish away. Our prerogative is to go on with the light - not to build again the things that are destroyed lest we become transgressors.

There need be no question in the mind of anyone but that we have come again to the end of an old era and we are standing at the threshold of a new one. The last decade has certainly been filled with wonderful things. Too numerous to mention have been the things God has taught us as we have walked in the light of His ever increasing truth. Our minds have often been staggered by the wonderful things we have seen and heard and our ambitions have been raised as we have looked forward to the promised land of the Spirit and have seen the innumerable and wonderful glories that lie just beyond the veil of the flesh. We are undoubtedly standing at the threshold of a new era in God, a new realm in the Spirit, and a new level of experience. When we come to a time like this, many will refuse to go on. There is some strange thing inherent in all men that makes them desire to exchange their moving tent for a fixed abode. They begin to feel that they have journeyed far enough and that the effort to go on into the new and more wonderful realm is too great a strain. What will I do with all the grand and marvelous things I have grown to love and adore, we ask. The truths we have learned, the government of the churches, the order and discipline, will we have to leave these as an established fact and go on? We would like to be partakers of the more excellent way, but we cannot bear to think that in that way prophecy shall fail, tongues shall cease, and knowledge shall vanish away. We become reluctant to admit that all our prophesying of the past was only in part, all our knowledge was only in part, so we cling to that which is in part and refuse to let the perfect come.

All the institutions of the past have been but a means to an end. In the mind of God they have not been the end itself. It is the body of Christ, which is the end God has in mind. All other things are just a means to bring it about. Once the house is built you dismiss the carpenters, brick-layers, plumbers and electricians and from there on the house itself enters into its ministry of being a home for a family or whatever other purpose was in the mind of the builder. In like manner, once the body of Christ is come to fullness, there must be a passing away of all the gifts and ministries that built it so that the body of Christ itself becomes a ministry to the world and to the universe.

There is a strange and foolish tendency in man to begin to rejoice more in the tools and professions of the trade than in the object we are building. The building is not to create workmen, but the workmen with their gifts are to create a building. The church is not found to create prophets, apostles, evangelists, pastors, teachers, and a multitude of other ministries, but the ministries are created to found or build the church. Once that work is complete, the ministries that have built the body will decrease that the body may increase and become a ministry of life to the entire world. If you will take time to think and meditate about this, you will note that there has always been a tendency to leave off putting the emphasis on the building and to start putting the emphasis on the builders. We have been afraid to complete the building lest we run out of a job until finally we were running the job for the sake of our ministries instead of having our ministries function to complete the job. We get to thinking that the church is for the ministries rather than the ministries for the church. Personally I am not in the least sorry that I am coming to the end of the ministry as I have known it and as it has been known in the past to become a part of that ministering temple that is to fill the whole earth with the light of life. I am not sorry at all that, when that which is perfect is come, all that is in part will be done away. Neither am I sorry that the spectacular gifts calculated to awaken the dead are to give place to the wisdom and knowledge of God that flows as endlessly as the river of life itself.

There was a great deal of difference between the voice that called Lazarus from the tomb and the voice that unfolded the wisdom of God to that same Lazarus as they sat at the supper table some says later. The one was the prophetic voice calculated to call a man from the darkness of the dead. The other was the voice of eternal wisdom and understanding flowing from the mind of God to renew the mind of man. We are now experiencing this very thing. In 1948 God thundered to us by the prophetic voice as we lay sleeping the sleep of death in the denominational cemetery. The thundering, spectacular, prophetic voice was heard and reheard by our dead, dull ears. Startled and trembling we arose from the dead and came forth bound hand and foot with the grave clothes with which tradition had bound us. There were more spectacular prophecies, commands and teachings as we were loosed from one bond after another and let go free. Those spectacular things are fast fading away because their usefulness is nearing fulfillment and the hour is fast approaching when we will live in the realm of the renewed mind.

While our minds have been in the process of being renewed since the day we were called from the grave, yet they are only in the process of being renewed. The day will come when our minds will be influenced no longer by the corroding influences of corruptible flesh, for our minds are becoming one with His mind. The power of the flesh over the mind is fading away and falling off, while the power of the spirit over the mind is increasing and waxing great. While our minds are under the control of our physical senses, our bodies are dying because "they that are in a sensual state cannot please God," (Good-speed), and if we live after the flesh we die. But when our minds are renewed and come under the control of the Christ within, then even our bodies are changed by the renewed mind so that corruption begins to put on incorruption and mortality, immortality. It is only as we are renewed in the mind of Christ that we live forever. I used to think it would be wonderful to go to the cemetery and raise the dead to life. The truth is it would be terrible, for all we would do would be restore their corruptible bodies and inflict upon them the necessity of another funeral. But those who become partakers of the renewed mind partake of the true resurrection, for then the life is in them and they cannot die.

It is difficult for me to see how the act of raising a man from the dead could be called a resurrection at all because the one who was raised would be receiving life from without. But those in whom resurrection dwells are not only raised from the dead, but have life from within so that they can never die. Jesus said, "I am the resurrection and the life." That was because He possessed life within that even death and the tomb could not extinguish. He could only die by laying His life down, but He could live again because death has no power to destroy life that is inherent within. It can only take away life that is borrowed from without.

I cannot say enough nor can I speak too highly nor with greater respect for the things that God has done in the last number of years, but I must admit, and I freely do, that though the things we have seen have been most wonderful, yet we have been seeing through a glass darkly and not face to face. Wonderful though the prophecy has been, it has been all in part and not complete. We are thankful for the spirit of wisdom and knowledge, but we have known only in part and the fullness of perfection has no yet dawned upon us. This partial wisdom has been pointing us with trembling finger to the fullness of the wisdom of God, which belongs to the celestial realm. These feeble prophesysings of the past, many of which have failed, have been but whisperings of a better realm, a better day, and a perfect order. Like breezes blowing over the sea bearing the rich fragrance of another land, so the tiny prophetic winds have born the rich perfume of the celestial realm, stirring our hearts to seek a better country, a land beyond the veil of the flesh. This wisdom and these prophesysings have been useful instruments to point us to the desired haven of the celestial, but in that haven they will be lost in the fullness of perfection. No more shall we know in part, for then we shall know even as we are known. No longer shall prophecy endure in that wonderful realm, for why should that which is partial endure when the fullness of another day has come? Prophecy shall fail; tongues shall cease; whether there be knowledge, it shall vanish away. These things are all in part, but when that which is perfect is come, then that which is in part shall be done away. We are standing at the threshold of the perfect realm, the realm of the Holy of Holies, the realm of the celestial. We are passing from the spiritual to the celestial, from the realm of the soul to the realm of the Spirit, from the Holy Place to the Holy of Holies.

I wish I could say with assurance that all who have come thus far will go the rest of the way and enter into the glory prepared for us from the foundation of the world, but I have no such assurance. Rather I fear that some have already turned aside, having loved too dearly the things that belong to this present age. Our hearts are deceitful and desperately wicked. It is far too easy to put on a false front, refuse to call a spade a spade and face up to things as they really are. Be it far from me to be the instigator of a system of do's and do not's. Doing this and refusing to do that, will not commend us to God in any way. Nevertheless, only a fool would deny that those who have begun to feel the touch of the celestial realm find nothing but repugnance and disgust in the trivial nonsense and humbug that belongs to this age with all its fleshly desires. How can one whose soul has basked in the sunlight of the celestial world and whose feet have wandered in the fields of God enjoy for even a moment the corrupt products of the most carnal minds on earth? I do not believe it can be done. There is something wrong somewhere. An hour of feeding on the husks of the carnal mind causes the soul to be drained of spiritual life. The face of Christ grows strangely dim and prayer loses it power.

The word of God is replete with instance after instance of people who came to the very border of a vast new experience and then turned away because the cost was more than they could bear. Did not Israel fail to enter the Land of Promise through unbelief and turn back from Kadesh-Barnea to die and rot in the wilderness? Did not the two tribes and a half remain on the wilderness side of Jordan instead of going into the Promised Land with their brethren? The parable of the sower and the seed describes with great accuracy how people miss the best things of God, failing on every level to partake fully and enter in. We are told of Demas, who departed from his calling because he loved this present world, and of John Mark, who departed and went not with them to the work. Paul the Apostle warned us of our danger in these words, "Let us therefore fear lest a promise being left us of entering into His rest any of you should seem to come short of it." At this hour we are standing at the threshold of the incorruptible. But mark well the truth of these words! If you sow to the flesh you reap corruption; if you sow to the Spirit you reap life (incorruption). There is no possibility at all of one's partaking of incorruption and of the flesh at the same time. Light has no fellowship with darkness, Christ has no fellowship with Belial, and flesh and spirit are separated by an impassable gulf. The one is carnal and belongs to this age; the other is spirit and belongs to the kingdom. Flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom, neither can corruption inherit incorruption.

Man is a triune being - spirit, soul, and body, or spirit, soul, and flesh. Your soul is your true self. You are a soul. You live in a temple of flesh, a body we call it, and rightly so. Your spirit is like unto the Spirit of God. It came forth from God in the beginning and at death it returns to God who gave it.

1. Your body or flesh is the realm of sense-consciousness.
2. Your soul is the realm of self-consciousness.
3. Your spirit is the realm of God-consciousness.

When your mind is controlled by your body through your physical senses, you have a fleshly mind which is the same thing exactly as a carnal mind. Carnal means fleshly. If on the other hand your mind is controlled by the Spirit, you have a spiritual mind. The result is as follows: to be carnally minded is death. To be spiritually minded is life. If you live after the flesh, you shall die; but if you through the Spirit do mortify the deeds of the body, you shall live.

With a simple knowledge like this we should have no trouble at all in understanding what things belong to the flesh and what things belong to the Spirit. The things that gratify our five physical senses must necessarily belong to the body, and the things that are outside the realm of the body and the fleshly mind must necessarily belong to the realm of the spirit and the spiritual mind.

A man cannot love the Father and the world at the same time. Neither can he walk in the Spirit and walk after the flesh at the same time. The two are diametrically opposed. The one is the antithesis of the other. It is impossible to serve two masters, for you either love the one and hate the other, or you cling to the one and despise the other. It is impossible to serve God and Mammon. (Mammon was the Syrian god of riches and worldliness personified.) Let us consider for a moment why it is impossible to serve God and to serve Mammon. Riches and money belong to this present world system. I do not know of anything that money can buy except things for the use of the physical man - food, clothing, and shelter; things to see, hear, touch, taste, and smell. The more money we have, the more inclined we are to serve Mammon. Benevolent god of the flesh that he is he bestows more and more of his benefits upon those who serve him. Even when money is used for charity, it is still powerless to do more than relieve the physical needs of man. And I am sorry to have to admit that I know of very, very few people who have been brought into the kingdom because they have had physical benefits bestowed upon them. Gifts have a strange way of creating ingratitude. You can never promote spirituality in the poor by giving gifts to them. You may make some progress yourself because of the blessing of liberality, but for the one who receives the gift to receive spiritual life thereby is well nigh impossible.
There was an occasion when Mary poured ointment of great value upon the head of Jesus. The covetous Judas, who always served the god Mammon, criticized the good woman for her deed, saying, "This ointment could have been sold for three hundred pence and the money given to the poor." It sounds good, wise, and charitable. But that is the way our deceitful hearts work. It made Judas look good, gracious, thoughtful for the poor, charitable, and kind. It made Mary look bad, careless, uncharitable to the poor, and wasteful. The truth behind the thing was exactly opposite to what it appeared. Judas cared not for the poor but was thinking of the extra pennies he could have stuffed into his own purse. Mary was anointing the Son of God for the death He was to accomplish for the whole world. Jesus in His great kindness set the situation in its true light. "The poor you have with you always, but Me ye have not always."

If you bestow temporal gifts upon a man, you impoverish yourself and make him your servant, but if you bestow a spiritual virtue upon a man, you enrich him and at the same time enrich yourself, for after you have imparted a virtue such as wisdom or knowledge to anyone, he now has the wisdom you possessed and you still possess it yourself yet in greater measure than before. It is, I think, impossible to impart our knowledge to another without having our own understanding increased. That is when it is more blessed to give than to receive.

It is hard for a rich man to enter the kingdom of heaven because he has too much ability to cater to his flesh. He need not withhold any pleasure from himself. He can have a great deal to eat and he can eat a great deal. He can wear any clothes he wishes: He can live in any kind of lavish circumstances he wishes. He can say to his soul, "Take thine ease, eat, drink, and be merry. Thou hast much goods laid up in store for many years." But he does not know that his love of the flesh has blinded his eyes to the great eternal things. He does not know that to live after the flesh is to die. Neither has he learned that to mortify the deeds of the flesh is to live. It seems to me that the time has come to arouse ourselves out of the complacency into which we have drifted. "Let us therefore fear lest a promise being left us of entering into His rest, any of you should seem to come short of it." Let us lay aside every weight and the besetting sins and get down to patiently running the race that is set before us. Let us look unto Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith, who for the joy that was set before Him endured the cross and despised the shame, and is set down at the right hand of God. The prize, which we seek, is greater than all prizes. All other experiences in God have been but preliminary to the one we are now to enter. It will do us no good to have successfully navigated the rushing rapids of the river if we now allow ourselves to drift complacently in the shallows.

The thing I fear most is the eternal tendency of Christians to settle down in an old established order, or gain one great level of experience and, having fallen in love with it, to remain on that level, content to go on as God moved in the beginning, gathering as a group for worship, singing, praying, prophesying, teaching, and then going home to dinner. / tell you, a new order is with us if we will take God's way. The thing we need to fear is the possibility of a promise being left us of entering into His rest and any of us coming short of it. A promise of rest, a life in the Spirit, has been left us, a promise of the kingdom prepared from the foundation of the world. If we will enter beyond the veil of our own flesh as Christ entered beyond the veil of His flesh, we shall enter into the realm of the renewed mind. Once we come to this desired place, it should be very evident that all the vast amount of ministering that has been used to bring us here will not be needed, but we will walk in a new realm. We will minister to the world on the plane of the renewed mind. The renewed mind will produce a renewed body, and the former things will have become old and useless and will be done away.

To further illustrate what I mean we will take another example from life. When we are children, we are ministered to by our parents in a multitude of ways. Every effort is made by them to bring us to physical and mental maturity. They use playthings, picture books, blocks, textbooks, teaching and correction to produce the kind of man or woman they desire. It would be a foolish parent, indeed, who continued to use these things beyond the realm of their usefulness. When the child becomes mature, all the things that were used to bring about maturity were done away. When we were children, Paul says, we were under tutors and governors till the time appointed by the father, but, when the child comes forth as a full-grown son, all these things are done away. What I mean to show you is this: the ministry we have known in the past is not a permanent thing. The things we have been taught are permanent, but the means of establishing them are not permanent. Reluctance to see this vital point will throw us completely off the track and cause us to end up in the same old merry-go-round into which all denominations have drifted. They all wanted to continue forever the wonderful things God had given them, and when God wanted to make the first things old and give them something new, they would not drink the new wine because, they declared, the old was better. No man having drunk old wine straightway desires new wine, for, he says, the old is better.

Am I not right in saying that the churches of the Reformation died right on the revelation that brought them to life? Is it not true that the old Pentecostal tarry meeting, once attended by such unbelievable glory, is now but a dead empty shell? Its days are over and gone and God has moved on, but the people won't have it so. They must still have their empty shout even if there is never a known result. Is the same not true about the healing meeting? There was a time when God came forth with mighty physical signs healing the sick and performing mighty wonders, but is it not true that the hour for this is past because we are approaching the incorruptible? Yet people will not have it so. They must play with healing meetings. But healing meetings are a thing of the past and they will never return again. Their usefulness has been fulfilled and God has moved on to bring His true church to the realm of the renewed mind where this vile body of our humiliation is transformed to be fashioned after His glorious body. What benefit is there in the healing of the flesh? If we live after the flesh, we only die. But if we through the Spirit put to death the deeds of the flesh, we shall live.

Once the house is built, there is no need of a carpenter. Having established this point in our minds, let us now come to our own special revelation and teaching. God has given special gifts and ministries for the formation of the body of Christ. But take heed to this warning, for it is true. The hour is at hand when all the tools God has given us to build the body are going to be done away, because their usefulness is fulfilled. Prophecy shall be done away, tongues shall cease, knowledge (on our level) shall be done away. Even teaching itself exists no more on the plane of the renewed mind, for you will have no need that any man should teach you. When that which is perfect is come, then all those things that are in part shall be done away. When the body of Christ is complete, there is no need of ministries.

We are indeed at a critical hour. We are no smarter than people who have preceded us. We can make the same mistakes they made. We can settle down now and just keep going the rounds as we have done for the last number of years, and refuse to forsake those things that we might embrace the better things that lie before us. You may say you do not believe it, but the tendency is ever prevalent among us, and I greatly fear lest a promise being left us of entering into His rest any of us should seem to come short of it. The ministering of the outer court is not the ministering of the Holy Place and the ministering of the Holy Place is not the ministering of the Holy of Holies. The methods of denominations are totally useless in this order of the Spirit into which we are now coming, and the methods of this order will be all out of date in the realm of the celestial where we are going. It should be evident to any person that, if such valuable aids as prophecy, tongues and knowledge are to fail, cease and be done away, surely there is no hope at all of retaining the foolishness of preaching. Preaching is almost a thing of the past now. It has been valuable in bringing about the purpose God ordained for it, but, as soon as that purpose is fulfilled, God will discard it immediately and cast it aside. Many will continue to use it after God has discarded it, but that can only be because they have missed the way.

It seems a remarkable thing to me that, after the veil in the temple was rent in twain from the top to the bottom opening the way into the holiest of all, a blind and stupid priesthood patched it together again so that they could continue to use it and keep the old order going. This they did for some forty years after God had signified that He was finished with that order. Finally God used the armies of Titus the Roman to destroy not only the veil of the temple but the temple as well. The same sort of spiritual denseness was evident in the wilderness. Moses had made a serpent of brass and put it on a pole that the Israelites might look unto it and be healed of their serpent bites. But after the plague of serpents was past and gone, Israel preserved the brazen serpent and burned incense to it up to the days of Hezekiah when at last that good king destroyed it. (2 Kings 18:4).

Man has always been reluctant to let go the thing that has been a blessing to him and launch out into the unknown. He fears the unknown and dreads to leave the shelter of the place he has become accustomed to. Man fights to the last breath to stay in this corruptible body, not truly believing that to depart from it and to enter the realm of the Spirit would be much better than remaining in it and having to live after the demands and dictates of corruptible flesh. We sing, "I'm longing to go," but we fight like tigers to stay. We sing, "I'll leave without saying good-bye," but our good-byes are many and tearful.
The day Israel crossed the Red Sea, they were through with the bondage and slavery of Egypt. They ate no more of the garlic and onions of the land nor satisfied their stomachs at the flesh pots. They entered a new realm, an entirely new order. They ate manna that came from heaven and drank water that God gave them, but the very day they crossed over the Jordan River the manna ceased, and the old familiar pillar of fire was gone forever. Even their faithful leader, Moses, was taken from them. The watery veil of Jordan had parted to let them through to a land that had been promised to Abraham some hundreds of years earlier, a land flowing with milk and honey, a land where they would no longer be strangers and wanderers, a land that was their possession.

I seem to hear the voice of Jesus calling us today: "Come, ye blessed of my Father. Inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the ages. I was hungry and ye fed Me, naked and ye clothed Me, sick and in prison and ye visited Me, thirsty and ye gave Me drink." How literally true this is for hungry and thirsty we find Christ's body at the end of this age.

May God grant us wisdom and understanding that we may not fail to enter beyond the veil of our own flesh. It seems very easy to do since God has revealed what the flesh is. To live after the flesh is but to sicken and die. The flesh is so trashy that, once you see what it is, the veil of the flesh falls apart and the glories of the celestial realm open to our amazed vision. The end of all flesh is come before God. Let us not fear to enter the Holiest of all. Let us rather come with boldness beyond that veil of our flesh. The only thing we need fear is "that a promise of entering into His rest being left us, any of us should seem to come short of it."

Let us therefore fear lest, a promise being left us of entering into His rest, any of us should seem to come short of it! I think it is an excellent thing to stand still once in a while and do a little checking to see what progress we are making. Paul once wrote, "Examine yourselves, whether ye be in the faith." It is very possible to hear and hear multiplied wonderful things, make them part of our theology, tell others about them, preach them and write about them, yet never actually set our course to attain the desired haven. There is actually nothing in the universe that can hinder you from attaining the desired haven of sonship providing your heart is fixed and set on attaining the goal. It matters not how many winds of fate blow against your frail bark. The final destination depends on the set of your sail.

In Acts 27:13 it is said, "And when the south wind blew softly, they thought they had attained their purpose." Isn't that just like us all? When the south wind blows, we think all is well, but when the contrary winds blow, we are in dread and fear and we think God has forgotten us and had hidden Himself, leaving us to face the tempest all alone. But not so; He is always there. The winds were contrary that night on the Sea of Galilee (Matt. 14:24) when the disciples despaired of life as a mighty tempest roared upon them, but through the tempest came the Son of God making each billow a highway for His blessed feet and manifesting forth His glory in a way that would have been utterly impossible were it not for the contrary wind.

Paul's journey to Rome was beset by contrary winds (Acts 27:4). It was contrary wind that landed him on the Island of Crete, and it was his landing on this same island that heralded a revival that turned many heathen to Christ. It was a contrary wind that blew the rebellious Jonah into the center of God's will making him a submissive and useful servant of the Lord. If the weather had been calm, he would have sailed happily to Tarshish far from the mind and will of God. But because the winds were contrary, he found himself returned as it were from the dead, proclaiming mighty anathemas against a wicked city, and, because of the power of his message, he saw one hundred twenty thousand souls in forty days turn unto the Lord. I suppose he hated the wind while it blew and thought God was dealing harshly with him, but today he shines as a glorious sign of the resurrection and the wonderful deliverance from hell and the grave through the goodness and mercy of God. "Salvation is of the Lord," he proclaimed, and how thankful I am today that it is of the Lord and none other. Salvation is of the Lord, not only for Jonah, but for you and me and the whole world besides.

Contrary winds of cruelty and hate took Joseph to Egypt to be sold into slavery that he might become the wise deliverer of two nations of people. Contrary winds of famine and death drove Jacob and his sons to Egypt to find refuge and hope in that land of plenty, "all these things are against me," wept poor distraught Jacob. But they were really all for him, and had he known God as Paul did years later, he would have proclaimed, "All things work together for good to those who love God, to those who are called according to His purpose." Contrary winds of suffering and desperate illness blew upon poor Job until in his bitter distress and frustration he cursed the day he was born, but ere the wind had ceased his joyful lips were proclaiming, "I have heard of Thee with the hearing of the ear, but now mine eye seeth Thee..." Oh, the value of contrary winds.

Do you realize, my brother and sister that God is more interested in your spiritual welfare than you could ever hope to be? It often appears that God is not concerned. It seems that you are walking alone, but the truth is that He never leaves you and He never forsakes you.

It is a most unfortunate thing that many people have been led to believe that for a Christian to suffer tribulation of one sort or another is sure evidence of the displeasure of the Lord. How often the sick have been told that their suffering was a sign of God's displeasure, and how often those who enjoy good health have taken it to be certain evidence of the pleasure of God toward them. Why have we so often reversed the truth? Is not the exact opposite of this more often the truth? Have you never read that "whom the Lord loveth He chasteneth and scourgeth every son whom He receiveth?" And again, have we never read, "If ye be without chastisement whereof all are partakers, then are ye bastards and not sons?" These scripture plainly teach that those people who have set their faces toward the goal of sonship are in for a rough voyage. They will have chastisement, trials, tribulation, affliction, persecution, reverses, sickness and misunderstanding. They will know what it is to be rejected. They will hear their good evil spoken of. They will know what it is to be despised by those who should love them, and to be scorned and set at naught by their brethren. They will know lonesomeness and experience fear within and without. They will know what it is to be betrayed by their familiar friends, but fear none of these things, for they are absolutely necessary to your sonship.

It is the trial of your faith that worketh patience. You do not possess the wonderful virtue of patience just by kneeling down and asking God to give it to you. You become a possessor of patience by having your faith tried and crushed, and tried and crushed again and again. You receive it by seeing your prayers go unanswered and your hopes deferred until your heart is weary and sick with longing. It is in the midst of such tribulation that the Spirit whispers, "The Lord is good to them that wait for Him, to the soul that seeketh Him. It is good that a man should both hope and quietly wait for the salvation of the Lord. It is good for a man that he bear the yoke in his youth. He sitteth alone and keepeth silence because he hath borne it upon him. He putteth his mouth in the dust; if so be that there may be hope, he giveth his cheek to him that smiteth him; he is filled with reproach. For the Lord will not cast off forever; but though He cause grief, yet will He have compassion according to the multitude of His tender mercies." Lam. 3:26-32.

What wonderful perfection of truth is contained in these words, "Let patience have her perfect work that ye may be perfect and entire, wanting nothing." Here is a whole world of truth compressed into one line and we seem to have missed it altogether. If patience has her perfect work, we will be both perfect and entire, and wanting nothing. How different that is from the words spoken to Belghazzar long ago, "Thou art weighed in the balance and found wanting".

The writer of the book of Hebrews was dealing with a people beset by difficulty like our own, a people who had caught a glimpse of "better things", but a people who were continually falling back because they could not let go their ancient traditions. As sheep return to their folds, so these people returned again and again to their forms and ceremonies and all their ancient Hebrew tradition. My own soul often grows weary as I read inspiring letters from people who are tasting the good things of God and the powers of the age to come, but who in the end insist on dragging in the doctrines, the forms and the ceremonies that have been our lot for centuries. They try so hard to find room in this new realm for gifts and ministries, baptisms and laying on of hands, church membership and program. They cannot understand that these are the things that are in part only, belonging to an imperfect age, but that an age of perfection is at hand. The emphasis is no longer on doing, but on being. It is no longer on miraculous gifts, but on sonship; no longer on the dispensation of grace, but on the dispensation of the kingdom of God.

There remaineth a rest for the people of God, and he who has entered into His rest has ceased from his own labor as God ceased from His. Heb. 4:9-10. Because the apostle saw that many of the Hebrew Christians were being hindered by their former ways of religious life and were failing to enter into the better things of the new realm, he rebuked and chided the people with longing and hope that they – would forget the things behind and lay hold of the things which were before them. "Let us therefore fear lest, a promise being left us of entering into His rest, any of you should seem to come short of it. For unto us was the gospel preached, as well as unto them..." Heb. 4:1-2. And again, "Let us labor therefore to enter into that rest, lest any man fall after the same example of unbelief," Verse 11. Laboring to enter into rest may seem a strange paradox, but when one realizes the strangle hold church tradition has upon the people of God, we can well see that our greatest labor will be in delivering ourselves from the bondage and strangulation of our own traditions. It was with a measure of shock that I read this note in my diary, written forty years ago, "I am frustrated by the fetters of organization and bound by the blindness of visionless leaders." It has taken a lifetime of labor and great revelation of the Spirit of God to deliver my soul as a bird from the snare of the fowler and to break the bondage of man's opinions.

It takes a lifetime to "deliver them who were all their lifetime subject to bondage." It was Mark Twain who said, "Loyalty to a petrified opinion never broke a chain nor freed a human soul." Oh, that God's people in this tremendous hour would seek to come to the unity and oneness with Christ that only sons of God can know! Then would their chains of tradition fall off and their cruel bondage and servitude cease.

"Therefore, leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on to perfection." It is impossible to go on to the perfection of sonship until we leave the principles behind. Baptisms, repentance, laying on of hands and spiritual gifts are first principles, the very kindergarten of Christian experience. We should long ago have passed beyond them to the more excellent way. Well do we remember our first day at school when the teacher began to instill upon our childish minds the first principles of our education? We were taught the names of the letters of the alphabet and the sound that each letter made. We learned to put two or three letters together to make little words and that if three crows sat on a tree and one flew away only two were left. And so the lesson went until we were ready to leave the principles of our education and go on to something higher up. How much progress would we have made had the second year been naught but a repetition of the first year and the third year but a repetition of the second? We would never have been ready for college if we had stayed in grade one. Yet this is exactly what the church system does continually. Year after year, decade after decade, we hear a tedious repetition of age-old topics until our minds are filled with petrified opinions that become chains and prison bars to all spiritual progress. When we ought to be teachers, we have need that one teach us the first principles of the oracles of God, and are become such as have need of milk and not of strong meat. For everyone that useth milk is unskillful in the word of righteousness; for he is a babe. Heb. 5:12-13.

In the wonderful but little understood book of Ezekiel the flight is ever upward. Whithersoever the spirit went, the wheels went, and all activity depended upon the spirit that was in the wheels. Ezek. 1:16-20. What was the story of the Exodus but the story of the liberation of the redeemed, the liberation from bondage, flesh pots and traditions? But they, being terrified of the unknown wilderness, in their hearts turned back to Egypt. Be not like them who at the very gates of Paradise turned back in unbelief, but let us go on to perfection.

CHRIST THE INCORRUPTIBLE SEED

A little seed lay in the ground
And soon began to sprout.
"Now which of all the flowers around,
It mused, "shall I turn out?
The lily's face is fair and proud,
But just a trifle cold;
The rose, I think, is rather loud,
And then, her fashion's old.
The violet is all very well,
But not the flower I'd choose;
Nor yet the canterbury bell;
I never cared for blues."
And so it criticized each flower,
This supercilious seed,
Till it awoke one summer hour
And found itself a weed.

Probably this little verse will bring an amused smile to all who read it, but if you give yourself time for mature thought and meditation upon the message it carries, you may find your mind wandering over the hills of memory far back into the distant past. Perhaps your unwilling memory will hear again for one brief moment the cruel and bitter criticism that fell from the lips of God's people as they worked themselves into disquiet and agitation over the faults and shortcomings of other Christians. You may perchance remember the days when you yourself wasted your precious time preaching sermons on dress and outward show and many other things which in the final analysis have nothing whatsoever to do with the inner man of the heart, but only garnish the outward appearance of a sepulcher that is full of dead men's bones. When meditating upon the worthlessness of the filthy rags of outward reform, one cannot but remember with sadness how pitifully often those who spent their time criticizing others about such things eventually ended their own lives more like noxious weeds than beautiful flowers in the garden of God, and only God can know in how many instances they ended their lives without any true faith or grip upon the eternal things that in God's sight are of great importance.

My true purpose, however, in quoting the verse above is that we may remember the unalterable and indisputable fact that, of whatsoever sort a seed is as it lies in the ground, of that same kind will it also be when it comes to maturity, and when the harvest ripens and the new seed appears in the ear, it will be of the same sort and variety that lay in the ground at the beginning. Nothing can possibly alter this immutable law. It is just as definite and indisputable as any of the divine laws of God's great universe. Far, far back in the beginning of visible things the edict fell from the lips of God, all-wise, almighty, and immutable, that kind MUST produce after its own kind.

In these the closing days of the dispensation of grace we find ourselves living in an hour of sacred and unbelievable importance, for God is preparing His glorious sons for their manifestation. The sonship message seems to permeate the very air we breathe till Christians who never before were awakened to its truth are beginning to long for sonship and to look with a groaning creation for the manifestation of the sons of God. Well may our hearts rejoice for this awakening and may the lines that follow on these pages provoke us to thoughtful prayer and meditation, because many people glibly talk of sonship while having no real knowledge of the truth of the message, nor any understanding of its sacred glory.

For many years I have become more and more aware that Satan has a most abominable and obnoxious way of endeavoring to make commonplace the wonderful things of God until the holy and sublime revelations that would make angels tremble are held in less esteem by preachers and people than the common earth and dust upon which they daily tread. Familiarity always breeds contempt and nowhere does it breed faster than among religious men who grab and grasp after the things of God, having no knowledge of their greatness nor of the eternal price which Jesus Christ paid that they might become ours. As Moses in ignorance approached the burning bush, so in impiety do these approach. The irreverence, impiety and lip-devotion of which I speak is the dreadful, miry bog into which the preachers of Babylon have dragged the sacred truths concerning the gifts of the Spirit. They claim gifts and publish miracles and healings, seldom because they have a compassion for the sick or because they want a true manifestation of spiritual gifts, but because men and women today are so body conscious and fleshly minded that they would turn themselves inside out if they could get rid of their sickness and enjoy physical well-being, while many other proud and unconsecrated souls would love to possess a spiritual gift to flout before the eyes of a gullible public. Cursed be the spirit of Balaam that makes merchandise of the things of God and would willingly make use of a spiritual gift in the hope of some temporal gain!

Only recently the newspapers carried this advertisement for one of Babylon's preachers: "Come and see Reverend . . . demonstrate the gifts of the Holy Spirit!" Accompanying this impious humbug was his bold-faced picture, mouth open as usual, and holding a microphone in his hand. I do not say these things from mere personal bitterness, but let it be thoroughly known to all who read these pages that such as this is not the way to sonship. It has nothing whatsoever in common with the sonship message and it not the way of Christ.

During the last few weeks the Spirit of God has impressed my mind with the fearful reality and truth, which I now tell you. In the days of Elijah there were eight hundred fifty prophets of Baal in Israel. The whole nation was steeped in the rottenness of Baal worship and given over to it. The Spirit of God has already witnessed regarding our days, saying, "Behold, I send Elijah before the great and terrible day of the Lord." Whether the Elijah spoken of here is one or a company of men I am not in a position to say, but I know that he is coming, and, when he comes, he will bring these modern prophets of Baal into the most terrible judgment. Their miserable craftiness and sleight of hand will be over, for it will be proved before the eyes of all the people that these fakers had no power to call down God's fire on any sacrifice, nor had they the true manifestation of spiritual gifts.

The days in which we live are far more perilous than any among us even dare to think. The darkness that covers the earth and the gross darkness that fills the minds of the people have deceived all men so that they readily believe that wrong is right, Belial is Christ, false gifts are true gifts, that false prophets who stand in the pulpits are the servants of the Lord and that the false corrupt thing which calls itself the church is actually the bride of Christ. But the day is not far off when the dreadful error of these things will be revealed. Even at this moment in the deserts and lonely places of the earth God is preparing His beloved sons who will be in the deserts until their showing unto Israel.

Let us flee as far as we can from the awful spirit that possessed Simon the sorcerer, who seeing that by the laying on of the hands of the apostles the Holy Spirit was given, offered them money that he might also be given this power, that upon whomsoever he laid his hands they might receive the Holy Spirit. But Peter, looking upon him with indignation and disdain, being full of the Holy Ghost, said, "Thy money perish with thee, because thou hast thought the gift of God may be purchased with money. Thou hast neither part nor lot in this matter: for thy heart is not right in the sight of God. Repent therefore of this thy wickedness, and pray God, if perchance the thought of thine heart may be forgiven thee. For I perceive that thou art in the gall of bitterness, and in the bond of iniquity." Acts 8:18-23. It is a fearful thing to desire any gift of God in the hope of personal gain or exaltation. Should many of these money-hungry prophets of modern Baal come into the presence of any genuine spiritual gifts, they would either repent of their wickedness, as Simon the sorcerer did, or fall dead in their sins as did Ananias and Sapphira.

We speak not inadvisedly nor loosely when we affirm that we are living in dangerous and terrible days. Of what more dreadful hour could you conceive than an hour when the sacred and holy things are cast as precious jewels in the swine pen of fleshly manifestation, when every modern Uzzah is putting forth his hand to steady the ark of God, (2 Sam. 6:6,7), and every Philistine is lightly lifting the mercy seat to peer with uncircumsised eyes into the ark of the Lord, (1 Sam:6:19), when every Nadab and Abihu is offering their strange fire, (Num. 3:4), and the sons of Sceva who know not Christ are crying over him that is possessed of the devil, "We adjure you by Jesus whom Paul preaches that you come out of him." Acts 19:14. Why halt between two opinions? If God is God, then serve Him. Turn now from these vanities, for it is time to seek the Lord and be known of Him. Let us steadfastly refuse to associate ourselves with that crowd whose hearts and motives, though unclean in God's sight, continually take refuge in their supposed signs and wonders as though already saying, "Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in Thy name? and in Thy name have cast out devils? And in Thy name have done many wonderful works?" God has plainly declared He will say unto these, "I never knew you; depart from Me, ye that work iniquity." Mat. 7:23.

Darkness now covers the earth and gross darkness the hearts of the people. They do not know what makes them stumble. The situation in the world and in the professing church system is far more serious than any of us care to think. The world has become possessed with a reprobate mind until it is exceedingly corrupt and filled with terrible violence. So corrupt has it become that wisdom and sanity have fled from the earth. Worse still, the people of God are allowing themselves to be swallowed up by greed and confusion, hiding Babylon's goodly garment, not in their tents, but in their hearts. It is time for those who would know God to find a place of stillness before Him that their lives may be disentangled and rescued from the mass of unspiritual corruption into which countless millions have now fallen. The antichrist spirit is engulfing the whole earth, that all mankind should worship the beast and give honor to him.

Before the Spirit of the Lord can lead us into the fathomless depths of His eternal purpose, it becomes necessary that we be brought face to face with the present hopelessness of our own condition. It was for this very reason that the inspired writers of the scripture, while always extolling the goodness, mercy and loving kindness of God, never failed in all their writings to vividly portray the picture of human depravity and the
When the truth of the absolute necessity of the new birth dawns like a ray of sunlight upon the heart of the self-righteous man, he counts all his righteousnesses as filthy rags and flees away to God that Christ may be born within him. The reason men remain a lifetime in sin is because the sinfulness of sin has never been made real to them. Unto the church of Laodicea it was written: "Because thou sayest, I am rich, and increased with goods, and have need of nothing; and knowest not that thou art wretched and miserable and poor and blind and naked, I counsel thee to buy of Me gold tried in the fire, that thou mayest be rich..." Rev. 3:17, 18. It is hard to tell a rich man that he is poverty stricken. It is almost impossible to disturb the composure of one who thinks he has need of nothing, who never surmises for a moment that he is miserable and wretched, poor and blind and naked. Yet such is the condition throughout the world and the entire realm of professing Christendom. I well remember a precious old lady who, having grown hard of hearing, imagined that her family intentionally spoke in subdued tones so that she would not hear their conversation, but, when after much difficulty she was persuaded to go to the doctor to have her ears washed out, then she wondered why everyone in the house was shouting so. That is just the way God's people are in this the hour of Laodicea. They are blind but think they can see perfectly. They have grown deaf to the true voice of God, yet they are positive there is nothing wrong with their hearing. They are full of religion and talk loudly of signs and wonders, but do not know that they are lukewarm in their love and relationship to God. Their works abound on every hand, but they are unaware that God has neither sent them nor required these labors of them. It is time, oh, child of God, to seek the quiet of the wilderness where every voice of man is hushed and no one has opportunity to speak but God.

Long ago the prophet Elijah had fled to a cave in Horeb. He had become an exceedingly unpopular man in Israel, for he had slain eight hundred and fifty of the prophets of Baal. He had proved that the Lord was God before both King Ahab and all the ten tribes of the house of Israel, but now the harlotish queen Jezebel, full of rage and devilish fury, was after his head, his life, and his blood. "So let the gods do to me, and more also," said she, "if I make not thy life as the life of one of them by tomorrow about this time." 1 Kings 19:1. So Elijah had fled to Horeb. Now Horeb is called the mount of God. 1 Kings 19:8. Perhaps those who glibly talk of Elijah's sagging faith have forgotten that it was in this very Horeb that Moses stood before the burning bush as he kept the flock of his father-in-law, Jethro, in the desert. Ex. 3:1. And it was to this very place, this mount of God, that Moses had led the children of Israel. Here they murmured for lack of water, and here in Horeb he smote the rock and living water for all the hosts gushed forth in abundant supply. Ex. 17:6. It was at Horeb, the mount of God, that the Lord spoke face to face with the people out of the heavenly fire as Moses stood between them and the Lord. Deut. 5:2-5. Many other wonderful things transpired at Horeb, because Horeb was the mount of God. If we should be inclined to speak of Elijah's lack of faith in fleeing from the wicked Jezebel as so many are prone to do, let us remember that it is not his fleeing from Jezebel that needs to be emphasized. The thing of importance is that he was fleeing to the mount of God. How precious in the eyes of the Lord it would be today if thousands more like Elijah would flee from the harlot Babylon, who seeks their very spiritual life to take it away, and in fleeing from her would be found fleeing to the lonesomeness of the mountain of God!

So Elijah fled across that great desert of Sinai, which in our time has echoed the doleful tunes of war so recently, and, coming to Horeb, the mount of God, after forty days without the food of men, he sank down in a cave and lodged there. Then the Lord said to him, "What doest thou here, Elijah?" Do not think, my brother, that God was rebuking His son. Would God that all of you who read these lines would flee to His lonely mountain, and would God also that you, as Elijah, would flee because of your knowledge that, as Jezebel the harlotish queen sought his life, so the harlot of Babylon is seeking your life, draining you of revelation and spiritual understanding, throwing down the sacred altars and trampling underfoot the things that pertain to life and godliness. Come, my brother, alone to the mountain of God. What place have you with the harlot and her prophets? Come where you will hear God speak to you as He spoke to Elijah in the long ago; for there is a place where He dwells, but you will never find it amid Babel's confusion of fire and earthquakes and wind, exciting and tempting as all these things may be. We must flee from it all if would hear God's voice and learn His will.

"And He said, Go forth and stand upon the mount before the Lord. And, behold, the Lord passed by, and a great and strong wind rent the mountains, and brake in pieces the rocks before the Lord; but the Lord was not in the wind; and after the wind an earthquake; but the Lord was not in the earthquake; and after the earthquake a fire; but the Lord was not in the fire; and after the fire a still small voice. And it was so, when Elijah heard it, that he wrapped his face in his mantle, and went out, and stood in the entering in of the cave. And, behold, there came a voice unto him, and said, What doest thou here, Elijah?" 1 Kings 19:11-13. It was here in the mount of God at Horeb that Elijah received the greatest revelation of his life. Here it was that final preparations were made for his departure from this earth. Hazael was to be anointed king of Syria, Elisha was to be anointed prophet in his stead, and he himself was to be caught up to heaven in a whirlwind to be numbered among the blessed few of whom it could be said, "He was not, for God took him."

I write these things because I know it is impossible for men to receive the transforming message of sonship until they have left the noise of Babylon with all its flimsy surface teaching. The church system has gone a whoring after the spectacular. The corrupt phrase, "food, fun and fellowship", bespeaks the mind of a system whose people walk after the flesh. Breakfasts and banquets are made a prominent part of the system and without their fleshly attraction the thing would fall apart. Surely these are the things to which Peter referred when he spoke of "revelings, banqueting, and abominable idolatries." 1 Pet. 4:3. And lest you who walk God's way should be caused to wonder at your lonely estate, he is quick to add this comfort: "Wherein they think it strange that ye run not with them to the same excess of riot, speaking evil of you." Verse 4. Seeing then we have cleansed ourselves from the bondage of corruption and useless tradition, and have fled to our Horeb, the mount of God, let us open our ears to the voice of the Lord as He reveals His transforming message to our hearts.

At the beginning of this article we pointed out that of what kind the seed is as it lies in the ground will determine what the seed is in the harvest, whether it be wheat, or barley, or some other kind. Nothing can possibly alter this divine decree. Corruption cannot inherit incorruption, mortality cannot inherit immortality, neither can flesh and blood inherit the kingdom of God. If we through labor and travail and endless years of ascetic severity are going to try to fashion the corruptible after the incorruptible, we will find to our consternation in the end that we are just the same as we were in the beginning. The leopard cannot change his spots, and, even if he could, his offspring would still be a leopard with spots. The Ethiopian cannot change his skin, and, even if he could, his offspring would still be the same color as he is. It is well nigh impossible to tell the difference between a turnip and a rutabaga seed, yet if you mix a pound of each together and cast them into the ground, each tiny seed will unerringly produce its own kind.

How then can we who are born in sin and shapen in iniquity, being by nature the children of wrath, ever hope to become the sons of God? Such a hope as this certainly demands something far more than the worthlessness of self-reformation. If sonship is, indeed, the hope of all creation and if our sonship in Christ is the hope and design of God Himself, then there must be some very definite and unfailing way by which God produces sons in the very image and likeness of Christ. There is a way, blessed be God! There is nothing complicated about it. It is as simple as life itself, as simple as growth or ripening or maturity. Though life is simple, it is simple only to God, for none but He can ever produce it. Man cannot now, and never under any circumstance will he be able to produce even the simplest form of life. God has reserved the realm of life Himself.

There are many things which our spirits know though it seems we know them not, for the veil of the flesh has hidden them from our eyes, but, if we were taught them by another, we would recognize their truth at once, for the babe of truth would go leaping in the womb of our spirit and we would say, and truthfully, too, that we knew it all the time. But a truth is never a truth to the heart until the Spirit of God draws aside the curtain and shines His light into the dark recesses of the understanding. Then and only then does the heart stand still or go, perchance, to leaping for the wonder of the revelation that has burst upon it from the presence of the Lord. The disciples who walked to Emmaus had talked for several hours with Jesus. Their hearts had burned within them as He opened the scripture and, beginning with Moses and all the prophets, expounded unto them all the things concerning Himself; but, though their hearts burned within them, they knew not who their strange guest really was. But, when He blessed the bread and broke it, their eyes were opened, and they knew Him. This is the way revelation and understanding comes to your heart. Christ blesses the bread of life and breaks it to you. Then the eyes of your understanding are opened. Then you know that all the while you had been standing in the presence of life and God and truth though you knew it not. It is like shining a strong searchlight into the darkness of a cave or pressing the light switch in the darkness to find yourself standing in a room that is flooded with light and full of precious jewels. Jacob, who lay with his head on a pillow of stone, awoke in dread from his vision, saying, "Surely God is in this place and I knew it not." This is a revelation so essential to us all.

As I waited before God, the infinite and hidden truths of sonship began to be opened before the eyes of my understanding. I had been praying and making requests before God when suddenly my words ceased in the midst of my prayer, for I beheld a truth face to face which, if known before, had not been revealed to me, but which now came alive and was quickened as never before by His Holy Spirit. The Spirit of God in His own inimitable way had shone His light of revelation on these inspired words from the pen of the apostle Peter: "Being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God, which liveth and abideth forever." 1 Pet. 1:23. If in the wisdom of God we can sound the fathomless depths of truth that filled the apostle's inspired mind when he wrote these words, I believe we shall have in our possession the explanation of many things that have remained secret and have been hidden from our understanding for centuries. If the Spirit of God will give us understanding concerning this incorruptible seed, then we will also understand what Paul meant when he proclaimed that Christ in us is the hope of glory. Then, too, we will discern as never before why it is that if any man be in Christ, he is a new creation. Then we will know the meaning of Paul's words when he spoke of the hidden man of the heart, and we will know as never before how literal is the truth, "It is God that worketh in us both to will and to do His good pleasure." Phil. 2:13.

In this passage of scripture (1 Pet. 1:23) so full of meaning Peter has told us the deepest and most profound truth concerning our sonship in these strange, remarkable words of inspiration: "Being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word (Logos) of God that liveth and abideth forever." Have you wondered what it is that really and actually takes place in that blessed hour of the new birth? The simple yet infinitely wonderful truth is this: God by His Spirit actually plants the Christ seed in the believer's heart. That seed is incorruptible and indestructible. It cannot die. It is the Logos, the Christ that lives and abides forever. Thus at the very moment of the new birth the incorruptible seed, the living word, the Logos, the Christ, is implanted in the believer's heart, and from that moment on it grows and grows and develops and develops until its life consumes his old self completely. The process and growth of the incorruptible seed continues until he can say literally and in absolute truth, "It is not I, but Christ." In all my life I have not seen a more glorious truth than this! In the light of it all else fades into insignificance and nothingness. For centuries we have been like the inhabitants of Bethlehem who, though Christ was born among them, knew it not.

All natural things have spiritual counterparts. There is the living word, the written word, and the created word. Thus all things created by God, (and all things were created by God), though they be but natural things in a temporal world, shout out their spiritual truth. Paul wrote, "The invisible things of Him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even His eternal power and Godhead, so that they are without excuse." Rom. 1:20. The long journeyings of the children of Israel in the wilderness, together with their trials and wars in Canaan, were "ensamples unto us upon whom the ends of the ages are come." 1 Cor. 10:11.

Since then these things cannot be spoken against, much less denied, our minds would be extremely dull should we now be unable to see a likeness between our natural birth in the flesh and our new birth in the Spirit. Who among those who read these lines is so ignorant of the simple facts of life that he does not know that in the order of natural generation it is when the male seed is placed in the female's womb that a new life begins, a new man, a new person*. Yes, a new creation is begun then and there. Who among us does not know that the implanted seed grows and grows and develops until it becomes a new human being in the image of his parents; and who among us does not know that one day after a certain length of time there is an unveiling when new life, yes, that new person, who until now was completely hidden by his mother's flesh, shall be unveiled and made manifest. This simple story of human birth is not only known to us all, but it has been experienced by us all, though at the time in our embryo state we knew absolutely nothing of it. We only learned it when the story was complete and we were old enough to understand.
We said above that all natural things have spiritual counterparts. It is never good or wise to press all the points in any type, and we should never draw too close a parallel between physical things and spiritual things, yet the lesson is there wide open to our understanding if we will but ask God to help us to see it. It must therefore be impressed upon your spiritual mind, oh believer, that, though that which is born of the flesh is flesh and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit, yet the similarity of what has taken place is too obvious a type and simile to be missed and left unheeded. It was this very truth that filled the inspired mind of Peter when he told us that in our new birth we are not born of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, and that this incorruptible seed was the Logos, the Christ, the Word that was in the beginning, (John 1:1), who created all things and from whom all things everywhere were created.

Let there be, therefore, no doubt in your mind that the word of God spoken of here, which Peter calls incorruptible seed, is the Logos; and the Logos in its truest meaning is none other than Christ, the creator of all. "In the beginning was the Logos (word)," said John, "and the Logos (word) was with God, and the Logos was God." This, my brother, this, my sister, this, oh believer, is the seed that is placed in your heart when you are begotten of Him or when you are born again. And this, oh child of God, is the beginning of the new man, the beginning of the new creation, the birth of the new creation, the hidden man of the heart. This is the very starting point and commencement of your eternal sonship in Him.

How completely shoddy is the error that would encourage men to seek for sonship! You need not seek it, my brother. You need not seek it my sister. It has been implanted in you by the overshadowing glory and power of the Holy Spirit. Sonship is begun. It actually began when you were born of the Spirit. The more, therefore, you will allow your old nature to be a partaker of the cross the more place there will be for the growth and maturity of the new man, the Logos, the Christ in you. This is the hope of glory. I think we now know better than before what Paul meant when in his exultation he declared:
"... though our outward man perish, yet the inward man is renewed day by day." 2 Cor. 4:16. Then continuing the grand exultation in verses 17 and 18, he added this truth: "For our light affliction, which is but for a moment worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory; while we look not at the things which are seen: for the things which are seen are temporal, but the things which are not seen are eternal." The things seen and visible are the things that concern the old you, your former sinful self, but the things which are unseen are the things which concern the glory of that new life which is forming, even the Logos, the new creature, the Christ in you the hope of glory.

There is no story in all the Bible more familiar to our hearts that the story of the virgin birth of Jesus Christ which, according to the inspired account given by the beloved physician Luke, reads thus: "And in the sixth month the angel Gabriel was sent from God unto a city of Galilee, named Nazareth, to a virgin espoused to a man whose name was Joseph, of the house of David; and the virgin's name was Mary. And the angel came in unto her, and said, Hail, thou that art highly favored, the Lord is with thee: blessed art thou among women. And when she saw him, she was troubled at his saying, and cast in her mind what manner of salutation this should be. And the angel said unto her, Fear not, Mary: for thou hast found favor with God. And, behold, thou shalt conceive in thy womb, and bring forth a son, and shall call His name Jesus. He shall be great and shall be called the Son of the Highest: and the Lord God shall give unto Him the throne of His father David: and He shall reign over the house of Jacob forever; and of His kingdom there shall be no end. Then said Mary unto the angel, How shall this be, seeing I know not a man? And the angel answered and said unto her, The Holy Ghost shall come upon thee, and the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee: Therefore also the holy thing which shall be born of thee shall be called the Son of God ... for with God nothing is impossible." Luke 1:26-35, 37.

We have said above that the parallel between the natural birth and the spiritual birth should not be made too close or exacting, but whereas this account is the inspired story of the incarnation that is the birth of Jesus Christ as a man and in the form of flesh, it therefore has a natural element about it; yet, because it is a virgin birth and is completely independent of any human father whatsoever, it is therefore a sign of our own sonship in Him. The heart of the young virgin must have bounded for joy at the message that God's Son Jesus Christ, the promised Messiah, would be born through her, but her understanding of how God could accomplish such a wonderful thing in her virginity was as dark and limited as is our understanding as we search to know how that promised hope of sonship can ever be realized or accomplished in us. We long for sonship, 'tis true. Our hearts ache to be able to say, "It is no more I but Christ that liveth in me", but how this intrinsic glory is to be accomplished we seem never to grasp. In our ignorance and blindness we grope about trying to do all manner of things in the futile hope that by our mighty works we will prove ourselves sons of God; but all in vain. Oh, what ignorance some men leach - that through miracles and spiritual gifts we shall attain to sonship in Him!

Truth can only be found when we diligently inquire of Him. Thus it was that, when the young virgin heard the glad news that God's Son should be born of her, she inquired with all sincerity, "How shall this be, seeing I know not a man?" To this the angel answered, "The Holy Spirit shall come upon thee and the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee; therefore that holy thing which shall be born of thee shall be called the Son of God." Luke 1:35. Child of God, can you not plainly see that it was the overshadowing of the Holy Spirit that implanted the Christ seed in the womb of the Virgin Mary that she by divine conception might bring forth the Son of God in flesh and blood? Does it then seem strange in the least or impossible to you who look for sonship in Him to hear that the same Holy Spirit who overshadowed the virgin long ago, placing in her womb the Christ seed that He might be born of flesh and blood, should now again in this the end of the age overshadow you to place in your heart the incorruptible seed, the Logos, that liveth and abideth forever? But the Christ seed in you shall never be separated from you as the Christ-child was separated from the virgin. He shall live and abide forever, coming to such spiritual maturity in you that you shall say at last, "It is not I, but Christ, and the life I now live in the flesh, I live by the faith of the Son of God who loved me and gave Himself for me." These things are indeed no preposterous myth nor have we lost our reason in the glory of them. These are words of truth and soberness. Believing, then, that the incorruptible seed of Christ, God's Son, was sown in our hearts when we believed on Him, we have but to yield ourselves to God, gladly embracing His cross where death to self is accomplished that all that is old may die and we might live together with Him.

It is not for me to know who shall believe or disbelieve these precious truths, but let all who be of faith assuredly know that the moment your soul embraces the indisputable fact that you are born of the incorruptible seed of Christ, the Logos of God, your whole understanding of sonship will undergo a change and be enlarged and enlightened. Henceforth it is Christ in you that is the hope of glory. It is not Christ in heaven, Christ in the world, or Christ in the virgin, but, wonder of wonders, the incorruptible seed has been placed in you, there to mature into full sonship until the measure of the stature of Christ is attained.

The price which the all-wise God paid for such fullness of redemption as we have in Him was not an insignificant price of corruptible things such as silver and gold. Because our heavenly Father was preparing incorruptible things for incorruptible purposes, He therefore paid an incorruptible price. The blood of Jesus Christ the Son of God, which was shed for the redemption of the world was incorruptible blood. All other blood is corrupt and corruptible, but the blood of this Man who was born of a virgin is the blood of the Son of God of whom God spoke saying, "Thou wilt not leave my soul in hell; neither wilt Thou suffer Thy holy One to see corruption." The blood that was shed on the cross of Calvary as a sacrifice for the whole world was presented before God in the holy of holies in heaven. There it abides in incorruption to this day, and there it ever shall be, incorruptible forevermore, better blood than that of bulls and goats, better blood than that of Abel, blood of which you and I shall all partake, blood of which the heavenly choirs shall eternally sing in chorus, "Worthy is the Lamb that was slain and has redeemed us to God by His blood out of every kindred and tongue and nation."

Thus it was that Peter, thrilling to the message God had revealed to him, wrote, "Forasmuch as ye were not redeemed with corruptible things as silver and gold from your vain conversation... but the precious blood of Christ as of a lamb without blemish and without spot: who verily was foreordained before the foundation of the world..." 1 Pet. 1:18. This is the blood that makes atonement for the soul. It is the incorruptible blood that cleanses and purifies the heart. It is at that time when the blood is applied by faith to the heart that the Holy Spirit, overshadowing your spirit, implants the incorruptible seed of Christ, the Word, and the Logos within that the spiritual gestation of sonship has begun.

In Phil 3:18 Paul speaks of certain people who are "enemies of the cross of Christ." Immediately upon reading this, our minds conclude that it must be the sinner and the unconverted who are the enemies of the cross, but, my brother, hide not in such error, for the real enemy of the cross is the Christian who withholds himself from the cross that the old man, the old self, may be kept from death. Refusing to be identified with Christ in His cross, the old nature flourishes and the new nature is choked and restricted. Such a man is not only an enemy of the cross, but an enemy of his own sonship as well. See now how Paul places the cross and sonship together by saying, "I am crucified with Christ: nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me." Gal. 2:20. The Christ seed, the incorruptible Logos, though planted in your heart, can never grow to mature sonship without the corresponding crucifixion and death of the "I". The "I" must be crucified that the "not I" may come to maturity. This is the hope of sonship and the only hope of glory. Therefore he who withholds the "I" from the cross is an enemy of the cross, and the Logos, though once planted within, can never come to maturity and manifestation until the "I" is crucified that Christ may flourish and mature. Therefore we who dwell in this tabernacle do groan that that which is mortal in us might be swallowed up by His life, even the incorruptible seed which was planted in us when we were born again. When this corruptible has put on incorruption and this mortal has put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, "Death is swallowed up in victory."

The Christ seed is the incorruptible seed of the word of God. Christ Himself is the new creature and the head of the new creation. God forbid, therefore, that I should glory save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom the world is crucified unto me and I unto the world; for in Jesus Christ neither circumcision availeth anything, nor uncircumcision, but a new creature. Let the word of Christ (the Logos, the incorruptible seed) dwell in you richly in all wisdom until the outward man is wasted away, the Christ is unveiled, and the Son is manifested in all his glory. This is the beginning of our sonship and herein lies the hope of glory.

THE POWER OF AN ENDLESS LIFE

"If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature (creation): old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new." 2 Cor. 5:17. Throughout the word the Holy Scriptures, shining with the clearness of the sun at noon, set forth the blessed hope of an entirely new relationship between God and every man who through faith has been brought nigh to Him by the cleansing of the blood of Jesus Christ and the renewing of the Holy Spirit. It would seem to be almost impossible for any word of inspiration to set forth the perfection of that new relationship more clearly than does the scripture quoted above. This scripture shows in the plainest possible language that all men in Christ are both new creatures and new creations as well. They are new creatures because they are new creations from the Father's mighty hand. Furthermore, with the coming of this new relationship to Christ these new creations make the blessed discovery that the passing away of their old selves is accompanied by the passing away of every old thing that pertains to their former unregenerate state, and with the coming of the new creation new hopes, new ambitions and new loves are born.

It is doubtful if any Christian on earth has fully understood as yet how great is the transforming upheaval that works within the soul when men and women in godly sorrow repent of their sins and through the operation of the Spirit of God in their lives are born again, born from above, renewed, regenerated and recreated. The all-powerful, incorruptible Christ seed, which liveth and abideth forever, being placed within their spirits, develops and matures - first the blade, then the ear, and after that the full com in the ear (Mark 4:28) until from the incorruptible Christ seed, planted in the fertile womb of the spirit, there comes forth a new creation in the glory of the Father and the image of Jesus Christ. All of us, especially that honored company of women to whom God has granted the blessing of motherhood, know that the period of time from the day the child is conceived in the womb to the hour of his birth and manifestation to the world is a time important and momentous. During the days of gestation, there in the darkness of the womb a completely new human being is being formed in the likeness of the parents who conceived him, a life that will not pass away. In the Chicago Museum of Science and Industry a full display may be seen of the development of the human fetus from the time of conception to the hour of birth, or manifestation. It is a display capable of greatly solemnizing the spiritual mind as one realizes that these remarkable developments of the natural man from the implantation of a corruptible seed to the birth of a corruptible body are in fact typical representations of the implantation of the incorruptible seed in the believing heart to the time of the birth and manifestation of a son of God in the image of the Father.

We poor humans, restricted as we are in understanding, are still woefully incapable of explaining the wonders of a natural birth. Our minds are baffled to explain "how the bones do grow in the womb of her that is with child." Eccles: 11:5. The clever minds of men of science may be able to trace the progress of that development and discuss the many wonders of it, but they can neither explain its process nor reproduce its substance. The very fact of our ignorance of these natural and corruptible things explains as nothing else can the significance of our Savior’s words to Nicodemus. "If I have told you of earthly things, and ye believe not, how shall ye believe if I tell you of heavenly things?" John 3:12. But let those who long for eternal realities rejoice in this wonderful fact: "The Lord giveth wisdom: out of His mouth cometh knowledge and understanding." Prov. 2:6. "What man knoweth the things of a man, save the spirit of man which is in him? Even so the things of God knoweth no man, but the Spirit of God." 1 Cor. 2:11. It is written: "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love Him. But God hath revealed them unto us by His Spirit: for the Spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God." 1 Cor. 2:9, 10. Therefore with all truth it must be said that those blessed people who with open hearts receive the revelation of the Lord are possessed of a greater understanding of spiritual things than men of science and learning have in natural things. Men and women who walk in the Spirit become wiser than all their instructors. The secret of the Lord is with them that fear Him. He giveth understanding to the simple, and to them that have no might He increaseth strength. "He giveth wisdom; out of His mouth cometh knowledge and understanding." Prov. 2:6. "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom: and the knowledge of the holy is understanding." Prov. 9:10.

Think, O reader, of the profound depths of truth that lie hidden in these inspired words: "The knowledge of the holy is understanding." Oh that God’s people could be exhorted to flee from the commandments and doctrines of men to look away to heaven until the Spirit of light from God comes streaming down from above, bringing the knowledge of the wisdom and glory of God from the face of Jesus Christ! "No man hath seen God at any time; the only begotten Son, which is in the bosom of the Father, He hath declared Him." John 1:18. He declared the Father’s glory to certain humble ones who loved Him while He walked among men in the lowly realms of earth, and He declares the Father’s glory in this the end of the age to men who love God and who open the gates of their believing hearts to the Spirit of revelation and understanding from above. There is little or no hope for the man who demands that all truth and revelation must fit into the mould of his tradition and the crucible of his doctrine. How often do God’s people reject the true light that lighteth every man that cometh into the world by the seemingly wise, though silly, interrogation, "Have any of the rulers believed?" John 7:48. But this people who know not the laws are accursed. John 7:49. To put new wine in old wine skins is foolishness. Of how much greater foolishness is he guilty who thinks to confine an expanding revelation in the old skin of religious tradition!

When it pleases God, who separated us from our mother’s womb, to reveal to our spirits His Son from heaven, there is henceforth no place left to confer with flesh and blood, or even to go up to those who were apostles before us, (Gal. 1:16,17), but rather to go, as Paul did, to some Arabia of God’s own choosing where the light of the ages can stream down forever into our famished spirits, bringing the knowledge of the glory of God from the face of Jesus Christ, our Lord. 2 Cor. 4:6. We will always find well-meaning people who condemn the truth made real to us by the Holy Spirit because it does not comply or agree with the truth as they imagine it ought to be; but those who walk in the light of the Holy Spirit, as He shines as the sun in strength upon the path of the just, are not at liberty to give ear to the thousand plaintive voices that call them to return to the apparent safety of the old way with its multitude of followers.

How often we hear the statement in advertising, "Can two million people be wrong?" Or "Can fifty million users be wrong?" The same childish prattle is carried into the world of religion and doctrine. I still recall an article published in a denominational magazine under the caption, "Can twelve million people be wrong?" Yes, indeed, twelve million people can be wrong! So also can six hundred million! But, even if they were right in some experience of the past and they rejoiced in the true light that once shone upon them to transform them, the fatal fault conies when they refuse to budge from their old camping ground, covering their eyes against the ever increasing light that shines more and more till the day is full. Do not proudly boast, O man that you are exactly the same as you were forty years ago. Repent rather that you have become a stagnant pool where the river of life has ceased to flow. I am the same person who was born in the pioneer town of Souris, Manitoba, in the year 1909, but today, though I am the same person, I am by no means the same as I then was. What a dreadful tragedy it would have been if after seventy-four years I was just the same as I was that morning they told my mother she had borne a son! I am the same person in whose penitent heart the Holy Spirit in 1926 implanted the incorruptible seed, which liveth and abideth forever and ever; yet I am not the same. What a dreadful tragedy that would be if I, fifty-seven years after my conversion, were just the same as I was that night when the angels in heaven rejoiced that a sinner had come home! Therefore, leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on to perfection, no more laying and re-laying those foundational doctrines of repentance, faith, baptisms, laying on of hands, and physical healing. There is more, much more, beyond for each and every life that becomes hidden with Christ in God. With the eye of my spirit I see nine men struggling with a violent demon at the foot of a mountain, unable to cast him out; but a little higher up three others of their company are beholding Him whose garments are white and glistening and whose face is shining as the glory and brightness of the sun. Matt. 17:14-21. Away from their vision has passed the form of Moses, that giver of God's holy law, and the figure of Elijah, who represented the prophets who prophesied of Christ. Vanquished forever is their childish hope of building tabernacles to house the glory of a message, for now they see no man save Jesus only. It is not our adherence to Moses and the law nor our steadfastness toward Elijah and the prophets that is so important, but our relationship to the Christ of whom they spoke, saying that of the increase of His government there should be no end. We shall be satisfied when we awake in His likeness, and when we do, yonder violent demon in the regions below will be found to hold no power at all.

The first Adam was made a living soul; the last Adam was made a quickening (life-giving) Spirit. The first Adam was given power to produce only corruptible seed, full of death, and dying. The last Adam, Jesus Christ, the Lord from heaven, is given power to produce incorruptible seed, full of life, and living. From the corruptible seed placed in the womb of Eve by the first Adam has come forth a world of corruptible men in Adam's likeness; but from the incorruptible seed of Jesus Christ, the last Adam, placed in the womb of the repentant spirit, comes forth that incorruptible new creation which liveth and abideth forever. Often in my writing I have tried to explain that the natural life, the corruptible life, is not life at all. It is really death, as Paul so forcefully taught. "She that liveth in pleasure is dead while she liveth." When Jesus said, "He that hath the Son hath life", He was speaking of that incorruptible life which He is and which liveth and abideth forever. When He said, "He that believeth on Me shall never die", He was not teaching us that He would merely extend our corruptible existence forever so that we would never go to the grave. He meant that He was planting a new life within us, even the incorruptible life, which He is, a life that could never end though we entered a thousand graves. The life He gives, the life He is, is the life of the ages. It is as endless as Christ Himself, for He is that life. It begins in our spirits the moment we believe, as Jesus said: "I give unto them eternal life (i.e., the life of the ages), and they shall never perish." John 10:28. That life, which begins in the spirit of man when Christ comes in to him by faith, extends more and more until corruption is swallowed up by incorruption as in type the yolk of an egg is swallowed up by the developing chick within, until in the end it is "not I, but Christ." Even now at this very moment the life that we live in this body of flesh we live by the faith of the Son of God; and that faith assures us fully that the incorruptible seed, sown by the overshadowing power of the Holy Spirit, shall issue forth in incorruption, immortality and eternal life. For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality. So, when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, "Death is swallowed up in victory." Death is corruption, as we pointed out above. Life is incorruption. As the rush cannot grow without mire (Job 8:11) and as dung is fertilizer to the budding fruit trees, so, in a manner beyond my understanding, the incorruptible Christ seed, planted in the corruptible earth, which we are, bears its fruit in immortality, incorruption and life eternal.

I am wearied a little because so very often it becomes necessary to momentarily break away from the excellent glory of these sublime truths while we explain again and again that none of these things can be grasped at all by the intelligence of the intellect or the understanding of the natural mind. As the light of the world flooded the eyes of the man that was born blind when once the hand of Jesus touched him, so the rays of eternal truth, shining as suns from afar, burst in glory upon the fields of our spirits, kissing the hills with revelation and flooding the valleys with the light which He is. "I am the light of the world," said the Savior. "He that followeth Me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life." John 8:12. Darkness and death abide together, the former deceiving, the latter slaying. Light and life are twin sisters, the one revealing, the other giving life. It gives sadness just to know that by far the greater number of God's own blood-bought people still live in the outer darkness of the natural mind, though every one of them will testify that in the day they first believed the Bible became a new book. Their understanding was enlightened; their relationship toward God underwent a mighty upheaval; life itself wore a different face after they found the Savior, but, alas, all too often they were content to bask forever in the glory of the new light that had been revealed. As time went by, the settling down process began. The new things became old and the extraordinary became the ordinary and commonplace.
They soon imbibed the doctrines of the people among whom they dwelt and quite unknowingly settled down behind the high fences of their denominational creeds and their sectarian beliefs. I am not trying to curry the favor of those who read this article when I tell them with a sadness which God alone has placed in my heart that within the denominational walls men walk in craftiness, handling the word of God deceitfully lest the light of the glorious gospel of Christ, who is the image of God, should shine upon them. They handle the word of God with deceit because they want their sheep to remain within the constricting confines of their fence, and not go wandering off from their fold to follow yonder shining light that streams from God's throne afar. Thus do they waste their lives contending for their faith and for their way of looking at things, meanwhile condemning the experiences of other men as being of the devil, or refuting the truth that has transformed the life of another.

"No man hath seen God at any time. The only begotten Son, which is in the bosom of the Father. He hath declared Him." John 1:18. What the eye has not seen nor the ear heard, neither has entered into the heart of man God reveals by His Spirit. 1 Cor 2:9-10. These great edicts notwithstanding, Christians and sinners alike are loath to believe that their natural minds are useless tools, deceitful instruments, and distorting instructors in all that concerns the spiritual realm. "The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God, for they are foolishness unto him; neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned." 1 Cor. 2:14. Let us therefore leave off forever this vanity that would have us believe that the natural mind can understand spiritual things. How dare we assume that by wearying the flesh with much study the truth of God can be found? As in a mirror face answers to face, so natural ways of looking at things only produce natural reflections. Christians seem determined to refuse and reject the lesson that only the Spirit searches out and reveals the mysteries of God.

If you seek God, you will find Him; but in finding Him you will discover that He is not as you thought He was or how you thought He was. You will find that He is in no way confined or restricted by any tradition, doctrine, or imagination of men. Utter trust in God means utter abandonment to God. There is a holy abiding place where Christians may forever dwell where with fervent spirits, holy awe, utmost consideration and perfect reverence they can declare with complete abandonment, "I care not! Thy will be done!" When you can say with utter abandon, "Lead me, Lord! I care not where," then He will lead you. Ten or twenty years may pass before you are aware that He has led you, but you will find at last that your path has been the path of the just, leading you to the perfect day. When you can say, "Lead me, Spirit of God, I care not how," then some glad morning your happy soul, awaking as a sleeper from his dream, will have made the blessed discovery that the storms, shipwrecks and the fires have been the messengers of God to guide you to His desired haven, and your lips will be saying with Jacob, your friend, "Surely the Lord is in this place, though I knew it not." Gen. 28:16.

"One ship drives east, another drives west By the selfsame wind that blows; Tis the set of the sail and not the gale That tells them the way to go. Like the winds of the sea are the winds of fate As we voyage along through life. 'Tis the set of the soul that decides the goal, And not the calm or strife."

There is a wicked trait in human nature that always has us believe that solemn words of exhortation do not apply to us but are directed to someone else. But the "truth I write concerning revelation is directed to everyone. However great the insight which God has given you, you must humbly and honestly admit, "I know nothing yet as I ought to know." If you love God with all your heart, your one great interest will be to love Him more and more: and His great delight will be to manifest Himself more and more unto you. The true secret of revelation, or illumination, if you prefer the word, is simply an ever increasing love and an ever increasing devotion to your Father in heaven. "If any man love God, the same is known of Him," or, if any man love God, God knows that man. Jesus our Lord told us in the plainest possible words that our love for God was the secret key that would unlock the gates of spiritual understanding. "He that hath My commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth Me: and he that loveth Me shall be loved of My Father, and I will love him, and will manifest Myself unto him. Judas said unto Him, not Iscariot, Lord, how is that Thou wilt manifest Thyself unto us, and not unto the world? Jesus answered and said unto him, If a man love Me, he will keep My words: and My Father will love Him, and We will come unto him and make Our abode with him." John 14:21-23. Christ is the light of God. Christ is the word of God. "The entrance of Thy word giveth light." No wonder the Lord has declared that to fervently love Him is the very fountainhead of all revelation, illumination, and spiritual understanding.

I am not the same as I was forty years ago. I am not the same as I was twenty years ago, nor five years ago, nor am I the same as I was yesterday. Neither will I be tomorrow as I am today. "The path of the just is as the shining light that shines on and on until the day is full." Without light there is no growth; without revelation there is no spiritual progress. Let us then lay aside every weight and every imperfect tradition that by an ever increasing communion with God we may lay hold on the perfection He has set before us.

With this brief but fervent appeal let all who read seek that illumination which the Holy Spirit gives to make wise the simple and increase in strength the fainting heart that we may consider with renewed understanding the wonderful power of the incorruptible seed, Christ, the Logos of God, who liveth and abideth forever. The foregoing paragraph was written yesterday. In it I said, "I am not the same as I was yesterday, nor will I be the same tomorrow as I am today." And now I must testify that this is even so, for today I see truth concerning the incorruptible seed, which yesterday had not been revealed to me. It is this: Our Lord Jesus Christ taught His disciples to pray, saying "Our Father, which art in heaven." No man on earth is truly my father except the man by whom I was begotten. Therefore, I cannot call God my Father until I am begotten of God. Man is begotten of God that moment in which the Holy Spirit by His power divine places the incorruptible Christ seed in the repentant sinner's heart. The incorruptible life planted there liveth and abideth forever. God is spirit and only those who are born of His Spirit can call God their Father and only those who are born of Him can say, "Our Father, which art in heaven."

"How can a man be born when he is old?" This was the question that puzzled the learned but perplexed Nicodemus. "Can he enter the second time into his mother's womb and be born?" he questioned in disbelief. "That which is born of the flesh is flesh," the Savior replied, "and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit. Marvel not that I said unto thee, Ye must be born again." The good man Nicodemus was greatly mystified, because the natural mind receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God. Such things seem foolish to him, but the Spirit gives light, illumination and understanding and sends us away, not only believing but receiving as well.

To those of us who realize the darkness, the death and the hopeless void of man's unregenerate state it is scarcely necessary to observe that we, who were without God and without Christ, were both as hopeless and as helpless in our corruption and death as was the dark, void earth before the wonderful day when the Spirit of God moved upon the face of the deep and the voice of God rang through the darkness, saying, "Let there be light," and there was light. We have not been saved because we were worthy nor because we were good or wiser than other men. We were saved because the Father chose us in Christ before the foundation of the world that we should be the first to put our trust in Him. When in God's wisdom the appointed time came, the Spirit of God moved upon the darkened and trackless void of our beings even as He moved upon the formless earth from which we were taken in the beginning. The wind of God, which is the Spirit, bloweth where it listeth. Its breath of life, overshadowing a man, breathes into his spirit the power of an endless life. By the power of that same Spirit the incorruptible seed is placed within the believing heart and we are born from above, begotten of God and born anew. The light of God shineth out of the darkness. The fragrance of the Rose of Sharon and the Lily of the valley becomes the perfume of our life. The fruits of the Spirit begin to bud and bloom as old things pass away and all things become new.

How wonderful is the wind of God, how matchless the breath of His eternal Spirit! How complete is the change that is wrought by the power of an endless life; how wonderful the assurance within as His Spirit bears witness with our spirit that we are the children of God and, if children, then heirs - heirs of God and joint heirs with our Lord Jesus Christ!

"Breathe on me, Breath of God;
Fill me with life anew
That I may love as Thou dost love,
And do as Thou wouldst do.
"Breathe on me, Breath of God,
Till I am wholly Thine;
Till all this earthly part of me
Gloows with Thy fire divine.
"Breathe on me, Breath of God;
So shall I never die;
But live with Thee that perfect life
Of Thine eternity."

There is a remarkable similarity between the inspired statement of Gen. 1:2 and the words of Jesus in reply to Nicodemus' question, "How can a man be born when he is old?" The divine record gives this statement of truth concerning the earth before the creation of Adam and the Garden of Eden: "The earth was without form and void, and darkness was upon the face of the deep. And the Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters, and God said, "Let there be light, and there was light." The earth is old-very, very old. It was old and dark and void long before Adam or the account of Genesis 1:1. The former creations that had once dwelt upon it had long since passed away and now all was as void as the moon while darkness, ice and fearful cold surrounded it all in a mantle of death. Not only was the earth without form and void and covered with darkness and cold, but it was useless, hopeless and helpless as well. It could do nothing to change its deplorable state. There was no power within itself to change or transform its timeless wastes or its hopeless future. If help or change should ever come, it must come from without and from elsewhere; otherwise it was doomed to abide in darkness forevermore.

O that the eyes of men might be opened to clearly see that back of all things and before all things, yea, in the beginning of all things, standeth God-eternal, immortal, invisible, almighty, omniscient, immutable, holy, loving, and greatest and most glorious of all, full of purpose! Thus it is written, and thus it was, that "the Spirit of God moved upon the face of the deep; and God said, Let there be light, and there was light," and by the mighty moving of the Spirit of God the earth was born again, begotten anew. Darkness fled away to its secret hiding place. Icy mountains melted and flowed down before the light of His presence. Timeless snows, released from the vise-like grip of some former curse, transformed themselves into bubbling streams of live-giving water. Flowers appeared on the earth. The time of the singing of birds had come. The fig tree brought forth its fruit, and the vines with the tender grapes gave a good smell. The breath of God, the wind of the Lord, passing over its wastes, had brought forth life where once was death, and the earth was born anew.

"How can a man be born when he is old?" questioned the puzzled Nicodemus, and Jesus, seeming almost to quote the first two verses of the book of Genesis, replied, "The wind (the Spirit) bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh, and whither it goeth: so is every one that is born of the Spirit." John 3:8. "Marvel not that I said unto thee, Ye must be born again." The Holy Spirit, like a wind of God, moves over the shapeless void of our corruption. "Let there be light," is the fiat of the Lord, and the light of God, which is Jesus Christ, and life eternal, the incorruptible seed, which liveth and abideth forever, enter the darkened void of a soul dead in trespasses and sins. The Christ seed, incorruptible and eternal, is planted in the repentant heart. A new creation has begun, for he is begotten of God, and Christ henceforth dwells in his heart by faith. Let the redeemed of God now thrill with joy to the inspired words of Paul: "Christ in you is the hope of glory." The glory of God is the image of Christ, and we shall be fully satisfied when we awake in His likeness. When the incorruptible seed is planted in our hearts by faith, we are begotten of God, and "every one that loveth Him that begat loveth him also that is begotten of Him." 1 John 5:1. And "he that is begotten of God keepeth himself, and that wicked one toucheth him not." John 5:18.

Your understanding will be greatly enlightened when you are able to grasp the simple truth I now bring to your attention. A child is begotten the moment he is conceived in his mother's womb, but the child is born when he comes forth from his mother's womb to be manifest to the world. This is a type, an allegory, of the spiritual process at work in the believer's heart. We are begotten of God when we believe. The incorruptible seed of the word of God, the Christ seed, the power of an endless life, is planted within the believing spirit. There it grows and matures in the darkness until death is swallowed up of life, until it is "not I, but Christ." Then comes the day of manifestation when that which was conceived in faith, that which was begotten, is fully born and manifest to the world. This is what the Bible calls the manifestation of the sons of God-a man child come forth from the travelling woman, a son in the image of Christ, who shall rule all nations with a rod of iron.

The Holy Spirit had a very definite purpose in mind when in wisdom He employed these two enlightening terms-begotten of God and born of God. Believers are begotten the moment they fix their faith in Christ. At that same moment of faith, without their understanding or knowledge of what is taking place, the incorruptible seed, the Christ seed, the quickening Spirit, the power of an endless life is placed within the believing, penitent spirit they are begotten of God and the Christ life has begun. Time and again I have taught that all natural things have spiritual counterparts. Therefore you have only to consider that brief history of your own development from the moment of your conception in the womb of your mother to the hour of your birth and manifestation to the world to understand almost perfectly the divine process by which the Christ seed, the incorruptible seed, is placed in the womb of the believing spirit, there to gestate and develop as a chick develops in its shell until corruption is swallowed up of life and in truth it can be said, "It is not I but Christ." Then will follow the birth and manifestation in resurrection and incorruption of the vast family of newborn sons, not as individuals only, but as the many membered body of Christ as well.

Christians have always been puzzled by the seeming contradictions found in the first epistle of John. We find it difficult to understand why the writer said in chapter 3 and verse 9, "Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin; for his seed remaineth in him: and he cannot sin, because he is born of God," while in a number of other places he makes it clear that Christians both can and do sin; and for this cause he makes the provision that, "if any man sin, we have an advocate with the Father" (1 John 2:1), and "if we confess our sins, He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness," 1 John 1:9. But this seeming contradiction vanishes the moment we make a sensible distinction between the two progressive phases of our redemption, which John speaks of as being begotten of God and being born of God. In 1 John 5:18 this distinction is very clear. We read, "We know that whosoever is born of God sinneth not; but (please notice this distinguishing conjunction, but) he that is begotten of God keepeth himself, and that wicked one toucheth him not." We who are begotten of God and are as yet in the stage of spiritual gestation are often tempted and at times overcome simply because the old Adamic nature is still larger and stronger than the new nature, and the corruptible still wars against the incorruptible. He that is begotten of God keepeth himself. He must do so by the grace and power of God or he will fall into sin as others have done. Times without number we fail either to keep ourselves or to seek the grace of God to keep us. But, Christian Brother and sister, you will find endless spiritual strength and power to keep if you will ask the Holy Spirit to make vivid and real to your heart the indisputable fact that at this very moment the incorruptible seed, the Christ seed, is developing within your spirit, your life and your body as well. He who has this divine understanding keepeth himself in the blessed knowledge that the divine Christ life begotten within him will issue forth in a birth and manifestation in the glorious image of Christ.

We may not be wise in drawing too many parallels between the natural and the spiritual, but we would be lacking, indeed, if we could not see some definite similarity, yes, even an allegory, between the birth of Jesus Christ, the Son of God, through that earthly vessel, the virgin Mary, and the formation of the Christ in us by the impartation of the incorruptible seed. See now with what reverent and holy awe the Virgin Mary regarded the great thing God was doing as the physical form of the Son of God was being prepared within her for His birth and manifestation to the world. "My soul doth magnify the Lord," she cried, "and my spirit hath rejoiced in God my Savior. For He hath regarded the low estate of His handmaiden: for, behold, from henceforth all generations shall call me blessed. For He that is mighty hath done to me great things; and holy is His name. And His mercy is on them that fear Him from generation to generation. He hath shewed strength with His arm; He hath scattered the proud in the imagination of their hearts. He hath put down the mighty from their seats, and exalted them of low degree. He hath filled the hungry with good things; and the rich He hath sent empty away. He hath holpen His servant Israel, in remembrance of His mercy; as He spake to our fathers, to Abraham, and to his seed forever." Luke 1:46-55.

We cannot be wrong in affirming that each and every statement made by this holy, rejoicing woman because of that great thing God was performing can also be made with equal truth by us in whose spirits the incorruptible seed has now been planted. God did great things for Mary when within her physical womb He placed the seed of Him who was to be called the Son of God. I am not wrong in saying that a greater thing by far is now in progress in that the incorruptible Christ seed is now by faith gestating in a multitude of human spirits, swallowing up death with life, corruption with incorruption, and mortality with immortality. Our spiritual understanding of the great thing the Holy Spirit is performing in the hearts of all who are begotten of God causes us to keep ourselves. "He that is begotten of God keepeth himself, and the wicked one toucheth him not." Do you not think that Mary kept herself in all holiness and purity, knowing as she did that the Christ was being formed within? Could any imagine that she would defile her body by uncleanness or lend her ears to unholy or unspiritual conversation? Would any venture to believe that she feasted her eyes on corruption and filth as Christians are wont to do today? No, indeed, she did not! She kept herself because of her joy and anticipation of the life that was forming within.

O, that God's people would seek Him until the Holy Spirit illumined their minds, giving them a mighty understanding of the great things now transpiring in the spirits of all who are begotten of God! Every man who has this spiritual understanding will keep himself with utmost joy, knowing that, when God's process is complete and all that is death and corruption within is swallowed up by the life and immortality which He is, his sonship will be complete and a man child will come forth to rule all nations with a rod of iron. It is not in me to understand all the mysteries being wrought by God, but he must be a blind soul who cannot see the association between what we have been saying and the great revelation given to John, who said, "And there appeared a great wonder in heaven, (heaven is the spiritual realm); a woman clothed with the sun, and the moon under her feet, and upon her head a crown of twelve stars; and she being with child cried, travailing in birth, and pained to be delivered ... And she brought forth a man child, who was to rule all nations with a rod of iron: and her child was caught up unto God, and to His throne." Rev. 12:1-2,5.

Soon, very soon, there is coming a time of birth and manifestation. At this present hour we are begotten, but not born; but in that wonderful day of manifestation the saying will be wholly true, "He that is born of God cannot sin, for His seed remaineth in him, and he cannot sin, because he is born of God." It is not my intention to leave the impression with anyone that it is wholly wrong for us to say we are born again, though strictly speaking we are not as yet born, but begotten. I do say, however, that a correct understanding of the two terms - begotten and born - will greatly assist us to comprehend the wonderful power of the incorruptible seed now growing to maturity in the believer's heart, and the yet greater wonder that will be when the babe who now leaps in the womb of the human spirit shall issue forth in the power of an endless life.

The first epistle of John is a most remarkable revelation of the progress of the believer from that heaven blessed hour when by simple faith the incorruptible Christ seed is placed within and we through repentance and faith are begotten of God unto the wonderful hour of manifestation when sonship is complete and we stand on Mt. Zion in the very image of Christ Himself. The King James version (which I generally use) somewhat obscures this vital fact by saying in chapter 3, verse 1, "Behold, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God," and again in verse 2, "Beloved, now are we the sons of God". Since the original Greek word was teknon, meaning children, and not huios, meaning sons, the passage should read, "Beloved, now are we the children of God." See Emphatic Diaglott, Weymouth, and others. Even in the natural realm there is a vast difference between children and adults, or between little boys and mature men. This difference is symbolic of the contrast between spiritual children, spiritual young men, and spiritual fathers. John himself emphasizes this cardinal distinction by saying, "I write unto you, little children, because your sins are forgiven for His name's sake. I write unto you, fathers, because ye have known Him that is from the beginning. I write unto you, young men, because ye have overcome the wicked one." 1 John 2:12-13. The moment we are begotten of God, we are God's children regardless of our age in the flesh. From spiritual infancy we progress in spiritual wisdom, spiritual stature and favor with God. This process continues until we reach the stature of full grown men in the image of Christ as Paul also wisely said, "Till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ." Eph. 4:13.

With this understanding fresh in mind Weymouth's translation of 1 John 3:1-2 is capable of giving us an enlarged comprehension concerning the great spiritual work now in progress within. "See what love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called God's children: and that is what we are. For this reason the world does not recognize us, because it did not recognize Him". Notice the words here, "and that is what we are." God's children - that is what we are. The fleshly part of us is still here. We are still corruptible and in the natural we are still the children of the first Adam. But a miracle has taken place. The germ of never-ending life is growing within. The incorruptible seed, which liveth and abideth forever, has been planted in our hearts by faith, and the process of maturing from infancy to adoption and full manifestation is in progress. The blessed and wonder-filled hours of gestation are passing swiftly by and we are now maturing from infancy to full sonship in Him.

Then John by the wisdom given him by the Holy Spirit continues to enlighten our pure minds with the words, "Beloved, we are now God’s children, but what we are to be has not yet been manifested. We know that if He appears we shall be like Him, because we shall see Him as He is. And anyone who has this hope fixed on Him purifies himself (keeps himself) as He is pure." 1 John 3:2. Weymouth. Though we know we are now God's children, the glory of what we shall be has not yet appeared, but we know that, when He appears, we will be exactly like Him.

My heart is often saddened when I contemplate the multitudes of Christian men and women who vainly imagine that sonship may be attained through mighty works, spectacular gifts, or miraculous ministries and manifestations. O nonsense! Nonsense! Nonsense! Childish, foolish, misguided nonsense! Have you never heard that Jesus said, "Many will say to Me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in Thy name? and in Thy name have cast out devils? and in Thy name done many wonderful works? And then will I profess unto them, I never knew you: depart from Me, ye that work iniquity." Matt. 7:22-23. This solemn truth applies to almost all the great men of our day with their signs and wonders and mighty works which they do in the name of the Lord. Spectacular ministration has nothing to do with that sonship for which creation groans. Most of this spectacular exhibition is the product of man's misguided will and not the work of Christ or the Spirit. But take courage, O thou afflicted, for more are the children of the desolate than the children of the married wife. Isa, 54:1. Have faith in God, O man unknown, though thou be unhonored and unsung, for the Lord our God, who reserved to Himself seven thousand in Israel, has reserved in our day a people who are known of Him. There were many widows in Israel in the days of Elijah, but to none of them was he sent but to a woman of Sarepta. Many lepers were in Israel in the days of Elisha, but none were healed saving Naaman the Syrian. The Queen of Sheba shall arise in the day of judgement to condemn this generation, because she came from afar to hear wisdom of Solomon; but, behold, a greater than Solomon is here. It is Christ in you that is the hope of glory. It is the power of and endless life working within your being.

CHAPTER FOUR
THE POWER OF AN ENDLESS LIFE
PART TWO

Through the divine power of our Lord Jesus Christ God has given unto us "all things that pertain to life and godliness, through the knowledge of Him." 2 Pet. 1:3. He who has called us to glory and virtue has given unto us exceeding great and precious promises by which all who are called of God may become partakers of His divine nature. We who have been called by Christ have escaped the corruption that is in the world because we have been begotten of incorruptible seed by the word (Logos) of God that liveth and abideth forever. 1 Pet. 1:23. "For all flesh is as grass, and all the glory of man as the flower of grass. The grass withereth, and the flower thereof falleth away: but the word (Logos) of the Lord endureth forever." 1 Pet. 1:24-25.

Our new life, which is in fact the only true life in all the universe, is the life that comes from Him - nay, better far might I say that our true life is that life which He Himself is. In God's living word it is recorded, "In Him was life, and the life was the light of men. And the light shineth in darkness; and the darkness comprehended it not." John 1:4-5. In the economy of God death and darkness are synonyms, but the life is the light of men. Wheresoever the Spirit of God moves, the mighty voice of creation is heard to cry, "Let there be light," for God Himself is life eternal and incorruptible, and the life is the light of men. This is the true light "which lighteth every man that cometh into the world." John 1:9. The eternal God, immortal, incorruptible and invisible, dwelleth in the light, which no man can approach - a light which darkness cannot comprehend. All the light and intelligence of this world system is naught but thick darkness and horrible gloominess when compared to true light which Jesus is, and all forms of life which we now see and know are death, corruption and the tomb when compared to that life incorruptible, immortal, invisible and eternal, which He Himself is.
Sweeter than the dews of Hermon descending upon the mountains of Zion and more blessed than good news from a far country is the wonderful revelation with which He now fills our enlightened hearts, declaring that man, born in sin and altogether shapen in iniquity, may now partake of the divine nature because infinite grace and limitless power has placed within the womb of our spirits the incorruptible Christ seed that we in truth may be begotten of God. O joy of all joys! How good to know that we who once were born of the corruptible seed of the first Adam, placed by our earthly father in the womb of our earthly mother, may now through His divine power be born anew of the incorruptible seed of the last Adam, the Logos, who liveth and abideth forever. See with what wisdom it has been written, "The first man is of the earth, earthy; the second man is the Lord from heaven... And as we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly." 1 Cor. 15:47,49. The heavenly secret sealed up in the treasure house of these inspired words none but the Father Himself can unfold, and while heavenly angels, excelling in wisdom and understanding, desire to look into these things, we who once were born of corruptible seed are now reborn of that incorruptible seed which liveth and abideth forever.

Sometimes it is not the best of wisdom to draw too close a parallel between things that are natural and things that are spiritual, for earthly minded folk delight to drag all spiritual things down to the realm of their natural understanding, distorting and confusing truth that only the spiritual mind can comprehend. Let us, however, hear the word of the Lord on this matter that we may have a better understanding to see more clearly how by the use of natural things, which we understand, the Holy Spirit reveals things that are as high above our understanding as heaven is higher than the earth. "For," saith God, "as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are My ways higher than your ways, and My thoughts than your thoughts." Isa. 55:9. As the rain that comes down from heaven makes the earth bring forth and bud, giving seed to the sower and bread to the eater, so the word of the Lord that goes forth from His mouth as life-giving water accomplishes that which He pleases, and prospers in the thing whereto He sent it.

Thus it was that Paul, writing of the heathen, showed that that which may be known of God is manifest in them; for God hath showed it unto them. For the invisible things of God from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even His eternal power and Godhead; so that they are without excuse." Rom. 1:19-20. We should therefore understand that, while this statement condemns the unbelief of the heathen, it is also teaching us to see how things that are spiritual and invisible may be clearly understood by looking at the natural things God has made. So true is this that Paul says even His eternal power and Godhead may be seen by the things which God has made. Rom. 1:20. Is it not true that a connoisseur of art is able to recognize almost at a glance the work of Rembrandt, De Vinci, or Michael Angelo? Cannot a critic of music recognize immediately the styles of great musicians? The work of every man and every woman, though unknown to themselves, proceeds after a pattern peculiar to them. So also you will notice that every work of God, whether He be creating a universe or creating men, follows a pattern peculiar to Him. Thus, when He makes a week to contain seven days, then every week He makes will have seven days though those days be twenty-four hours or one thousand years in length. When the immutable Father brings forth a creation by placing a seed either in the earth upon which we stand or in the earth which we are, whether it be the seed of a flower or an oak tree, the seed of an animal, a bird or a man, He is working according to a pattern from which He will never digress. Which of all the living things has He not brought forth after this pattern?

The pattern of God does not end with things which are visible and natural as Paul by the Spirit has plainly said: "The invisible things are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even His eternal power and Godhead." We must tread softly here and speak with infinite reverence, for, though the statement above is entirely true, it is impossible to grasp the metaphor, the allegory or the type until our eyes are opened by the Holy Spirit and our minds are enlightened with the light of life that streams from Him. "What man knoweth the things of a man save the spirit of man which is in him? Even so the things of God knoweth no man, but the Spirit of God. Now we have received, not the spirit of the world, but the Spirit which is of God, that we might know the things that are freely given to us of God." 1 Cor. 2:11-12.

With my head bowed and my heart awed in deepest reverence I shall now try to explain that, when our God and Father ordained that a new creation should be brought forth in the image of Himself, to be born, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible seed, He followed the same wonderful pattern that infinite wisdom had devised to produce all living things from a seed. First He must bring into the world the holy and incorruptible
One who was to be called the Son of God, for He Himself was to become the seed of an entirely new creation of incorruptible sons of God. The Father decreed that through the medium of a virgin's womb He would bring into the world the incorruptible seed, the life germ from which would spring an entirely new creation - a creation of twice born men, born again of the incorruptible seed of God's Christ. Then, true to the pattern of sowing and reaping, that seed must fall into the ground and die; "For," said Jesus, "except a corn (kernel) of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone; but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit." It is the outer shell that dies - not the incorruptible life within. The incorruptible life is the Christ seed, springing forth, first the blade, then the ear, and afterward the full corn in the ear, to become the wave sheaf of Leviticus 23:10 as the incorruptible life of Christ appears in God's many sons, and each of these in his turn, crucified with Christ and falling into the ground in death, bring forth an abounding harvest of incorruptible sons of God.

When the virgin in her amazement asked, "How can this be, seeing I know not a man," the angelic reply was this: "The Holy Ghost shall come upon thee, and the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee: therefore also that holy thing that shall be born of the thee shall be called the Son of God." Luke 1:35. This was to be the divine method of bringing into the world that incorruptible Christ who is Himself the seed of a new creation of incorruptible sons of God. Here as always it can be easily seen that the Father is following His usual pattern of creation. The Holy Spirit was to move upon the earthly form of this virgin woman that she might bring forth the firstborn of an entirely new creation. However much the truth may tax our understanding, the fact is that this firstborn Son of God was to be the germ seed of an entirely new creation of incorruptible men, born not after the flesh, but reborn of His Spirit.

How very important and full of truth are the simplest sayings of inspiration! Who can fathom the depths of truth set forth in the words of our Lord: "I am the vine; ye are the branches." "I am the light of the world: he that followeth Me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life." "I am the bread of life. If any man eat of this bread, he shall live forever." But, when He said, "Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone; but, if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit," He was describing the pattern and the divine process by which that incorruptible life which He is would be released from its confinement within God's Christ that millions of believing mankind might through faith in Him be born of incorruptible seed and live forever and forever. No fact in life is better known than this certainty: If there is to be a harvest, we must first sow the seed. Furthermore the knowledge is clear to us all that even one seed planted in the ground will in a few seasons multiply to a very great harvest to satisfy all the world with its life giving bread.

Therefore our Lord said, "Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone; but, if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit." The natural creation tells us emphatically that, as long as the wheat is left in the granary, there will be no increase. Lying there in security, its life remains locked up within itself, producing nothing and bringing forth nothing. The life existing in every kernel remains locked up within its tiny body because there has been no death that would release it from its shell, and, because there has been no death, there is no increase, no blade, no ear, no sheaf, and no harvest. Well does the farmer know that his own livelihood, together with the well-being of the people, depends upon his planting those seeds in the ground. Well he knows that the death, which occurs in the body of the seed, will release the life germ that will yield an abundant harvest. Can you not hear Paul saying, "But some man will say, How are the dead raised up? and with what body do they come? Thou fool, that which thou sowest is not quickened (made alive), except it die." 1 Cor. 15:35-36. Here again we see the pattern clearly stated, both for the natural and for the spiritual realm. If the corruptible life contained in the kernel is to be released that it might yield a great harvest, then the kernel must die. There is no other way. Is it not therefore abundantly true that, if the incorruptible life sealed up within God's Christ was to be released that there might be a bountiful harvest in incorruption, then God's Christ must die, and die He did. He must be planted in the earth, and in the earth they placed Him in Joseph's new tomb.

For three days and three nights our Lord lay in the heart of the earth. His loving friends, it seems, had forgotten that He had said, "After three days I will rise again." But His enemies had not forgotten, and they set a watch to make sure He would remain in the tomb. Forty armed men were appointed to watch over the dead! They rolled a great stone against the door of the cave and sealed the stone with the governor's signet to make certain no one would molest it. O fools and slow of heart to believe, did they not know that the life confined in that kernel of wheat was life incorruptible and immortal? Had they dragged the Rocky Mountains over the door of His tomb that would have been no deterrent to incorruptible life. And Mary Magdalene, poor dear, unable to believe in a literal resurrection, came early in the morning in company with other devout women to anoint His dead body with oil and sweet spices and embalm Him in death forever. But the stone, much too great for little women to move, was already rolled away, and, looking within the tomb, she saw no dead body lying in shrouds and death. There in the tomb an angel spoke as though surprised at her great sorrow. "Woman, why weepest thou?" he gently asked. She replied, "Because they have taken away my Lord, and I know not where now she had not so much as a dead Christ upon whom to pour her sweet spices? So with blinding tears and deepening sorrow she turned to go away, and Jesus stood before her; but she knew Him not. One sentence He spoke and one question He asked, just as the angels had done. "Why weepest thou?" O how hard it is for our benighted minds to understand and grasp the truth! We are so absorbed with this realm of death that we cannot see that beyond the sable pall is life incorruptible, immortal, and eternal. Why are we so slow to grasp the revealing truth, "Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone; but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit?" Can you now see from the things we have stated the absolute necessity of the death of God's Son? How else but by death could incorruptible life be released that they who dwelt in death and corruption could through faith partake of the power of an endless life? O what a death! O what resurrection! O what a harvest! O death, where is now thy sting? Thou canst not slay incorruption! O grave, where is now thy victory? Thou hast but released the power of an endless life!

We flounder a bit in our understanding of all these things. Such knowledge is too wonderful for me; it is high, I cannot attain unto it. Psa. 139:6. Only faintly now we see as through a glass darkly, but as time passes by and the Holy Spirit takes the things of God and shows them unto us, we begin to understand. The events that transpired at the cross are very full of meaning. Not one thing happened on that day of days that had not been ordered of God, and all things loudly proclaimed their truth that enlightened souls might understand.

As our Savior bowed His head in death, He said. "Father, into Thy hands I commit My spirit," and, having said this, He gave up the ghost. The body without the spirit is dead, and with the death of the body came the release of the Spirit of life, eternal, immortal and incorruptible. And the earth did quake, and the rocks were rent; the veil of the temple was rent in twain, and many graves of the saints were opened, and after His resurrection their bodies rose and came out of their graves and entered into the city and appeared unto many. Matt 27:51-53. When Jesus rose from the dead, He did not rise alone. How could He since it is written, "If it die, it bringeth forth much fruit?" The first fruit (the wave sheaf) of the resurrection must rise with Him. One seed was planted in death. A whole sheaf comes forth in resurrection. That one sheaf was a kind of first fruit of the mighty resurrection, which will eventually encompass all things in its incorruptible power. One kernel was planted in the ground. One sheaf came up in resurrection, that one sheaf being full of individual kernels, each in itself an incorruptible seed. Isaiah saw much more than national restoration when by the Spirit he cried, "Thy dead men shall live; together with my dead body shall they rise. Awake and sing, ye that dwell in the dust; for thy dew is as the dew of herbs, and the earth shall cast out the dead." Isa. 26:19.

In the twenty-third chapter of the book of Leviticus we have one of those wonderful Old Testament types so hard to understand until we see the anti-type in the New Testament. Among the offerings to the Lord was the offering of a wave sheaf after this manner: "And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, When ye be come into the land which I give unto you, and shall reap the harvest thereof, then shall ye bring a sheaf of the firstfruits of your harvest unto the priest: and he shall wave the sheaf before the Lord, to be accepted for you: on the morrow after the Sabbath the priest shall wave it." Lev. 23:9-11.

As we read the above passage, we must remember that the harvest is the resurrection. But the harvest was divided into three distinct parts-the firstfruits, the great ingathering, and finally the gleanings. One sheaf from the firstfruits of the harvest was to be brought to the priest and waved before the Lord. This passage, like many others, has often baffled my understanding, but now I see some definite significance in it. The simple act of waving is common among men and it is used daily on many occasions and in many different circumstances. A wave of the hand may mean a farewell or it may herald some glad home-coming, as we so often see when ships are coming into the harbor. Again it may be a sign of victory or accomplishment. You will notice three remarkable things connected with the offering of the wave sheaf. First, it was just one sheaf from a great harvest. Secondly, it was offered on the day after the Sabbath, which would indicate the resurrection day, and, most important of all, it was connected with the offering of the he-lamb (verse 12), which lamb is God's Son who taketh away the sin of the world.
The wave sheaf, waved in victory before the Lord, signifies that the first part of the resurrection is accomplished. Its anti-type is found in the blessed fact that, when Jesus our Lord arose from the dead, He did not rise alone. Only Matthew records the sacred wonder that the graves were opened and many bodies of the saints which slept arose and came out of the graves after His resurrection and appeared unto many. Matt. 27:52-53. They were the first sheaf of the firstfruit of the resurrection. They were a sheaf waved in victory before the Lord, signifying that a great and mighty harvest of incorruptibles would rise in ages yet to come, never to die any more.

These resurrected saints who rose with the incorruptible Christ did not return to their tombs again; neither could they die any more, for they are equal unto the angels. Luke 20:36. These are they of whom Paul spoke when he said, "When He ascended up on high, He led captivity captive, and gave gifts unto men. Now that He ascended, what is it but that He also descended first into the lower parts of the earth? He that descended is the same also that ascended up far above all heavens, that He might fill all things." Eph. 4:8-10.

I dearly love the beautiful story recorded in the twenty-fourth chapter of the Gospel of Luke. It tells of two sad and disappointed disciples, walking and communing with broken hearts of all the astonishing things that had so recently happened in Jerusalem. As they walked, the story recounts, Jesus of Nazareth drew near and walked in company with them, but their eyes were holden that they should not know Him. Jesus Himself was the subject of their conversation, as they related the story of His betrayal, His crucifixion and death. Shaking their heads in abject sadness, they sobbed out their heart-breaking disappointment in these pitiful words: "But we trusted that it had been He which would have redeemed Israel: and beside all this, today is the third day since these things were done. Yea, and certain women also of our company made us astonished, which Were early at the sepulcher. And when they found not His body, they came, saying that they had also seen a vision of angels, which said that He was alive. And certain of them which were with us went to the sepulcher, and found it even so as the women had said: but Him they saw not. Then said He unto them, O fools and slow of heart to believe all that the prophets have spoken: ought not Christ to have suffered these things, and to enter into His glory? And beginning with Moses and all the prophets, He expounded unto them in all the scriptures the things concerning Himself." Luke 24:21-27.

Ought not Christ to have suffered? O poor, foolish world! How dare you insist that the death of the Christ was a tragedy! I tell you it was no tragedy, for God, the Creator of all, together with all He has created, shouts aloud and afar from the wonder filled passage, "Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone; but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit." "Ought not Christ to have suffered?" enquired the resurrected Jesus. How else but by death could He release the incorruptible seed to the millions who would in future believe? Had He not died, the incorruptible seed would have been forever locked up within Himself, but the moment He died, His eternal Spirit - yes, His eternal life - was released to go abroad into the hearts of an innumerable multitude of believers who would drink freely of that wonderful fountain of life which He is. It was not until Mary broke the alabaster box of His earthly body was broken in death upon the cross that His Spirit was released to the Father to be sent forth by Him into every believing heart, bringing eternal life, incorruptible, immortal and unfading. My soul sings a thousand hallelujahs that I, too, am drinking of that exhaustless fountain of eternal life. And those who drink shall never thirst again, but the water that He gives is a fountain within them, a well of water springing up into life incorruptible and eternal.

"In the last day, that great day of the feast, Jesus stood and cried, saying, If any man thirst, let him come unto Me and drink. He that believeth on Me, as the scripture has said, out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water. But this spake He of the Spirit, which they that believe on Him should receive: for the Holy Ghost was not yet given; because that Jesus was not yet glorified." John 7:37-39. They could not receive His Spirit until He was glorified, and He could not be glorified until His Spirit was released by death. With what wonder and admiration do we see Him, only a few minutes after He had revealed Himself to the two disciples at Emmaus, appearing to His disciples, who sat behind locked doors for fear of the Jews. "Peace be unto you," He said in greeting. "As My Father hath sent Me, even so send I you." And He breathed on them and said unto them, "Receive ye the Holy Ghost." John 20:19-22. It was right here and at this very moment that they were born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible. Christ Jesus, the Word of God, came by His Spirit to dwell, not with them, but in them in the power of His endless life. He liveth and abideth forever because He Himself is incorruptible.
and His incorruptible life, released to us by His death and burial in the earth, is freely implanted in every believing heart to swallow up death with life and to bring forth at last that wonderful harvest all glorious in incorruption. "We have this treasure in earthen vessels, that the excellency of the power may be of God, and not of us. For God, who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, hath shined in our hearts, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ." 2 Cor. 4:7-8.

No words of mine can fully reveal the wonderful glory reserved and kept unfading in store for those who have been thus begotten of God. You will do yourself a great injustice if you try to make these spiritual truths fit the cold calculations of your natural mind. Spiritual things are spiritually discerned. By faith we understand! Heb. 11:3. "The things of God knoweth no man, but God hath revealed them to us by His Spirit." Never try to convince an argumentative Christian. All he will do is present his earthly way of looking at things and you will - end up depressed and thoroughly in the flesh yourself.

Even our blessed Lord Jesus incurred nothing but the wrath of His hearers when He attempted to answer their questions regarding the bread of life. Indeed, by the time the discussion was through, though they found no words to answer Him, they accused Him of blasphemy and sought to take His life. Only by the Spirit can spiritual things be discerned. Indeed, I have made the disappointing discovery that from a crowd of perhaps twelve thousand people, who respond loudly with their fervent amens, probably only twelve of them are able to grasp the truth and spiritually understand. Long ago, speaking of the blindness of Israel, Paul said, "Even unto this day, when Moses is read, the vail is upon their heart. Nevertheless when it (the heart) shall turn to the Lord, the vail shall be taken away. Now the Lord is that Spirit: and where the Spirit of the Lord is (where the Spirit is Lord), there is liberty. But we all, with open (unveiled) face, beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord." 2 Cor. 3:15-18.

"We speak wisdom among them that are perfect; yet not the wisdom of this world, nor of the princes of this world, that come to nought." 1 Cor. 2:6.

In one of my writings some time ago I made this statement: Jesus did not die that I might live. He died that He might give His life to me. No truth in the New Testament is more outstanding than the truth that the "I" must be crucified, and from henceforth it is "not I, but Christ," God's people are much too flippant in rendering their lip service to these immortal truths. Everywhere we hear preachers talking about the crucifixion of self; but how good it would be if God's dear people would pause with fasting and prayer, earnestly requesting that the Holy Spirit would illumine the truth of it to their hearts! Does not nature itself preach this message? Does nature not prove the statement of Jesus, "Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone; but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit?" You have been begotten of the Spirit, my Christian brother. When you believed, the incorruptible seed in the very person of God's Christ came to dwell in your heart. Christ in you is your hope of glory. He dwells in your heart by faith (Eph. 3:17) that you, being rooted and grounded in love, may be able to know the love of Christ that passeth knowledge. You are begotten of incorruptible seed, and that incorruptible seed is Christ, the Word of God. Christ can dwell in you only because He was crucified. This treasure we have in earthen vessels because His incorruptible life was released when the corn of wheat fell into the ground and died. When He bowed His head in death, He committed His eternal Spirit to all who would believe, that each might freely partake of the power of an endless life.

Now, lest this should seem too much to believe (though I know you must believe it), give ear to Peter, that God-given shepherd and feeder of the sheep, as He explains the mighty Pentecostal outpouring that came fifty days after the crucifixion of our Lord.

"Ye men of Israel, hear these words: Jesus of Nazareth, a man approved of God among you by miracles and wonders and signs, which God did by Him in the midst of you, as ye yourselves also know; Him, being delivered by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God, ye have taken, and by wicked hands have crucified and slain: whom God hath raised up, having loosed the pains of death: because it was not possible that He should be holden of it. For David speaketh concerning Him, I foresaw the Lord always before my face, for He is on my right hand, that I should not be moved. Therefore did my heart rejoice, and my tongue was glad; moreover also my flesh shall rest in hope: Because Thou wilt not leave my soul in hell, neither wilt Thou suffer Thine Holy One to see corruption. Thou hast made known to me the ways of life; thou shall make me full of joy with Thy countenance. Men and brethren, let me freely speak unto you of the patriarch David that he is both dead and buried, and his sepulcher is with us unto this day. Therefore being a prophet, and knowing that god had sworn with an oath to him, that of the fruit of his loins, according to the flesh, he would raise up Christ to sit on his throne; he seeing this before spake of the resurrection of Christ, that his soul was not left in hell, neither his flesh did see corruption. This Jesus hath God raised up, whereof we all are witness. Therefore being by the right hand of God exalted, and having received of the Father the promise of the Holy Ghost, he hath shed forth this, which ye now see and hear." Acts 2:22-33.

The mighty outpouring of the Holy Spirit at Pentecost was the outpouring of the Spirit of Jesus Christ. Jesus, the corn of wheat, released his life to the Father and the Father poured forth that eternal Spirit, the incorruptible seed, the power of an endless life into the waiting, thirsting hearts of all who believed. I am not trying to confuse regeneration with the baptism of the Holy Spirit. I am only trying to show how the death of Christ released his Spirit that every member of his body might be born of incorruptible seed and know the glory and power of an endless life.

Now ye are the body of Christ and members in particular. You are the body of Christ and members of the family of God. Through the washing of regeneration and the renewing of the Holy Spirit, you have been made partakers of the divine nature. O blessed and sacred truth, how can this pen of mine proclaim thy matchless worth? Yet thou hast proclaimed it, and the ear of faith hath heard that we who once were born in sin have now been begotten of thee! We who once knew only corruption now feel the pulsating life of thy incorruptible seed, and we who once were "of the earth earthy" are now members of the family of God. We are the body of Christ - O Lord, thou hast said it - and members in particular of the Christ body. "And of his fullness have all we received, and grace for grace" (John 1:16), that we might know the love of Christ and be filled with all the fullness of God (Eph. 3:19); yea, and more also that we might attain the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ. Eph. 4:13. "This priceless treasure we hold, so to speak, in a common earthenware jar—to show that the splendid power of it belongs to God and not to us. We are handicapped on all sides, but we are never frustrated; we are puzzled, but never in despair. We are persecuted, but we never have to stand it alone: we may be knocked down, but we are never knocked out! Every day we experience something of the death of the Lord Jesus, so that we may also know the power of the life of Jesus in these bodies of ours. We are always facing death, but this means that you know more and more of life." 2 Cor. 4:7-13 (Phillips Translation).

I do not wish to leave this area of our discussion without pointing out an eternal principle that applies to each and every one who has been made partaker of that incorruptible Christ seed. Let us not be flippant in our thoughts and our deliberations concerning the body of Christ. God has blinded the minds of most Christians to the true knowledge of the body of Christ simply because they have approached it roughly as Moses approached the burning bush, refusing to remove the shoes from their feet that Christ might wash them. They have come with head unbowed and heart unsanctified. They have come with lives unseparated from the flesh and its lusts, and they have stood in harmony and hand in hand with the harlot daughters of Babylon. They think they see, but weary themselves to find the door. They say, "We see;" therefore their sin remaineth.

The body of Christ is a mystery. It is a mysterious temple that God our Father is in the process of building. It is a temple not made with hands. The stones of its all-glorious walls are living stones, each one born of incorruptible seed and knowing in himself the power of an endless life. The body of Christ is the house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. The body of Christ is "My Father's house" in which are many mansions. Perhaps we would understand better if we should read, "In My Father's House are many temples," because we already know that we are the temples of the Holy Spirit and God dwells in us. There are many of these temples in "My Father's house." The Father's house, the house in which by God's grace I myself am a mansion, is the habitation of God through the Spirit. That, my beloved friend, is the mystical body of Christ.

In that glorious body, that wonderful temple of sons, there never has been a rift, a schism or division, but from the beginning of the age until now it has been steadily rising on the foundation of the apostles and prophets as each new living stone was readied and permanently placed within its living walls. The body of Christ is unhindered by fire, by tribulation or persecution, unaffected by the squabbles of sects and denominations or those harlot systems without, who vainly imagine their puny group to be the body of Christ, but rising in the power of incorruption and bound with the everlasting ties of God's eternal Spirit, it is builded a holy and living temple for the Lord.
The body of Christ is the fullness of Christ. The body of Christ is Jesus, God's first perfected Son, joined together with all that vast family of sons, who through the ages have been born again of the incorruptible seed, which He is. He became God's incorruptible seed, and we who are born of Him have been born of incorruptible seed. He is made after the power of an endless life (Heb. 7:16), and we, too, have been made after the power of an endless life. I cannot explain such marvelous grace. My mind is still to earthy and small to comprehend the fullness and power of words like these: "Of His fullness have all we received and grace for grace." Jesus, our elder brother, He who is the first-born Son, the Head of the mystical body of Christ, was made a priest after the order of Melchisdece. He was not made after the order of a carnal commandment as Aaron but after the power of an endless life. And we, too, God's younger sons, are made priests and kings after the order of Melchisdece, not after the order of Aaron to slavishly obey a commandment which our old nature could never keep, but after the power of an endless life. Yea, "ye are the body of Christ, and members in particular."

Since, then, we are the body of Christ, and we are born of incorruptible seed, and the power of an endless life is within us, I must now explain - and may the Holy Spirit give understanding - that, wonderful as is the truth that we are born of incorruptible seed, and glorious as is the fact that the power of an endless life is within us, that life must remain sealed up within us even as it was in Jesus until we, like Him, embrace the cross. When death worked in Jesus the Christ, then life worked in me; and when I am delivered unto death for Jesus' sake, then life works in you. With this truth firmly in mind we can much better comprehend the meaning of Paul's words, which I now quote and which clearly show how the things which lead to the destruction of the old self are the things that cause the incorruptible life within us to fully possess us and be released to work life in other members of the human race. "We have this (incorruptible) treasure in earthen vessels, that the excellency of the power (the power of an endless life) may be of God, and not of us. We are troubled on every side, yet not distressed; we are perplexed, but not in despair; persecuted, but not forsaken; cast down, but not destroyed; always bearing about in the body the dying of the Lord Jesus that the life also of Jesus might be made manifest in our body. For we which live are always delivered unto death for Jesus' sake, that the life also of Jesus might be made manifest in our mortal flesh. So then death worketh in us, but life in you." 2 Cor. 4:7-12.

From reading these inspired words of Paul we can easily see that, just as the crucifixion and death of our Lord Jesus released the eternal Spirit, so now also the same divine principle is working in us who have received His life. For, as Paul said, it is when death works in us that life works in others. No word that I can say or book that I can write can possibly show with greater clearness the absolute necessity of crucifixion and death to self. In my book, The Meaning of the Cross, I have explained the eternal fact of our crucifixion, showing that it was accomplished by the great wisdom of God when before the foundation of the ages He placed all men in His Son and then led Him to the accursed tree, where we were crucified with Him. He that hath suffered in the flesh hath ceased from sin that he should no more spend his time to the lusts of men, but to the will of God. The sufferings of this present world are not worthy to be compared to the glory that shall be revealed in us; and the glory to be revealed is none other than that incorruptible life which we have received of Him by faith and which will be manifested in wonderful glory at the appearing of Jesus Christ.

It is a great regret to me and an almost unmentionable shame that many who in our day profess to be the ministers of Jesus Christ will dare to assert that God wants His people to have the best of everything this corrupt age has to offer. They tell the people that God never wants them to be poor, but to be filled with all the good things of this world. He never wants them to suffer either in flesh or in spirit, but all the luxuries of this life are to be theirs and in general, as the common saying goes, they are to live "high on the hog." I shall not speak further of this other than to say that all such teaching emanates from and is the product of the carnal mind of man and not the Spirit of Christ. Let no man deceive you with such vain words, for it is true now as in ages past that "they who will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution." Tribulation, today as always, works patience; patience works experience, experience works hope, and hope makes not ashamed, because the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Spirit who is given unto us. Rom. 5:3-5.

Still in the hearts of the crucified these words echo more and more with truth: "But God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom the world is crucified unto me, and I unto the world." Gal. 6:14. No man should be moved by affliction, "for yourselves know that we are appointed thereunto." 1 Thess. 3:3. God has a wonderful intention in appointing His people to great suffering. Suffering weans us away from the natural realm with its corruption and death. It reveals how weak and shoddy the flesh with all its weakness is. It causes us to relinquish our childish grip on natural things with all their weak and beggarly elements that we may lay hold on life, our joy and crown eternally.

This treasure of incorruption we have in earthen vessels. The vessel itself is not the treasure. The treasure is the Christ life within the vessel. The alabaster box in the hands of that devout woman of Bethany may have been very beautiful indeed, but the treasure was the ointment within. When our Lord Jesus Christ was here on earth, mankind recognized Him only as a man. Some knew Him as the carpenter's son, the son of Joseph and Mary. Others saw Him as an ordinary Jew, and others called Him a deceiver and a man possessed with demons. But others had flashes of revelation as one might through a rift in a curtain catch a glimpse of the coming scene. Thus it was with Peter, who with a conviction as fresh as the winds of heaven affirmed, "thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." Nathanael, too, upon hearing the words of Jesus, affirmed with heavenly assurance, "Master, Thou art the Son of God; Thou art the King of Israel." John 1:49. And Thomas, who with questioning mind had walked and talked with the Savior for three years and more, now for the first time seeing beyond the shroud of His human flesh, with wonder starting from his eyes and with fingers pressed against his trembling lips burst forth with astonished joy, "My Lord and my God!" John 20:28. what shall we say of John, the Baptist, who cried with a voice that even today is echoing among the eternal hills, "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sins of the world." John 1:29. How good to hear that loving woman tell how she wept until He spoke her name! "Rabboni!" she cried as she fell in worship at His feet, and she, who had known Him only as Jesus of Nazareth, now knew Him as God's Son, the resurrection and the life. Yea, He was life itself. The incorruptible life, long hidden within the alabaster box of His human flesh, had now at last burst its bonds in death to manifest itself in the magnificent glory of the resurrection. The corruptible had put on incorruption, the mortal had put on immortality, and death, that had reigned since Adam, was swallowed up in victory, and all creation was shouting in triumph, "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?"

Have you considered the words of Paul, "You are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God?" Col. 3:3. Surely now our minds can grasp the message he is trying to teach us. Life at this moment is hidden in Christ and He is hidden in us, yet His life is our life and that life is incorruptible. The apostle did not end his inspired statement here, but continued with these revealing words: When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with Him in glory." Col. 3:4. When Jesus the Christ arose from the dead, He rose, not in corruption, but in incorruption; not in mortality, but in immortality; not in weakness, but in power; not in dishonor, but in glory; not a natural body, but a spiritual body. See 1 Cor. 15:43-44. And we, because of the incorruptible seed which is in us, shall soon, very soon, appear with Him in glory, for as we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly. 1 Cor. 15:49.

There was a day when our Lord Jesus was preaching and ministering in Caesarea Philippi, a little town nestled at the foot of Mt. Hermon, which is Mt. Zion. Deut. 4:48. It was here that Peter had uttered those memorable words, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." Matt 16:16. It was here that Jesus had forewarned them that He must go to Jerusalem and suffer many things of the chief priests and be crucified and that the third day He would rise from the dead. It was here that Peter had rebuked Him, saying, "Be it far from Thee, Lord: This shall not be unto Thee," and Jesus, turning to him, replied, "Get thee behind Me, Satan; thou art an offence unto Me." Offensive indeed are the exhortations of those who would spare us from the cross, for without the cross there can be neither incorruption nor glory. "Whosoever will save his (corruptible) life shall lose it, but whosoever will lose His life for My sake shall have it." It was here at Cæsarea that our blessed Lord had said, "The Son of man shall come in the glory of His Father with His angels; and then He shall reward every man according to his works. Verily I say unto you, There be some standing here, which shall not taste of death, till they see the Son of man coming in His kingdom." Matt. 16: 27-28. "And after six days Jesus taketh Peter, James and John his brother and bringeth them up into an high mountain apart, and was transfigured before them: and His face did shine as the sun, and His raiment was as white as the light. And, behold, there appeared unto them Moses and Elias talking with Him. Then answered Peter and said unto Jesus, Lord, it is good for us to be here: if Thou wilt, let us make here three tabernacles; one for Thee, and one for Moses, and one for Elias. While he yet spake, behold, a bright cloud overshadowed them: and, behold, a voice out of the cloud which said, This is My beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased; hear ye Him." Matt. 17: 1-5. Luke in his gospel adds the significant fact that Moses and Elias appeared in glory, and that Peter, James and John also saw Jesus in His glory. Luke 9: 31-32.

The indescribable wonder of the vision of transfiguration depicts in radiant splendor the ineffable glory, which saints will attain with Christ in His kingdom. It is a manifestation of the glory that comes when the incorruptible seed, now lying in the earth which we are, shall burst forth in the glory and power of an endless life. This is the glory that will unfold when He appears and we appear with Him in glory.

It was after six days, that is, six days after the events recorded in Matt. 16, that Jesus led His disciples up the towering mountain of Zion (Hermon), the mountain that Peter calls the holy mount. 2 Pet. 1: 18. This statement is typical and very significant, because it is after the six days of man's labor and travail, six one thousand year days after man's transgression, that the Lord's Day will come. In it man will do no labor. It is the millennial Sabbath, the long awaited kingdom of God. Therefore, the Holy Spirit has recorded for our learning that it was after six days that Jesus appeared in glory. The six days of labor since Adam are almost at an end. Five thousand, nine hundred and eighty-three (and perhaps more) years have already passed by. The seventh is at hand. Soon the sun will set forever on man's dreary six days of labor and the bells of heaven will ring in the seventh day, the kingdom, the Lord's day. Then will the angels chorus the hymn, "This is the day the Lord hath made; we will rejoice and be glad in it." Psa. 118: 24. "This is the Lord's doing; it is marvelous in our eyes." Verse 23.

When He appeared in glory, so the three evangelists say, His face did shine as the sun, His garments were white as the light, He was transfigured before them, and the proclamation went forth from the Father, "This is My beloved Son in whom I am well pleased. Hear ye him." For this reason Paul wrote to tell those of us in whom the incorruptible seed now dwells, "When Christ who is our life shall appear, then shall ye also appear with Him in glory." Nothing can be more certain than this and nothing more wonderful. Peter, who wrote with such assurance, telling us we are born of incorruptible seed, showed in no uncertain way that, because we are born of incorruptible seed, we are therefore heirs of an incorruptible inheritance. Thus with the certainty of a man inspired he wrote, "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which according to His abundant mercy hath begotten us again unto a lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead, to an inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for you, who are kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation ready to be revealed in the last time." 1 Pet. 1: 3-5.

"But some man will say, How are the dead raised up? and with what body do they come?" 1 Cor. 15: 35. "Behold, I shew you a mystery: We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump: for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed. For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality. So when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory." 1 Cor. 15: 51-53. This is the first resurrection. This is the harvest at the end of the age. This is the resurrection of the in Christ company. They are raised incorruptible because long ago through faith in Him they were begotten of incorruptible seed that liveth and abideth forever. They live because He lives. Since Christ has appeared, they now appear with Him in glory. With the sounding of the last trump of the great tribulation great voices in heaven were heard, saying, "The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of His Christ; and He shall reign forever and ever. And the four and twenty elders, which sat before God on their seats, fell upon their faces, and worshipped God, saying, We give Thee thanks, O Lord God Almighty, which art, and wast, and art to come; because Thou hast taken to Thee thy great power, and hast reigned. And the nations were angry, and Thy wrath is come, and the time of the dead that they should be judged, and that Thou shouldst give reward unto Thy servants the prophets, and to the saints, and them that fear Thy name, small and great; and shouldst destroy them that destroy the earth. And the temple of God was opened in heaven, and there was seen in His temple the ark of His testament: and there were lightnings, and voices, and thunderings, and an earthquake, and great hail." Rev. 11:15-19.

And there shall be no more death, neither sorrow nor crying; neither shall there be any more pain, for the former things have passed away. Christ has abolished death by the power of His endless life to bring to light life and immortality forevermore. Amen!

THAT I MAY ATTAIN

We are thankful for the opportunity that is offered us to send out the message of the hour through this book.
Many hundreds of people are being reached with the newness and freshness of a message that we truly believe to be the message God has given for the closing days of this dispensation. But writing, like all other human forms of communication, always has its limitations and inadequacies, and I freely admit that every time a new book goes out there is a measure of sadness and disappointment in my heart because I know that many things that should have been explained were not explained. And then there is always the knowledge that the truth has been cast as bread upon the water or as seed upon a field, some of which will spring up and bear fruit in earnest hearts and some of which will be cast away before ever it brings forth at all.

It is because of the desire to speak with each one individually and thus bring a more personal message to every reader that I am writing this message. The truth contained herein burns in my heart and I hope that while you read it you will grasp a new lease on God's life and come to a new experience in Him.

We are now living in the most momentous hours imaginable. In fact, it is beyond the power of human imagination to see and understand the greatness of the things that are happening all about us and to fully comprehend what God is beginning to do in His people. There is an awakening among the elect of the Lord that supersedes human knowledge. As at certain times of the year God puts into the minds of birds to flock up in preparation for migration to another realm or zone, so He is putting into the hearts of a chosen people the desire to ready themselves for the sonship He has prepared for them from the foundation of the world. He is putting into their hearts the very life and glory of the coming kingdom, and they are finding that they have lost all desire for the fleeting things of this present age.

We are now seeing before our very eyes the things that must precede the glory of the coming kingdom and the universal reign of Christ. We are seeing the rise of both spiritual and political Babylon. We are hearing a message such as has not been on the earth heretofore, and we are seeing a people being prepared of God for sonship who are to receive the glory of the kingdom with the Lord Jesus Christ and reign in splendor with Him in the glory of their Father in the kingdom prepared from the foundation of the world.

I desire by God's help to impress upon your minds that the sons of God who are being prepared to reign in the kingdom with Christ are not just ordinary Christians with ordinary experiences. There has been a great fault among Christian people of all ages. They have always been prone to try to make the word of God fit the measure of experience they had instead of making their experience fit the demands of the word of God. They have claimed to be filled with the Spirit of God when all they had was a tiny earnest of their inheritance. They have insisted that they were born again, though to this day they have not been able to see or understand the kingdom of heaven, and though we are plainly told that "that which is born of God cannot sin, for His seed remaineth in him and he cannot sin because he is born of God," (1 John 3:9 and 5:18) still we go on sinning and insisting that we are born of God. Some men claim to have the gift of tongues because they can speak five or six different languages all of which they learned by natural courses, and so on and on it goes endlessly.
Enquire of any denomination you wish and they will all have their own explanation of the new birth, or what it means to walk in the Spirit, or what it means to be in Christ, or what it means to be a son of God, but they all, every one, fall far short of the glorious experience the word of God actually describes. All this confusion of ideas and doctrines of men was permitted by the Lord for the age which we have just passed through, but we are about to see a new age, even the age of the kingdom of God, and we must prepare ourselves for that.

As I have sought God through the years with prayer and fasting, waiting and searching, a great conviction has come over me that God's people are being prepared for an entirely new realm of experience in Him. I am not referring to some imaginary realm to which men may think they have attained and about which they console themselves, thinking they are holier than the rest. I am speaking of a realm, which is in truth the realm of God, the realm of the heavenlies, and the realm of the kingdom. Furthermore I am convinced that many are due to attain to the glory of that new realm now while the rest of mankind and the rest of the Christians go on as usual in the old realm and on the old planes.

I am very sure that many who are reading these lines have experienced in truth that the present age with all it holds is slipping away. It is not only passing away in general but it is falling away from you personally and in particular. The things you once loved have become a bore to you. The things you rejoiced in have become old and sour and a heaviness to your spirit. The glamour of crowds and meetings, preachers and programs, has passed away and you are hard pressed to be interested in them any more. You find yourself losing interest in money and bank accounts, in the temporal progress of this age, and in many other things you formerly held dear. All this change is of God, and He is preparing His people for the glory of a new realm. He that has wrought us for this change is God, who has given us the Spirit as a guarantee. 2 Cor. 5:5. See also Phillip's translation.

Now there is no use whatever in a man's trying to imitate Jesus. The world is full of imitators and copy-cats who never rise beyond imitation. But Jesus Christ was a Son of God, the Son of God, who, while He walked the lowly earth in the likeness of men and in the fashion of men, yet lived in a realm unknown to men, unfamiliar to men, and independent of men. Though He lived on earth in flesh, yet He dwelt in heaven in Spirit and was able to say, "No man hath ascended to heaven but He that came down from heaven, even the Son of man which is in heaven." Paul taught us that our citizenship is in heaven, but I fear we have forgotten that we may freely walk in that realm as citizens, and have chosen rather to build our kingdoms and glories here as citizens of this present world system.

We can see and point out some very important examples of Christ's heavenly citizenship, which show us as nothing else can that all the time of His earthly ministry He lived and moved on the plane of a son of God. He lived in higher realm. He lived in the realm He preached about, even the realm of the kingdom of God. We cannot be too emphatic in saying that the glory of the realm of the kingdom of God cannot in any way be compared to the purely earthly realm that is part and parcel of the dispensation of the grace of God. While eternity's praise is not enough to extol the grace of God, we must admit that the age itself has been very human and lacking in the glory, government, judgment, justice, and power of God and filled with human ways and human ideas, a thousand divisions, and much sin. When Jesus was here, He lived and moved in the realm of the kingdom which He preached, and I would like you to see that in every respect and in every phase of His life He proved Himself to be living in the realm of the kingdom and totally independent of every part of this world's system.

Let us notice first that He was completely independent of that one thing to which we are always in bondage—money, the currency of this world system. I often wondered why it was that, though Jesus knew that Judas was thief, He allowed him to carry the money bag and, though He knew Judas was stealing the money, He said nothing about it. Now I know it is wrong to steal, but the point we should see is that in the realm where Jesus actually lived He did not need money and did not care whether there was any money in the bag or not. He was no more in need of money than a robin, an eagle, or an angel. He lived in a realm where God was all in all and everything belonged to Him. It was a realm higher than the realm of men. Judas by his thefts was trying to lay by in store for this realm, but Jesus was not living in this realm nor for it, but independent of it and far above it in the realm of the kingdom.

Again I have wondered why it was that at one time Jesus sent His disciples out to preach the message of the kingdom without scrip and without purse, without two coats and without a sword, but later on He said, "When I sent you out without purse and scrip and shoes, lacked ye anything? And they said, Nothing." Then He said, "But now he that hath a purse let him take it and likewise his scrip; and he that hath no sword let him sell his garment and buy one." Luke 22:35-36. What was the difference? Why did He tell them to do one thing one time and another thing later on? The difference is just this: When He sent them out at first, they were sent out to proclaim the kingdom, a realm beyond the bondage of this age, but when they were sent forth the second time, they were being prepared to preach the gospel of this age, which is the gospel of grace, a very inferior gospel and a very inferior age in which they would have to depend on purse, scrips, and other earthly things. When for us He laid down His own life, did He not rise again the third day and ascend up to heaven in the sight of His people? He lived in a different realm. He lived in the realm of the kingdom, which He preached, which He will soon come to establish, and of which you and I are to be a part.

There is abundant evidence both in the spirit and in the natural that we are at the very doors of a new age, even the kingdom age. We are without doubt going to be called upon to relinquish our hold on all the things of this age - our striving for comfort and ease, our security for old age, and all the other things that make us conformists to this present world system. Not only are we going to be called upon to relinquish our hold upon natural things but we are going to have to bid farewell to all the systems of a Babylonish church order. Let us not forget that the kingdom, which Christ and the apostles proclaimed is still ahead of us, and it is into the glory of this kingdom with all its freedom of earthly systems that we are now about to come.

Then again, when Jesus fed the five thousand, did He enquire of Judas whether or not there was enough money in the purse to buy food for the crowd? Positively not! Without a thought of money He provided food in the wilderness from the super-abundance of the resources of the kingdom in which He lived. And when one day at the wayside well He requested water of a Samaritan woman while His disciples had gone away to buy food, He Himself gave water to the woman, water of which if anyone drink, he shall never thirst again, but the water should be in him a well of water springing up unto eternal life. When at last His disciples came with the food they had bought with money from the bag, He would not eat, but said, "I have meat to eat that ye know not of." Neither food nor drink nor money was any consideration to Him, for He dwelt in a realm superior to our realm, even a realm, which He is now preparing us to enter.

In the realm of the kingdom where Jesus dwelt, He proved that He was not in bondage to taxes nor in straits to pay them. Taxation has been a bondage to the nations of all ages and in our day has become a relentless epidemic that will as readily rob you of the hopes of a life-time as a thief will rob you of your wealth or a cancer will rob you of your life. Yet Jesus was not in bondage to Roman taxation, first because He said, "Then are the children free," and the second because the taxes He paid He did not owe, but He paid them from the boundless resources of the kingdom of which He was a part. See Matt. 17:24-27.

But money and taxes are not the only bondages of this present age. With a little thought it will become plain that every modern convenience which is invented to make life easier brings us further into bondage until the whole civilized world staggers beneath the load of increasing debt and mounting usury.

Jesus was not in bondage to methods of travel. While He rode in a boat, He showed His power over the waves by walking upon their watery fields, and when He came into the little ship, both ship and passengers were immediately at the other side of the lake. He was not in bondage to the methods of learning common to this age, for He knew letters, never having learned, and amazed the doctors and lawyers with His questions and answers. He was never in bondage to houses or places to live. He was never sick or hurt and, when it came to death, He laid down His life voluntarily that He might take it again.

The things of which we have spoken show only one side of the picture of His life, for though He proved He was not in bondage to anything in this age, He also proved time and again that He was in absolute contact with God and that He lived and moved and had His being in the realm of the kingdom of heaven. Did not the heavens open at His baptism? Did not an audible voice speak to Him from heaven? Did not angels minister unto Him in the wilderness? Did He not talk to Moses and Elijah in the transfiguration and make His enemies fall flat on their backs at a mere word? John 18:6. Did He not heal all sick that came to Him without ever a failure, and raise dead men back to life, rolling away grave stones and stopping funeral processions?
In my heart I am sure that the curtain is ringing down on the church age. Paul's gospel of grace has run its course and fulfilled its mission in the same manner as the gospel of Moses ended with the coming of Christ. There is to be a rising into the heavenly realms in the end of this age, an invasion of the realms of principalities and powers. They will be cast down to the earth and will have much wrath because of the shortness of their time. Even now men and woman are rising into those new realms and the satanic hosts are filtering down nearer and nearer to the earth. Soon the world will be utterly filled with their delusions. The union of spiritual and political Babylon will take place very rapidly, for they already have much in common. The tribulation will soon be over and the kingdom will be here.

There is a change taking place in the hearts of the elect of God. The mind of Christ is beginning to overtake us and when it does, immortality and eternal life will overtake us as well.

The ways of God have no end. He is inexhaustible. The darkness of one day grows into the glory and light of the next. The cold of winter loosens her frigid grip so that from her icy storehouses waters flow to form the sparkling pools from whose bosom vapors rise to realms celestial to fall again in snow and rain like unto the living Word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God to accomplish that which He pleases. The feeble caterpillar which crawls along the ground, trod upon by the foot of man, is destined to flit on starry wings in a heavenly atmosphere no longer hampered by terrestrial things but transformed as though by God's Spirit from a creature of dust and gluttony to one which has put on a somewhat heavenly tabernacle. In like manner God hath made man a little lower than the angels that he might suffer death, and, being thus proved, that He might crown him with glory and honor in heavenly realms of the Spirit and place him over the work of His (God's) hands forever.

Let heaven and earth be called to witness the infinite love God bestowed upon us when He made known to us the secret of His will, His will being that in the dispensation of the fullness of times He would gather into Himself all things in heaven and earth. The promise that we should be heirs of the world is left to man, for when God put all things under him (man), He left nothing that is not put under him. As yet we do not see all things under man. But what do we see? We see Jesus Christ, the great Head of the body, the firstborn Son in this vast family of sons. We see Him already far above all principality and power and might and dominion and every name that is named, not only in this world (age) but also in the world (age) to come. Where He sits we shall also sit after our testing and preparation is complete. Therefore take courage in "seeing Jesus", for where He sits we shall also sit in the near future.

The promise of such eternal things is left to man, but not indeed to man who is wayward and sinful. Neither are such promises to Christians who are filled with their own ways. If our earthly life of toil and suffering is permitted to work for us, it will produce a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory for us. We must not look at the things which are seen in our toil and tribulation, for they will but cause our hearts to sorrow in heaviness; but as we know that all things are working together for our good, we look at the things that are not seen, for it is the unseen effect of our tribulations that produces in us and for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory. I would to God that all men everywhere might see that everything everywhere is working tirelessly and endlessly to produce sonship in those who are the called according to His eternal purpose. Everywhere! Everything! Temptations, tears, heartaches, unfaithful friends and brethren, loss of property, loss of business, perils, hateful neighbors, fiery furnaces, dens of lions, rugged crosses and isles of exile! All things! All things! All things, too numerous far to mention, are working for the good of God's elect, and are adding, though unseen now, an exceeding and eternal weight of glory to us.

Your disappointing failures often constitute your greatest successes, for God is not interested in your successes but in your faithful stewardship. A kingdom so vast as that, which is to come, can not be entrusted to any who are not faithful stewards. It is not your apparent success that will determine your right to reign, but your faithfulness in the trust committed to you whether it be large or small. Seeming success or failure means nothing to God. Faithfulness means everything! With God defeats are often victories. If your heart is right, they are always victories. The very thing that seems to completely defeat God's plan is the thing that brings it to pass. Was it not so with Joseph? He dreamed a dream in which the sun and moon and eleven stars bowed down to him. His father interpreted the dream to mean that the whole family would bow to him, and he thoroughly rebuked him for his dream. He dreamed again and the sheaves of his brethren bowed down to his sheaf, and they hated him for his dream and sold him into slavery in Egypt saying, "Now we will see what will become of his dreams." But it was their hateful action and the consequent apparent defeat of the plan of God that eventually brought his dreams to pass. His brethren that hated him and cast him out came and bowed before him and did obeisance. The full intent of God's heart and mind is clearly seen in Joseph's words: "You meant it for evil, but God meant it for good." (Gen. 50:20).

It is impossible to imagine the crushing load of grief and sadness that overwhelmed the disciples when Jesus died. Long speeches are not always the most eloquent ones nor are much weeping always the sign of the greatest sorrow. Never was heartache more truly manifest than in the two disciples who walked to Emmaus nor grief more eloquently spoken than in their plaintive words, "But we trusted that it had been He which should have redeemed Israel." Luke 24:21. When will we ever learn that the visible and evident always sells us short? It is the invisible and unseen that tells us the truth. In the painful travail and bloody sweat of Christ the disciples could see naught but the death of their hopes and the birth of their fears, but He who seeth the invisible "saw the travail of His soul and was satisfied", and knew that by His knowledge He should justify many. Isa. 53:11. For as many as have been cursed by Adam's sin shall be blessed by Christ's righteousness, and in paradox we may truly say that all who have died through Adam's life will live through Christ's death. For so hath God declared: "As in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive."

"Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? Shall tribulation, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword? As it is written, for Thy sake we are killed all the day long. We are accounted as sheep for the slaughter; Nay, in all these things we are more than conquerors through Him that loved us. For I am persuaded that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature shall be able to separate us from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus our Lord."

Seeing then that God has planned to rule the universe through the sons of God whom He has chosen and predestinated to share His glory, our whole desire and effort must be to conform our lives to His will that we might know God.

It is one thing to know God by the hearing of the ear. It is another thing entirely to know Him because we have seen Him by the Spirit. "He that is of God hath seen the Father." John 6:46. Job was a perfect and an upright man. He feared God and eschewed evil. On several occasions God vindicated Job's righteousness, saying that there was none like him in all the earth - a perfect and an upright man. After the loss of all his earthly possessions he still held fast to his integrity and did not charge God foolishly. Good as this was it did not fully satisfy the Almighty, for His intention clearly was to bring this good man to the place of sonship. He must be changed from a mere acquaintance of God to one who knew Him by seeing Him. Any suffering is light and small in comparison with this great blessedness. Therefore Job was called upon to suffer still more, and suffer he did - days and days of endless pain, hours and hours of ceaseless nagging from friends who meant well but who were terribly wrong. In their zeal they heaped taunts and reproaches upon his head, thinking his afflictions proved that God had forsaken him. Well might they have learned together with all the children of God that "whom the Lord loveth He correcteth, and scourgeth every son whom He receiveth." It was not the wordy argument of his friends that produced sonship in him, neither was it his own lengthy defense, but when all men had ceased to talk and their words of human wisdom were ended, then God spoke to him. The questions God demanded of him Job could not answer and he realized he had spoken without wisdom. Then in repentance that only God can give this good man cried from the depths of his night of sorrow, "I have heard of Thee by the hearing of the ear, but now mine eye seeth Thee; wherefore I abhor myself and repent in dust and ashes." He saw God! That is what made the difference. That is what made this perfect man see that he was perfect only in the light he had - which was the hearing of the ear - but now a new and better light had dawned and he saw God with his eye, and all his former goodness dwindled to dust and ashes.

God has always been pleased when we believe Him without seeing any outward signs. This has always been His will. A man who cannot believe without seeing does not really believe at all, for faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen. The point I wish to make clear, however, is this: Walking by faith without seeing must eventually produce walking by sight, for it is when we see Him that we come to know Him. "We know that, when He shall appear, we shall be like Him, for we shall see Him as He is, and every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself even as He is pure." 1 John 3:3. "Whosoever sinneth hath not seen Him neither known Him." 1 John 3:6.

Isaiah had been a mighty prophet of the Lord in Israel, but it was not until King Uzziah died that Isaiah saw the Lord. Isa. 6. It was when the prophet saw Him, high and lifted up, the smoke of God filling the temple while cherubim chanted, "Holy! Holy! Holy! is the Lord God of hosts" that this mighty man of God saw his own uncleanness before God. With the same penitent voice that we heard in Job Isaiah cried, "Woe is me, for I am undone! For I am a man of unclean lips and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips. For mine eyes have seen the King, the Lord of Hosts." Just to know God afar off is wonderful. Just to hear of Him by the hearing of the ear is benefit and blessing incomprehensible. Even this is sufficient to transform a life. But to draw nigh to God and see Him is to be changed into that same image and to be cleansed from all unrighteousness. When the prophet saw himself in the light of this Sun of Righteousness, he cried out in the shame of his uncleanness. Then and only then did the seraphim come with a live coal from off the altar of God and lay it upon the prophet's lips, saying, "Lo, this hath touched thy lips and thine iniquity is purged and thy sin taken away." Then in the light of this new revelation of God he heard God speaking to him in an audible voice.

"Whosoever sinneth hath not seen him." The crying need of our hearts is to see Him and thus know Him. Then shall we be at last free from our inbred sin. The experience of seeing God is an experience we have all thought of as far off in some future generation, but I want to show you a mystery. We can see God now just as Job and Isaiah did. Though our experiences may differ, yet the result will always be the same—freedom from sin. In the midst of this turmoil Job cried, "I know that my Redeemer liveth, and He shall stand in the latter days upon the earth, and though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God: Whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold, and not another." He was positively sure in his own mind that in some distant future day he would see God, but what he did not know was that God at that very moment was leading him into the coveted experience. Within a few days he would shout with ecstatic joy, "Wow mine eye seeth Thee!" Job. 42:5. It is easy to put off spiritual experience for the millenniums to come, but God would like to have us enter them now.

"That I may know Him" was the ceaseless longing of Paul's heart. Phil 3:10. Too many sermons are preached about God, but too few people come to know Him personally. You can never know people by hearing about them even from their closest friends. You must see them, know them, and understand them personally. However vivid a description may be given of an individual, you could still pass him on the street without knowing who he was or even live in the same house with him without knowing he was the person in question. So also it is with God. You will know many things about Him by hearing, but you will only know Him when your eye sees Him. "No man can see God and live," but that does not mean that he will give up the ghost and die. It means that he will never live the same any more, but will live as God lives in the Spirit.

Books are written by the score on how to pray, but we really don't learn to pray that way. We learn by praying. Multiplied sermons are preached on how to imitate Christ, but God is not interested in your imitation. A parrot may imitate a man's voice but it is still a parrot, or a monkey may imitate a man's actions but he still remains a monkey. So also a carnal man may imitate God and try to be like Christ but he is still a carnal man. The only thing that satisfies God is the dying of the old man and the formation of the new, the Adamic nature being supplanted by the Christ nature, the corruptible being swallowed up by the incorruptible, the mortal by the immortal. "He who is of God, he hath seen the Father." John 6:46. To see Him is to know Him.

To know God is to become acquainted with His ways. He made known His ways unto Moses, His acts unto the children of Israel. Most of us never know anything about God except what acts we see Him do. Men love to feast their eyes on healings and miracles, but you will not come to know God by witnessing His acts however great they may be. To know the ways of God is another matter. Two million Israelites knew about the acts of God, but only one man knew His ways. The multitudes knew God by the parting of the Red Sea, the manna on the ground, the water that flowed from the rock but Moses knew the eternal purpose God had in mind when He created the worlds, when He called Abraham, Issac, and Jacob. He knew why God had raised up this rebellious people and what the ultimate end of it would be in the ages to come. He had seen God face to face and had spoken to Him face to face and was carefully making all things according to the pattern God had showed him in the mount.
The opinions we form by hearing about people are usually found to be wrong after we have come to know them personally. This is also true concerning God. When you come to know Him, you will find Him very unlike the description given by theologians. You will come to know that much that they teach is only rubbish because it is contrary to the nature of God. It certainly was so with the Jewish theologians and doctors of the law. When Jesus came, He smashed their theories to bits and tore the robes of their ecclesiasticism to ribbons. He ate with sinners, cast the devil out of the Syrophoenician, let a sinful woman wash His feet, forgave a thief, healed on the Sabbath, ate with unwashed hands, called the best religionists of His day bars, hypocrites, serpents, snakes, children of the devil, whitel sepulchers, and a generation of vipers. They thought that they knew God, but they didn't. He was more pleased with the sincerity of sinners than with the ritualism of scribes and Pharisees. When you come to know Him, you will find that it is the same now as it was then. He is outside the modern church and is knocking at the hearts of individual men and women for admittance. Rev. 3:20. If you want to know Him, you will find Him "outside the camp".

A man who knows God can answer questions about God because he knows God. "That which we have seen and heard declare we unto you." 1 John 1:3. These are the words of a man speaking from beyond the veil of the flesh, from the holy of holies, the presence of God. "God is light and in Him is no darkness at all." 1 John 1:3.

apprehend that for which also I am apprehended of Christ Jesus." To apprehend means to lay hold of. Thus he says, "If I may lay hold of that for which Christ has laid hold of me," that is, the resurrection. Phil. 3:11-12. He declared he had not yet attained what he wanted, but he said, "This one thing I do: forgetting the things which are behind and reaching forth unto the things which are before, I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus." Phil. 3:13,14.

So, you see, this life in Christ was the prize he wanted to attain. He was straining every spiritual nerve to receive it. Whether or not he ever attained is more than I know. Perhaps he had to die in faith without receiving that perfect prize. His exhortation in verse 15 is this: "Let us therefore as many as be perfect (Weymouth-mature) be thus minded." However foolish such things may appear to the natural mind, let all who are mature be thus minded.

The natural mind with its natural way of looking at things never did and never will understand the things of the Spirit of God, for "they are foolishness unto him; neither can he know them, for they are spiritually discerned. But he that is spiritual judgeth all things, yet he himself is judged of no man. For who hath known the mind of the Lord that he may instruct Him? But we have the mind of Christ." 1 Cor. 2:14-16. The natural man cannot comprehend the incomprehensible. His faith can never revel in the impossible. He is hermetically sealed on the natural side of things. The spiritual man lives in a different world. While his physical body walks the earth, his spirit roams the elysian fields of the realm above and basks in the sunshine of his heavenly citizenship. He is in the world but not of it. He is prone to speak of the things that pertain to that spiritual world and is counted a fool by the natural man. He is like a man from another world who speaks freely of the things he knows, but to those who do not know his words are idle tales. No man will attain the prize of God by troubling his head about what other people think, for the thoughts of man are not the thoughts of God. Therefore let all who would attain the power of the resurrection forget everything that pertains to human learning and knowledge and press toward the goal set before us. The world by wisdom knew not God, so why am I obliged to hear its wisdom? Yea, the wisdom of man is foolishness with God.

Why should it be thought a thing impossible that God should raise the dead? And why should it be thought a thing impossible that a man should live forever, his mortality being swallowed up by God's life? We have all been taught to believe that death is sure and certain, but if we can find even one man who escaped death, then death is not certain. Enoch, the seventh from Adam, did not die. He escaped death. In fact, it is written, "By faith Enoch was translated that he might not see death." Heb. 11:5. Elijah did not die, for he was taken up into heaven in a whirlwind. And who dare say that John the apostle died when Jesus declared, "If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee?" John 21:21-24. And hear the inspired words of the apostle Paul: "Behold I shew you a mystery; we shall not all sleep (die)." 1 Cor. 15:51.

Said Jesus, "Your fathers did eat manna in the wilderness and are dead. This is the bread that cometh down from heaven, that a man may eat thereof and not die." John 6:49,50. "I am the living bread which came down from heaven. If a man eat of this bread, he shall live forever." John 6:51. "Verily, verily, I say unto you, if a man keep My sayings, he shall never see death." John 8:51. However fantastic or impossible such truths may appear to the natural man, my heart goes on longing to know the power of His resurrection. Should I never attain, I know I shall but sleep and stand in my lot at the end of the age with those who have attained. In this flesh of mine God shall some day be seen-God who is life and cannot die. "If Thou hadst been here, my brother had not died," sobbed Martha. Of course he would not have died if Jesus had been there. How much less should we die when God's Son dwells within, He who only hath immortality, dwelling in the light that no man approacheth.

Men have come forth with numerous doctrines and theories concerning the resurrection. With natural minds they have arranged each event in order. They have debated and fought over the theories of pre- and post-millennialism. Some have had all the dead, good and bad, rising at once. Others have divided them up into companies. This is all very interesting material, but it really doesn't get us very far or bring us any closer to God. "Tis true there will be a great day of resurrection, but the thing the theologians have missed in their zeal is the thing they always miss - the most important point of all. in this case they have forgotten that the resurrection is not so much an event as a person, and that person is Jesus Christ Himself. Can you not hear that wonderful conversation between Jesus and Martha? Listen to them as they talk. Said Martha, "If Thou hadst been here, my brother had not died. But I know that even now whatsoever Thou wilt ask of God, God will give it Thee." Jesus saith unto her, "Thy brother shall rise again." Martha saith unto Him, "I know that he shall rise again in the resurrection at the last day." Jesus said unto her, "I am the resurrection and the life: he that believeth in Me, though he were dead, yet shall he live: and whosoever liveth and believeth in Me shall never die. Believest thou this?" She replied, "Yea, Lord, I believe that Thou art the Christ, the Son of God, which should come into the world."

"Believest thou this?" questioned the Son of God. "Believest thou this?" He asks today. Let us answer that question with Martha. Do we also believe that He is the resurrection? The importance of this understanding cannot possibly be overestimated, for herein lies the great truth of the power of His resurrection. If Jesus Himself is the resurrection, then to have Him is to partake of the resurrection here and now, for if a man eats of this bread, he shall never die. John 6:50. This, indeed, is the life of Jesus being made manifest in our mortal flesh. 2 Cor. 4:11. Again, "if the Spirit of Him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, He that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken (make alive) your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you." Rom. 8:11.

There is abundant truth in Rom. 8:13. "If we live after the flesh, we shall die." Is it not true that all Christians, practically speaking, live and move and have their being after the dictates of the natural? The result is they all die. "But if ye through the Spirit do mortify the deeds of the body, ye shall live." To live in the Spirit is to live on the plane of the resurrection. All our natural ways of looking at things must go if we are to enjoy this heavenly citizenship. It is those who are led by the Spirit who are the sons of God. They alone can begin to enjoy the power of the resurrection.

I have been staggered by the truths contained in 2 Corinthians, chapters 4 and 5. We are all accustomed to reading these passages from the King James version and have unconsciously built our theories around each verse. I wish, therefore, to quote a few verses from chapter 5 from Goodspeed's translation. "For I know that if this earthly tent that I live in is taken down, God will provide me a building in heaven to live in not built by human hands, but eternal. This makes me sigh with longing to put on my heavenly dwelling, for if I do I shall never be disembodied. For I who am still in my tent sigh with anxiety, because I do not want to be stripped of it, but to put on the other over it so that what is only mortal may be absorbed in life. It is God Himself who has prepared me for this change, and has given the Spirit as a guarantee." 2 Cor. 5:1-5.

The death and the resurrection of Jesus Christ are the very heart of the Gospel. The death of Jesus alone would be small consolation for any of us, for "if Christ be not risen, ye are yet in your sins and all who have fallen asleep in Jesus are perished." The fact that He is alive and ever liveth flows out from the heart of the whole plan of the Gospel and redemption. The resurrection must not be limited to the physical rising of one man even though He was the Son of God. It is more by far than a physical fact. When he died, He died for me personally and He died for you personally. Because of this I was with Him in what He did and accomplished and so also were you. Did not Paul declare, "If ye then be risen with Christ, seek those things which are above?"

It is an eternal fact that both our death and our resurrection are accomplished in our identification with Him. If by the Holy Spirit we can see this truth, our struggles to attain will be over. For the thing we wish to attain has already been attained. The thing you are searching for is your possession. The thing you long for you possess. A perfect and complete work was accomplished by the Christ of God. It is finished and nothing can be accomplished by a struggle. I am not trying to persuade you to live in lethargy and empty faith, but our only struggle will be manifest in our effort to receive by faith what has been eternally done for us. If we can believe the debt has been completely paid, we will no longer spend our lives struggling to pay it. Even a sinner must discover that -

Jesus paid it all;
All to Him I owe.
Sin had left a crimson stain;
He washed it white as snow.

If we can believe that Jesus died for us, then there is no possible reason why we should die. But we all unconsciously or consciously go on making preparation for death. If we believe that Jesus rose again and we rose again with Him, then we can present ourselves to God as living men risen from the dead. When he died, we died. When He rose, we rose. When He ascended, we ascended. When He was seated in the heavenlies, we were seated with Him in heavenly places. It is of faith that it might be by grace.

I know it is impossible to see such a truth as the above with the natural mind, but though eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither hath entered into the heart of man the things that God hath prepared for them that love Him, yet He hath revealed them to us by His spirit. I humbly beg of you to see that it is quite impossible to understand any spiritual truth without the revelation of the Spirit. Until the Holy Spirit moves, the earth is without form and void and darkness is upon the face of the deep. Only let God say, "Let there be light," and light will push its golden fingers through the gloom and darkness of your minds. The struggling of a drowning man is often the thing that hinders his rescue. So also our strugglings and labors hinder us from entering into His rest.

Our hearts are often filled with unbelief because of the errors tradition has taught us. Human beings are always prone to form doctrines that seem to fit in with the general experience of mankind. Because the vast majority of Christians live after the flesh, we are inclined to discredit the possibility of any living after the Spirit. Because "all seek their own", we are inclined to think that none can seek the things that are Jesus Christ's. Because we see nothing but death working in men, we do our best to spiritualize any scripture that dares to imply that life could work in us instead.

There are certain times and seasons when God brings to life truths that have been allowed to lie in grave clothes for ages and dispensations. As a seed lies dormant in the winter months and then bursts into life in the warmth and rain of spring, so also has the truth of God been allowed to lie in death throughout the wintry night of the past six thousand years now at last to burst into a fruitful harvest in the millennial spring. Did you ever notice the eternal truth of this scripture, spoken first by Isaiah and repeated by Philip to the Ethiopian eunuch two thousand years ago? "In His humiliation His judgment was taken away and who shall declare His generation, for His life is taken from the earth."

Acts 8:33. For almost twenty centuries people have believed that the humiliation of Christ referred only to His rejection by Israel at His first coming, and they have thought that the taking of His life from the earth referred only to His death on the cross. But the unfolding revelation of this hour teaches us that the whole church age has been a time of Christ's humiliation and a time of humiliation for the people of Christ. The children of God have known only humiliation for centuries and all true judgment has been taken away from the earth. It is also true that His life is taken from the earth and, in truth, it has been taken away from the earth for all these centuries that have passed, for, while men rejoiced in spirit, their bodies were on the journey to the grave. But the winter of night and death is almost over. It is time for the flowers to appear on the earth and the singing of birds to come. It is time for the humiliation of Christ to be ended and His life to be restored to the earth. It is time to know Him and the power of His resurrection, for His kingdom is at hand.

The hour is at hand for mortality to be overtaken by immortality. The hour has come for corruption to be overtaken by incorruption. The time has come for death to be swallowed up of life. For this corruptible must put on incorruption and this mortal must put on immortality. So, when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, death is swallowed up in victory.

Christ Himself is the resurrection and Christ is the life. All who believe in Him, though they were dead, yet shall they live, and all who live and believe in Him shall never die.
When the renowned poet, Sir Walter Scott, lay dying, he said to his servant, "Bring me the Book." "But, Sir Walter," replied the servant, "there are twenty thousand books in your library. Which one do you wish me to bring?" "There is only one Book," replied Sir Walter; and without hesitation the servant brought him the Bible.

No book ever written can be compared to the Bible, for this is the word of God. It does not merely contain the words of God. The Bible is the Word of God. The mighty Lord Himself is the Author divine, inspiring each truth, each sentence, and each word. It is a book free of errors, whether historical, scientific or prophetic. It is free of all contradiction and in its original state completely perfect. The created word, which includes all creation, the written word, which is the Bible, and the living word, which is Jesus Christ, are a threefold word, speaking with sublime harmony of the purpose which God designed in Jesus Christ long before the ages began. No other book ever written can compare to this whose depths are fathomless and whose truths are inexhaustible. None can uncover the past with such accuracy or with so few words, and none but this can draw aside the darkling veil that shrouds the future to reveal its secrets with an accuracy as certain as history itself. Not one jot or tittle of it has failed or will fail until all is fulfilled. Think not that our heavenly Father is distressed because of the blatant rantings of atheists. Well He knows they are but fools who in their hearts declare, "There is no God." Nor does He rouse Himself to disprove the error of the evolutionist whose childish defiance seeks to rob the Creator of His creation and the Almighty of His power. God wrote this Book and breathed into its pages light and understanding to all that fear the Lord, but darkness and death to all who doubt His goodness and fear Him not.

Centuries ago the Psalmist questioned, "If the foundations be destroyed, what can the righteous do?" Psa. 11:3. We are living in a day when "darkness covers the earth and gross darkness the people." These are dark ages of doubt, fear, confusion and misunderstanding. Men in our day allude to the middle centuries as the dark ages, but they do not seem to know that darkness beclouds their own understanding, hiding from their eyes the glorious revelation for these closing days of time. When the Spirit of God spoke, saying, "Darkness shall cover the earth, and gross darkness the people," Isa. 60:2, He was speaking of the day in which we now live. The earth of which He speaks is the world as a whole. Terrible is the darkness and confusion that in our day holds mankind in its chain. The world is groping in darkness and misunderstanding to such an extent that all things in it are out of course. Millions starve while plenty abounds. Strong nations cry, "Peace, peace," though their guns are never silent and blood flows like rivers to the sea. People cry out for more and more knowledge only to find, as they did in Eden, that their knowledge brings death and sorrow, trouble and confusion. But, alas, dark and forbidding as is the darkness that covers the earth, it is but early twilight compared to the gross darkness that covers the people.

Perhaps you will ask this question, "To whom does the prophet refer when he speaks of the people?" There is only one answer that can be given. The people referred to here are the people of God, for whether they be Jews, Israelites, or Christians, darkness, yea, gross darkness that can be felt, covers them all. As far as I am concerned, and I think God has given me some wisdom for these last days, the grossest darkness of the hour hangs like a thick cloud over that whole system, which we in our ignorance refer to as "the church", but which the Bible unerringly brands as Mystery Babylon the great, mother of harlots and abominations of the earth. Rev. 17:1-7. Such gross darkness enshrouds this confused system that those who dwell within its precincts cannot see their way. The blind lead the blind and both fall into the ditch. Her prophets preach for hire. Her shepherds fleece the sheep. Her healers heal for prominence and gain. The cry of her hireling ministry is gold, silver, and dollars! Money, money, money, money! No project is ever undertaken for God without the subtle appeal for cash. While the church of Rome pleads for money to relieve the distress of the world, her own coffers bulge at the seams with an estimated five hundred billion dollars. The radio, the television, the mails, and the meetings are loud and unashamed in their wanton appeals for more and more money for this work and that, for this orphanage and that, for this missionary and that until all who listen should surely know that modern religion is empowered by the financial system of this evil world and not by the Spirit of God.

Against the black and forbidding cloud of darkness that covers the earth and the gross darkness that covers the people it is my purpose in this article to show that God has reserved to Himself in our day a people who is completely different, a people who is wholly His. He has a people who dwells in the light which Christ Himself is, elect according to the foreknowledge of God, sanctified by His Spirit, obedient to their heavenly Father, and sprinkled with the cleansing blood of Jesus Christ. Unto them He calls, "Rise up, my love, my fair one, and come away. For, lo, the winter is past; the rain is over and gone. The flowers appear on the earth; the time of the singing of birds is come, and voice of the turtle is heard in our land; the fig tree putteth forth her green figs, and the vines with the tender grape give a good smell. Arise my love, my fair one, and come away." S. of 8.2:10-13.

May the Spirit of the living God lay His finger of inspiration upon all that is true, enlightening the eyes of our understanding, giving us abundantly of the wisdom of God that we may be able to discern and easily differentiate between that virgin church without spot or wrinkle, which Jesus Christ is preparing for Himself, and that bawdy harlot system, full of names of blasphemy, who with her multiplied sects and denominations now proudly boasts, "I sit a queen, and am no widow, and shall see no sorrow." Rev. 18:7. One would certainly think that God's people would readily see the difference between the virgin and the harlot, but such is not always the case. Would God that the eyes of all men could now see the hidden mystery of Christ and the true church! Would God that all men could see that this hidden mystery, this pearl of great price, has nothing in common with that tradition-ridden system which men in all walks of life believe to be the church. So thoroughly do they believe this vast system of denominations to be the church that they willingly follow it all their lives, giving their time, their talent, and their abundance of wealth to the upbuilding of that which, being increased in goods and having need of nothing, has made herself drunk with the blood of the saints and thrust Christ Himself outside her doors.

Tradition is an exceedingly powerful force. Tradition in my opinion is neither wholly good nor wholly evil. Whately said, "Tradition, as held by the Romanists, is subordinate to scripture and dependent on it as some parasite plants are dependent on the tree that supports them. The former cling to the latter and rest upon it; then gradually overspread it with their own foliage till by little and little they weaken and then smother it." This is true, but it need not be said only of Romanists. It is true of every religious denomination in the world of whatsoever sort or brand it be down through all ages unto the present time. This I declare to be true without any exception to the rule. The same Whately said, "To follow imperfect tradition in order to avoid erring in our own judgment is but to exchange one danger for another." "I am well satisfied," said Thomas Arnold, "that, if you let in one little finger of tradition, you will have the whole monster, horns, tail and all."

The Lord added to the church daily such as should be saved. Acts 2:47. The English word church, as I think the reader knows, has come from the Greek word ekklesia (ecclesia). Ek - means out; kaleo means call. Ekklesia therefore means the out-called or the called out. The English word church, therefore, means the called out. It is concerning this true church, the sacred mystery of God that I wish now by the help of the Spirit to write.

In the preceding paragraph we quoted the words of Whately concerning the power of tradition to smother and destroy the truth, and I must state with the greatest possible clarity that nowhere in all the world has tradition held more deadly sway than in the church system. In the quotation written above Mr. Whately makes this significant comparison: Tradition ... is dependent upon scripture ... as some parasite plants (are dependent) on the tree that supports them. The former (the parasite) clings to the latter (the tree) and rests upon it, then gradually overspreads it with its own foliage till by little and little they weaken and smother it." I once stood admiring a great oak tree with stalwart trunk and spreading branches; but this oak tree was different from the other trees in the forest, for in spite of its great size and beauty it was completely dead. Its life had been smothered out by an ivy that had grown up from the ground, encircling the tree and the branches as a boa constrictor encircles and crushes its prey, until it had smothered the giant oak and spread its own foliage in its place. That is what tradition has done to the church. The foliage of tradition has spread itself over the church until the true is lost in the untrue, the real in the unreal.

At the beginning of the dispensation of grace the world was visited by events so momentous in their power and glory that all things were changed from that time onward. In the eternal realm before the ages were formed, and ages before man first saw the light of earth's day, the almighty Lord set in motion His omniscient and immutable purpose for the ages, which were to follow. As a year is filled with days and a day is filled with hours, so eternity is filled with ages and ages with dispensations. Let it be thoroughly known and devoutly believed that our all-wise heavenly Father planned the events of each successive day from the very first age unto the ages of ages far beyond the comprehension of man.

The eternal purpose of Him who purposed all things after the counsel of His own will is being worked out one step at a time in each succeeding age-day in like manner as people who read these lines have often planned in advance the work for each successive day of the week. Is it not so that many of the wives and business men now reading these lines have plans in mind for today and tomorrow and perhaps for each day of the week?

Whether consciously or unconsciously we all plan ahead, daily and even hourly working toward some human goal. Ask any little boy on the street what he wants to be when he grows up to be a man and in nine cases out often he will give you an answer. His answer may be but a notion and naught but childish imagination, yet the fact that some purpose is in his little head shows that he is the offspring of that wise heavenly Father whose almighty power worketh all things according to the counsel of His will so that we should be to the praise of His glory who first fixed our hopes in Him. If you remove purpose aionian and eternal from your understanding, then your sheltered harbors become whirlpools and all your mighty rocks become misty clouds. Your eternal treasure house of hope is left full of gaping holes where thieves break through and steal, and you yourself are left as hopeless as a crow in the ocean or a pelican in the wilderness. Dare we know that a little bird would plan a nest to rear her young and that a puny man would spend one-third of his life schooling himself for a work he purposes to do and still imagine the infinite, the all-wise, the almighty and immutable could be purposeless? I trow not, for whatsoever you see of purpose in God's creation, whether birds or beasts or men, that purpose is there because they are creatures of Him who purposed all things according to the counsel of His will.

There is nothing that opens the wellsprings of love, of faith and understanding, in the human heart like the knowledge of His purpose. What infinite joy, what satisfaction and assurance soothes each troubled soul when for the first time in our lives our all-wise heavenly Father is seen to be a God of purpose, knowing the end from the beginning because He planned the beginning and planned the end! He created all things and made all things and brought all things into being that His glorious purpose might be fulfilled. It was this triumphant knowledge that filled the heart of the apostle Paul when he wrote these immortal words to the ecclesia at Rome: "And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to His purpose. For whom He did foreknow He also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of His Son, that He might be the firstborn among many brethren. Moreover whom He did predestinate, them He also called: and whom He called, them He also justified: and whom He justified, them He also glorified. What shall we then say to these things? If God be for us, who can be against us?" Rom. 8:28-31.

You will probably ask me the question, "Did God plan the fall of man?" I answer with assurance, "Most certainly He did." You may ask again, "Why would God plan a thing like that?" The answer is very simple. It is this: He had a purpose in the fall of man, a purpose lost to our sight because tradition has blinded our eyes, but that purpose was so far-reaching and glorious that it is the very foundation of a perfect universe to be unveiled when the plan of God is complete. Hear now what the Spirit of God says concerning this tremendous truth. Paul, writing to the Romans, drew aside the veil to give mankind a clearer view into the mysteries that lay... hidden in God's mind from the foundation of the ages. This is what he clearly stated: "I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory that shall be revealed in us. For the earnest expectation of the creature waiteth for the manifestation of the sons of God." Now take particular notice of the inspired words that follow. "For the creature was made subject to vanity, not willingly, but by reason of Him (God) who has subjected the same in hope. Because the creature itself also shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the sons of God." Rom. 8:18-21.

A Chinese proverb says, "Never pass beautiful scenery in a hurry." Let us apply this principle to these verses, for here lies one of the most beautiful scenes in all the Bible. God has a purpose in suffering and suffering came by the fall; and, when the purpose is revealed, all the dreadful suffering of all the ages, which I admit is beyond the power of description, will be unworthy of mention compared to the glory that has been heaped upon us as a direct result of it. There is a purpose in suffering, in pain, in sickness, in bereavement, in heartache, disappointment, separation and betrayal, and these all came as a direct result of the fall, which is our subjection to vanity. Name any suffering you wish; then lift up your eyes to God with love and trust and He will tell you that your suffering is for a magnificent purpose that only He at present understands. He will show you that suffering is God's fire that melts the rock, releasing the precious gold that will form a priceless vessel in the Father's house, which is in truth the body of Christ and which in truth you are. "Why did God allow this tribulation, this pain, this calamity?" you ask. Have faith to wait and see, after He has tried you, you shall be as gold. We have a high priest who is holy, harmless, undefiled, separate from sinners, and made higher than the heavens. Beautiful, isn't it? But have you not read that this same high priest that had been through the grinding mill and the burning fire, and every priest in His kingdom of priests, every vessel in His holy, living temple which we are, will be found to be a precious stone because it is a tried stone, disallowed of men but chosen o/God? 1 Pet. 1:7.

"Why can't I be like other people, Lord," so oft I cry;
"I see the careless multitude go laughing, passing by.
Why must I bear this burden till it seems that I must die?"
Then the answer comes, "Have I not chosen you?"

I cried, "O Lord, why am I made a laughing stock to foes?
"Why can't I lightly turn aside from other people's woes?
"Why is it that from year to year I bear the worldly blows?
Then the answer comes, "Have I not chosen you?"

And some day, when I'm crowned within that home beyond the sky,
I'll ask, "Why am I honored thus?" while countless ages fly;
He'll smile and answer sweetly with the love-light in His eye,
"My child, it is because I've chosen you."
Herbert Buffum.

Thus it was that at the beginning of the dispensation of grace the Lord began that special phase of His aionian purpose, the calling out of a people who would be in the image of Jesus Christ, members of His body, of His flesh, and of His bones, the ecclesia of God. Never did He call them to become members of one of man's denominations. He called them to be members of Himself, of His body, of His flesh, and of His bones. Therefore it is written, "They continued steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship, and in breaking of bread and prayers. And fear came upon every soul: and many wonders and signs were done by the apostles. And all that believed were together, and had all things in common... And they, continuing daily with one accord in the temple, and breaking bread from house to house, did eat their meat with gladness and singleness of heart, praising God, and having favor with the people. And the Lord added to the church daily such as should be saved." Acts 2:42-47.

It is my earnest prayer to God that our eyes may be enlightened and our understanding made keen by the Spirit of God so that we may grasp the truth that, when the Lord added to the church daily such as were being saved, He was forming and adding to that true ecclesia, that called out company, which was to form the body of Christ. This is the true and only church, the great mystery of this age of grace. There was then none other church but this. There is today no other church than this. Man has organized his multiplied imitations of God's church, giving each group some special name to add to the ever increasing confusion of saint and sinner alike, but God recognizes none of them as His. He wraps the whole mass of confusion into one great bundle and describes this abominable mystery of man's making as a woman sitting on a scarlet colored beast, full of names, denominational names, sectarian names, which the Spirit declares to be names of blasphemy. This confused harlot, the mother of many daughters, sits arrayed in purple and scarlet and decked with gold and precious stones and pearls, having a golden cup in her hand full of abominations and filthiness of her fornication; and upon her forehead is a name written, Mystery, Babylon the Great, mother of harlots and abominations of the earth. Rev. 17:5.

This is the subtle foliage of church tradition, which Satan has spread to bury and smother the true ecclesia, but the Lord recognizes none of it as His. He is still admiring that spotless virgin church which has been rising in the heavenly realm throughout the centuries and which He has kept separate and holy unto Himself, as pure today as in the beginning. In the very beginning the Lord added to the true church daily such as should be saved, and I have confidence to believe that every day since then during all these long centuries of time He has been adding daily and hourly to that same mysterious church such as should be saved.

The book of Romans is the center and heart of all the writings of Paul, and, if I may draw the likeness, all his other epistles are like expository sermons, enlarging on the great truths laid down for our learning in that remarkable epistle. When Paul, therefore, wrote to the church at Ephesus, he enlarged greatly on that mystery, the true and only church, the body of Jesus Christ, which is being prepared by God to govern the world in the kingdom age to come, to restore all things and make them one in Christ in the dispensation of the fullness of times, and then to govern the universe in the ages to follow. This one true church, which He has been forming through the centuries, is no after-thought in the mind of God. Surely even mortal man of finite understanding can comprehend that an ecclesia ordained to such universal works of restoration and government in the ages to come must of necessity be the object of special care and preparation in the hands of an all-wise Father.

In the book of Ephesians the burden of Paul's message was to show clearly how important the true church is in the plan of God. Therefore, after briefly stating his own calling as an apostle in verse one, praying that the grace and peace of God would rest upon them in verse two, and giving thanks to God in verse three for the abundant spiritual blessing in these heavenly realms where we dwell, he then begins a sermon concerning the high and holy calling of the true church, a disclosure so great that no man could believe or understand it except the Spirit of wisdom and revelation from on high were his teacher and instructor.

In verse four the importance of the calling of the true church is greatly emphasized by the remarkable truth stated in these words: "He hath chosen us in Him before the foundation of the world, that we should be holy and without blame before Him in love." I exhort all to read those lines of inspiration with diligence and prayer because the truth written therein will give you an entirely different outlook concerning all things. You will see yourself as God saw you in His plan. You will see the wonderful love and wisdom of God, and grasp, at least in part, the vast importance of your calling in Him. You, blood-washed saints of God, are the true ecclesia, the called of God. Furthermore, I am sure that, by meditating in the Spirit upon these words, you will discern the difference between that true mystery which is the ecclesia of God and that other mystery, the false hodge-podge, headless confusion of human denominations and organizations, which is Mystery Babylon the great. And, seeing the difference by the Spirit, may God grant you grace to wholeheartedly "come out of her" and come unto Him. "Come unto Me," saith Christ, "all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take My yoke upon you and learn of Me, for I am meek and lowly of heart, and ye shall find rest to your souls, for My yoke is easy and My burden is light."

So important to the plan of God is this mysterious ecclesia, the true church, His body, that He chose each member of it before the world was founded or ever begun. Before the stars were rolled out in their orbits or the sun and moon took their watch in the heavens, the all-wise Father brought forth the plan of the ages, rejoicing the hearts of the sons of God till the morning stars sang together and the sons of God shouted for joy. He chose the members of His ecclesia before the foundation of the world and ordained that they should be holy and without blame before Him in love.
Now consider of how great importance the purpose of God for His church must be that He with infinite care and unerring foresight would plan in minute detail every purpose concerning it long before the worlds were formed or the ages begun. Consider further how great the plan must be that He would foreknow, choose, predestinate, and call each and every man and woman who in the will of God would carry into fruitfulness the intrinsic details of His immutable purpose. Would God that I had the speech of angels and wisdom that could unfold to each spiritual mind an understanding of the infinite glory that God is preparing for all His creation and for His own glory and infinite joy! Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither hath entered the heart of man, the things God hath prepared for them that love Him, but He does reveal them by His Spirit, for the Spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God. Before the worlds began and before the ages were formed, yea, before Adam walked in His beautiful Eden, our all-wise heavenly Father foresaw not only the day when there would be a garden of Eden in the earth, but a day when the earth itself would be a garden of Eden in our universe, and a greater day when our universe would be a garden of Eden in the great sidereal realms beyond, and yet a day still further on when at all things everywhere would be restored and inhabited and governed by the hosts of the redeemed. In that day all creation shall walk and work, increase and prosper. There is no need of the sun to shine by day or a moon by night, for the Lord God giveth them light. They shall walk in the light, which He is, and He shall be their dwelling place. God Himself shall be their Father and they shall be His sons.

My puny mind, even when touched by the finger of inspiration, is completely incapable of describing the glory, which God has prepared for those who love Him. That eternal realm will not be a heaven after the pattern of human tradition, which in visages a sort of static heaven with nothing to do but play harps and shout hallelujah, but a realm of restful labor as world after world and universe after universe is brought into the sweet harmony of the everlasting Father. Is not this what Paul is saying when momentarily he is swept beyond the bounds of our present heavenly calling to cry aloud with the trumpet voice of inspiration that "in the dispensation of the fullness of times He might gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven, and which are our present heavenly calling to cry aloud with the trumpet voice of inspiration that "in the dispensation of the fullness of times He might gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven, and which are on earth, even in Him?" Eph. 1:10. Can we heap blame upon the head of this faithful apostle and accuse him of digressing from his subject when his heart was filled to overflowing with the unspeakable knowledge that the restoration of the entire universe was in fact God's basic reason for the calling of this mysterious and glorious ecclesia? And does not the abounding revelation and the magnificent hope he sets forth of things to come make the calling of this elect ecclesia an object of infinite reason and a wealth of divine understanding? Is it not wisdom, in the light of such universal restoration and peace, that God should call, predestinate, and choose before the foundation of time or ages those harbingers of His message of restoration, those workers in His vineyard of peace, those sons of His high calling? Need I say that this is the wisdom of the Infinite, the knowledge of the Omniscient, the power of the Almighty, the truth of the Faithful, and the hope that maketh not ashamed?

When for a brief moment my eyes descend from the glory of these celestial hills, I am filled with a sadness that is unspeakable, for there on the plains of human understanding I see a multitude of tradition-bound men, many thousands of them saved, indeed, but bound by the chains of tradition to human systems. They struggle to get men saved before it is eternally too late, never understanding the truth that no man comes too late, never understanding the truth that no man comes except the Father draw him, John 6:44, and failing to comprehend the words divine, "All that the Father hath given Me will come to Me." John 6:37. They do not realize the depth of the meaning of Paul's words, "As in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive. But every man in his own order: Christ the firstfruits; afterward they that are Christ's at His coming. Then cometh the end, when He shall have delivered up the kingdom to God, even the Father; when He shall have put down all rule and all authority and power. For He must reign till He hath put all enemies under His feet. The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death." 1 Cor. 15:22-26. They may frantically try every method they wish, but they will not hasten God's plan or His purpose. Those who are to come in during this age will come in as God calls them. Those who are to come in the kingdom age will come in as God calls them. Those who are to come in the fullness of times will come as God calls them. Every man will partake of the resurrection in his own order. As young men are called to arms by groups and classes in times of war, so God has decreed that every man in his own order will answer the call and be made alive.

Let the saints of God abandon the smothering theories of tradition. Let them break the chains placed upon them by a harlot church system, a system that owns neither husband nor head. Let them cast off the shackles that bind them as galley slaves to the doomed and sinking ship which mankind in ignorance calls the church.
Why should you give your substance to the harlot woman who is of the earth earthly? The Spirit of God is calling you to lift up your eyes to the heavenly hills to behold the pure virgin who sits in heavenly places in Christ Jesus, far above all principality and power and might and dominion and every name that is named, both in this age and that which is to come. Darkness now covers the earth, but shame on us that gross darkness covers the people — the people of God, not the people of the world! Why should the people who once walked in the light of the Lord now sit in gross darkness? Because they have embraced the tradition of the harlot! They have been wedded to a system and have not sought to become one with that heavenly Christ, the head of the true ecclesia whose dwelling is in heavenly places.

Do I not speak the truth when I say that times without number evangelists who serve in the bondage and tradition of the church system, after seeing many men repent of their sins, seek the cleansing of His blood, and rejoice in a new found joy, have straightway said to these new converts, "Go now and join the church of your choice." Forthwith men and women, who on Sunday rejoiced together in the love of Christ, found themselves on Monday divided and scattered by the demon of denominationalism, ready to tear each other's eyes over doctrines and creeds of human origin. Why did not these men who call themselves evangelists tell their converts that the washing of regeneration and the renewing of the Holy Spirit had already made them heirs of God and joint heirs with Jesus Christ? Why did they not teach them that in one Spirit they were all baptized into one body, even the mystical body of Jesus Christ, who is the Lord and head of us all? The moment He cleansed us in His blood and placed His regenerating Spirit within us, then and there we became members of the only true church in the whole universe, but these tradition-bound men turned our innocent eyes away from the church of the firstborn, whose names are in heaven, and pointed us to the mother of harlots and her many daughters, telling us to embrace whichever one we chose. "He that is joined to the Lord is one spirit," saith God almighty, "but he that is joined to an harlot is one flesh." 1 Cor. 6:15-17. Why, oh why, dear child of God, can you not see the heavenly? Even because your eyes have been directed to the earthly. Why can you not see the heavenly virgin? Because those who ministered to you have exalted the harlot, which is of the earth earthly.

Many thousands of well-meaning people are desperately trying to unite in one all these harlot systems. They hope that by so doing they can present a united front to the world. They want Catholic and Protestant to hold dialogue and meetings together to iron out their differences, vainly imagining that by such methods they are bringing to pass the prayer of Jesus, "That they all may be one." Are we so blind that we do not see that, when the mother of harlots is united with her harlot daughters to form one world-wide system, they will still be harlots and not the true church, though they now abide in one house? The understanding needs but little enlightening to perceive that such a union as this can never possibly become the virgin church or the mystical body of the Son of God. Oh, what gross darkness covers the people that they could ever imagine that such a thing could be acceptable to God, or that they who gather in the harlot's house could ever be the children of the living God! The fearful doom of this abominable system is clearly stated in Rev. 17:1-18. Let us turn with repentance from all these vanities. Jesus Christ is the head of the true church. Make Christ and Christ alone your head that you may be one with that which is true. Turn in repentance from these earthly systems. Their tradition is as a thick smoke to blind and darken the eyes, ever hiding from our understanding the glorious fullness of the gospel of Jesus Christ. He reconciled us and cleansed us in His blood and made us His own. He brought us peace through the blood of His cross, we who were once enemies of God by wicked works, and, having cleansed us by His blood, He put His Spirit within us. We became members of His body that He might present us holy, unblameable, and unreprovable in His sight, if we continue in the faith, grounded and settled, and be not moved away from the hope of the gospel which we have heard and which was preached to every creature under heaven. But, sadly, many are moved away from such wonderful hope in Christ to waste their lives in the service of earthly systems. They are coaxed away from their fidelity to Christ to join the harlot in her perfumed bed of adultery, so aptly described by the scene of the young man's encounter with the adulteress in Proverbs, chapter seven.

The true and only church is a special company, elect of God before the foundation of the world. The church is a people who have been called by God to be especially His. They have been called out of the world and all the world's crude systems and they have been called unto Christ. Our hearts should greatly rejoice in the words of wisdom that flowed from the inspired mind of Paul when, writing to the church in his day, he exhorted, "Be ye followers of God, as dear children; and walk in love, as Christ also hath loved us, and hath given Himself for us an offering and a sacrifice to God for a sweet smelling savor." Eph. 5:1,2. When the Spirit of God called us out, He called us to be especially His. He intended that right there and then we would become followers of Him and Him alone. He never intended us to become followers of men or of sects or of denominations, but followers of Him. He fully intended that we should walk with God and learn of Him. He desired that we should be led of His Spirit and, being thus led, should grow up into full sonship in Him. He desired to lead and feed us as a shepherd that we might grow in grace and in the knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ, but, instead of following Him and making Him our Lord and head, we were instructed in the doctrines and traditions of men.

We made the precious things of God a raging battle ground, a never ending doctrinal war. As a result we became stunted in our spiritual growth, weak and powerless in our spiritual lives. The weaker we grew the more involved we became, and the more involved in tradition we became the less power and spiritual life we had. What a hateful deception it really is! Yet, because it is dearly loved by the carnal mind, men and women cling to this false system as though their lives depended on it.

For decades we fervently sang, "Dare to be a Daniel; dare to stand alone," but it seems few people have ever learned that our relationship is with Christ and without Him we can do nothing at all. We would do well to consider Abraham, who walked before God and was perfect. He depended on no religious system to keep him straight. He leaned on no man to ensure his strength, but his strength and faith were made perfect because he knew Him whom he believed. Enoch walked with God, and he was not, for God took him; but I trow he would not have been walking with God at all had he been a member in good standing with some sect or denomination of his day. What does it mean to you, my brother, to hear the words, "Enoch walked with God"? What does it mean to you to hear that Christ was faithful in all His house, (which house are we if we hold fast the beginning of our confidence steadfast to the end)? How greatly Paul adds to our courage and faith in Christ when he manifests the very secret of his life in these words: "I know whom I have believed and am persuaded that He is able to keep that which I have committed unto Him against that day." 2 Tim. 1:12. Well did this saint of God know that the secret of victory, of spiritual growth and understanding, was in knowing Him. The precious text does not say, "I know in whom I have believed," but with tremendous force and emphasis it says, "I know whom I have believed," and therein lies a great difference. It is one thing to believe in Christ as the sectarians do. The devils believe also and even tremble. Jas. 2:19. It is something entirely different to believe Him. Paul was not believing in some doctrine. He was believing Christ, and that is what I, too, am doing. Would God thousands more would cast off the yoke of slavish dependence upon that false church system to lay hold of the promise for ourselves, looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith.

After Paul explained the infinite care and love of God in that He chose us in Him before the foundation of the world that we should be holy and without blame before Him in love (Eph. 1:4), he then tells us that we were predestinated to be sons of God. Adoption means the proclamation of a son. It is very clear that our adoption (sonship), our redemption through His blood, and the forgiveness of our sins are all wonderful manifestations of the grace of God. God is the God of all grace. He is full of grace and truth. Grace is unmerited favor. Grace is an attribute of God. It is part of Him. He can never be separated from grace nor grace from Him. Just as certain as our God is holy, omniscient, and almighty, so certain it is that grace is His inherent nature. If God could die, grace could die also; but, as God is eternal, so also is His grace eternal. Full well did Paul speak of the eternal aspects of His grace when he wrote, "And hath raised us up together, and made us sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus: that in the ages to come He might shew the exceeding riches of His grace in His kindness toward us through Christ Jesus." The great work of the true church, which is to be fully accomplished in the ages to come is not the theme of our message now, but I know of nothing that will awaken our understanding or inspire us to make our calling and election sure like a simple knowledge of God's purpose for the true ecclesia in the ages which are yet to come. With this in mind we quote the mighty words of Eph. 1:7-10 that all men may hear the declaration of God almighty Himself concerning His work of restoration in the ages to come and what part the true, faithful, and holy ecclesia will have in that great purpose.

"It is in Him, and through the shedding of His blood, that we have our deliverance - the forgiveness of our offences - so abundant was God's grace, the grace which He, the possessor of all wisdom and understanding, lavished upon us, when He made known to us the secret of His will. And this is in harmony with God's merciful purpose for the government of the world when the tunes are ripe for it - the purpose, which He has cherished in His own mind of restoring the whole creation to find its one Head in Christ; yea, things in heaven and things on earth, to find their one Head in Him." Eph. 1:7-10 (Weymouth Original).
See now with what infinite care the Lord God, our Father, is preparing His ecclesia for His ministry in the ages to come. They are elect according to the foreknowledge of God. They were chosen in Christ before the foundation of the world. They were sanctified by the Holy Spirit and sprinkled with the blood of Jesus Christ. All this and much more is contained in Peter's greeting to the strangers scattered over the world when he opened his letter with these words: "Elect according to the foreknowledge of God the Father through sanctification of the Spirit, unto obedience and sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ: Grace unto you and peace be multiplied."

1 Pet. 1:2. What a wealth of divine information is contained in these few words of inspiration! What a pity it is that we have become so familiar with them that we rhyme them off without even a serious thought as to the depth of their meaning!

Oh, that God's people would awaken to their high and holy calling and to a reverent understanding of the place given them in Christ before the world began. Oh, that the eyes of their understanding could be enlightened to see the hope of the ages to come - a hope hidden in the heart of God from the foundation of the world, which in other ages was not made known to the sons of men, but is now being revealed to those who walk in harmony with Him, turning aside from that tradition-ridden system that deadens the hearts and befuddles the minds of men and hides from them the truth as it is in Christ Jesus our Lord! Must it be so that those who are elect according to God's foreknowledge can see no more to their high calling in Christ than the excitement of a healing meeting? Can we see not more in the church than a hodge-podge of religious denominations? Is there no more to unity than that false, counterfeit thing called ecumenism, which vainly imagines that dialogue between the mother of harlots and her daughters is the coming together of the body of Christ? Do you fancy that the Pope of Rome, who sends his emissaries to Warsaw, Belgrade, and Moscow to hold dialogue with the leaders of Communism, and who at the same time sends his bishops and priests to hold dialogue with Pentecostal people, has any more sincerity toward one than the other? Oh, slow of heart to understand, can you never discern that "he who sits in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God," is the antichrist? Turn from these false ideas of church unity and lift your eyes to the hills of God that by revelation you may behold the hidden mystery of the true church, the ecclesia of God that even now is seated with Him in heavenly places as the Lord predestinated from the foundation of the world.

Those precious elect ones whom God has chosen in Christ He has sanctified by His Spirit. Sanctification is too great a truth to more than mention here, but sanctification is the work of setting aside holy things for holy uses. It is the Holy Spirit who changes our lives. It is the Spirit who separates us from the world and who separates the world from us. It is the Spirit who reveals our carnal nature. It is the Spirit also who reveals that God placed our carnal nature in Christ, together with ourselves in entirety, and that we were crucified with Him when He was crucified. It was this that Paul declared when he said, "I am crucified with Christ." Gal. 2:20. And again: "God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom the world is crucified unto me, and I unto the world." Gal. 6:14.

The burden of the prayer of Jesus Christ as recorded in John, chapter 17, is not a prayer for the world (verse 9), but a prayer for the separation and sanctification of all those whom God had given to Him. "I pray not for the world, but for them which Thou hast given Me; for they are Thine. And all Mine are Thine, and Thine are Mine; and I am glorified in them. And now I am no more in the world, but these are in the world, and I come to Thee. Holy Father, keep through Thine own name those whom Thou hast given Me, that they may be one, as we are. While I was with them in the world, I kept them in Thy name: Those that Thou gavest Me I have kept, and none of them is lost, but the son of perdition; that the scripture might be fulfilled ... I have given them Thy word; and the world hath hated them, because they are not of the world, even as I am not of the world. I pray not that Thou shouldst take them out of the world, but that Thou shouldst keep them from the evil. They are not of the world, even as I am not of the world. Sanctify them through Thy truth: Thy word is truth." John 17:9-17.

Friendship with the world is enmity with God. Jas. 4:4. Those who imagine themselves free to partake of the world live in a lie. Sanctification first makes holy, then separates unto God all holy things. It has neither part nor lot with worldliness. It holds nothing in common with that mixture of good and evil found in ecumenism and it has no place of agreement with the present wretched trend of thought that makes Him who is holy, harmless, undefiled, separate from sinners, and higher than the heavens nothing more than a long-haired mendicant who wandered about like a hippy, refusing to work or pay taxes and forever clashing with the establishment. These things Jesus did not do, and it is nothing but blasphemy against God's Son to pretend that He did. All such people may have a Jesus, but it is another Jesus. They may have a spirit, but it is another spirit. And they may have a gospel, but it is another gospel. 2 Cor. 11:4. There is no place for worldliness, for filth or corruption, in the true ecclesia; and I shall also add that in the true ecclesia none but the sanctified dwell or have a part. "I pray not that Thou shouldst take them out of the world," prayed Jesus, "but that Thou shouldst keep them from the evil."

The elect of God, the true church, is a people sprinkled by the blood of Jesus Christ. 1 Pet. 1:2. "If the blood of bulls and of goats, and the ashes of an heifer sprinkling the unclean, sanctifieth to the purifying of the flesh, how much more shall the blood of Christ, who through the eternal Spirit offered Himself without spot to God, purge your conscience from dead works to serve the living God?" Heb. 9:13-14. "The blood of Jesus Christ, God's Son, cleanseth us from all sin." 1 John 1:7. His blood speaketh better things than that of Abel. Heb. 12:24. We are "justified freely by His grace through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus: whom God hath set forth to be a propitiation through faith in His blood, to declare His righteousness for the remission of sins that are past, through the forbearance of God. To declare, I say, at this time His righteousness: that He might be just, and the justifier of him that believeth in Jesus." Rom. 3:24-26.

It is the Spirit of God that sanctifies. It is the blood of Christ that cleanses from sin. If you will consider the above passage with care and meditation, you will see by the statement, "whom God hath set forth to be a propitiation through faith in His blood, to declare His righteousness for the remission of sins that are past," that it was God Himself who had perfect faith in the blood of His Son. God - not man - had perfect faith that all the sins of the world would be remitted by Christ's righteousness. You will see also that God offered the blood of His Son, not to propitiate and appease Himself, but to propitiate and appease mankind. God does not need to be appeased; He is appeased. God does not need to be reconciled; He has always been reconciled. Nowhere in all scripture is it intimated that God must be reconciled or appeased. Instead, it is written, "We pray you in Christ's stead, Be ye reconciled to God." I can neither describe nor portray the faith God has in the precious blood of His Son to fully pardon the sins of mankind and reconcile man to God. The blood of Abel could do naught but cry from the ground for vengeance because its shedding brought death; but the blood of Jesus Christ proclaims peace to all because its shedding was for the life of the world.

We are living in the end of this age. This hour finds the world and all religion immersed in the most appalling confusion and disorder ever known. The confused ideas and crude notions put forth and propagated as truth would certainly make a man of God blush for shame. Those who have read my article, Belshazzar's Feast, will be more alert to see the devilish way in which the things of God are being desecrated and dragged into the realm of the worldly, the bawdy, and the unclean. Even the wonderful Christ Himself, holy, harmless, and undefiled, separate from sinners and higher than the heavens, is pictured as an unwashed hippy who begged and bummed and slept in the hedge, continually clashing head on with the establishment. This the meek and lowly Jesus did not do, but taught men to render unto Caesar the things which were Caesar's and to God the things which were God's. He paid His taxes, healed men and fed them from His Father's store, and gave His life a ransom for all.

Paul wrote to the Corinthians in these solemn words: "I fear, lest by any means, as the serpent beguiled Eve through his subtlety, so your minds should be corrupted from the simplicity that is in Christ. For if he that cometh preacheth another Jesus, whom we have not preached, or if ye receive another spirit, which ye have not received, or another gospel, which ye have not accepted, ye might well bear with him." 2 Cor. 11:3-4. I am convinced that in these last days many thousands of well meaning but deluded people are receiving, not the Christ of God, not the Spirit of God, not the gospel of God, but another Jesus, another spirit, and another gospel. Let us turn our eyes to Him lest we, as Eve, be beguiled by this devilish mixture of good and evil.

The abounding truth concerning the true church, the ecclesia of God, would fill more volumes than man could write. Therefore I shall conclude this chapter with these statements of truth: The church of the living God is a people called out, a people chosen in Christ before the ages began. They are washed in the blood of Christ. They are sanctified, set apart, and made holy by the Holy Spirit. They are begotten unto a living hope. They are born anew by the Spirit. They are partakers of the resurrection. They are a people kept by the power of God. They are a people in preparation for manifestation and to be revealed as God's sons to a waiting.

groaning creation. In times past they were not a people; but now they are the people of God. In times past they had not obtained mercy; but now they have obtained mercy. They have partaken abundantly of the grace of God. They are children of God and members of His family. God has ordained that in the ages to come they will be used to manifest the immutable aspects of His grace and wisdom to the entire universe. Eph. 2:7. Their calling is high and holy, and they will reign with Christ until all things in heaven and earth have bowed the knee to confess that He is Lord of all.

"You are therefore no longer mere foreigners or persons excluded from civil rights. On the contrary, you share citizenship with the saints and are members of His family. You are a building which has been reared on the foundation of the apostles and prophets, the cornerstone being Christ Jesus Himself, in union with whom the whole fabric, truly bonded together, is rising so as to form a holy sanctuary in the Lord; in whom you also are being built up together to become a fixed abode for God through the Spirit." Eph. 2:19-22. Weymouth.

This is the true ecclesia of God. It is farther removed from that many headed monstrosity of man's building than day is removed from night, east is removed from west, or Christ is removed from Belial. The ecclesia, the true church of God, though still a pilgrim and a stranger in the earth, sitteth together with Christ in heavenly places, far above all power and might and dominion and every name that is named, not only in this age, but in that which is to come.

"Until the day break and the shadows flee away I will get me to the mountain of myrrh and to the hill of frankincense. Thou art all fair, my love; there is no spot in thee." S. of S. 4:6-7.

Arise, my love, and come away.

CHAPTER TWO
THE BODY OF CHRIST OR ONE LIKE UNTO THE SON OF MAN

The human body has nine hundred muscles, one thousand miles of blood vessels, three hundred main arteries, one million five hundred thousand sweat glands, and the lungs are composed of seven million seven hundred thousand cells. At seventy years of age the heart has lifted by its throbs five hundred thousand tons of blood. The nervous system has three trillion nerve cells. The blood has thirty million white corpuscles and one hundred trillion red ones. Each minute in every man's body some one hundred and fifty million radio active carbon atoms go pop releasing a total energy of twenty-one billion electron volts. The heart beats about seventy times a minute, forty-two hundred times an hour, one hundred thousand times a day, thirty-seven million times a year, and two billion times in sixty-five years. To make a machine resembling the human brain would take a space the size of Rockefeller Center. It would take three lifetimes to wire it, one third of the electric energy of New York City to drive it, and the Hudson River to cool it. All the multiplied marvels of the human body God has formed of the dust of the earth. Each new day His wisdom brings tens of thousands of such wonderful organisms into His world, and ere the close of day with a sort of sacred wastefulness from His creative store He lets as many others fall back into the dust from whence they came.

But God is forming another body of which the marvels of the human body are but a feeble type, a body not made with hands nor yet of dust and clay, but eternal in the heavenlies. He does not raise it up in months nor let it fall back into the dust of the earth at the close of day. With divine inspiration the apostle Paul for our edification wrote the words of truth that show God's intention throughout the dispensation of grace to bring the body of Christ to the complete and full stature of His Son. "For as the body is one, and hath many members, and all the members of that one body, being many, are one body; so also is Christ. For by (in) one Spirit are we all baptized into one body, whether we be Jews or Gentiles, whether we be bond or free; and have been all made to drink into one Spirit. For the body is not one member, but many." 1 Cor. 12:27.

What body does Paul refer to here? It is Christ's mystical body, the true church. And now in simple humility we ask, "What is Christ's body?" The overwhelming truth that should well nigh cause us to tremble is simply this: The body of Christ is the fullness of Christ. Is not this the sublime and solemnizing revelation of Paul's words quoted above? "As the body is one and has many members — so also is Christ." And when Paul puts forth the words of 1 Cor. 12:27, "Now ye are the body of Christ, and members in particular," is he not showing exactly who these members of Christ really are? Ah, yes, indeed He is. This body of Christ, of which the preachers are forever speaking, but about which they know so little, is in truth the fullness of Christ. The spiritual body of Christ is the "house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens" of which the apostle wrote in 2 Cor. 5:1. It is the house of which Jesus spoke when He said, "In My Father's house are many mansions: if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again and receive you unto Myself; that where I am, there ye may be also." John 14:2,3.

Before we further develop the truth concerning the body of Christ, we must turn aside for a moment that we may learn how great is our need for divine revelation to comprehend such truth. Let every man who reads forever understand that the things of the Spirit of God are only spiritually discerned. They can never, never, never be understood, comprehended, grasped, or perceived until the Holy Spirit of God shines the light of their truth into the heart, bringing the knowledge of the glory of God from the very presence of Jesus Christ, until it may be truthfully said that "that which may be known of God is manifest in them; for God hath shewed it unto them." Rom. 1:19.

We are living in a day of much learning and the pitiful thing about it is that men and women mistakenly imagine that the letters of degree that follow their names are a certain evidence of their knowledge of the things of God. It is for this very reason that so many preachers are anxious to flash the title Doctor before their names. Whether the title belongs to them or not is of no importance to me, but let it be thoroughly known by every man who reads these lines and let this truth be burned indelibly into every heart that none of these things commends us in any degree to God. These titles are no evidence of divine commendation nor are they any evidence whatsoever of spiritual understanding. Indeed, if my own observation is correct, I am led to believe they are evidence of the very opposite. The wisest men of earth, whether they be Einsteins, Edisons, or Socrates, though words of wisdom crown their heads and knowledge lies on every hand, fall a thousand fathoms short of the simplest spiritual understanding because their minds are hermetically sealed in this natural realm, and in that realm of natural understanding they must forever remain until God is pleased by His grace to reveal the eternal things to them.

Many centuries ago, when the people of Israel were offering their gifts and sacrifices according to the command of God, there lived a king upon the throne in Jerusalem, the sweet singer of Israel, a man after God's own heart, the psalmist who has enlightened millions with his songs of revelation. One day as the glory of God filled his being, he took his harp and sang these words: "Blessed is the man that maketh the Lord his trust, and respecteth not the proud, nor such as turn aside to lies. Many, O Lord my God, are the wonderful works which Thou hast done, and Thy thoughts which are to us-ward: They cannot be reckoned up in order unto Thee; if I would declare and speak of them, they are more than can be numbered. Sacrifice and offering Thou didst not desire; mine ears hast Thou opened: Burnt offering and sin-offering hast Thou not required." Psa. 40:4-6. Mine ears hast Thou opened! Mine ears hast Thou opened! Whatever is he saying? Sacrifice and offering Thou didst not desire! Mine ears hast Thou opened! Had not God commanded sacrifice and offering? Yes, indeed, He had. But, while the multitude went on endlessly in a tradition that had become completely meaningless to them, David was listening to the voice of God, for God had opened His ears to hear the revelation of dispensations yet unborn. It was not the ears of his head that had been opened, but the ears of his heart, the inner ear of his spirit that alone can hear the voice of God.

In this fantastic age of invention man has contrived remarkable instruments to pick up and mature sounds and pictures and even colors out of the silent atmosphere. How my heart thrilled one morning as I listened to the giant radio telescope from Jodrell Bank, England, broadcasting sounds from outer space made by planets before the dawn of time. Wonderful beyond description as these instruments of science are, there is only one instrument that can ever hear the voice of God and that is the ear of the spirit within. There is only one eye that can see God. It is the eye of the spirit. And the only intelligence that can know God is the waiting, longing spirit unto whom God reveals Himself.

The natural man is like Dr. Saul of Tarsus of whom Festus said, "Much learning doth make thee mad," for this Saul, learned in all the tradition of the law, of the strictest sect of the Pharisees, marched with a band of armed men to Damascus to take captive the followers of Christ and bring them bound in chains to Jerusalem to be tormented and put to death for their belief in Christ. We will surely say that a man of such great learning should have known better than to indulge in such persecution as this. Could this man of letters not see that Jesus Christ was indeed the fulfillment of the Old Testament scriptures? Could he not understand that the shedding of the blood of Christ was the anti-type of every Old Testament blood sacrifice? Could he not see that Jesus was the seed of Abraham, and the child that was born of a virgin of whom Isaiah prophesied? Isa. 7:14. But this, my friend, is the darkness of the natural mind of which Saul, being born again, wrote, saying, "The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God: for they are foolishness unto him: neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned." 1 Cor. 2:14. So it was that in the blindness of his heart and the darkness of his understanding he rode in wrath and bitterness to destroy the Christians at Damascus and erase the name of Christ forever from their midst. But, as he rode, the thing he least expected happened. The blazing light of revelation shone into his spirit, a light so exceedingly bright that even the light of the sun was as the dimness of a candle. The light that had enlightened David now illuminated Saul. Mine ears hast Thou opened. He heard the voice of Christ speaking to his heart, to his spirit, and to his mind. "Who art Thou, Lord," he cried; and the voice responded, "I am Jesus whom thou persecutest."

Oh, what a difference, what a change, what a transformation is made by revelation from above! How quickly we begin to abandon our old ideas! How willingly we seize the eraser to erase from our names the letters of human approbation in which we vainly glory as with tearful joy we repeat, "God forbid that I should glory save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom the world is crucified unto me, and I unto the world!" Can you not hear this Saul of Tarsus, this man who was so thoroughly transformed that even his name was changed, as he testifies to the Galatians, "When it pleased God who separated me from my mother's womb to reveal His Son in me, immediately I conferred not with flesh and blood." Gal. 1:16. What indeed could flesh and blood with all its human learning add to him? Nothing! Nothing! Much less than nothing! It is written, "As heaven is higher than the earth, so are My ways higher than your ways, and My thoughts than your thoughts."

Do not seek for revelation. Seek only the face of Christ. If you seek revelation, your mind may be filled with the grotesque doctrines that possess so many of God's children in this hour. I am amazed and saddened by the jejune notions published and proclaimed as revelation, which are not revelations at all, but the vain imaginations of distorted and twisted carnal minds that have a craze for publicity and a hankering for the spectacular. Seek revelation and you will get ideas galore, many of them inspired by Satan. Seek Christ and you will see the glory of God in His blessed face.

In the days intervening this hour and the magnificent glory of His kingdom it is impossible to over-estimate the value of our personal relationship to Him. While thousands are seeking experiences, you should seek Christ. While other men seek for spectacular gifts, you must seek the giver of every good and perfect gift. While others try desperately to practice gifts they do not really possess, you must abide in Him, for the branch cannot bear fruit except it abide in the vine. While carnal Christians try to show love, yea, love that they do not have, let the Christ who dwells within you manifest forth the love that comes from God only. And, while many talk of sonship, hoping by their great works to manifest themselves as sons of God, you walk in the Spirit, for as many as are led by the Spirit of God they are the sons of God.

How regrettable it is that so many who speak of sonship do not have the Spirit of His Son who cries, "Abba, Father"! How sad that so many preach a coming kingdom who do not possess the spirit of the kingdom nor allow the king to reign in their hearts! Ah, my friend, seek His blessed face. Come into vital communion with Him. Walk in Him. Abide in Him. Draw your wisdom from His mind dwelling in you and His voice in speaking through you. Identify yourself fully with the cross that you may say in truth, "I am crucified with Christ". Identify yourself with the resurrection that you may say in truth, "The life that I now live I live by the faith of the Son of God who loved me and gave Himself for me." This kind of association with our Lord Jesus Christ causes Him to open His mind to us that we might know all truth and revelation that is necessary in these vital hours of preparation.

In revealing His truth, the Lord always seeks to take us from the finite to the infinite, from the small to the great, from the cradle to the throne. "The path of the just is as a shining light that shineth more and more unto the perfect day." As the earliest rays of dawn herald the coming of the fullness of day, so the babe that was born in the manger of Bethlehem heralds the coming of the fullness of Christ that finds it completeness at the end of this age when Jesus, the only begotten Son, is no longer the only begotten, but the first begotten of a vast family of brother sons who will fill the earth with God's glory in the kingdom of God that soon will encompass all the earth. There was a time when my oldest brother was the only begotten son of my father, but after we three younger brothers were born, he was no more the only begotten, but the first begotten. "Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God. Therefore the world knoweth us not, because it knew Him not. Every man who hath this hope in Him purifieth himself even as He is pure." 1 John 3:1,3. What a revelation of truth that is!

I pray God, the Father of all wisdom and understanding, that the eyes of every saint may be enlightened by the Spirit to give them a vision of the true and mystical body of Christ. Then will they be able to discern the fallacious notions of carnal Christians who love to pretend that their little group, around which they have built a fence, is the ministering, functioning body of Christ. During the last twenty years the doctrine has gone out as never before, deceitfully propagating the error that the Babylon of confusion and error we see all about us is in truth the body of Christ. Your severest task will be to free yourself from all such binding traditions that you might see the truth of His body and what your place in Christ really is.

The Holy Spirit often uses simple methods to acquaint us with the deepest of eternal truths; and, if you can receive it, you will sometimes find that evil things have a sort of spiritual parallel. If, for instance, there is an antichrist, there must of necessity be a Christ, the first being the complete opposite of the latter. When God through the prophet Daniel undertook to display to the world the sinister fact concerning the ever present mystery of Babylon that was to rise and consume the whole earth in a confusion of politics, religions, nationalities, languages, sects, and denominations, He caused the king of Babylon himself to be confused by a terrible dream that disturbed his sleep and made him afraid. In the dream that so disquieted his mind he saw an enormous image, the image of a man. Never had such a man as this appeared before. His head was of gold, his breast and his arms were of silver, his belly and his thighs were of brass, his legs were of iron, and his feet, upon which the whole body depended, were the weakest conglomeration imaginable - iron and clay mingled together. Dan. 2:32-33.

When Daniel came in before the king to show the dream to him and to interpret it for him, he began his interpretation with these significant words: "Thou art this head of gold." Dan. 2:38. Then, continuing with the other parts of the image, he interpreted the silver shoulders and arms to represent an inferior kingdom that was to follow him, (Media-Persia), then a kingdom yet more inferior as brass that would bear rule over all the earth (Greece), and after that a fourth kingdom vastly degenerated in glory, but with the strength of iron (Rome). And I think we will not be wrong in saying that the fifth kingdom, represented by the feet and toes consisting of iron mingled with miry clay, is merely a degeneration of the fourth kingdom, the despotic, dictatorial iron rule of political Rome mixed up with the miry clay of modern democracy, and the despotic papal rule of religious Rome mingled and mixed with the miry clay of Protestant sects, groups, organizations, and denominations. Thus were all the varied aspects of the mysterious Babylon system portrayed by the image of a man. Do not fail to see that each and every part of that system in all its varied ramifications is but one system, one image, one man, one Babylon, whether it be the golden head, the silver shoulders, the brass belly, the iron legs, or the iron-clay feet. These are not five different systems, but five different aspects of one and the same system.

It should not surprise us to find that, all the while this great system of confusion is consuming the ages, the God of heaven is preparing Himself a body in the image of Christ for eternal dominion, the head of which is not Nebuchadnezzar of Babylon, but Jesus Christ whom God ordained to be King of kings and Lord of lords. The members of His sacred body will not be the kings of Media-Persia, Greece, or Rome, but sons of God, begotten of God and perfected in the lowest parts of the earth, cleansed by His blood, partakers of His Spirit, baptized in one Spirit into that one body, even the body of Christ.

I am possessed with an almost unspeakable desire that you, my reader friend, should be torn away from the mass of tradition foisted upon you by Babylon's golden image, for only then will your eyes behold the beauty and simplicity of the body of Christ. Then will your eyes be open to see that you and Jesus Christ are members in particular of one and the same Christ. If now you see Christ as one and yourself as someone entirely different, then you are undone indeed, and every word I can say and every teaching I can give concerning the body of Christ will be wasted upon you. May the revelation of the Almighty reveal to your spirit that just as Nebuchadnezzar, the golden head, and Julius Caesar, the iron legs, were integral parts of the same image of Babylon, so our Lord Jesus, the first begotten Son of God, the head of the whole body of sons, together with you and me, the sons of God belonging to the feet company, are integral parts of the same body and fullness of Christ. When the Holy Spirit presented the image of Babylon to the world, He used the symbol of a man. It is not strange then that, when God would portray the image of the fullness of Christ, He would portray that many membered Christ as a huge man — a man so huge that he is described as a mountain, as we shall presently show, a body so huge that it includes in its composite self every man and every woman of this age who has come to sonship in Him. "As many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God." And, if we are sons, then are we God's heirs and joint heirs with our Lord Jesus Christ.

Oh, that every eye might see and every heart understand the significance of that oft repeated term, in Christ! "There is now therefore no condemnation to them that are in Christ Jesus." Rom. 8:1. "Of Him are ye in Christ Jesus." 1 Cor. 1:30. "The dead in Christ shall rise first." 1 Thess. 4:16. "If any man be in Christ, he is a new creation." 1 Cor. 5:17. "They that are Christ's have crucified the flesh." I am not at all disposed to believe that sonship is the undisputed heritage of every Christian. As many as are led by the Spirit of God, these are the sons of God. Many believers sadly never mature beyond infancy and never partake of any salvation beyond that which Jude describes as the common salvation. Jude 3. Whether I am right or not, I have become convinced that to be in Christ is to be partaker of a very special experience of abiding in Him. "At that day ye shall know that I am in the Father, and ye in Me, and I in you. He that hath My commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth Me; and he that loveth Me shall be loved of My Father, and I will love him, and will manifest Myself to him... If a man love Me, he will keep My words: and My Father will love him, and we will come unto him, and make our abode with him." John 14:20-21,23. Those who have come into a unity and an identification with Christ such as this have much more than the common salvation spoken of by Jude. They have become partakers of that so great salvation spoken of by Paul. Heb. 2:3.

In the natural world nothing is accomplished by commanding a man to grow. No man by taking thought can add a cubit to his stature, but in the spirit it is the opposite. Men can grow in Him if they have the desire. Therefore it is written to all who long for spiritual maturity: "Grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ." 2 Pet. 3:18. Every reader must be aware that of the many Christians with whom he is acquainted the vast majority are content to be partakers of the common salvation only. They are satisfied to be justified by faith and accept any crumb that may fall from the Master's table. If at last they arrive in heaven and not in hell, they are perfectly satisfied. An abundant entrance means nothing to them. But there are others who cannot live except they live and move and have their being in Him. They cannot abide except they abide in Him. They fear any decision that is not directed by His Spirit. The will of God is their meat and drink, and to love Him is better than any sacrifice or offering.

A number of years ago a very simple incident occurred in my life that was to add a great deal to my understanding of the fullness of Christ and the completeness of His body. It has helped to unfold the mystery of our place in Him. It was my lot one morning to fly from the city of Seattle, Washington, to the city of Victoria, British Columbia. As I remember it, the morning was rather unpleasant, for a complete cloud cover obscured all the sky so that no sun shone through to the earth below. The great plane with its human burden sped on its silvery wings up and up through the clouds until we suddenly burst into the glorious sunshine far above the sullen shadows of earth below. The clouds, now far down beneath us, had the appearance of a mighty ocean, a vast sea in the turmoil of a storm. It was impossible to see through them to the earth below and one could not possibly know whether he was over earth or ocean. It was at that moment I beheld a sight so indescribably beautiful that no scene in all my travels has ever surpassed it. Far to the west the mighty Olympic mountains like mystic towering giants were thrusting their magnificent snow-capped peaks through the rolling storm clouds until their mammoth heads stood two thousand feet or more out in the glory of celestial, radiant sunshine, far above the clouds, the rain, the sleet, and the snow. The beauty of that sight was almost beyond imagination and I think perhaps even in eternity I will not forget it. I am sure you know that those beautiful sunlit peaks, lifting their hoary heads into the heavenlies, were actually and in truth standing with their feet in the valley far, far below - so far below that they were out of sight, hidden, and obscured by the stormy clouds that hung like a mantle about their massive breasts. It is true beyond any possibility of denial that the mountain I saw in glory and heavenly sunshine far above the clouds was one and the same mountain that was standing with its giant feet far below in the lowly valleys of earth. If you, my friends in Christ, can see this picture, then you will see a vision of what the body of Christ really is. The Head white as snow, even now is in the heavenlies at God's right hand far, far above the storms and strives of earth while we, the feet of that same mountain, even the mountain of the body of Christ, are standing in the valleys of earth inseparably joined to the Head in heaven. As the mountain above the cloud was the same mountain that stood on the ground, so Christ through His undivided body of sons is now declaring, "Heaven is My throne and earth is My footstool."

Like some tall cliff that lifts its awful form
Swells from the deep and midway leaves the storm,
Though round its breast the rolling clouds are spread,
Eternal sunshine settles on its head.

"As the body is one and hath many members, and all the members of that one body, being many, are one body, so also is Christ." 1 Cor. 12:12. At the commencement of this article we described how the human body, composed of millions of cells and having many members, is one body. So also the spiritual body of Christ has many members and those members are people begotten of God, sons of the Most High. They are grafted by one Spirit into one vine, members of one body, rooms in one house not made with hands. The body of Christ is composed of tens of thousands of sons and yet it is but one Christ - not one in heaven and many on earth, but one mountain whose head is in heaven and whose feet are on earth. In truth we can say that this vast family of sons, who, though a multitude, is but one body, may now be called the only begotten Son of the Father.

Well did the prophet Daniel describe the fall of the false but powerful system of Babylon when he said, "Thou sawest till that a stone was cut out without hands, which smote the image upon his feet that were of iron and clay, and brake them to pieces. Then was the iron, the clay, the brass, the silver, and the gold broken to pieces together, and became like the chaff of the summer threshing-floors; and the wind carried them away, that no place was found for them: and the stone that smote the image became a great mountain and filled the whole earth." Dan. 2:34-35.

That great mountain, Oh saints of the Lord, is none other than the mystical body of Christ, the true ecclesia, the true church, the chosen sonship company who follow the Lamb withersoever He goeth, who, being led of God's Spirit, are sons of God and joint heirs with Christ. These are they who are not defiled with women (sects and denominations). In their mouth is found no guile and they are without fault before the throne of God. "But in the last days it shall come to pass that the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established in the tops of the mountains, and it shall be exalted above the hills; and the people shall flow unto it. And many nations shall come, and say, Come, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, and to the house of the God of Jacob; and He shall teach us His ways, and we will walk in His paths: for the law shall go forth of Zion, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem. And He shall judge among many people, and rebuke strong nations afar off; and they shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning hooks: nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more. But they shall sit every man under his vine and under his fig tree; and none shall make them afraid: for the mouth of the Lord of hosts hath spoken it. For all people will walk every one in the name of his god, and we will walk in the name of the Lord our God for ever and ever." Micah 4:1-5. See also Isa. 2:2-5.

Thus hath the Lord spoken of the stone cut out without hands, even the mystical body of Christ, that in the latter days it should smite the image of Babylon that now holds all nations and peoples in its grip of deception. On its corrupt feet of iron and miry clay shall it be smitten till it fall and be broken to shivers to become as the chaff of the threshing floor that the wind driveth away. And the stone that smote the image shall become a great mountain that will fill the whole earth. From the things, which we have spoken it should be easily seen that this great mountain is none other than the true ecclesia, the sons of God, the fullness of Christ manifested in His many sons.

In this hour of telling forth the glory of the Lord I feel as the writer of the book of Hebrews must have felt when over and over again he left off speaking of the high calling of God and the so great salvation to warn his readers of the dangers that lay all about them. There is a danger today that scarcely existed in the days of the apostles. In their day sectarianism was almost unknown and, whenever its ugly head was raised, it was smitten with apostolic sternness and authority. 1 Cor. 1:11-15. But in our day partisanship and sectarianism is rampant and increasing every hour. It has become such a confusion of tongues that the name of God is blasphemed.
among the unbelievers because of its abominable heresies and divisions. Cursed be your divisions, your sects, and your denominations! They have torn asunder the body of Christ, crucified afresh the Son of God, and displayed Him to the ridicule of the whole world. What part have you, O Son of God, with those who by their divisions, often advanced for personal gain, tear asunder the body of Christ? You speak of sonship and pretend that you have attained, yet you worship the image of confusion - if not the golden head, then the silver shoulders, the brass belly, the iron legs, or the crumbling feet. Do you not know how dangerous a thing it is for you to remain in this camp, declaring by your very seat in the congregation of a sect that you are a sect worshipper and a member of the Babylon system? Do you not know that suddenly, while you are unaware, the mystical stone, cut out without hands, will smite this giant image of which you are a part and it shall crumble as dust and be no more? Is it any wonder that the Holy Spirit spake by John and said, "Come out of her, My people, that ye be not partaker of her plagues." The invitation of the hour is not to the sinner to come to Christ. The invitation is for the Christian to come out of Babylon and cease from the worship of its ungodly image.

Has it ever occurred to you how strange a thing it was that, immediately after Daniel had interpreted Nebuchadnezzar's dream and the king had bountifully rewarded him for his service and promoted him to the office of Prime Minister, it is said, "Nebuchadnezzar the king made an image of gold, ...and set it up in the plain of Dura?" Dan. 3:1. Then, calling together all the princes and governors, the captains and judges, the treasurers and counselors, the sheriffs and all the rulers of the provinces, he had a herald shout the message to all people and all languages that they should fall down and worship the golden image of Babylon, and, failing to do so, they would be cast into the burning, fiery furnace. The worship of this abomination was not done without show. The bands and orchestras were present replete with cornets, flutes, harps, sackbuts (trombones), psalteries, dulcimers, and all kinds of music. Verse 5. And all mankind was instructed that they must fall down and worship the abominable image the moment the band struck up the tune.

Among that vast throng of head-nodders and yes-men assembled before the image there were but three lonely men who remained standing, refusing to dance to the devil's tune or to bow down at Babylon's abominable altar.

The average, I fear, is no better today. My friend and brother, all unknown to you the image of Babylon's confusion is daily before you, complete with all the fanfare of pretty choirs and all manner of musical instruments. There among her congregation you yield yourself to regimented worship with the docility of a robot. Like a puppet on a string you willingly bob, you stand, you sit, you sing, you praise, you dole out money at the command of the puppeteer in the pulpit, and then you call that church, you call that Christian, you call that sonship, you call that worship, you call that assembling and insist we must not forsake it. What it really is is Babylon. It is worshipping at the shrine of an image that the sons of God will soon smite on the feet and destroy.

"But," you ask, "if we come out of this, as you say we should and as the Bible says we should, where will be go?" The answer to that question is clear and unmistakable. Centuries ago in anticipation of your question God gave the answer in these simple, certain words: "Let us go forth therefore unto Him without the camp, bearing His reproach." Heb. 13:13. It will be a reproach; make no mistake about that. It will mean the burning, fiery furnace of ridicule and misunderstanding, but the fire will deliver you from your bonds and your thongs, your strait-jackets and your handcuffs, Dan. 3:25, and the form of the Son of God will be seen, for God is walking with you. You will neither be harmed nor hurt nor burned, nor will the smell of smoke remain upon you. "We have an altar, whereof they have no right to eat which serve the tabernacle. ... Wherefore Jesus also, that He might sanctify the people with His own blood, suffered without the gate. Let us go forth therefore unto Him without the camp, bearing His reproach." Heb. 13:10,12-13. It will be a happy day for any man when by God's gift of revelation he discerns between the false church and the true, the image of Babylon and the reality of Christ. You will not have much longer to decide.

As it was in the day that Lot went out of Sodom, so shall it be in the day when the Son of man shall come, and unto those who have heeded the warning, let the further exhortation be given, "Remember Lot's wife."
It was given to Daniel to see the image of the false, Dan. 2, but it was given to John to see the true. Rev. 1:10-18. John was a young man when he walked in Judaea and Galilee with Jesus of Nazareth, the one he loved above all else and all other. Though John wrote more of the love of God than any other man, he was not mild by nature. He and his brother James were the men the disciples nicknamed Boanerges, meaning sons of thunder. These were the men who said of the Samaritans, "Shall we call down fire on them as Elijah did?" But the years of association of this son of thunder with the Son of God had wrought a change in him that naught but the transformation of regeneration can possibly explain. He had seen Jesus carry His cross, and he had seen Him die upon it. Grasping the meaning of the cross he had taken up his own, willingly borne it and died upon it so that the John of Patmos was scarcely the "Boanerges" of yesteryear.

What a difference there is when we associate with Jesus! What a transformation takes place when we glory in His cross and identify ourselves with it! Nothing was so despised in ancient times as the cross and nothing was so detested. To the Roman it was capital punishment, the place for felons to die. To the Jew it was a stumbling block and to the Greek it was foolishness, but unto us who are saved it is both the power of God and the wisdom of God. It was a fitting symbol for us sinners, a fitting place for our serpent natures to die and eternally perish in our identification with Him. How well is our rebellion, our carnality, our sin and our beastly nature typified in that serpent of brass which Moses hung upon the pole that all men who were bitten by serpents might live by beholding that which was crucified. "And Moses made a serpent of brass and set it upon a pole, and it came to pass, if a serpent had bitten any man, when he behold the serpent of brass, he lived." Num. 21:8-9.

Is it any wonder, then, that this man who through life was so thoroughly identified with Jesus and His cross should now begin his book with these words: "I was in the Spirit on the Lord's day." As Daniel saw Babylon portrayed as the image of a man, an idol before which all men should worship, so now John saw the completeness of Christ as a man - not the image of a man, but one like unto the Son of man. God grant us all the spirit of wisdom and understanding that we may see that this wonderful mystery which John beheld was in truth the fullness of Christ as He shall appear at the end of this age in which we now live. According to the record John was in the Isle of Patmos in banishment because of the witness of the truth. In Weymouth's vivid translation the record reads like this: "I, John, your brother and a sharer with you in sorrows and the kingdom and endurance of Jesus, found myself in the Island of Patmos for my loyalty to the word of God and the truth told us by Jesus. On the Lord's Day I was inspired by the Spirit and heard behind me a loud voice like the blast of a trumpet. It said, Write the vision in a book, and send it to the seven churches, to Ephesus, Smyrna, Pergamum, Thyatira, Sardis, Philadelphia, and Laodicea. I turned to see who it was that was speaking to me; and then I saw seven golden lampstands, and in the center of the lampstands one resembling the Son of man, clothed in a robe, which reached to His feet and with a girdle across His breast. His head and His hairs were white, like white wool, as white as snow; and His eyes were like flames of fire, His feet were like silver-bronze when it is white hot in a furnace, and His voice was as the sound of many waters. In His right hand He held seven stars, and a sharp two-edged sword was seen coming out of His mouth; and His face was like the sun shining in its full power. When I saw Him, I fell at His feet as if dead, but He laid His hand upon me and said, Do not be afraid: I am the First and the Last, and the ever-living One. I died; but I am now alive for evermore, and I have the keys of the gates of death and of Hades." Rev. 1:9-19. Weymouth.

It seems presumptuous that I should attempt to explain a glory and a wonder so great as this. It was D. L. Moody who once said he had never preached a sermon on John 3:16. Its truth was too great for him to explain, so he just quoted it and let it speak for itself. But it may be that, if we now with much humility behold the vision as it was given to John on Patmos, God will of His kindness open our eyes that at least part of its meaning may grip our hearts. The blind man, when he heard the call of Jesus, cast aside his garment and ran to Him. In these sacred moments, when our eyes would behold the Lord, we may find it necessary to cast aside the shoddy garments of our church theology, our human ways of looking at things, and come running to Him that our eyes may be opened to see the truth as God sees it and not as tradition explains it.

The one like unto the Son of man is the fullness and the completeness of the Christ. Jesus of Nazareth was the seed that fell into the ground and died. The vision John saw was the fullness of the harvest at the end of the age. The lonely voice that had stirred the towns and cities of Judaea and Galilee was no longer the voice of an individual, but the voice of many, sounding as many waters and as a trumpet in its glory and strength. Jesus of Nazareth was the head of the body; the man John saw was both the head and the body of Christ. Jesus of Nazareth was the first born of many brethren; that which John saw on Patmos was both the first born and the many brethren. The fullness of Christ of which Paul wrote is Jesus with His many brethren, "Behold, I and the sons which God has given Me." Heb. 2:13. It was of the fullness of this body of sons that Paul spoke when He said, "Whom he did foreknow, He also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of His Son, that He might be the firstborn among many brethren." Rom. 8:29. Weymouth puts it, "Those whom He has foreknown He has also predestinated to share the likeness of His Son, that He might be the eldest in a vast family of brothers." It is this vast family of brothers that is the fullness and completeness of the Christ. It is this vast family of brothers that God for two thousand years has been preparing as the mystical body of Christ. This family of brothers consists of the sons of God complete at the end of the age and prepared to govern the world in the kingdom of God to come. The marvelous vision that John saw of one like the Son of man is the representation of Jesus, the first born, together with His many brethren. This is the fullness of Christ. This is the body of Christ. This is He of whom the Holy Spirit spake, saying, "I will declare Thy name unto My brethren; in the midst of the church will I sing praise unto Thee. And again, behold I and the children (brethren or sons) which God hath given Me." Heb. 2:12-13. It was in truth "I and the brethren" that John beheld as "one like unto the Son of Man," Rev. 1:13, whose voice was as the sound of many waters (many people).

One day some Greeks came to Philip, saying, "Sir, we would see Jesus." Philip and Andrew went and told Jesus of their request, but Jesus, instead of presenting Himself to them, left them to ponder this strange paradox: "The hour is come that the Son of man should be glorified... Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone: but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit." John 12:20-24. Jesus Himself was the interpretation of this. He was the corn of wheat that fell into the ground and died, but the much fruit at harvest time is the family of many sons of God, complete in one great body at the end of the age. So go and tell these Greeks, Philip, that, if they really want to see Jesus in all His fullness, they will have to wait until harvest time when in all His completeness He stands amid the candlesticks with eyes like a flame of fire, head and hairs as wool as white as snow, His voice as the sound of many waters, a two-edged sword issuing from His mouth, His face as the sun shining in his strength, and His feet like fine brass as if they burned in a furnace. Thus shall appear the great body of sons at harvest time.

How different is the abominable lifeless image of Babylon from this revelation of the fullness of Christ! How different the head and how different the feet! How different the worshippers who fall before it!

Because we share in the body of Christ, Paul says we are bone of His bone; we are flesh of His flesh. We are baptized into His body and we have become partakers of His divine nature. It was this wonderful reality that John saw on Patmos as one "like unto the Son of man." In the light of all this reality is it any wonder that God now calls His sons to come out of Babylon with all its organized worship? Images are not far removed from idols. They are both objects of false worship. It is the image of Babylon that the church system worships today and not the Christ who, when He comes in the fullness of the harvest, will in one hour destroy that system.

My heart rejoices that Daniel, who saw the image of Nebuchadnezzar, was later given a vision of the true Son of man, a vision that was in such accord with the vision of Patmos that one would think he had been sharing the scene with the apostle John. This is the awe-inspiring description of what he saw: "I raised my eyes and looked, and, lo! there was a man clothed in linen, his loins girded with the fine gold of Ophir, his body flashing like a topaz, his face like lightning, and his eyes like torches of fire, his arms and legs gleaming like burnished bronze, and the sound of his words like the sound of a multitude." Dan. 10:5,6. (Goodspeed)

The hour of the fullness of this revelation is at hand. The coming of the Lord draweth nigh. Cleanse your garments, therefore, and lay aside every weight that you may be accounted worthy to be found in Him without spot or blemish, bone of His bone, flesh of His flesh, spirit of His spirit, a son among a vast family of sons who form the mystical body like unto the Son of man.

CHAPTER THREE
THE HOUSE NOT MADE WITH HANDS
No man who ever lived labored more faithfully than our Lord Jesus Christ and none was ever endued with so great an anointing as He. Mighty were the signs and wonders that followed the outpouring of the Holy Spirit at Pentecost, yet even that bountiful outpouring was given by measure, but of Jesus Christ it is written, "God giveth not the Spirit by measure unto Him." Time and again I have marveled at the wisdom with which He spoke. The trickiest questions His scheming enemies could devise were answered with the greatest simplicity, but in such a way that His adversaries were put to shame and ventured not to interrogate Him further, fearing lest the last remnants of their refuge of lies would be swept away by the eternal wisdom of His answers.

In the Archko Volume, page eighty-eight, the following statement concerning Jesus Christ is attributed to the writings of the learned Gamaliel, at whose feet Paul was instructed. "He turns nature into a great law book of illustrations, showing that every bush is a flame, every rock a fountain of water, every star a pillar of fire, and every cloud the one that leads to God. He makes all nature preach the doctrine of trust in the divine Fatherhood. He speaks of the lilies as pledges of God's care and points to the fowls as evidence of His watchfulness over human affairs. Who can measure the distance between God and the flowers of the field?
What connection is there between man and the lily? ...Thus, beginning with a flower, He reasons upward to the absolute and then descends and teaches lessons of trust in a loving Father. The lessons of trust in God reassure the anxious listener and create an appetite that makes him long for more."

The reverent heart is made to wonder at the unmistakable authority He always manifests in the face of the most incredible challenges. See Him at the wedding feast and marvel as He changes water into wine. Listen to the sobs of a desperate father, who brings before him a maniac son whose demon possession has rendered helpless even those disciples who had been given power over demons. With sadness He rebuked them, saying, "O faithless generation, how long shall I be with you? How long shall I suffer you? Bring him unto Me."
One sentence of command, one word of life fell from the lips of Him who had created worlds and tears of sorrow were turned to pearls of praise as the happy father embraced a transformed son.

One day they brought Him tidings that His friend, Lazarus of Bethany, was sick unto death, but Jesus, knowing aforetime, remained yet four days beyond Jordan that there might be no doubt in any mind concerning the certainty of Lazarus' death. "Lazarus is dead," He told His disciples, "and I am glad for your sakes that I was not there to the intent that you might believe." Then, coming to the grave, the sobs of heartbroken sisters and weeping friends fell upon His ears, till Jesus Himself lifted up His voice and wept with them - not because of helplessness, but because they did not yet believe that He was the Christ, the Son of God. Though they had seen His power and He had taught them so much, still their hearts were dull and their minds slow to grasp the vision of who He was. "Take away the stone" was His word of command; but they, fearing He could do no more than view the rotting remains, objected, "By this time he stinketh!" "Said I not unto thee that, if thou wouldest believe, thou shouldest see the glory of God?" He asked; and they, taking way the stone, heard Him command the rotting, dead man, "Come forth!" And he who was dead came forth, bound hand and foot with grave clothes. John 11.

All power in heaven and earth is at His command. Of this the Roman centurion was fully aware when he came bowing before Him, saying, "Lord, I am not worthy that Thou shouldest come under my roof: but speak the word only, and my servant shall be healed. For I am a man under authority, having soldiers under me: and I say to this man, Go, and he goeth; and to another, Come, and he cometh; and to my servant, Do this, and he doeth it." And Jesus, bless His name, instead of shrinking back in unbelief as others might have done, looked about Him in amazement, saying, "I have not found so great faith, no, not in Israel," and, rising to the occasion without the slightest effort, He issued the command, "Go thy way; and as thou hast believed, so be it done unto Follow Jesus through His life and you will see His authority everywhere. The boisterous waves cease their raging at His command to become a peaceful glassy sea. "Stretch forth thy hand," He commands the withered, and life divine floods back into drooping muscles as life-giving blood surges through once shriveled veins. To the leper He says, "Be clean," and his loathsome disease departs from him. "Take up thy bed and walk" is His command to the frail and palsied man and he, filled with the strength of youth, leaps up at the command. Of the furious mob who came to take Him He demands, "Whom seek ye?" "Jesus of Nazareth," was their reply. "I am He," was the fearless answer that fell from His lips divine, and they, hurled backward by a force they could not see, fell prostrate and helpless at His feet. As if to doubly manifest their powerlessness in His hand He demanded again, "Whom seek ye?" And they, trembling and afraid in His presence, replied, "Jesus of Nazareth." "I have told you that I am He," He said. "If therefore ye seek Me, let these go their way." Can you imagine such heavenly authority as this - that He whom they expected to be their cringing captive, helpless as a lamb in the mouth of a lion, would be heard issuing His omnipotent commands, orders which they, His enemies, dared not obey?

In Pilate's report to Caesar, vividly describing the uproar of the mob at the time just preceding the crucifixion, this statement is found: "Crucify Him! Crucify Him!" cried the relentless rabble. The vociferations of the infuriated mob shook the palace to its foundations. There was but One who appeared to be calm in the midst of the vast multitude. It was the Nazarene! Archko Volume. Page 140.

Does it not seem incredible that Christ could be so endued with God's mighty power that even creation would do obeisance to Him, that He should speak words of omniscience such as no man ever spoke, heal every disease known to mankind, trample beneath His feet the strongest demon, raise the dead back to life, calm the fury of the boisterous waves, and cause an angry mob, who came to take Him, to fall in helplessness at His feet, and in the face of all these wonders they would yet remain blind as to who He was? It would appear that His own disciples remained in some degree of darkness. Nothing can display with greater certainty the extent of the blindness of the natural mind. Even today the same shadow remains, showing as nothing else can that no man comes to Christ except the Father draw him.

Through much study in the word of God and through many years of personal experience I have become thoroughly convinced that "except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it." Except the Lord keep the city, the watchman waketh but in vain, and except the Lord reveal the deep and hidden things of God, they will forever remain unknown to us no matter how excellent our teachers or how diligent our instructors.

One day in Caesarea Philippi, as the disciples of Jesus gathered around Him, He asked them this question: "Whom do men say that I, the Son of man, am?" And they said, "Some say that Thou art John the Baptist; some, Elias; and others, Jeremias, or one of the prophets." It is evident from these answers that the natural mind can come to any number of conclusions, but, however well considered those conclusions may be and however good the reasoning behind them, the real truth remains a hidden mystery until the Spirit of God unfolds it through the enlightening power of revelation. Each answer they gave had reason on its side. John the Baptist had baptized in water. So did Jesus' disciples. John had enormous crowds, and so did Jesus. Thus their reasoning was that this Jesus was John the Baptist risen from the dead. As to Elias - had not the prophets foretold that Elias would come? Certainly some of the works of Elijah were clearly seen in the ministry of Jesus. And Jeremiah, the prophet? Was it not he who sighed, "Oh that my head were waters, and mine eyes a fountain of tears," (Jer. 9:1) and was not this mighty Jesus a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief?

Yet He was none of these. Then said Jesus, "But whom say ye that I am?" And Peter, speaking from a heart overflowing with revelation, fervently affirmed, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." It was not by much learning that such mighty truth had been revealed to this lowly fisherman. He was an unlearned and ignorant man. It is doubtful that he could read or write, much less that he had learned of Christ's Sonship through poring over ancient volumes or sitting at the feet of some Gamaliel. The eternal message he uttered that day had not been revealed to him through the instruction of Jesus. The truth that Jesus was the Christ, the Son of the living God, had come flooding into his soul as a light from heaven. A light, shining in dark places, had revealed what eye had not seen nor ear heard nor had entered the heart of man. Well did our Lord know whence these words of truth had come, and for our profit and the enlightenment of all who should afterward believe the Savior pronounced this blessing upon his head: "Blessed art thou, Simon Bar-jona: for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but My Father which is in heaven." Matt. 16:13-16.

Beloved reader of these lines, ponder, if you will, this solemn inquiry: Has the Holy Spirit ever revealed to you that Jesus is the Christ? Is He just Christ because someone told you so? How sad I feel when I find men and women, not excluding some of those who profess to be born again, to whom Jesus Christ is little more than a good man who lived two thousand years ago! When I hear people refer to Him whom angels adore as "the man upstairs" or "my Jewish friend" and other such demeaning terms, then I know for certain that all they have known of Jesus is what flesh and blood has revealed to them. When "My Father, who is in heaven," reveals that Jesus is both Lord and Christ, neither heaven above nor earth beneath can find terms grand enough to express our adoring adulation of Him. If you have seen Him even through a glass darkly, you will be as Isaiah, who wrote in the sixth chapter of his prophecy, "In the year that King Uzziah died I saw the Lord sitting upon a throne, high and lifted up, and His train filled the temple. Above it stood the seraphims: each one had six wings; with twain he covered his face and with twain he covered his feet, and with twain he did fly. And one cried unto another, and said, Holy, holy, holy is the Lord of hosts: the whole earth is full of His glory. And the posts of the door moved at the voice of him that cried, and the house was filled with smoke." If we see Him in this way, we will cry as Isaiah did, "Woe is me! for I am undone; because I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips: for mine eyes have seen the King, the Lord of hosts." Any man who sees the glory of God so longs to be rid of the filth of his sin that he cries, "Wash me and I shall be whiter than snow."

It saddens my heart to know that most of the preachers today have never seen that Jesus is both Lord and Christ. They know Him not as holy, harmless, undefiled and separate from sinners, and higher than the heavens. They know not in their hearts that from Him everything comes, by Him everything exists, and in Him everything ends. They know not that through Him God hath reconciled all things unto Himself or that He hath committed unto us the word of reconciliation. They have not seen that God the Father had such faith in the blood of His Son that He declared remission of all the sins of the past. Rom. 3:25. They treat Him not as one close at hand, but as a God afar off. Ah, Jesus, Thou blessed Christ of God, Thou art He whom angels adore. Thou art He who has redeemed us and has prevailed to open the book of life and the seven seals thereof.

I learned to know a name I highly treasure.
O, how it thrills my spirit through and through.
O wondrous name beyond degree or measure.
My heart is stirred whene'er I think of You.

Many centuries ago our beloved Lord said to a throng of religious men who stood before Him, "I have come in My Father's name and ye receive Me not. Another shall come in his own name; him ye shall receive." Paul must have been mindful of this very truth when he wrote to the Corinthians in these words: "I fear lest by any means, as the serpent beguiled Eve through his subtlety, so your minds should be corrupted from the simplicity that is in Christ. For if he that cometh preacheth another Jesus, whom we have not preached, or if ye receive another spirit, which ye have not received, or another gospel, which ye have not accepted, ye might well bear with him." 2 Cor. 11:3-4. Another Jesus, another spirit, another gospel! These money-grabbing radio and T.V. preachers who use the gospel as a gimmick to promote their worldly programs are total strangers to the gospel Paul preached. They preach another gospel. Indeed, they may use fine and polished sentences. Their sermons may sound good to people who, like Eve, have been beguiled by the serpent, but their gospel is not the gospel of the kingdom and it is not the gospel of grace. It is another gospel. To Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, Daniel said, "Thou art this head of gold." Babylon's image has a head of gold. All its wealth is the wealth of the world. That is why the radio and T.V. preachers are always begging for your money. They glibly ask their listeners for millions in donations and willingly resort to every sordid trick and sob story to persuade the people to give more and more money. The main thrust of their program is neither the gospel nor the preaching of it, but the need for more and more money to carry on their programs, which neither fatten nor fill a hungry soul. All the while they preach this foreign gospel, sin increases in all its avenues. Murders multiply. Thefts and robbery increase. Rape runs rampant. Adultery becomes universal. Drunkenness curses the nation and drugs scourge and darken the minds from the highest to the lowest as evil men and seducers wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived.

The gospel they preach is not the gospel of grace or the gospel of the kingdom. It is another gospel. It is the gospel of Babylon. The Jesus they preach is not the Christ of God, but another Jesus of their own making. They use His name in vain, because they know of no other name that would attract such unusual interest. They feign the power to heal in His name and would have the world believe they have no failures, but if all the people were healed who they claim were healed, there would not be a feeble one among our tribes.
The covetous, self-exalting spirit is not the Spirit of God. It is another spirit - the spirit of that golden-headed monstrosity called Babylon. By it millions are deceived to flock to the standards of covetous men. If you will listen to them talk, you will seldom hear the worship of Jesus Christ, the only begotten Son of God, but the adulations of one who purports to be God's man of the hour or some specially chosen vessel, commissioned to bring the gospel to the whole world in the last days. If their human effort were taken away, their programs would disappear in a month.

Thomas was a blessed man of God, a chosen disciple of the Lord. He always was a bit of a doubter, unwisely demanding proof that he could see with his eyes or understand with his natural mind. For three wonder-filled years he had followed the Lord. He had heard His wisdom unfolding the mysteries of God. Standing by Jesus' side, he beheld the marvels of His power. Oftentimes he had watched the lame walk or had seen the miracle of a leper cleansed. He had heard the dumb glorify God as the string of his tongue was loosed. His eyes had seen the raging waves become as calm as a crystal sea. Many times this Thomas had felt the touch of the Lord's hand on his own. He had watched the Lord die in the cross and stood in awe at the fearful darkness that spread its terror over the land. He had felt the terrible earthquake as all creation struggled and groaned with the dying Savior. He remembered that Christ had said that He would die and after three days rise again from the dead, but alas, for all this the dimness of the natural mind still clouded and befogged his understanding. Thus, when the glad heralds proclaimed that Jesus was alive and had been seen of many, with stubborn determination he vowed, "Except I shall see the print of the nails in His hands and thrust my hand into His side, I will not believe." Don't judge him too harshly, my brother. Why should he believe when until that very day death had always kept his prey? It is true that Lazarus and others had been raised back to their mortality by the miracle of Jesus' power, but now, alas, alas, it was Jesus Himself who was dead and who was there in this dread hour of loss that could hope to raise Him from the dead? Our blessed Lord always knows what is best for smoking flax and bruised reeds. He knows our frame; He remembers that we are dust. Then that very night, appearing among them like some phantom maturing from the shades, Jesus Himself stood in their midst. It was to Thomas He addressed His words of grace and kindness, for none as He knew the dreadful ache in His servant's heart. "Reach hither thy finger," He bade a man bowed down with doubt and fear. "Thrust thy hand into My side," He said to him whose faith was almost gone; and Thomas, deigning not to draw near or touch Him, but starting up in the amazement and glory of the revelation, saw by the Holy Spirit what he had never fully seen before. Jesus was both Lord and Christ. "My Lord and my God," he gasped; and nothing more could he say. He saw now what before he had not known, for God had made this Jesus, whom the rabble had crucified, "my Lord and my God."

Only days ago I read a book about Jesus. The author had done a tremendous amount of research and I am sure that many of his conclusions were correct, but he ended the book with these words of darkness: "Jesus of Nazareth was a man; nothing more and nothing less." Had that man's words been born of revelation, he would have cried aloud with the wondering Thomas, "My Lord and my God!"

In these last days the Lord God Almighty is calling out a people for His name. He is not concerned about bringing all the world to the light just now. That He will do in His own time and in whatever age He has ordained it. Long ago He shed His blood for the world. His blood is eternal life and that life is for all the world. When God the Father saw the sacrifice of His Son and the power of His life-giving blood, He "declared His righteousness for the remission of sins that are past." Rom. 3:25. Since God the Father had such abounding faith in the blood of His Son, we must conclude that a man is justified by faith without the deeds of the law. The law is not made void through the operation of faith. Nay, by faith the law is established. Let us therefore abandon all our carnal reasoning to see Jesus as God sees Him, both Lord and Christ. If we are to see Him at all, we must see Him by revelation.

My heart is greatly burdened in this, the end of the age, that God's people should not become absorbed with the doctrines and fancies of men, lest we, as others before us, make the word of God of no effect by our tradition. Let our fervent prayer be, "Open mine eyes that I may behold wondrous things out of Thy law." Lord and Father, I know my eye has not seen. I know my ear has not heard, for it was never tuned to the wave length of heaven. I know my heart has never understood eternal things. "My soul is night; my heart is steel! I cannot see! I cannot feel!" Come, Holy Spirit, and reveal Thyself. Take the things of Christ and disclose them.
to me. It is the Spirit that quickeneth. The flesh profiteth nothing. Where the eye has failed, where the ear has become unhearing and the mind has become unthinking, O Christ, manifest the hidden things to my searching spirit, yea, the deep and mysterious things that eye cannot see nor ear hear, neither can enter into the heart of man.

Let this, then, be your prayer and let it be mine, for the natural man can never grasp the things of the Spirit. But now the Sun of righteousness, arising with healing in His wings, gives light to our blind eyes. Its virtue will unstop the deaf ears and remove the covering of darkness cast over the minds of God's people. It will touch the simple with understanding and to those who have no might it increaseth strength.

Reverence for the Lord is the beginning of wisdom and the knowledge of the Holy is understanding. Wisdom is the principal thing. Therefore get wisdom and, with all thy getting, get understanding. If our God will be gracious and in loving kindness will anoint our eyes and draw back the curtain of night, then in the words that follow we will see that pearl of great price, for the sake of which the heavenly merchantman has sold all other pearls that He might obtain and bring to perfection that one which He has chosen in this age of grace.

THE HOUSE NOT MADE WITH HANDS

The ministry of our Lord on earth was almost over when He called His disciples to a large upper room, furnished for the occasion. He knew that the hour for His departure out of the world had come. Already Satan had put the act of betrayal into the heart of Judas Iscariot, and Jesus, knowing that the Father had given all things into His hand and that He came from God and went to God, took a towel and girded Himself and began to wash the disciples' feet. "Dost Thou wash my feet?" Peter asked. "What I do thou knowest not now, but thou shall know hereafter," was the wise reply. "Thou shall not wash my feel," Peter protested. "But if I wash thee not," said Jesus, "thou shall have no part in Me."

Thou shall have no part in Me! No part in Thee if Thou wash me not? O Christ, what words are these? Thou hast washed my heart and cleansed it white as snow. Thou hast washed my hands that I do no evil before Thee. Thou hast washed my head and anointed it with the oil of gladness above my fellows; but O, my feet! Day after day I tread earth's sordid pathways. Though I am not of the world, I am still in it. I have abandoned Babylon and all her daughters, but her dust still clings to me. Wash my feel, O Christ! Prepare Thy people for a higher realm. Make my feet like hinds' feet that I may dwell high in the mountain of God. "An highway shall be there, and a way, and it shall be called the way of holiness; the unclean shall not pass over it; but it shall be for those: the wayfaring men, though fools, shall not err therein. No lion shall be there, nor any ravenous beast shall go up thereon, it shall not be found there; but the redeemed shall walk there: And the ransomed of the Lord shall return, and come lo Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads: they shall obtain joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away."

Isa. 35:8-10.

So Jesus washed Peter's feet; and verily I say to you that all who will have part in Him to become members of that mystical body, the body of Christ, must be washed by Him from every last grain of earthly dust. Many thousands have been washed, but how often our feel are soiled with the things of this present life! I dare not detract anything from His salvation, for he that believes in Christ is certainly justified from all things, but there are many vain talkers in the world who speak much about the body of Christ while in their hearts they are saying, "Thou shall never wash my feet!" They are determined to secretly cling to those earthly things that forever identify them with this present evil world.

I cannot give it up, this little world I know;
The innocent delights of youth, and things I treasure so.
My Father's heart is kind; He will not deem it ill
That my small corner of the world should please and hold me still.

Yet those innocent delights are the things from which Christ would now wash you that you might have a part in the glory of the temple, which is His body.
I want to live above the world,
Though Satan's darts at me are hurled.
Though some may dwell where these abound,
My prayer, my aim, is higher ground. So Peter yielded himself to the washing that he might have a full part in Him. And now that Christ had washed them all, the mysteries of a higher realm began to unfold before their wondering eyes as Jesus began to tell them of a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. Their hearts were greatly troubled because He had warned them of troublous times that lay ahead. He told them that He would be crucified and for this they mourned. He said that He would rise again, and because of this they were astonished beyond measure. He had shocked them by His warning that one of them would betray Him and this had filled their hearts with consternation. Now, to add further to their sorrow, He had told Peter, who seemed to be a pillar of strength, "The cock shall not crow twice till thou has denied Me thrice." Now, therefore, with a heart filled with understanding He comforted their troubled minds with a hope never before revealed to mankind: "Let not your heart be troubled: ye believe in God, believe also in Me. In My Father's house are many mansions."

Here now we must ask the Spirit of the Lord to lift the hidden things from before our understanding and reveal the things that since the world began have been kept secret. If you are one of the many who find comfort in believing that "My Father's house" is heaven, and the many mansions are the houses on golden streets in which you will dwell for eternity, we shall have no quarrel about that, but truly I tell you that the house of many mansions, of which He spoke that day, is something far more than houses in the sky. "My Father's house" is not my house, but an eternal abiding place, which our God is building for Himself. His house is a temple not made with hands, built not for time but eternal in the heavens. That house not made with hands (may God reveal it) is the mystical body of Christ. Every stone in it is a living stone, a redeemed person who has partaken of eternal life, whose feet have been washed from the grime of all of Babylon's system and whose steps no longer lead to the harlot's house. Every stone in this temple is a living stone. Every living stone is a redeemed person, made alive with His life, which is eternal.

Listen to the words of Peter in later years as he presses this golden truth home to the hearts of understanding saints. "If so be ye have tasted that the Lord is gracious. To whom coming, as unto a living stone, disallowed indeed of men, but chosen of God, and precious, ye also, as lively (living) stones, are built up a spiritual house, an holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God by Jesus Christ." 1 Pet. 2:3-5. This superb gem of revelation vividly reveals just what the Father's house really is. It tells us that the living temple is made of living stones, each stone a living person, and, though they are so many, yet they are one house of many living stones. It was for this our Savior prayed, requesting of God, "That they all may be one; as Thou, Father, art in Me, and I in Thee, that they also may be one in us: that the world may believe that Thou hast sent me. And the glory which Thou gavest me I have given them; that they may be one even as We are one: I in them, and Thou in Me, that they may be made perfect in one; and that the world may know that Thou hast sent Me, and hast loved them as Thou hast loved Me." John 17:21-23.

I stand in amazement and wonder, marveling at such words of life as these. The Christ within rejoices in them and my own spirit bows in adoring contemplation of them. Such truth belongs to the eternal realm and can never be explained to the satisfaction of the natural mind, no, not in ten thousand years.

Only the Holy Spirit can manifest the glory of the relationship between the Father and the Son, and how can we know except by the illumination of inspiration that our own relationship to the Father is as His relationship to the Father? "Thou in Me, and I in Thee, that they also may be one in Us." I shall not try to explain this further, the Holy Spirit alone can make it clear. Let us therefore humbly bow before the God of glory, earnestly requesting that He would make known this heavenly mystery, hidden from all previous ages, "which is Christ in you, the hope of glory." Col. 1:27. "Ye have an unction from the Holy One, and ye know all things . . . Ye need not that any man teach you; but as the same anointing teacheth you all things, and is truth, and is no lie, and even as it hath taught you, ye shall abide in Him." 1 John 2:20,27.
Now when Paul wrote to the saints in Corinth, he often expressed surprise at their lack of spiritual understanding. We dare not imagine the pain he would feel if he were faced with the ignorance, the blindness and the unbelief to be found in the twentieth century church, which is without doubt the church of Laodicea. In 1 Cor. 3 the apostle carefully explained the wonders of Christ's temple not made with hands, saying in verse 9, "Ye are God's husbandry, ye are God's building." Solomon built a magnificent temple of stone. He overlaid it with gold and adorned it with silver. All manner of precious stones were in it. So wonderful was it that the queen of Sheba, beholding even the ascent to the house of the Lord, was breathless at the sight. But the temple built by Solomon was only a fleeting foreshadowing of the living temple which Christ would build in the age of grace — a temple not made with hands. Not of dead stones, but of living stones. Not covered with glittering gold, but overshadowed by God. Not adorned with silver, but founded on redemption. Not fashioned with glittering, precious stones, but by the eternal jewels of His gifts and graces.

It is with an expression of shock that Paul demanded of the Corinthians, "Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you?" 1 Cor. 3:16. And again, "Know ye not that your bodies are the members of Christ?" 1 Cor. 6:15. And with still greater emphasis, "What? Know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost which is in You?" 1 Cor. 6:19. It is very evident that Paul is manifesting genuine surprise, if not incredulity, to discover that the people who have been Christians for years, who prided themselves in spiritual gifts, should still be totally ignorant of their true relationship to Jesus Christ. "What?" he asks in amazement, "Know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost?" Do you not know that God dwells in you? Do you still imagine that He dwells in stone temples, made by the art of man's device? Do you not know that "My Father's house" is a house of many mansions and that you, God's saints, are that house? You are that temple not made with hands. What? Do you not know that you are that mystical body of Christ and members in particular? Has God not made it real to you that every individual who is joined to Christ in the Spirit is an abiding place or a room in that heavenly mansion? That, I am sure, is the meaning of the scripture, "In My Father's house are many mansions (abiding places)." The house is made of many living stones. Every stone is a redeemed person and every living stone is a separate abiding place in which the Spirit of God dwells. "My Father's house" is the temple of God, a building of the Lord, a house not made with hands. It cannot be either temporal or transient as was the temple of Solomon, which was destroyed and left without one stone upon another. The temple which is Christ's body is eternal in the heavens. It is not earthly nor does it belong to the earthly realm, but to an heavenly. It is not of corruption, but of incorruption It is not of mortality, but of immortality.

These are solemnizing truths. These are unspeakable words almost unlawful to utter. I cannot approach such truth with lightness or glibness of heart nor hear them without awe. I stand amazed at them, being aware that these heavenly precepts are being spoken to men who were born in sin and shapen in iniquity. Beheld what an amazing manifestation of amazing grace that is that mankind, born in sin and conceived in rebellion, should now, exonerated from their sins, be sons of God and joint heirs with Christ, members of His body, of His flesh and of His bones, and placed as living stones in a living temple, the habitation of God through the Spirit, the holy house not made with hands from which God in ages yet unborn will govern the entire universe in righteousness.

Oh, that men and women would cease from their elation that demons are subject to them or that they were eyewitnesses to a healing or a miracle and rejoice rather that their names are written in heaven. It was to her eternal credit that the queen of Sheba traveled the dusty desert roads from a far country to hear the wisdom of Solomon and to stand in breathless awe at the sight of the glittering temple he built. But a greater than Solomon is with us. Jesus Christ, the Son of God is building a temple of living stones, even stones of fire. Every stone is living. Every stone is speaking. Every stone is breathing the breath of eternal life. The living stones in this temple are the members of the body of Christ. They are sons of God and members of His family. By adding them to Himself God is expanding Himself, as a man by fathering many sons expands his family and himself. By God's family of sons, the holy temple, the Lord will fill the universe with Himself, for the saints are the fullness of Him who filleth all in all.

The knowledge of this sublime truth will make you holy. No one can ever thus see his place in God and yet remain in carnality. Should one claim to see these truths and yet remain as he was before, then he has not seen by the Spirit, but by the natural mind only. Be gone all lightness and frivolity! Away with all sin and pride! Cast off all self-seeking and fleshy imagination. What? Know ye not that ye are God's temple and that His Spirit dwells in you?

"Now therefore ye are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow-citizens with the saints, and of the household of God." Eph. 2:19. This meaningful passage of truth deserves the earnest prayer and consideration of every saint of God. There was a time when you were a complete stranger to Christ and a foreigner to His kingdom, having no part in His promises, but by His Spirit He brought you nigh. By His blood He cleansed you. The Holy Spirit was imparted to do the work of regeneration that you might know the power of the new birth. It is not the old you that now exists. Through the miraculous power of God you have become a new creature, a new creation in Christ. You have been born into His family. You have not been adopted into it, as we so often hear it said. You have been born into it and thus you have become a member of the family of God by a spiritual birth. We should never confuse adoption with the new birth. Adoption is a heavenly rite by which a young son of God is proclaimed of age, responsible, and capable of being heard and doing the Lord's will and purpose. Jesus was the Son of God when He was born, but on the day of His baptism a thunderous voice from heaven declared, "This is My beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased. Hear ye Him." That was the rite of adoption. Paul says Christ was declared to be the Son of God with power, according to the Spirit of holiness, by the resurrection from the dead. That is adoption.

The house not made with hands, the temple of the Lord, "My Father's House" is "built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ Himself being the chief corner stone, in whom all the building, fitly framed together, growth unto an holy temple in the Lord; in whom ye also are built together for an habitation of God through the Spirit." Eph. 2:20-22. What could be clearer than these verses? Do they not vividly demonstrate what the Father's house really is? Does not Paul's use of the word growth in verse 21 indicate that God's temple is a living organism, composed not of bricks, but of living beings, sons of God, ever growing, ever maturing and ever being added to as new sons are born into God's family to take their place in a living temple? This house not made with hands is not only being built by God, but is growing in numbers, growing in maturity and in spiritual understanding and wisdom.

As I write these lines our Canadian Parliament has just gone down to defeat. Carnal, worldly men devoid of the wisdom of God strive to run the affairs of the nation without prayer, without inspiration, without morality and without God. They have no chance of success, and, when a new Parliament is elected, the same godless crowd will face each other across the floor, promoting more sorrow and confusion until the whole Babylonish mess of corruption finally falls. This confusion of man's making will not endure always. For two thousand years our God has been preparing a living temple, a house not made with hands. His Spirit abides in every living stone and His mind rules over all. From that holy temple He will govern the world when the times are ripe for it. Then the knowledge of the Lord will fill the earth as the waters cover the sea. Thanks be unto God that corruption is almost at an end. The stone cut from the mountain without hands will soon smite the image of Babylon on its unworthy feet. Six days shalt thou labor, O man, and do all thy work, but the seventh day is the Lord's millennial day. In it none of the works of man will be found, but the Lord shall reign in Zion, for it is God's Sabbath day.

Weymouth in his beautiful translation renders the above passage, Eph. 2:19-22, in these devout and meaningful words: "You are therefore no longer mere foreigners or persons excluded from civil rights. On the contrary, you share citizenship with the saints and are members of His family. You are a building which has been reared on the foundation of the apostles and prophets, the cornerstone being Christ Jesus Himself, in union with whom the whole fabric, truly bonded together, is rising so as to form a holy sanctuary in the Lord; in whom you also are being built up together to become a fixed abode for God through the Spirit."

The Scripture is one composite whole. Every part of its structure depends upon every other part, for this reason Paul says, "In union with Christ Jesus, the whole fabric, truly bonded together, is rising to form a holy sanctuary for the Lord." We are being built together to become a fixed abode for God through the Spirit. In the light of this, how true are Paul's words: "There is one body, and one Spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling; One Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, who is above all, and through all, and in you all." Eph. 4:4-6.

I do not have the ability to make this truth any plainer than Paul made it when he first wrote it, but surely the devout mind can see with some measure of clearness what infinite pains the Holy Spirit has taken to reveal God's purpose for the saints in this age of grace and more especially their ministry in the ages to come. We earnestly pray that the eyes of your understanding may be enlightened that you may know the hope of His calling and what are the riches of the glory of God's inheritance in the saints, and what is the exceeding greatness of His power toward us. Often we talk and sing about our inheritance in God, but I am afraid it is seldom indeed that anyone takes time to explain the exceeding riches of God's inheritance in His saints.

Would God that all the saints might see God's purpose as one complete whole. The purpose for man is the same today as it was when the Lord said, "Let us make man in our image and after our likeness, and let us give him dominion." Never for one second has the immutable Father deviated from that purpose. Even the fall of man in the garden is part of the unchanging, unvarying purpose. The blessed Lamb who was slain before the foundation of the world was not slain in case man should sin, but because the creature was to be made subject to vanity, not willingly, but by reason of Him who subjected the same in hope. Rom. 8:20 Well did God know that, after His creation had suffered a while, He would establish, strengthen and settle it. The blessed Father knew that, when the prodigal had returned in penitence from the swine pen of his transgression, there would be a fatted calf to nourish him, a best robe of righteousness to cover him, covenant rings to be placed on his fingers, and shoes of the preparation of the gospel of peace to be placed upon his feet. There would be heavenly music and dancing, for this, the son that was lost, is found and he that was dead is alive evermore. God's inheritance in His saints is that they should be His eternal dwelling place, the habitation for God in the Spirit, for God shall dwell with them and in them. They shall serve Him day and night in His temple. In this temple the stones are living. They are the sons of God whose service will restore the whole creation to find its one head in Christ.

The book of Hebrews, that incomparable revelation in which the author rises to inexpressible heights of inspiration, has this to say concerning the house which the Lord is preparing: "And Moses verily was faithful in all his house, as a servant, for a testimony of those things which were to be spoken after; but Christ as a son over His own house; whose house are we, if we hold fast the confidence and the rejoicing of the hope firm unto the end." Heb. 3:6,6. Whose house are we! O may the Father of light reveal the fathomless depth of that truth to our hearts! The Revised Standard Version says here: "And we are His house." On that sad night, when Jesus washed His disciples' feet, for the first time ever He began to reveal the mystery of the Father's house and, though they understood not what He was saying, He left them with this blessed and holy promise: "I go to prepare a place for you." For centuries in our lack of understanding we have made that statement to mean that somewhere in heaven beyond the blue in a city of gold Christ was preparing us a mansion in which we could dwell. We are so earthbound in our thinking! Man is continually imagining after the earthly. He imagines heaven to be not much different from earth. He thinks eternal life is little more than an extension of time, though eternal life has nothing to do with length of days. The holy temple, which He is building, the Father's house, is not being made for you or for me, but for the Father. We ourselves, the redeemed of the Lord, are that habitation for God in the Spirit.

It is not possible to explain these truths to human satisfaction. The things that eye hath not seen nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man must be revealed to us by the Spirit. Abraham centuries ago had a vision of the new Jerusalem bride of Christ, the city that hath foundations whose builder and maker is God, but do you think for a moment that he was able to impart the truth he saw to his nephew Lot? It is possible that even his wife Sarah did not see nor understand his vision. Abraham alone saw the city that hath foundations and followed hard after it, but he died in faith before he reached it. Even now in this far off day that Holy City has not descended from heaven. Neither will it do so for another thousand years or so more. Nevertheless, there is nothing more certain than this: The day will come when that city, which was seen afar off through the eye of faith, will be seen coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband.

In the messages of Christ to the churches a special promise was always given to him that overcometh, but to the church at Philadelphia He gave a promise that is worthy to fill every page of this booklet. May our Lord give us the Spirit of revelation to understand what He said. "Him that overcometh will I make a pillar in the temple of my God." Just think of that! I am sure that thousands of saints will rejoice to know they are living stones in the
It is Christ Himself who is preparing our place in Him. He alone knows the place prepared from the foundation of the world. It is not a question for us to decide. He divideth to every man severally as He will. Long before the ages began, He foreknew us all and predestinated us to our place in Himself, and, having done so, He prepared our trials and furnaces of affliction that we might be vessels perfectly fitted for the master's use. How thankful I am that it is Christ who is preparing my place in Him! "The Lord looketh from heaven; He beholdeth all the sons of men... He fashioneth their hearts alike; He considereth all their works." Psa. 33:13, 15. "My substance was not hid from Thee, when I was made in secret, and curiously wrought in the lowest parts of the earth... Thine eyes did see my substance, yet being unperfected; and in Thy book all my members were written, which in continuance were fashioned when as yet there were none of them." Psa. 139:15-16. Selah.

If Abraham, a man like you and me, could see the Holy City afar off, dare we think that our Lord, the Father of eternity, would not have seen the glory of His own temple long millenniums before the foundations were laid? When the fiery Stephen was giving his apology before the Christ haters of his day, he, being anointed mightily by the Holy Spirit, spoke of David's desire to build a temple for the Lord. This the Lord refused, but Solomon built Him an house. This statement is immediately followed by a pertinent fact, which we today must never forget. "Howbeit the most High dwelleth not in temples made with hands; as saith the prophet, Heaven is My throne, and earth is My footstool: What house will ye build Me, saith the Lord; or what is the place of My rest." Acts 7:49-50.

There is only one temple recognized by the Lord. It is the temple of His body, the greatest mystery of the ages. This is the true temple made without hammer or the sound of instrument. For two thousand years it has been rising on the foundation of the apostles and prophets and it will not be long before the flaming words of the prophet Malachi will be fulfilled: "The Lord, whom ye seek, shall suddenly come to His temple, even the messenger of the covenant, whom ye delight in: Behold, He shall come, saith the Lord of hosts. But who may abide the day of His coming? and who shall stand when He appeareth? for He is like a refiner's fire, and like fuller's soap: and He shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver: and He shall purify the sons of Levi, and purge them as gold and silver, that they may offer unto the Lord an offering in righteousness." Mal. 3:1-3.

"God, who made the world and all things therein, seeing that He is Lord of heaven and earth, dwelleth not in temples made with hands; neither is worshipped with men's hands as though He needed anything." Acts 17:24-25. This passage contains a special message for the sons of God in these last days. Never since the days of Noah have we seen such times as these. This is an evil day. It is the evil day. It is an hour when both the world and the professing church apparently believe that money solves every problem. To hear radio and T. V. evangelists speak, one would conclude that money, money and more money will bring the whole world into the truth. It is an abominable lie! John the Baptist never mentioned money, yet he shook the world. Money has never saved a soul and never will. Can you imagine Martin Luther begging for money to further his reformation? Can you imagine John Wesley or George Whitefield putting any confidence in it whatsoever? You will always know a false man by the time he wastes on his program begging for money. The love of money is the root of all evil, which, while some coveted after, they have erred from the faith and pierced themselves through with many sorrows.
Nebuchadnezzar was the king of Babylon and Daniel, interpreting his dream, said to him, "Thou art this head of gold." I am not trying to be funny or cynical, but Babylon has always had a head of gold. The whole Babylon system, both the world system and the church system, depends on money. The Beast of Revelation is the world system. The harlot of Revelation is the church system. That is why John saw the drunken, harlot woman riding on the back of the Beast. That is where she has always ridden. It is the world system that sustains the organized church system. These preachers are just as ready to receive their funds from the world as anywhere else. In fact, they depend not on the power of Christ or the mighty power of Pentecost to carry on their work but upon the currency of the world. It is an awful indictment, but it is true.

I cannot waste time trying to rectify the errors of the harlot system, which the Bible calls Mystery Babylon, the mother of harlots and abominations of the earth. To preach to them is not my calling at all. My calling is to minister to the temple of the Lord, which is rising to form a fixed abode for God in the Spirit. Where better, then, can I look for help than to the inspiration of God's word and the towering words of the apostle Paul that are so wonderfully applicable to us in this the end of the age. Let us see for a moment what exhortation he has for the saints, who are members of Christ's mystical body, the temple of the Lord. Let us lend an attentive ear to Paul's teaching concerning the temple of God and our association with idolaters, remembering as we read that we ourselves are the temple of God of which Paul speaks. Please notice the opposite mentioned here. "Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers: for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? and what communion hath light with darkness? And what concord hath Christ with Belial? or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel? And what agreement hath the temple of God with idols? For ye are the temple of the living God; as God hath said, I will dwell in them, and walk in them; and I will be their God, and they shall be My people." 2 Cor. 6:14-16.

You may say to yourself, "But the people I associate with are Christians. They are not unbelievers." My brother, there are many preachers who wave the Bible over their heads and shout, "I believe this book from cover to cover!" But go and ask if they believe Eph. 1:10 - "that in the dispensation of the fullness of times He might gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven, and which are on earth, even in Him" - and you will soon discover whether they are believers or not. Ask them if they believe Col. 1:20. Then ask them if they believe the all inclusive promise of Acts 2:38, 39, where Peter promised that men of all ages would receive the baptism of the Holy Spirit as they did at Pentecost. Ask them if they believe Rom. 8:20, 21 or a dozen other passages and you will find out that the very men who make such proclamations of faith are, in fact, unbelievers.

I am not anxious to condemn them; but to you the word is spoken, for God has said, "Come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing, and I will receive you, and will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be My sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty." 2 Cor. 6:17-18. We are indeed intensely interested in the temple of the Lord, and it has been abundantly demonstrated that the temple of the Lord is the true body of Christ. Furthermore it is perfectly evident that the sons of God are the members of the body of Christ, the house not made with hands. Are we then so foolish that we will overlook this earnest exhortation of Paul, in which he gives promise that those, and only those, who come out of the Babylon system will be sons and daughters of God? At any rate that is definitely what the apostle said. "Come out from among them... and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you, and will be a father unto you, and ye shall be My sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty." I am totally at a loss to know how we can longer dilly-dally in the face of such a stern command and such a glorious promise.

The feet of the image of Babylon are partly iron and partly clay - a very weak mixture to say the least. The entire Babylon system is now rising to its dizziest heights. I will tell you what will happen. This present pope, Pope John Paul 2nd, or the pope who follows him, will complete the work of forming a world church. The progress now being made in many quarters in gathering together Protestants, Catholics, Jews and Moslems into one drunken harlot system under Rome is nothing short of phenomenal. After this has been accomplished, the pope following will receive power from the beast system of world government to force everybody to worship the church beast whose deadly wound was healed. All manner of signs and wonders will be present to deceive the people insomuch that the image of the beast will speak and call down fire from heaven in the sight of men.
Rev. 13: 12-18. Fearful things are coming and I warn you that they are coming upon the very people who now believe they are going to be raptured out of all tribulation. The day is near at hand when the terrible cry will go forth in all the land, "Babylon is fallen, is fallen, and has become the habitation of devils and the hold of every foul spirit, and a cage for every unclean and hateful bird." This sordid condition exists at the present time. The church system is rising to dizzying heights in preparation for its unspeakable fall and with it the monstrous beast of the political system is also rising in its godless dominion over the very souls of men, but it shall come to its end and none shall help it.

Even now as I write, unknown to the multitudes in the world and in the church, a world government is already in place. The colossal world wide banking system, controlled by the Rothschilds and Rockefellers, govern both the communist and the so-called free world. Let us make no mistake about that. They have power to bring about crises, wars, strikes, rebellions and revolutions, depression or inflation whenever they will. Is it any wonder then that at this moment the Spirit of Christ is calling to His sons, "Come out from among them and be separate... and I will receive you, and will be a father unto you, and ye shall be My sons and daughters, saith the Lord almighty." If Christ is speaking to you, then obey Him and leave all the results in His hand.

Revelation and understanding can never flow in the heart of the disobedient. It is when we "come out" that Christ comes to sup with us and from His lips we learn the unspeakable mysteries of His kingdom. "Wherefore, my beloved, as ye have always obeyed, not as in my presence only, but now much more in my absence, work out your own salvation with fear and trembling. For it is God which worketh in you both to will and to do of His good pleasure." Phil 2:12-13.

The end of all things is certainly at hand. The temple, which is His body, has been in the process of building during the entire age of grace. It will be completed and ready for its glorious millennial ministry at the end of this present age. The sons of God are the body of Christ. They are members of Christ. He is the head Son; they are the body of sons. He is the eldest and firstborn of a vast family of brothers (Rom. 8:9, Weymouth), all of whom are sons of God and members of His family.

It is my opinion that the apostle John was transported over two thousand years of time from his imprisonment on Patmos to the day of the Lord at the end of the age when that great family of God's elect sons would be complete. The vision John saw on Patmos of the complete body of Christ was so incredibly magnificent and so far beyond his comprehension that, when his eyes beheld it, he fell as one dead, and I suppose, if the angel had not strengthened him, he would have died. The most glorious revelations of God often make their appearance when we least expect them. It was a dreary night for Jacob as he journeyed in fear from Padan-aram (Gen. 28), but what an unexpected glory overshadowed him when in his restless dreaming a ladder appeared before his eyes with angels ascending and descending upon it. Perhaps even then he heard the words of Jesus, "Henceforth you shall see heaven open and the angels of God ascending and descending upon the Son of man." Was the truth then made plain to him that an hour was coming in a far distant age when the Son of man, Christ the head and Christ the body, would be a ladder with its feet on earth and its Head in heaven, the Head and the body together, one glorious Christ, one celestial ladder, joining heaven to earth in one glorious kingdom of God? At the end of this age the hand of God will be stretched forth to remove the dark veil of the years; then a ladder will be seen reaching from earth to heaven. It will be the Christ of God, the head and the body perfectly one. Upon that ladder heaven will have access to earth and earth will have access to heaven.

Like some tall cliff that lifts its awful form
Swells from the deep and midway leaves the storm,
Though round its breast the stormy clouds are spread,
Eternal sunlight settles on its head.

Thus it was with John, in exile on little Patmos, a place of few inhabitants and always swarming with pirates, but he writes: "I was in the Spirit on the Lord's day, and heard behind me a great voice, as of a trumpet, saying, I am Alpha and Omega, the first and the last: and, What thou seest, write in a book, and send it unto the seven churches which are in Asia; ...And I turned to see the voice that spake with me. And being turned, I saw seven golden candlesticks; and in the midst of the seven candlesticks one like unto the Son of man, clothed with a garment down to the foot, and girt about the paps with a golden girdle. His head and His hairs were white like wool, as white as snow, and His eyes were as a flame of fire; and His feet like unto fine brass, as if they burned in a furnace; and His voice as the sound of many waters. And He had in His right hand seven stars: and out of His mouth went a sharp two edged sword: and His countenance was as the sun shineth in His strength. And when I saw Him, I fell at His feet as dead. And He laid His right hand upon me, saying, Fear not; I am the first and the last: I am He that liveth and was dead; and, behold, I am alive for evermore, Amen; and have the keys of hell and of death." Rev. 1:10-18.

Throughout the preceding pages our endeavor has been to show that "My Father's house" is the habitation of God through the Spirit. It is the house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. It is the temple of the Lord. It is the mystical body of Christ. It is not a temple of cold hard stones as was the temple of Solomon, which was at best only a figure of the true, but a temple of living stones, in which every stone is a born again member of a living temple, which is His mystical body. This is the living temple of which Paul wrote, saying, "Now ye are the body of Christ, and members in particular." This is that body of which Paul said, "The body is not one member, but many." And again, "The body, being many, is but one body, and every one members one of another." Such wisdom is too great for me. It is high; I cannot attain unto it, but in spirit I understand and my whole being cries, Amen. I see and I know! In spirit we see a temple rising from the lowly earth to the vaulted skies and that, I am sure, is what John saw that never-to-be-forgotten moment on Patmos when in the Spirit he was carried away to behold for the first time that which eye had never seen, nor ear heard, neither had entered the heart of man. It was the temple of Christ's body - not the Christ as He was at first, but Christ the first and the last together.

John was in the Spirit on the Lord's Day. Perhaps you will insist that the Lord's Day means Sunday. Others will insist that it means Saturday and I have no argument with you whatsoever. It very well could have been either of these days that the vision took place. I would like to point out, however, that the great prophetic statements of scripture always have two or more fulfillments. First they have some present and local interpretation, but if you look a few millenniums into the future, you will discover a larger and more wonderful interpretation than was at first believed. It is like a seed planted in the earth that springs forth, first the blade, second the ear, and third the full corn in the ear. Or it is like unto a protoplasm placed in the womb that grows and matures, we know not how, from an infinitesimal speck to a fully formed human being, ready to come forth from the womb to manifestation and maturity. Those who believe in God should never curse themselves and destroy their understanding by holding tenaciously to some tradition of the elders, but should remember rather the words of Peter when he said, "No prophecy of the scripture is of any private interpretation." 2 Pet. 1:20. There is always a greater and more important revelation further on.

John was in the Spirit. This is a fact of extreme importance. The realm of the Spirit is a realm beyond the reach of the natural. Spiritual things are all about us to such an extent that we live and move and have our being in them, yet the natural man can never see them until the Spirit draws aside the dusky curtains of our mortality and opens our eyes to the things of the eternal world. It was this way with the servant of Elisha as in fear and trembling he saw the hosts of Syria surrounding them, but what a small flight it was to the spiritual realm when in answer to Elisha's prayer, "Lord, open his eyes," he saw the mountains and hills filled with the hosts of the Lord.

Little did John realize in the lonesomeness of Patmos that Christ in His glory was so near. He did not imagine that he was to see in the Spirit what no man had ever seen. This same John had seen Christ, the First, but now he was to see Christ the First and the Last in one glorious manifestation of sonship. He was to behold Christ the head and Christ the body in one. My souls sing Amen! And in these far off days I know the full glory of that revelation is nearer to us than it was to him.

The voice John heard was as the voice of a trumpet speaking. No Roman fanfare proclaimed the coming of Christ to Bethlehem, but gentle angelic voices announced to a few elect and humble people, "Unto you is born this day in the city of David a Savior which is Christ the Lord." In the end of this age Christ our Lord shall appear again, and nothing is more clear than this: His coming will be with the sounding of the trumpet of God and the towering voice of the Archangel.

For two thousand years the body of Christ has been forming in secret in the lowest parts of the earth (Psa. 149:15), the head, the body, the hands and the feet. All this has been in silence and very often in persecution.
and in prison, but now the body of sons is almost complete and ready for the manifestation. The Alpha is joined to the Omega. Christ the First is one body with the Last. That is what the trumpet voice was saying to John and that is the mighty message for the age to come.

The voice John heard came from behind him so that he had to turn himself about to see from whence this mighty voice arose. I may not say for certain, but perhaps it is significant that John was looking in the opposite direction when the Lord spoke. How often our expectations are in the wrong direction! Almost always we find it necessary to turn ourselves about before we can see the revelation of Christ.

The candlesticks are the churches. Rev. 1:20. That is all that needs be said about them. The wonder that caught John's eye was not the candlesticks, but someone who was standing in the midst of the seven candlesticks. It was Christ the Alpha and the Omega, Christ the head and Christ the body. As the seven thousand who had not bowed the knee to Baal in Elijah's day were somewhere in the midst of Israel, so the sons of God are in the midst of the candlesticks as the kernel is in the husk and the spirit in the midst of the body and so the true body of Christ today among the outward forms of the churches. Was not Jesus the Alpha formed within the womb of Mary to come forth in manifestation as Christ, the head of the body? Should it then seem strange that the body of Christ, the Omega, should be formed in the midst of the church woman? Was not this the thing that John was seeing by revelation?

The personage John saw was like the Son of man. He was in truth the very image of Christ. John, who had known Jesus so intimately while He was here on earth, could plainly see the identical likeness, but his spirit told him that this revelation of Christ's glory was something far beyond anything he had ever known. This was the Christ in His fullness, the Alpha and the Omega together, the First and the Last in one, Jesus of Nazareth the Head, one body with a vast family of sons, all speaking with the harmony of a mighty symphony, for the voice he heard was as the sound of many waters. Waters are symbolic of peoples and multitudes. That is why the sound of their voices was as the sound of many waters - many people, many sons, all with one glorious message for the redemption of the world. "I am the Alpha and the Omega. I am the First and the Last. I am He that liveth and was dead; and, behold, I am alive for evermore, Amen, and have the keys of hell and death."

This one like the Son of man was clothed with a garment from the head to the foot. It was one garment for one body of many members. It was the robe of righteousness, the robe of royalty, the robe of the priest, for these have become a kingdom of priests. The robes of Aaron were robes of glory and beauty. How much more shall the robes of the Alpha and Omega display the power and the glory of God's Christ! His golden girdle is the girdle of truth. All that He is and does is in truth. Everywhere about us today we find deception as evil men and seducers wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived. Men in high office have become inveterate liars. International policy is often calculated to deceive. Solemn agreements are signed without any intention of keeping them, but the world is soon to see a governor whose garment of righteousness is girded with the golden girdle of truth. Demosthenes said, "What we have in us of the image of God is the love of truth and justice," and Horace Mann remarked, "Keep one thing forever in view - the truth; and if you do this, though it may lead you away from the opinions of man, it will assuredly conduct you to the throne of God."

His head and His hairs were white like wool as white as snow. White hair is symbolic of omniscience. It is the crown of spiritual wisdom, long experience and understanding. He learned obedience by the things He suffered. He was tempted in all points as we are. The long night of man's evil rule taught Him the intrinsic value of justice and wisdom. He knows every end from its beginning. He knows every thought afar off. He needeth not that any man should ask Him or tell Him. In Him are all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge. He grew in wisdom and stature and in favor with God and man.

His eyes were a flame of fire. All He shall look upon will be flooded with heavenly light. Since the transgression in Eden long ago, man's eyes have been fallen. They have no power except to receive light and reflections from without, but in the beginning the eyes of man were intended, not only to receive light, but to give light as well. For this reason it is said, "His eyes were as a flame of fire." Daniel's vision of the Christ was as fearfully intense as John's. His awesome revelation is stated in these words: "Then I lifted up mine eyes, and looked, and behold a certain man clothed in linen, whose loins were girded with fine gold of Uphaz: His body also was like the beryl, and His face as the appearance of lightning, and His eyes as lamps of fire, and His arms and His feet like in color to polished brass, and the voice of His words like the voice of a multitude." Dan: 10:5, 6. Is this not a most astounding, unspeakable vision of Christ, the Alpha and the Omega? His eyes were as lamps of fire. The purpose of a lamp is to give light. In the glory of Christ's kingdom, when this vision will be a reality in the whole earth, it shall come to pass that all that is looked upon by the sons of God will be flooded with the light of pure understanding. Even in our fallen state the eyes can tell us many stories. The boxers watch the eyes of their opponents to see where they intend to strike. Lawyers watch the eyes of men suspected of crime for signs of deception. Our eyes manifest innocence, jealousy and reproach as well as trust and happiness and much, much more, but this is a fleeting shadow still flickering in our fallen state. Then shall our eyes be as lamps of fire, giving truth and light and direction to all mankind.

His voice was as the sound of many waters. We mentioned above that the waters represent peoples. Rev. 17:15. The body of Christ is not one member, but many - a multitude. This is Daniel's description of His voice. "The voice of His words was like the voice of a multitude." I do not know how anything could be clearer. If Jesus is the firstborn of many brethren, who are in the image of Christ, why would not the voice of this Alpha and Omega be the voice of a multitude? It could scarcely be anything else. John was not seeing Christ as He was at first. He was seeing Christ as He is at last. He sees Him in triumph, shouting, "Behold, I and the sons which God has given Me!"

Out of His mouth went a sharp two-edged sword. The Word of God is living and powerful and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit and of joints and marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart. When we read, "With it He will smite the nations," our first thought must not be vindictiveness as so many preach. This sword of the Spirit does far more than kill. It pierces to the dividing asunder of flesh and spirit and discerns the thoughts of men and the intents of their hearts, and more often than not it brings repentance rather than judgment. The mighty outpouring of God's word at Pentecost caused men to be pricked and cut and pierced to the heart until they cried, "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" And the answer of the word was quick and clear: "Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost ... Then they that gladly received his word were baptized: and the same day there were added unto them about three thousand souls." Acts 2:37-41. When Stephen preached the word, they were cut to the heart, and to Paul the Spirit said, "It is hard for thee to kick against the pricks." It is true that to the unbeliever the sharp sword of the Word of God will someday condemn and kill, but the first and primary meaning must always be that it will pierce and cut and prick the conscience, bringing repentance toward God and faith toward Jesus Christ.

His countenance was as the sun shineth in its strength. Daniel, in corroboration of this statement, said, "His face was as the appearance of lightning. The prophet Ezekiel said, "The earth shined with His glory." Ezek. 43:2. In the light of this glorious revelation of what the body of Christ really is, I do not wonder that, when John saw the glory of the Holy City, the new Jerusalem, he especially noticed that the city had no need of the sun, neither of the moon, to shine in it, for the glory of the Lord did lighten it and the Lamb is the light thereof. Rev. 21:23.

There is in verse 15 a beautiful statement, which I have purposely left to the last. Daniel describes it thus: "His arms and His feet were like in color to polished brass." Dan. 10:6. In the beginning of this chapter we spoke of Jesus washing the feet of His disciples and of Peter's protest, "Thou shall never wash my feet!" "But," said Jesus, "If I wash thee not, thou hast no part in Me." The feet are as much a part of the body as the heart or the head, but we need not be reminded that the head appears first at birth followed by other vital parts of the body and finally the feet. Centuries ago a baby was born to Rachel. He was the last of the twelve sons of Jacob. When that child was born, his mother died. She called him Benoni, meaning son of my sorrow, but Jacob named him Benjamin, which loosely translated, means this: Son of my right hand born in the extremity of the age. We who are coming into sonship now in the extremity of the age are the feet members of Christ's body, the last to be born into God's family of sons. "Blessed are the feet of him who bringeth glad tidings of the gospel of peace." The gospel of peace is the gospel of the kingdom.
It is all very glorious and I marvel not that John, upon seeing it, fell as dead at His feet and Daniel, seeing the same things, says, "There remained no strength in me: for my comeliness was turned in me to corruption, and I retained no strength." Dan. 10:8. Such a sight as this is too much for mortal eyes, but its glory destroys corruption and mortality and awakens the saint to incorruption and immortality and eternal life. Such in the words of a man is the glory of "My Father's house," though seen afar off as through a glass darkly. Thus in the faltering words of man is the picture of "My Father's house," God's living temple, the body of Christ.

One day, as I read the vision which John saw of the Holy City, the New Jerusalem, the bride, descending from God out of heaven, I was amazed to read these words: "And I saw no temple therein: Rev. 21:22. Taken aback, I asked, "Whatever has become of the temple of His glory, which He has been building with such meticulous care throughout the entire age of grace?" Then I saw and understood the infinite words of truth, "For the Lord God Almighty and the Lamb are the temple of it." This is "My Father's house." This is the temple not made with hands. This is the body of Christ. From this temple of sons our God will rule the universe. Again in spirit I hear Paul say, "Now therefore ye are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow citizens with the saints, and of the household of God; and are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ Himself being the chief corner stone; in whom all the building fitly framed together growtheth into a holy temple in the Lord: in whom ye also are built together for an habitation of God through the Spirit." Eph. 2:19-22. Again I hear our Savior pray, "The glory which Thou gavest Me I have given them; that they may be one, even as We are one: I in them, and Thou in Me, that they may be made perfect in one; and that the world may know that Thou hast sent Me, and hast loved them, as Thou has loved Me." Amen.

CHAPTER FOUR
MY FATHER’S HOUSE

"What is man, that Thou art mindful of him? and the son of man, that Thou visitest him? For Thou hast made him a little lower than the angels, and hast crowned him with glory and honor. Thou madest him to have dominion over the works of Thy hands; Thou hast put all things under his feet: All sheep and oxen, yea, and the beasts of the field; the fowl of the air, and the fish of the sea, and whatsoever passeth through the paths of the seas. O Lord, our Lord, how excellent is Thy name in all the earth!" Psa. 8:4-9.

Before we attempt to explain truth so sublime as is contained in these beautiful words, it would be well to pause that our hearts may be searched to see if we are ready to receive such divine revelation as God's Spirit would bestow. The closer our walk with God and the further we go in the deep things of God the more we are faced with the indisputable fact that it is impossible for man to receive any truth from God unless that truth is revealed to the heart by a revelation of the Holy Spirit. "For what man knoweth the things of a man, save the spirit of man which is in him? Even so the things of God knoweth no man, but the Spirit of God." 1 Cor. 2:11. Again it is written that "eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither hath entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love Him. But God hath revealed them unto us by His Spirit; for the Spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God." 1 Cor. 2:9,10. It is not by the spirit of the world that God would give us understanding that we by earthly wisdom and scholarly attainments might unlock the hidden things of the Most High, "for the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God: for they are foolishness unto him: neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned." 1 Cor. 2:14.

Men were always in conflict with Jesus of Nazareth because they belonged to the earthly realm while He belonged to the heavenly realm. The only things that were real to them were the things that could be seen, heard, smelled, tasted and touched, while He saw the invisible, hear the inaudible, and clearly understood the incomprehensible. Because of the plane on which He dwelt, He knew that the things that are seen by natural eyes or heard by natural ears are only temporal, but the things, which are not seen, are eternal. 2 Cor. 4:18.

Before our eyes can behold the visions of God, we must be done forever with the opinions of men. We must be ready to throw all our human notions and church traditions on the dung heap, for "what things were gain to me" must be counted loss for Christ. Though we, like Paul, may have been brought up at the feet of some learned Gamaliel (Acts 22:3), instructed in all the traditions of the fathers, and found blameless in the light of our own understanding, yet, in that very moment when light brighter than any earthly sun shines into the darkness of our natural mind, we will count all but dung and refuse in comparison to the more excellent glory of God's eternal purpose. We could without difficulty make an impressive list of righteous men who abhorred their very existence and deplored their corruption in that moment when a ray of light from on high burst upon them. We could tell of Job, a man perfect and upright who feared God and shunned evil, of whom even God Himself testified that there was none like him in all the earth. Yet, when all his arguments were done and the dissenting voices of his counselors fell silent, God spoke, and, when He spoke, all the understanding and wisdom of Job shriveled and withered into the dust of nothingness, for he found he could not answer one question in a thousand and his own righteousness was such that he abhorred himself in God's sight and repented in dust and ashes. Job 42:1-6.

Oh, how quickly will men dismount the hobby horses of their traditions, how willingly will they cast their prided doctrines on the dung hill, and how gladly will they discard the trinkets of their teaching in that blessed moment when a ray of light from the celestial realm shines through the darkness of the natural mind! You, my friend, now reading these lines, are not exempt, nor am I who write them, for the understanding of the Almighty will come to give us light and, where the understanding of God bursts upon our spirit, we will wonder how it was that we could have been so blind or so content with the emptiness of our knowledge of Him. The proud in wisdom will be abased when they see in light eternal that the wisdom of man is foolishness with God.

As a little boy I was raised on a farm far out on the western prairies. We were pioneers in the truest sense of the word. We were homesteaders forty miles beyond the end of the steel. There were no telephones, radios, autos, or superhighways. Our transportation was horses and wagons and our first habitation was a seven by seven tent. As time went by, a little village grew up twelve miles from our farm home. Finally the railway came in and there were many signs of bustling progress. But what was my great delight when one day my younger brother and I were treated to a trip to a distant city! There our wondering eyes saw things we had never known existed. The electric lights, running water, the great buildings and beautiful stores, the dazzling array of electric signs and things to numerous to mention, though commonplace now, were then a new and living wonder to us. At last the day came to return to our country home. It was midnight when the train pulled into our little town of Alsask and, had I not been able to read the name clearly printed on the railroad station, I am sure I would have thought we had got off at the wrong place. Instead of brilliant lights and flashing signs a little kerosene lamp in a brass bracket offered its pale and doubtful glow. The station itself seemed to have shrunk to one third its size since we last saw it two weeks earlier, or had the old one been moved away and a new and tiny one brought in to replace it? The whole village must have been asleep except the mailman who loaded his bags on a little cart and trundled off through the frosty night to the Post Office. As the big engine puffed off into the darkness, we toddled off through the snow to the little hotel where, I still remember, we paid one dollar for a bed.

How quickly falls our castle of cards in the light of greater things! How soon our paltry religious world with its little "church" ritual withers away in the blessed light of celestial realities and the vaunted strongholds of our traditions crumble into nothingness in the light of the heavenly vision. For as heaven is higher than the earth, so are God's ways higher than our ways and His thoughts than our thoughts. But His rain, falling down from heaven, causes the earth, which we are, to bud and bring forth fruit, and His word of truth, falling with the light of revelation upon our darkened hearts, fills us with the understanding of the Almighty until from the dust and ashes of our desolation we rise to sing, How great Thou art! How great Thou art!

We are going to need more than human understanding to give the correct answer to David's question, "What is man that Thou art mindful of him, or the son of man that Thou visitest him?" How sadly often have I heard this text used to prove that man is nothing but a useless worm and that it is a never ending wonder that the Lord even notices him or pays any attention to him. Whether we believe it or not, this, alas, is the attitude of almost all the existing church system and almost all her ministers of whatsoever sect or faction they may be. I am afraid that comparatively few people have ever noticed that, when David by inspiration asked, "What is man?" he immediately proceeded to answer his own question in that strange veiled manner so common to divine revelation. "For it is the glory of God to conceal a thing, but the honor of kings is to search out a matter." Prov. 25:2.
"What is man that Thou art mindful of him?" Bear with me a moment and we will paraphrase this question to allow our minds to be lifted from the rut into which tradition has cast us. Let us read it this way. "What hast Thou in mind for man? What is Thy purpose concerning him?" Why did God make man in the first place? Why has He so marvelously visited the sons of men with such abounding grace and longsuffering? If we can begin to think in these terms, then the very attitude of our lives will be transformed. Instead of seeing mankind as a sort of troublesome mystifying nuisance unworthy of God's notice, we will behold eternal purpose in God's creation of man and in all His continued loving-kindness and tender mercy toward him.

We may be eternally thankful that David did not leave the question without an answer. The same Holy Spirit that provoked the question of his heart inspired the answer of his lips. "What is man that Thou art mindful of him," he mused, "or the son of man that Thou visitest him?" Then the answer sprang like a prophecy in his spirit, and, as we read his inspired words, we may well see that they blaze with a wonderful graduation of truth that portrays each progressive step in the history of man from the day of his creation until that blessed day when he, a member of the body of Christ, sits enthroned as the Lord of the universe. Thus in the eighth Psalm does David by the Spirit trace with unerring accuracy each progressive step which God from the beginning purposed for mankind in that day when the divine fiat went forth: "Let us make men in our image and after our likeness and let them have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over the cattle, and over all the earth, and over every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth." Gen. 1:26.

What is man that Thou art mindful of him? Or, what hast Thou in mind for man?

First; Thou madest him a little lower than the angels.

Second; Thou hast crowned him with glory and honor.

Third; Thou madest him to have dominion over the works of Thy hands.

Fourth; Thou hast put all things under his feet. All sheep and oxen, yea, and the beasts of the field, the fowl of the air, and the fish of the sea, and whatsoever passeth through of the paths of seas. O Lord, our Lord, how excellent is Thy name in all the earth!

The second chapter of Hebrews begins with these words: "Therefore we ought to give the more earnest heed to the things which we have heard, lest at any time we should let them slip." Heb. 2:1. The things, which we have heard! What things does He mean? Have you ever seriously asked yourself that question? What things have we heard to which we are to give such earnest heed? Oh, that God's people would meditate upon His word and earnestly enquire of Him, for I think that, the moment God's true purpose for mankind is revealed to any man by the Spirit, that man like blind Bartimaeus will cast away every hindering garment to go running after Jesus. What man is there who will not follow God when once God's infinite purpose is made known to his heart? The gospel being preached by the church system today is not the true gospel, but is largely morbid poppycock founded upon Roman tradition. It shows neither the purpose of God in creating man nor the purpose of God in redeeming him. It has no promise for the saints but an idle heaven and no future for the sinner but a blazing hell. It proves Satan to be stronger than the Almighty, giving him the lion's share of all God's creation. It makes him wiser than the omniscient One in that he outsmarted Him. It offers no purpose for the fall of man, considering not at all that "the creature was made subject to vanity, not willingly, but by reason of Him who hath subjected the same in hope, because the creature itself also shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God." Rom. 8:20-21. Why, the sufferings of this present fallen state are not worthy to be compared to the glory that is to be revealed in us (Rom. 8:18), for our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory; while we look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen: for the things which are seen are temporal; but the things which are not seen are eternal. 2 Cor. 4:17-18.

What then are those things to which we should give such earnest heed? are they not the things of which the apostle spoke in Hebrews, chapter one, and of which he continues to speak in the remainder of the entire book of Hebrews? If you would understand the book of Hebrews, you must first understand that wherever the son is mentioned more is implied than the blessed Jesus of Nazareth. You will have to comprehend that the son referred to here includes that vast family of sons who are coming into His image and likeness of whom the blessed Jesus of Nazareth is the exalted and glorious representative head. For as we, being many, are all one body, so also is Christ. Thus it is that the sons of God become the Son of God, for in one Spirit are we all baptized into one body; therefore, if you can understand this magnificent truth, you will see that the whole body of sons has become the only begotten Son of the Father. In one Spirit are we all baptized into one body, one body of what? One body of sons and one body of Christ. Did we not say above that mighty oaks from acorns grow? Did not Jesus say, "I am the vine; ye are the branches?" And is it not infallibly true that we have all grown up into Him which is the head that there may be one body of sons and that one body the only begotten of God? We are members of His body, of His flesh, and of His bones. We have been all made to drink into one Spirit and thus have we become one spirit with the Father and with His Son Jesus Christ. What a miracle of divine grace is this that as the water mingles with water, so spirit mingles with Spirit that man may be one spirit with the Father!

Here then in order are the things to which we must give earnest heed: First, God who spoke in time past by the prophets is in these last days speaking by His Son. Second, God hath made the Son better than the angels, for by inheritance He hath obtained a more excellent name than they. Heb. 1:4. Third, to which of the angels said He at any time, Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten Thee? And again, I will be to Him a Father, and he shall be to me a Son. Heb. 1:5. Fourth; When He bringeth His only begotten into the world, He saith, "Let all the angels worship Him." Verse 6. Fifth, He maketh His angels spirits and His ministers a flame of fire, but unto the Son he saith, Thy throne, oh God, is forever and ever; a scepter of righteousness is the scepter of Thy kingdom. Thou hast loved righteousness and hated iniquity; therefore God, even Thy God, hath anointed Thee with the oil of gladness above Thy fellows. Verses 7, 8. Sixth, to which of the angels said He at any time, Sit on My right hand until I make thine enemies thy footstool? Verse 13.

My head and my heart, my soul and my spirit bow down in the dust of humility at the mention of such marvelous grace as God has bestowed upon us in that we should be called the sons of God, and truly it is said, "It doth not yet appear what we shall be, but we know that, when He shall appear, we shall be like Him, for we shall see Him as He is, and every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself even as He is pure." 1 John 3:2-3.

In the blazing light of such humbling truth can we not now understand what the apostle meant when he said, "Therefore we ought to give the more earnest heed to the things which we have heard lest at any time we should let them slip"? I am sure that, once such sublime hope becomes part of the inner spirit and we can see the hope of sons of God, then there will come a radical transformation in every life. The hope that is set before us of entering into such glory will fade every trial into nothingness. Every unsurpassable mountain will become a mole hill, every difficulty a stairway to the stars. Every fiery trial will be a light affliction and every loss of natural things a gain in the Spirit, and we will find ourselves citizens of heaven while yet we dwell on earth. Instead of groaning over tribulation, we will take pleasure in affliction, in persecutions, in distresses and in loss. for that which is a loss in the natural is a gain in Christ, transforming the sons into the image and likeness of the only begotten Son of the Father. In our weakness we will be strong, for His strength is made perfect in weakness.

I do not persuade men to conform their lives to a creed that they may attain heaven when they die. Let those preach thus who will, but let us who have the hope of sonship burning within our breasts count everything but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus our Lord, for whom we now suffer the loss of all things and do count them but dung that we may win Christ and be found complete in Him.

Not only did the apostle exhort us to give heed to the things we have heard, but he was also preparing our hearts for things, which he would yet tell us. It is of great significance that he now takes up an exposition of the words of the prophet David, that in the mouth of two or three witnesses shall every word be established. Thus he says, "For unto the angels hath He not put into subjection the world to come, whereof we speak. But one (David) in a certain place (Psalm 8:4) testified, saying, What is man, that Thou art mindful of him? or the son of man that Thou visitest him? Thou madest him a little lower than the angels; Thou crownedst him with glory and honor, and didst set him over the works of Thy hands; Thou hast put all things in subjection under his feet. For in that He put all in subjection under him, He left nothing that is not put under him." Heb. 2:5-8. It is unfortunate that we become so accustomed to rhyming of the scriptures that we seldom pause to let the Holy Spirit reveal their truth to our hearts. For this reason it is often beneficial to read from an unfamiliar translation of the scripture that our understanding might be changed and enlightened. Now Weymouth in his translation makes Heb. 2:5-8, the passage quoted above from the King James version, to read like this: "It is not to angels that God hath assigned the sovereignty of that coming world of which we speak. But, as we know, a psalmist has exclaimed, how poor a creature is man, and yet Thou dost remember him, and a son of man, and yet Thou dost come to him! Thou hast made him/or a little while lower than the angels; with glory and honor hast Thou crowned him, and hast set him over the works of Thy hands. Thou hast put everything in subjection under his feet. (Psa. 8:4-6). For this subjecting of the universe unto man implies the leaving of nothing not subject to him. But we do not as yet see the universe subject to him (man). But we do see Him, who was made for a little while lower than the angels, even Jesus, because of His suffering of death crowned with glory and honor that He by the grace of God might taste death for every man."

The plain and indisputable teaching of this passage of scripture is that man, who was made lower than the angels, shall at last through the wisdom of the Father and the boundless grace of Christ be crowned with such glory and honor that he shall be set over all the works of God's hands, and that everything shall be under his feet. Indeed, the passage you have just read distinctly says, "This subjecting of the universe to man implies the leaving of nothing not subject to him." The apostle follows this almost unbelievable statement with these words: "We do not as yet see the universe subject to him (Weymouth translation), but we do see Jesus... crowned with glory and honor." Now what is so significant about the fact that we do see Jesus crowned with glory and honor? It is simply this: In seeing Him crowned with glory and honor, we are beholding the beginning of the fulfillment of this wonderful passage, for He (Jesus), being the head of that vast company of sons who are now coming into His image, has already been crowned. Thus there can be no greater surety in either heaven or earth that we too shall now follow Him into that same glory as sons of God and joint heirs with Christ. Since the first Son, the Prince, Captain, and the Head of all the sons, has been crowned with glory and honor, we have the perfect assurance that we also who are sons and members of that same body of sons, we who are the shoulders, the hands, and the feet of that same glorious Christ, the only begotten of the Father, will enter into glory and honor with Him when our turn comes. "For it was fitting that He for whom and through whom all things exist, in bringing many sons to glory, should perfect by suffering the prince leader of their salvation. For both He who sanctifies (Jesus Christ) and those whom He is sanctifying (you and me) have all one Father; and for this reason He (Jesus) is not ashamed to speak of them (us) as His brothers; as when He says; "I will proclaim Thy name to my brothers: in the midst of the congregation I will hymn Thy praises" (Psa. 22:22), and again, "I will be one whose trust reposes in God" (Psa. 18:2), and again, "Here am I, and here are the children (sons) God has given Me." Psa. 8:18. Heb. 2:10-13 (Weymouth).

Words fail me to express such eternal wisdom, kindness, grace and power as God does here display. Such promise gives me no feeling of pride or exaltation, but of sober and terrible humility, "for I have heard of Thee
There is a spirit of sonship. It is the Spirit of His Son - the spirit of reverence and fear, the spirit of adoring contemplation, the spirit that is willing to suffer in the flesh and thus be done with sin. The spirit of sonship willingly embraces tribulation, affliction, poverty, pain, and misunderstanding, knowing that Jesus was perfected by the things He suffered. So also will those younger sons by affliction be transformed into that same image. In one Holy Spirit all are being baptized into one body. Thus in the unity of that one body the many sons of God are becoming the Son of God that God may forever proclaim, "This is My beloved Son in whom I am well pleased." I make these points in humility because many today vainly boast of sonship, but, alas, they do not have the Spirit of the Son of God. Many preachers are laying claim to what they call the sonship message who themselves have never caught a glimpse of what sonship really means. I have heard men boast about what we are and what we are going to do as sons of God. Silence, O man! Silence! For you know not of what you speak. Imagine not in your vain heart that a boisterous public ministry, accompanied with much noise and glamour, and loud proclamations of healing and miracles, whether real or unreal, has anything in common with the spirit of sonship. Dare any man boast or be light and frivolous about such a sublime truth as this? Why, even Christ glorified not Himself to be made a high priest, but He that said unto Him, "Thou art My Son: today have I begotten Thee," Heb. 5:5.

There are far too many who understand with the head and not with the heart. They have never learned that it is with the heart that man believeth unto righteousness. Eternal truth can never be displayed to natural minds because God is spirit and the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God, neither can he know them, for they are spiritually discerned. Long Ago the apostle Paul wrote to the Christians, saying, "When for the time ye ought to be teachers, ye have need that one teach you again which be the first principles of the oracles of God; and have become such as have need of milk and not strong meat; for every one that useth milk is unskillful in the word of righteousness, for he is a babe." See Heb. 5:11-14.

Only by revelation of the Holy Spirit can the depths of God's wisdom be explored. The world abounds with men and women who preach the kingdom of God, but who themselves do not possess the spirit of the kingdom. There are literally millions compassing land and sea to make proselytes to the church who have never learned by the Spirit what the church is. The question "what church do you belong to " upon the lips of millions screams the ignorance of very man who asks it, for they imagine that the church is something made with hands, a denomination, a sect, or even a building, but they know not that the church consists of those who are joined to Him and Him alone. During the last twenty years preachers by the hundreds have been circumscribing little groups of people and calling them the body of Christ, but the body of Christ does not consist of visible groups whether large or small just because they adhere to a certain line of teaching. The body of Christ consists of those who have drunk deeply of His Spirit. They are the mystical company neither known nor recognized of men who in one spirit have been baptized into one body.

What God's people need today is not a repetition of the revivals of yesteryear. They need to separate themselves unto God. They need to set aside two or three weeks for fasting and prayer, humbling themselves before God to empty themselves of themselves and all their human notions. They need to lay their doctrines and beliefs on the altar and to lay all their past as well as their future in His hands. When you fast, do not fast for something. Do not fast for a gift, or for power, or even for revelation. Do not fast for a revival or anything else, but fast that you may be so emptied of self that henceforth He may lead you. It is not what we want that counts. It is what God wants that is important. Men never seem to cease from begging God for things they think they need or things they imagine should be. But God will not give you things. He will give you what you need and strip you of much you imagined was necessary. The life of every man will undergo a great change if there is honest fasting before the Lord.

Now the Lord dwelleth not in temples made with hands. The tabernacle in the wilderness, built with such intricate direction from God, was only a figure of the true tabernacle, which is the body of Christ. The temple of Solomon, so replete with typical observance, was but a frail prefigure of that wonderful spiritual habitation which the Lord is now building - a temple not made with hands, eternal in the heavens.
Let us seek the inspiration of God and the revelation of the Lord that our eyes may be opened to discern spiritual truth. Let us look beyond the phraseology commonly used by preacher and priest that we might begin to understand the true meaning of scriptures which we have read and re-read, often without thought, for the better part of our lives.

Hear now with the ear of the spirit the words of the apostle Paul who calls the true church the household of God, the true church of the Lord, the true and eternal habitation of God, of which Christ is the true corner stone. In the book of Ephesians he writes: "Now therefore ye are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow citizens with the saints, and of the household of God; and are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ Himself being the chief corner stone; In whom all the building fitly framed together growth unto an holy temple in the Lord; in whom ye also are built together for an habitation of God through the Spirit." Eph. 2:19-22. Wonderful as these words are, their meaning comes with even greater force when we read from the less familiar words of Weymouth's translation. "You are therefore no longer foreigners nor persons excluded from civil rights. On the contrary, you share citizenship with the saints and are members of His family. You are a building which has been reared on the foundation of the apostles and prophets, the corner stone being Christ Jesus Himself, in union with whom the whole fabric, truly bonded together, is rising to form a holy sanctuary in the Lord; in whom you also are being built up together to become a fixed abode for God through the Spirit." Eph. 2:19-22. (Weymouth). These are the words of divine inspiration proclaiming to the heart that is attuned to God's voice that God has no temple but the holy saints of the Lord, no habitation but the true and mystical body of Christ, no house but that house not made with hands, which is eternal in the heavenlies. The word household simply means a number of persons dwelling under one roof. Thus the saints of the Lord have become the household of God, and we are members of His family. We are not strangers and foreigners excluded from civil rights, but we are members of His family and of His household, sharing all the blessing and benefit of His paternal care until that hour when we come to maturity or come of age as joint heirs with our elder brother, the Lord Jesus Christ.

There are, I suppose, benefits in being a member of any family, and there are blessings in belonging to almost any household, but the eternal benefits of belonging to the family of God and being a member of His household are better left without description, for the frailty of man's words would seem only to decrease the endless bounty of such a wonderful relationship. Those who are members of God's family are God's heirs. They are joint heirs with Christ to all the things that God had in mind for man when first His edict went forth: "Let us make man in Our image and after Our likeness, and let us give him dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over the cattle, and over all the earth." Gen. 1:26. Which things are an allegory, for the fish represent the things under the earth, the cattle the things on the earth, and the birds the things that pertain to the heavenlies.

God in these last days has spoken to us by His Son whom He hath appointed heir of all things. Heb. 1:2. Even now, while we read this promise, His Spirit bears witness with our spirit that we are the children of God, and if children, then heirs: heirs of God and joint heirs with Jesus Christ, if so be that we suffer with Him that we may be glorified together. Rom. 8:16, 17. "For ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus. For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ. There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male or female; for ye are all one in Christ Jesus. And if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise." Gal. 3:26-29. "Now I say, that the heir, as long as he is a child, differeth nothing from a servant, though he be lord of all." Gal. 4:1. But the time of maturity is at hand and the years of childhood and adolescence are past. It is time to enter maturity and the age of spiritual responsibility where children are no more children, but sons of God. There is a wonderful maturity between the words of Gal. 4:1, "the heir, as long as he is a child, differeth nothing from a servant", and the words of Gal. 4:6,7, "because ye are sons, God hath sent forth the Spirit of His Son in your hearts, crying, Abba, Father (our Father). Wherefore thou art no more a servant, but a son: and if a son, then an heir of God through Christ."

Lest we should let the truth slip from our hearts, we will emphasize this truth. We who have been begotten unto a living hope through faith in Christ Jesus are begotten of God, even as John wrote, "He that is begotten of God keepeth himself and the wicked one toucheth him not." 1 John 5:18. Peter also by the wisdom given unto him wrote, "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which according to His abundant mercy hath begotten us again unto a lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead." 1 Pet. 1:3. Jesus Christ, our blessed Lord and Head, was begotten of God the Father, but so abundant was God's grace toward us that we, too, have been begotten unto a living hope. "For of His own will begat He us with the word of truth, that we should be a kind of firstfruits of His creatures." Jas. 1:18. "And every one that loveth Him that begat loveth him also that is begotten of Him." 1 John 5:1.

Surely our spiritual understanding will grasp the truth that we, being members of His household, are in truth the household of God, and we, being members of His family, are the family of God. But now we must learn also that we, being members of His body, are not only members but one body in Christ and every one members one of another. The body of Christ is the completeness of Christ. It is the fullness of Christ. In its unity the sons of God become the Son of God, for in one Spirit are we all baptized into one body. It is right to believe that we are complete in Him, "for in Him dwelleth all the fullness of the Godhead bodily. And ye are complete in Him, which is the head of all principality and power." Col. 2:9-10. Wonderful is the glorious fact that we are complete in Him, but what shall we say when our spiritual understanding begins to grasp the revelation that He is complete in us? For God "hath put all things under His feet, and gave Him to be the head over all things to the church, which is His body, the fullness of Him that filleth all in all." Eph. 1:22-23. The words of Weymouth's translation are most remarkable. "God has put all things under his feet, and has appointed Him universal and supreme head of the church, which is His body, the completeness of Him who everywhere fills the universe with Himself." Thus the true church, the true body of Christ, becomes the completeness of Him who everywhere fills the universe with Himself. Is it any wonder, then, that David by the Spirit mused, "When I consider Thy heavens, the work of Thy fingers, the moon and the stars, which Thou hast ordained: what is man, that Thou art mindful of him?"

Moses was faithful in all his house (tabernacle) as a servant, for a testimony of those things which were to be spoken after; but Christ as a son over His own house; whose house are we..." Heb. 3:5-6. A house, as we well know, is a dwelling place or an abiding place. It may be a hovel or it may be a mansion, but it is none the less a dwelling place. Therefore, to make the truth live that we might easily grasp it, we are here called the house of the Lord, as it is written: "I will dwell in them and walk in them; and I will be their God and they shall be My people." 2 Cor. 6:16. It is important that we understand that we are the House of the Lord. We have become so accustomed to calling church buildings made of brick and stone the house of God that we are amazed when we are shown that these are nothing but buildings, which will fall into discard and be left without one stone upon another. The true house of God is a spiritual temple, which temple you are. "Know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost?" 1 Cor. 6:19. "For the Most High dwelleth not in temples made with hands; as saith the prophet, Heaven is My throne, and earth is My footstool: what house will ye build Me? saith the Lord; or what is the place of My rest?" Acts 7:48-49.

Long ago our Lord told an earnest disciple, "Foxes have holes and the birds of the air have nests, but the Son of man hath not where to lay His head", but in the ages since that day He has been building with infinite care an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens, after a pattern devised by God long before man breathed the breath of life or became a living soul. Even Jesus referred to Himself as the temple of God when He said to the unbelieving Jews, "Destroy this temple and in three days I will raise it up..., but He spake of the temple of His body." John 2:19,21. Is it any wonder, then, that we, the sons of God born in the extremity of the age, should also be told that we are the temples of God? "Know ye not," said Paul, "that ye are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you?" 1 Cor. 3:16.

During the few final hours our Lord spent with His disciples before the crucifixion He told them many things they could not understand, for their eyes were clouded with tradition and their spirits dulled by their fleshy mind. If they could not understand the fact of His death nor what the rising from the dead would mean, how could they understand truths that were far beyond the comprehension of most Christians even in our day? He had said to Nicodemus, "If I have told you of earthly things and ye believe not, how shall ye believe if I tell you of heavenly things?" How then could men such as these understand the sublime truths of John 14?

"In My Father's house", said He, "are many mansions... I go to prepare a place for you." You will have to discard your tradition if you are to understand what He meant, for He was not describing some distant heaven with houses and lawns and flowers as we have so often heard, but something far more wonderful than that. We have already learned that God's people are the habitation of the Lord. Therefore the true and mystical church, which is being formed by the craftsmanship of God, is the Father's house of many mansions. Every room in that house is an individual believer and every believer is an abiding place for God. God dwells in them all, for we have become the habitation of God. Even now, while we live and breathe, He is preparing our place in the body of Christ; yea, He is preparing us for our place in Christ that we might be the completeness of Him who everywhere fills the universe with Himself. In Revelation chapter 22 the bride of Christ is described as a holy city, great and high, with gates that are never closed, into which the nations in ages to come will bring their glory and honor. Is it any wonder, then, that the bridegroom company should be described as a house of many mansions, the habitation of God through the Spirit?

The great King Solomon, when preparing to build the temple at Jerusalem, made this remarkable statement: "Who is able to build Him an house, seeing the heaven and heaven of heavens cannot contain Him? Who am I, then, that I should build an house, save only to burn sacrifice before Him?" 2 Chron. 2:6. But the beloved John, seeing the end of the matter, proclaimed, "Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and He will dwell with them, and they shall be His people, and God Himself shall be with them, and be their God." Rev. 21:3.

Rejoice, Oh house not made with hands, for in thy many membered mansion the Father dwelleth!

CHAPTER FIVE
MY FATHERS HOUSE THE TRUE TEMPLE OF THE LORD

Man, like his Maker, has always been a builder. As a boy builds with wooden blocks a model of his father's skyscraper, so little earth-bound man has tried to build a model of his heavenly Father's temple. If he had known that the model he built was nothing more than a model, all would have been well, but, not being able to see into the realm of the Lord, man has built his temples and his towers, vainly imagining that the mime (farce) he was building was the finished product that God desired.

In a beginning, for with God there are many beginnings, the Lord uttered the decree, "Let us make man in our image and after our likeness." No man that has ever walked on the earth has yet remotely fathomed the depth of purpose laid up in that one mighty edict. As centuries have passed, man has embraced many theories about himself. The theologians, erroneously so called, of the church system see man as a sort of lost cause, 'gone completely astray in every sense of the word from the path God had planned for him so that even the Almighty Himself was hard put to it to salvage a handful of these benighted souls from the awful calamity that had unwittingly befallen both them and their Maker. Nothing could be farther from the truth, and nothing could be more dishonoring to the wisdom of the omniscient God. Times unnumbered we have heard well-meaning but grossly ignorant men explaining to their gullible congregations how that after the fall of man a council was held in heaven to enquire by what means man could be redeemed from the awful catastrophe that had befallen him. With my own ears I have heard them tell how, after this plan and that plan of redemption was advanced by angels without hope of success, Jesus volunteered to go to the earth to die for man and this plan was accepted by the Lord. I greatly fear that my own mind is so intolerant toward such childish human notions that it would be safer to make no comment at all, for such human device leaves God in the untenable position of having no more wisdom, understanding, or forethought than fallen men. Indeed, it leaves Him with much less wisdom than Satan himself, who could thus come unobserved into the garden of God and, with a moment's trickery and persuasion, hopelessly undo, and that forever, the thing that God had planned.

However man can profess to believe that God is omniscient (all-wise) and in the same breath propagate a teaching that clearly makes Satan much wiser than He, I do not know. Nor can I understand how one could believe that God is omnipresent (everywhere present) and still imagine that something could transpire in His absence. How could one embrace the truth that God is omnipotent (all-powerful) yet still believe that Satan overcame Him, or that God is immutable (unchanging) yet had to change His purpose to fit a calamity which He had not foreseen? Oh, the foolishness and ignorance of the inconsistent carnal mind! Oh, the blindness and degradation of human tradition! Poor little earth-bound man, puny in strength, unwise in mind, changeable as the wind, confined entirely to that which is immediately present, has forgotten that the Almighty God, omniscient in wisdom, plans the end before the beginning. His immutability can never swerve from its divine course because of things unknown, for there is no unknown with Him. His almighty power irresistibly carries forth the edicts of His infinite mind; neither is there angel, principality, nor power that can let or hinder Him. He is the omnipresent, and should I "make my bed in hell," He is there.

"Oh Lord, Thou has searched me and known me. Thou knowest my down-sitting and mine uprising. Thou understandest my thoughts afar off. Thou compassest my path and my lying down, and art acquainted with all my ways. For there is not a word in my tongue, but, lo, O Lord, Thou knowest it altogether. Thou hast hasted me behind and before, and laid Thine hand upon me. Such knowledge is too wonderful for me; it is high, I cannot attain unto it. Whither shall I go from Thy Spirit? Or whither shall I flee from Thy presence? If I ascend up into heaven, Thou art there: if I make my bed in hell, behold, Thou art there. If I take the wings of the morning, and dwell in the uttermost parts of the sea, even there shall Thy hand lead me, and Thy right hand shall hold me. If I say, Surely the darkness shall cover me; even the night shall be light about me. Yea, the darkness hideth not from Thee, but the night shineth as the day: the darkness and the light are both alike to Thee. For Thou hast possessed my reins: Thou hast covered me in my mother's womb. I will praise Thee; for I am fearfully and wonderfully made: marvelous are Thy works, and that my soul knoweth right well. My substance was not hid from Thee, when I was made in secret and curiously wrought in the lowest parts of the earth. Thine eyes did see my substance, yet being unperfect; and in Thy book all my members were written, which in continuance were fashioned when as yet there was none of them. How precious also are Thy thoughts unto me, O God! How great is the sum of them! If I should count them, they are more in number than the sand. When I awake, I am still with Three." Psa. 139-1-18.

Did ever such a river of life flow from the mind of saint or seer, philosopher or prophet, that could more adequately describe the one true God, omnipotent, omnipresent, immutable, omniscient, eternal, full of grace, truth, and love? Oh, the depths of the wisdom and knowledge of God! How unsearchable are His judgments, and His ways past finding out! Who hath understood the mind of the Lord? Who hath been His counselor? Who has given anything to Him for, which he must be repaid? From Him everything comes; by Him everything exists; and in Him everything ends. To Him be glory forever and ever more!

Every man that names the name of God, and even those who never call upon Him, should seek after the Lord if haply He would reveal Himself to them. Verily, verily I tell you that, once He begins to unfold the greatness of His power, the un-searchableness of His wisdom and understanding, the immutability of His purpose, the extent of His kindness, the length and breadth, the depths and heights of His love, you will find a regeneration taking place in your life that you never could have otherwise known. The blinding traditions of men that have so long chained you in outer darkness will begin to fall as scales from your eyes in the light of what He really is. No longer shall the liberating truths of God be confined by the narrow and egotistical interpretations of human theology that bind men in chains and lay upon them burdens too heavy to bear, for He who lives within does plainly declare that, as He is, so are we in this present world. 1 John 4:17. No longer can he whom the Son of God has thus set free subject himself to the ball and chain of human organization. He will cast it far from him, for he will see it to be the shadowy specter of outer darkness that it is. Denomination and human organization are to the believer what a plaster jacket is to the body. Breathing is checked. Activity is greatly limited. Presently the whole frame is weakened until it becomes entirely useless and dwindles away. This is the faithful witness of the Word of God and of history as well. If some will say, "In unity there is strength", we must answer that the only unity God knows is the unity that comes, not when minds are one with each other, but when minds are one with Him. All other unity is human, carnal, earthly, and doomed. It is like the disgusting spectacle of ecumenism, for there everyone throws away all that may be precious for the sake of presenting a grotesque image of togetherness before the eyes of men, even an image that will have power to speak and cause all who will not worship it to be put to death. Rev. 13:14-15.
The temples of the Old Testament, built by the artifice of men, were only typical at their best. The kings and priests of the Old Testament were but a shadow of nations of kings and priests to come, eternal priests after the order of Melchisedec and eternal kings after the same order, of whom Jesus Christ was the fore-runner, Melchisedec was King of Righteousness, for that is the meaning of his name, and King of Salem, which means king of peace. Jesus is the prince of the kings of the earth, for He hath made us kings and priests unto God and His Father. Rev. 1:5-6. The magnificent temple built by king Solomon in Jerusalem, in spite of all its transcending splendor, was at best but a fleeting shadow of the temple of His body which will one day, and that right soon, lighten the whole world with its glory, and the universe as well. The seven flickering lights of the holy place were at best frail representations of the sevenfold light of God's Spirit that shall make needless the sun as it shines in that temple not made with hands. The blood of beasts that flowed like rivers in sacrifice for the sins of the nation, could never take away sin and was but a herald of the blood of Christ which speaketh better things than the blood of Abel, blood incorruptible and eternal that was offered once and for all to take away the sins of the whole world. "It is not possible that the blood of bulls and goats could take away sin," (Heb. 10:4), for in them there is a remembrance of sin made every year, but now, once in the end of the age hath He appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself. So Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many, and unto them that look for Him shall He appear the second time without sin unto salvation.

Naught of the blood of beasts
On Jewish altars slain
Could give the guilty sinner peace,
Or wash away his stain.

But Christ, the heavenly Lamb,
Takes all our sins away;
A sacrifice of nobler name
And richer blood than they.

More than a thousand years before Christ, the Lord God of heaven gave to His servant David a pattern for a temple that would be typical of His mystical body, the true church, which is that true temple not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. Any man who has read the word of God will have noticed that only seldom does the Lord give minute details of anything. Being a God of truth, He seldom produces facts to prove His case, but merely states things exactly as they are. Such, for instance, is the case in the vast and sweeping statement, "In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth." It is only when men try to tamper with His statements that they get themselves into a world of difficulty. Important as was the creation of the earth, yet in my opinion it stands as almost nothing in comparison to the creation of that mystical heavenly temple, not made with hands, which is forever to be the habitation of God through the Spirit, the house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens, the dwelling place of the Lord.

In order to better display how priceless and important is the temple of His body, the Holy Spirit has seen fit to portray in minute detail almost all things concerning both the wilderness tabernacle and the magnificent temple at Jerusalem. The movable tabernacle, so important in all Israel's wilderness wanderings, represented the formation of the body of Christ here on earth. The permanent temple in Jerusalem represented that enduring day when journeying is done and the government of the whole world shall go forth from the living temple, which is His body, His holy habitation. "For I will dwell in them, and walk in them, and I shall be their God, and they shall be My people."

"Then David gave to Solomon his son the pattern of the porch and the houses thereof and of the treasuries thereof, and of the upper chambers and the inner parlors and of the mercy seat, and the pattern of all that he had by the Spirit". 1 Chron. 28:11-12. Furthermore, David said, "I have prepared with all my might for the house of my God, the gold for things to be made of gold, and the silver for things to be made of silver, and brass for things to be made of brass, and iron for things to be made of iron, and wood for things to be made of wood; onyx stones and stones to be set, glistering stones and of divers colors, and all manner of precious stones and of marble stones in abundance."
1 Chron. 29:2,3. From his own treasure he gave three thousand talents of gold of Ophir, seven thousand talents of refined silver (verses 3,4), and to this the chief men of Israel added much more. (Verses 6-9). But David himself was not permitted to build the temple because he was a man of war and a bloody man. Therefore the task was committed to Solomon, his son, to whom the Lord appeared to grant him wisdom above all that had been before him, and such as exceeded all the kings of the nations about him. 2 Chron. 1:7-12.

The preparation made by Solomon for the building and glory of the temple of God staggers the imagination, for in the history of the world no other building of such surpassing splendor has ever been built. Seventy thousand men were employed to bear burdens, eighty thousand men were employed to hew timber in the mountains, and thirty-six hundred men were placed as overseers. 2 Chron. 2:2,18. Hiram, the king of Tyre, sent to Solomon a man "skilful to work in gold, in silver, in brass, in iron, in stone, and in timber; in purple, in blue, in fine linen, and in crimson; also to grave any manner of graving and to find out every device which shall be put to him, with thy cunning men..." 2 Chron. 2:7, 13-14. Such was the skill and wisdom of this unnamed artificer that one must immediately recognize him to be an outstanding type of the blessed Holy Spirit in whom is all wisdom and understanding of the omniscient God to build, not a temple made with hands, but a temple not made with hands, even the living temple of his body.

To gain a better understanding of the glory of that typical temple built by Solomon, it is necessary to peruse in detail the first seven chapters of the book of second Chronicles. There one will read of a house that was garnished with gold, magnificently studded with all manner of precious stones. Even the nails that held the timbers were of pure gold. The cherubims whose wings extended twenty feet over the Mercy Seat were also of pure gold. Silver was in such abundance that it was as stones in the street. 2 Chron. 1:15. When therefore one remembers that gold is a symbol of deity, silver is a symbol of redemption, brass is a symbol of judgment, and wood is a symbol of humanity, how glorious in type and symbol was this magnificent building whose wood (humanity) was overlaid with gold (deity), whose altar of sacrifice was of brass (judgment), and whose silver (redemption) was as plentiful as the stones.

Solomon began to build the temple in the fourth year of his reign, five hundred and ninety years after the exodus from Egypt, one thousand and twenty years after Abraham came out of Mesopotamia into Canaan, one thousand four hundred and forty years after the flood, and three thousand one hundred and two years after the creation of Adam. It would be impossible for anyone, however skilful, to describe the magnificence of Solomon’s temple. History records that the dazzling splendor of it could scarcely be believed even by those who saw it. According to the Jewish historian, Josephus, the foundations were laid deep in the ground. The materials were strong stones and such as would resist the force of time. These were to unite themselves with the earth and become a basis and sure foundation for the superstructure, which was erected over it. The foundation was to be so strong that it would support with ease the vast superstructures and the precious ornaments whose own weight was to be not less than the weight of those other high and heavy buildings, which the king designed to be both ornamental and magnificent. They erected its entire body, quite up to the roof, of white stone. Its height was sixty cubits, its length was the same, and its breadth was twenty cubits. The entire building was enclosed with cedar to which were fixed plates of sculptured gold, so that the whole temple shone and dazzled the eyes of those who entered by the splendor of the gold that was on every side of them. The whole structure of the temple was made with great skill of polished stones laid together so very harmoniously and smoothly that there appeared to the spectators no sign of any hammer or other instrument of architecture, as if, without any use of them, the materials had naturally united themselves together that the agreement of one part with another seemed rather to have been natural than to have arisen from the force of tools upon them. Doors of cedar overlaid with a great amount of gold led to the holy of holies, and before the doors hung the magnificent veil of blue and purple and scarlet of the brightest and softest linen with curious flowers wrought upon them. Solomon made all this for the honor of God with a great variety of magnificence, sparing no cost, but using all manner of liberality in adorning the temple. It exceeded all description in words, "Nay, if I may say so, is hardly believed upon sight." (Josephus)

2 Chron. 9 gives a remarkable account of the visit of the Queen of Sheba. In verse 4 it is recorded, "And when the queen of Sheba had seen the wisdom of Solomon, and the house that he had built, and the meat of his table, and the sitting of his servants, and the attendance of his ministers and their apparel; his cupbearers also..."
and their apparel; and his ascent by which he went up into the house of the Lord, there was no more spirit in her; and she said to the king, it was a true report that I heard in my own land and of thine acts and of thy wisdom. Howbeit, I believed not their words until I came and mine eyes had seen it; and, behold, the one half of the greatness of thy wisdom was not told me; for thou exceedest the fame that I heard." King Solomon passed all the kings of the earth in riches and wisdom, and all the kings of the earth sought the presence of Solomon to hear his wisdom that God had put in his heart. 2 Chron. 9:20-28.

Such is the meager and faltering description of the magnificent temple of God, built by the skill of human hands. Though such exceeding splendor has never been equaled before nor since in any building made by human hands, yet it is only dust, a thing that was to pass away. It is no more than a shadow of things to come, a meager representation of that true temple not made by the art of men's hands, even the temple of His body, spiritual, eternal, and not made with hands. The stones of the true temple are not of polished granite, but every stone is a living stone, men and women tried and tested and polished by the vicious storms of life, fitted with such exactness of unity that none can tell but that they have been knit together and grown together from one foundation, Jesus Christ. The gold of this heavenly temple is not the molten gold from the bowels of the earth, but the true gold which is divinity itself, for we who have escaped the world's corruption are made partakers of the divine nature. All is God, God is all, and He is all and in all. Every human board is overlaid with the gold of deity, for just as Christ, who was in the form of God, took upon Himself the form of man and was made in the likeness of men, so we who were in the form of man have taken on the nature of God and are being made in His likeness and in His image. Long ago three men were cast alive into the midst of a burning, fiery furnace, bound hand and foot, in their hats, their coats, and their hosen. But, when the servants of the king looked into the furnace expecting to see naught but ashes, their astonished eyes beheld a fourth man whose form was the form of a Son of God. That is what is transpiring now. Amid the blood and fire and vapor of smoke forms are changing, hearts are being regenerated, spirits are being transformed, that we might rise free from our chains in His likeness and in His image.

Through millenniums and whole dispensations the gladsome hope of awaking in His likeness has filled the hearts of the people of God. From the desolating dusts and ashes of their fiery furnaces their shouts of triumph are rending the very heavens. Through tears of sorrow, of loss, and of bereavement Job triumphantly exulted, "I know that my Redeemer liveth, and He shall stand in the latter days upon the earth, and after my skin worms destroy this body, in my flesh shall I see God." In my flesh dwelleth no good thing" said Paul, and truly he said it, but from the dust and ashes of our crucified selves comes forth that which is incorruptible and immortal. The flesh is like the raging lion that roared against Samson, threatening to destroy him on the spot. But through the Spirit Samson destroyed this ravening beast whose only strength was in his own flesh. By the power of the Spirit he tore him as one would have torn a kid and, stamping him into death, he hurled him aside, but told no one of his victory. When many days later he turned aside to see the car case, he found it filled with sweet honey which he took up in his hand, and, as he ate thereof, his heart conceived this wonderful riddle: "Out of the eater came forth meat, and out of the strong came forth sweetness." Judges 14:5-14. When the roaring lion of your carnal self is crucified, there is honey in that dead lion, and I think Paul knew it when he said, "I am crucified with Christ, nevertheless I live, yet not I but Christ liveth in me, and the life which I now live in the flesh I live by the faith of the Son of God.

Now when Solomon was preparing to build the temple, even as he gathered the material and contemplated its magnificence, he uttered this wonderful truth from his heart: "Who is able to build Him a house, seeing the heaven and the heaven of heavens cannot contain Him? Who am I, then, that I should build Him an house save only to burn sacrifice before Him?" 2 Chron. 2:6. Centuries later that inspired deacon of God called Stephen, filled with the Holy Ghost and standing before his murderers, declared, "Solomon built Him an house. Howbeit, the Most High dwelleth not in temples made with hands; as saith the prophet, Heaven is My throne and earth is My footstool. What house will ye build Me, saith the Lord? Or what is the place of My rest? Hath not My hand made all these things?" Acts 7:47-50.

For three wonderful years the Lord Jesus Christ had instructed His disciples in words of truth and wisdom such as even Solomon had never known, but, as His short earthly ministry drew to a close, He still had many things to tell them that they were not able to bear. John 16:12. The slowness of the human heart to understand is almost inconceivable. How well do these words fit us all! "Oh fools and slow of heart to believe!" We are so full of our own childish interpretations, so plagued with our pet doctrines, so enamored with our traditions that we can understand nothing as we ought to do. 1 Cor. 8:2. If we are ever to understand the truth as God would have us do, we will find ourselves unlearning almost all we thought we knew. The things we think we know for certain and the revelation of the Lord just do not agree together, for the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God. I have no hesitation in saying that practically all of the commodity we call theology is nothing more or less than a vast conglomeration of human ideas, passed on as tradition from century to century.

If you will read the Gospel of John, chapters thirteen through seventeen, you will discover that these chapters comprise one marvelous discourse. While there can be no limit to the truth contained therein, yet the whole sermon is one incomparable teaching, showing as nothing else could do, that the dwelling place of God is in His people, and that the dwelling place of His people is in God. "I in them and Thou in Me, that they may be made perfect in one" (17:23) is the very theme of the whole discourse. "That they all may be one as Thou, Father, art in Me and I in Thee, that they may be made one in Us, that the world may believe that Thou hast sent Me." Chap. 17:21.

The dwelling place of the Lord Jesus was in the Father, and when He said, "Father, I will that they also whom Thou hast given Me be with Me where I am," the indisputable meaning is that they (we) also should dwell in the Father and that the Father should dwell in them (us). The hour has come when we must give up the shadow and grasp the reality. Century after century Israel offered sacrifice of bulls and goats upon their altars, but it is not possible that the blood of bulls and goats could ever take away sin. But when once in the end of the age Jesus Christ appeared to take away sin by the sacrifice of Himself, then all the former shadows were done away, for what need is there of shadows when the reality has come? When that which is perfect is come, that which is in part shall be done away. Then He taketh away the first that He may establish the second. Heb. 10:8,9. We are now at the end of the age and not at the beginning. We are at the time when all shadows and types are to be done away, for all which they fore-shadowed is at hand. When that which is perfect is come, then that which is in part shall be done away.

When Jesus entered into the temple, He found it was no longer a house of prayer, but a den of thieves. Crafty-eyed, smooth-talking old cattle dealers, eager to make a quick drachma, had herded their cattle into the temple to sell to the people for sacrifice. Cages of pigeons and turtle doves were on sale for the poor who could afford no better while greedy old money changers had set up a veritable banking system right in the house of God. They were doing a roaring trade in the house of the Lord, but methinks even those crafty old merchandizers could have learned much from the modern money-mongering evangelist as he stands extorting endless thousands of dollars from gullible people in the name of some trumped up program for the conversion of the heathen, to buy a gospel tent, build a temple, purchase a Sunday School bus, or any one of a thousand other crafty schemes that he has no intention of carrying out. Well did Peter say, "Through covetousness shall they with feigned words make merchandise of you: whose judgment now of a long time lingereth not and their damnation slumbereth not." 2 Pet. 2:3. Theirs is the sleight of men and cunning craftiness whereby they lie in wait to deceive of which Paul warned. Eph. 4:14. If Jesus were here today, He would do again what He did then. He would seize a scourge and chase these covetous corrupters helter-skelter from His presence. "Make not my Father's house a house of merchandise," He warned. And, if He thus cleansed the typical house, what will He do in the true? He will thoroughly purge His floor and gather the wheat into the garner.

"In My Father's house are many mansions; if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you; and, if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again and receive you unto Myself, that where I am there ye may be also." John 14:2-3. "Where is He?" we may ask, to which He replies, "Believeth thou not that I am in the Father?" Vs. 10. And again in verse 11, "Believe Me that I am in the Father," That is where He is. And this is the place He is preparing for those who will become one with Him in the Spirit. This is our hope and eternal resting place. Let us not forget, however, that when Jesus said He dwelt in the Father, He also added that the Father dwelt in Him. John 17:21-23.

The interpretations of poor human beings are always childish in the extreme, for we know nothing yet as we ought to know. 1 Cor. 8:2. We have tried to picture heaven as a place of many mansions, full of temples and lawns, fountains and flowers, where idle inhabitants while away eternity walking golden streets and shouting hallelujah. I must frankly confess that I know very little about heaven, but of this I am sure: My Father's house is not another name for heaven. It is in truth the dwelling place of God, for it is written. "I will dwell in them and walk in them, and I shall be their God and they shall be My people." My Father's house is a house not made with hands. It is the eternal habitation of God through the Spirit. Eph. 2:22. My Father's house is a house of many mansions, for every true believer is a mansion in which God dwells. Every true believer is an habitation of God, and all these fitly framed together in the Spirit grow to a holy temple in the Lord.

“He is our peace — He who has made Jew and Gentile one, and in His own human nature has broken down the hostile dividing wall, by setting aside the law with its commandments, expressed as they were in definite decrees. His design was to unite the two sections of humanity in Himself so as to form one new man, thus effecting peace, and to reconcile Jew and Gentile in one body to God by means of His cross — slaying by it their mutual enmity. So He came and proclaimed the gospel of peace to you who were so far away, and peace to those who were near; because it is through Him that Jew and Gentile alike have access through one Spirit to the Father. You are therefore no longer mere foreigners or persons excluded from civil rights. On the contrary, you share citizenship with the saints and are members of His family. You are a building which has been reared on the foundation of the apostles and prophets, the cornerstone being Christ Jesus Himself, in union with whom the whole fabric, truly bonded together, is rising so as to form a holy sanctuary in the Lord; in whom you also are being built up together to become a fixed abode for God through the Spirit.” Eph. 2:14, 22.

(Weymouth). How could a description of the Father's house be clearer than this or how could its truth be more eloquently stated? We are the building, which is rising on the true foundation to form a holy sanctuary for the Lord, the fixed abode for God through the Spirit.

Many centuries before the New Testament writing revealed the true nature of God's eternal habitation, king David sang these words: "Surely I will not come into the tabernacle of my house, nor go up into my bed ... until I find out a place for the Lord and an habitation for the mighty God of Jacob ... Arise, O Lord, into Thy rest; Thou and the ark of Thy strength. Let Thy priests be clothed with righteousness; and let Thy saints shout for joy .... For the Lord hath chosen Zion: He hath desired it for His habitation. This is my rest forever. Here will I dwell; for I have desired it. I will abundantly bless her provision: I will satisfy her poor with bread. I will clothe her priests with salvation, and her saints shall shout aloud for joy. ...” See Psa. 132. Thus on the foundation of the apostles and prophets the Father's eternal house of many mansions, fitly framed together, groweth into a holy temple in the Lord, in whom ye are built together for an habitation of God through the Spirit. Eph. 2:21, 22. During the dispensation of the law both the temple and the tabernacle were referred to as the house of God, but after Pentecost the house of God is that spiritual house, the true church, the true believers, and the true body of Jesus Christ. "Every house is built by some man; but He that built all things is God. And Moses verily was faithful in all his house, as a servant, for a testimony of those things which were to be spoken after, but Christ as a Son over His own house, whose house we are, if we hold fast the confidence and rejoicing of hope firm unto the end.” Heb. 3:4-6.

Nothing can be clearer than this, that we are the house of God. We are God's workmanship. We are God's building. We are the Father's Temple. We are the Father's house of many mansions in which a place is being prepared for those who believe in God and in His Son, Jesus Christ. It was to this house that Peter referred when he said, "Judgment must begin at the house of God, and if it first begin at us, what shall the end be of them that obey not the gospel of God?" 1 Pet. 4:17. And it was likewise to this eternal house that Paul referred when he said to Timothy, "But if I tarry long, that thou mightest know how thou oughtest to behave thyself in the house of God which is the church of the living God, the pillar and ground of truth." 1 Tim. 3:15. What dynamic words are these! One would need to have an extremely natural mind to think that such living words referred to a building made of brick or stone. But, alas, that is the fathomless depth of ignorance to which the professing multitudes have sunk. One can almost hear the shock of surprise and unbelief in the voice of the apostle Paul when the desperate ignorance of the Corinthian church dawned upon him. "What?" he cries. "Know you not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost, which is in you, which ye have of God, and ye are not your own? For ye are bought with a price; Therefore glorify God in your body and in your spirit, which are God's.” 1 Cor. 6:10, 20.
It was a tragic day, indeed, for the church at Corinth when those noxious weeds of sectarianism were sown among them, for the moment any Christian begins to follow a man, a sect, a system, or a denomination, at that very moment, his spiritual understanding begins to depart from him. There is one church and there is one foundation, even Jesus Christ, the Lord. He is the foundation laid by the apostles and prophets, and other foundation can no man lay than that which is laid, which is Christ. 1 Cor. 3:11. See then the awful pit of carnality into which the Corinthian church had fallen, for, instead of knowing the voice of Christ and building on that sure foundation, they had become followers of men. Every one of them was saying, "I am of Paul, I am of Apollos, I am of Cephas, and I am of Christ." 1 Cor. 1:12. The result was that they were all divided and all carnal and completely unable to receive anything but milk. "And I, brethren, could not speak unto you as unto spiritual, but as unto carnal, even as unto babes in Christ. I have fed you with milk and not with meat, for hitherto ye were not able to bear it: neither yet now are ye able, for whereas there is among you envying and strife and divisions, are ye not carnal and walk as men? For while (as long as) one saith, I am of Paul, and another, I am of Apollos, are ye not carnal?" 1 Cor. 3:1-4.

Would God that all who read these lines would wake from their slumber of death, for, though the seeds of sectarianism were sprouting in the church in Paul's day, stunting the growth of the believers and filling them with division, throttling revelation and making all strong meat indigestible, in our day that tiny, fertile, noxious seed has grown to a mighty spreading tree in which the unclean fowls of the air find their resting place. In our day denominationalism and all forms of sectarianism have become so popular that every man is expected to be a firm adherent of a denomination or sect of some sort. Those who read know of what I speak, for whether you apply for a job, enter a hospital, join the army, or become a civil servant, the question, "What church do you go to", is always demanded of you, and if you insist that you are just a follower of Christ, they glance at you as though you were some impossible fanatic who had taken complete leave of his senses.

How hateful in the sight of God are all these names of blasphemy. Rev.17:1-3. How numerous have these Babylonish harlots become! Well might Paul cry again, "What I Know ye not that he which is joined to an harlot is one body, for two, saith He, shall be one flesh, but he which is joined to the Lord is one spirit. 1 Cor. 6:18. There is a natural fornication and there is a spiritual fornication. He that commits fornication with a woman sins against his body. 1 Cor. 6:18. But he that commits spiritual fornication with these harlot sectarian systems sins against his spiritual body, which is the body of Christ, the temple of the Lord. Therefore doth the Holy Spirit declare, "If any man defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy, for the temple of God is holy, which temple ye are." 1 Cor. 3; 16, 17. Surely we must have noticed that all these warnings by the faithful apostle Paul follow his scathing rebukes of their sectarianism.

Let not God's people be longer deceived by these sectarian systems, for they are not the true church, They are not the true body of Christ. They are not the Temple of the Lord. They are filled with division, unbelief, strife, unrighteousness, all manner of human tradition and program, knowing neither the purpose of the Lord nor the knowledge of His will. "Therefore, be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers; for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness, and what communion hath light with darkness, and what concord hath Christ with Belial? Or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel, and what agreement hath the temple of God with idols; for ye are the temple of the living God, as God hath said, I will dwell in them and walk in them, and I will be their God, and they shall be My people, wherefore, come out from among them and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing, and I will receive you and I will be a Father to you and you shall be My sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty." 2 Cor. 6:14-18. Therefore flee this city of destruction without delay, never looking back.

In the midst of all the confusion of the religious systems, which are but the work of men's hands, there is a temple rising upon the mighty Rock, Christ Jesus the Lord. It is a temple not made with hands. It is not a figure of the true, but it is the true. Every living stone is being prepared in the dark quarries of the earth by that master craftsman who proceeded forth from the Father, even the Holy Spirit of God. He is preparing the living stone to present every man faultless and flawless before the throne of God's majesty with exceeding glory. Each living stone in God's living temple has been disallowed and disqualified by men, but chosen of God, and "ye also as living stones are built up a spiritual house, an holy priesthood, to offer sacrifices acceptable to God by Jesus Christ." 1 Pet. 2:3-5.
That God no longer dwells in temples made by hands there can be no doubt, for, when Solomon had made an end of building the temple, the singers with one hundred and twenty priests stood by the altar, and, when the singers and trumpeters were one, the cloud and glory of the Lord filled the temple so that none could stand to minister. 2 Chron. 5:12. We need not hesitate to say that this event when one hundred and twenty priests stood of one accord and praised God as His glory filled the typical temple is a type of the day of Pentecost when one hundred and twenty believer priests were all together and of one accord in one place. And suddenly there came a sound from heaven as of a rushing, mighty wind, and they (the people) were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and the fire of God sat upon each of them. In Solomon's day the typical temple made with hands was filled with the glory of the Lord and the fire consumed the sacrifice, but the priests were not filled. At Pentecost it was the living temple that was filled and the fire sat upon each of those blessed living stones (Acts. 2:14), for His new habitation was His people. Even Pentecost was but an earnest of our inheritance, for the living temple was not then complete. Only the living stones were being filled. But the temple has been slowly rising for two thousand years and the day of its filling and dedication is at hand.

What a weight of blessing and spiritual understanding would come to you who read these lines if you would ask God to reveal to you what the true church really is! Then you would soon discover that all these visible organizations are naught but dust and ashes. They are the works of men's hands - nothing more. They have become false Christs to the people. Displacing Christ, the one true shepherd, they have become false shepherds, which lead the sheep in their own ways to enlarge their folds. They compass land and sea to make proselytes, vainly imagining that all they do in God's name is for God's glory. But amid the raging strife of false shepherds and sheep stealers there are those whose ears are deaf to every voice but the voice of the true shepherd. They are dead to every realm but His realm, for they look for a city, which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God. For ye are the body of Christ and members in particular.

"And I saw no temple therein; for the Lord God Almighty and the Lamb are the temple of it." Rev. 21:22. When the worshipper considers that the truth of the temple not made with hands fills the thought of the New Testament, well might he enquire the reason for this strange statement! / saw no temple therein. Has the work of God for all ages been in vain, or do we now behold such depth of meaning as only God Himself can devise? Here, at last, is the end to all our longing, here the answer to every prayer. Man at last is one with his Maker. As the seamless robe of Jesus was knit together, they, too, are knit together in one Spirit, they have grown to a holy temple in the Lord. It has come to pass as Jesus prayed, "I in them and Thou in Me, that they may be one in Us, that the world may believe."

"For we know that, if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. For in this we groan, earnestly desiring to be clothed upon with our house, which is from heaven; if so be that being clothed we shall not be found naked... He that hath wrought us for this self same thing is God who has given us the Spirit as a guarantee. "And I saw no temple therein; for the Lord God Almighty and the Lamb are the temple of it." Rev. 21:22.

AN OPEN LETTER TO THE TRUE ECCLESIA

No man that has ever lived and no revelation that was ever given has been able to remotely comprehend the vastness of the wisdom and love of God's purpose toward us who believe. It is God who filleth the vastness of the eternal heavens. It is God whom the heaven of heavens cannot contain. Some time ago I looked in amazement upon an astronomical chart showing what was termed to be "The Sun's Neighbors". My poor finite mind was staggered with the thought that thousands of other suns were often more than forty million light years away from our sun. Light traveling one hundred eighty-six thousand miles per second would take forty million years to travel the distance. Such things are too wonderful for me. Though only about six thousand stars are visible to the natural eye, the mighty telescopes show that there are enough galaxies in the heavens to give one to every man who has ever lived. Yet the heaven of heavens cannot contain God!
The time has certainly come for us poor earthworms to raise our sights to the glories He has prepared for us that we might see and know that the body He doth prepare is a spiritual habitation for Him whom the heavens cannot contain. I pray unto God the Father that exceeding grace may be granted unto you that by the Holy Spirit's revelation you may know what inspired His eternal call to you, though you be the least of all saints.

The plan and purpose of God for the entire universe was finished in minute detail before the foundation of the earth was laid. With infinite care He charted the course of mankind, knowing in Himself what the end of all labor and travail would be. Inasmuch as God has foreseen the course that every man will take, either in faith or in unbelief, He has foreknown those who will share the likeness of His own beloved Son, Jesus Christ, and has by His foreknowledge predestined them to be placed as sons of God in the image and likeness of that firstborn Son in every respect - not physical, for we know no man after the flesh, but spiritual, for we know Christ only after the Spirit. Therefore did David say, "I shall be satisfied when I awake in Thy likeness", and the beloved John said, "As He is, so are we in the world." Paul by the wisdom given unto him declared them to be "bone of His bone and flesh of His flesh", and Peter affirmed, "We have become partakers of His divine nature." He, being the firstborn among many brethren, is not ashamed to call us His brethren. Such was God's gracious will and pleasure, and such is the splendor of His marvelous grace, for with such treasures He has enriched us in the Beloved One. This is grace and wisdom as fathomless as God Himself. Should any man speak of the grace of God, let him know that to partake of His body and blood, to drink of His spirit, to partake of His divine nature, and to have His name written in our foreheads is grace beyond the understanding of any man. Having cleansed us from the vileness of our sins through the righteousness and sacrifice of His blood and having given to us the Spirit of His own dear Son, we now cry as did our elder brother, "Abba Father!"

The glorious sonship of which we now partake is in strict harmony with the infinite plan of God - a plan laid before the world began unto His praise and glory. By this plan God shall govern the entire universe in the ages which are to come, for everything in heaven and in earth must become subject to Him that He might be Lord of all. Everything shall be beneath His feet and everything will bow the knee and do Him honor. In His own mind He has planned the restoration of the entire creation that it may find its one head in Him. God has chosen this company of sons beforehand to carry out this great restoration. The design of His will He is unfolding to them that they might be acquainted beforehand - even now - with the immutable intentions and purposes of God, and might know what hope He had in mind when He called them. It was the hope and unchanging purpose of God that they, being adopted and placed as God's sons and having learned both good and evil, should no more come under the dominion of evil but be in the image of God and with Christ their captain restore all things to His righteous government. It was not Adam alone that God intended should be in His image, but man, and thus it shall be, for the purpose of God no circumstance shall alter. Unto you, therefore, who were first to fix your hopes in Christ and to understand the purpose of God for the ages to come special grace has been given, and the Holy Spirit of God has sealed you as His own, the Spirit being a small foretaste of complete redemption which is a state more glorious than Adam possessed - a state exceeding the glories of the transfiguration, a redemption specially designed by God for the manifesting of His glory that the predestined restoration of the entire creation might be accomplished.

Let increasing thanks be continually rendered to God/or the faith that is rising among His people as they embrace His purpose and conform their lives to that predestined plan of God. Let continual prayer and intercession be made to God that by the spirit of wisdom and revelation a divine insight might be given us into these most glorious mysteries. The inner eyes of the understanding must be enlightened by the Holy Spirit that we may see why He called some first and acquainted them with His will for coming dispensations.

Unto the elect first God reveals His will and purpose and shows them that the Almighty, who possesses all, hath an inheritance in His saints. The purpose of universal government in them He first made manifest when He raised His first-begotten Son from the dead and set Him far above all principality and power, all might and dominion - above every name and sovereignty in this age or in the ages to come making Him supreme head of all things everywhere, including His body which is the completeness of Him who fills the universe. To join that forerunner, even Jesus Christ, our Head, we have been made alive and quickened by the Spirit. We have rejoiced in a foretaste of That same resurrection. Once we were servants of the prince of the power of the air and were the sons of disobedience motivated by the same evil spirits now at work in the world and among those who, though they have believed, are still governed by their lower nature. It was through the grace of God and His intense love wherewith He loved us, though we were completely dead in our sins, being foreigners to divine citizenship, hateful to God and hating each other, that we have been made partakers of resurrection life and have received a foretaste of complete redemption, even now sharing His life, being raised with Him and seated by faith with Him where He sits, high above all principality and power and every ruler and authority, where all things are under His feet. In these heavenly realms in the Spirit we sit enthroned with Him, His purpose and will being that in coming ages He might display the transcendent riches of His wisdom and grace to all creatures when they behold and understand the goodness of God which was displayed in us who first believed and were seated with Him.

This glory is all of grace. No meritorious work of man has helped us to partake of it. Our heavenly enthronement with Christ was given us in Him before the world began. Even the faith by which it is received is the gift of God. Let no man boast or pride himself in works or think himself above another, for we are all God's workmanship, designed before the world began. For His glory He predestined us to perform His work and fulfill it. Let us not forget that we were an uncircumcised and an unholy people, that neither God nor the things of God had any part in us. Because we changed the glory of God into images of four-footed beasts and creeping things, we were given up to uncleanness. Because we worshipped the creature and not the creator, we were given up to vile affections. Because we did not want to retain God in our knowledge, we were given up to a reprobate mind to do those things, which were not convenient. What merit have we then to offer? None! Yet God's grace is shown to be the greater, for without works His grace has been brought nigh to those who were far off, bringing them near to Him and enthroning them in heavenly rulership with Christ, our Lord and elder brother.

So through the grace of God those who had nothing have attained and those who had much merit have fallen short. His grace then puts all men on equal footing, destroying every dividing wall, those who have the law having no advantage over those who trust in His mercy. By His grace, then, the great divisions are united and the enmity is slain, bringing peace to all, for it is only in Him and through His grace that we have access to the Father and mutual citizenship in the heavenly realms. Through God's mercy and His predestining purpose we have become foreigners to the course of this age, and have been placed as sons of God. We are members of His family and our citizenship is in the heavenly sphere. Foreigners are excluded from the civil rights of other countries, but we, having become members of the family of God, share citizenship with Christ in the heavenly realms of the Spirit.

When Christ departed from the world, He declared, "In My Father's house there are many mansions (abiding places). I go to prepare a place for you." The Father's house is the mystical body of Christ, the habitation of God through the Spirit. "For I will dwell in them and walk in them and I shall be their God and they shall be My people." This mystical body of Christ, the Father's house, the habitation of God through the Spirit, is rising on the foundation laid by the apostles and prophets, Christ Himself being the chief corner stone, in union with whom the whole body, bonded together by the Spirit, is rising to form a holy habitation for God in the Spirit. We as living stones are built up a spiritual house where sacrifices acceptable to God are offered. This is precious to those who believe, but a stone of stumbling and a rock of offence to all who believe not and are disobedient. The formation of the mystical body of Christ to be a habitation for God was the great secret locked up in God's mind from the beginning of the world, and this is in harmony with His purpose to govern the universe when the time is ripe and the spiritual habitation is complete. As the law of God went forth from the temple in Jerusalem to govern the nation, so shall the law of God go forth from this heavenly habitation, which is His body, composed of His elect sons of all ages, to govern the entire universe. Christ, the Head, who is seated far above all principality and powers and might, all rulers and every name that is named, has made us live together with Him and has prepared to enthrone us with Himself far above all powers that the will of God shall go forth to the universe from this heavenly temple till all things everywhere are under His feet and He is Lord of all.

The plan for the government of the world was concealed in the mind of God from the beginning of time. It was first unfolded in a revelation given to the beloved apostle Paul that all races, both Jews and Gentiles, with all their hostility abolished in Christ, should share common citizenship in the Father's house, the body of Christ, which is the habitation for God through the Spirit. Thus the laws and ordinances of a foreign world have no effect whatever upon our mutual heavenly citizenship. Every rivalry is forgotten and we are fellow-citizens of the household of God. Had we been mindful of that country from which we came out, we might have had opportunity to have returned; wherefore God is not ashamed to be called our God, for He hath prepared for us a city. Even the patriarch Abraham went looking for that city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God.

In the preparation of this heavenly habitation He left us not without a plan for its erection. When He ascended on high, He gave gifts unto men and ministries whereby the mystical body of Christ might come to perfection. Thus to some He gave the ministry of apostles, to some prophets, to others evangelists, pastors, and teachers. Upon these five ministries rests the entire work of bringing the body to perfection, for they were given to equip His people for serving and to build up the body of Christ till we all come into the unity of the faith and the oneness of the knowledge of the Son of God, reaching the perfection of the full stature of Christ. Who can over-emphasize the importance of such ministries upon whom rests such sacred enterprise? Those ministries in truth proceed forth from God. They are sent of God and speak the words of God. Who cannot see the wisdom of Satan in distorting these five ministries in that he has filled the church system with false apostles, false prophets, false teachers, false pastors, and false evangelists, all speaking contrary things and none having any idea of the plan that lay concealed in the mind of God for the building of the habitation of God through the Spirit? Nevertheless, the foundation of God standeth sure, having this testimony: "The Lord knoweth them that are His." Jesus Christ warned us long ago that in the same field where good seed was sown the enemy would sow weeds and tares, and in the field where His apostles were sent forth to labor, to minister and teach, a false ministry would arise, speaking all manner of perverse things in their lust to draw away disciples after themselves. He warned the world that false teachers, false apostles, false prophets, and even false Christs would arise. As sure as His word is truth and His prophecy much more enduring than this world that is passing away, all things have come to pass as He foretold and even now are evident before our very eyes. The world today is treated to the sickening spectacle of seeing a harvest field choked with tares, but the awesome tragedy is not that the field is choked with tares, but that the people actually think the tares are the true wheat. The greatest tragedy is not that mystery Babylon exists, but that the people of God actually think that the monstrosity that is Babylon is the true church. They speak of it as the church. They religiously attend its gatherings as the assembling of the church. They reverence it as the church and pay their money to it as the church. But it is not the church. It is a monstrous confusion, a Babel of ideas and doctrines. It has nothing in common with the church of which I now write, no likeness to the church, which Jesus described, and no communion with the church which was founded by the apostles. It is an abominable enormity full of false teachers, false prophets, false apostles, false pastors, and false Christs who for the most part are nothing superior to the very prophets of Baal, who were the preachers and prophets of a pagan, backslidden, distorted Israel, worthy only to be destroyed by the fierce judgment of Elijah. Is it any wonder that the Almighty God has declared, "I will send Elijah before that great and terrible day of the Lord?" The ministry of Elijah is as badly needed now as it was in the days of Jezebel, that queen mother of all harlots and lover of false prophets.

The true Ecclesia, the true and holy church, is separate and distinct from this confused and drunken harlot that straddles the whole earth. The true church is the company whom Jesus described when He said, "My sheep know My voice and I know them, and they follow Me." John 10:27. If any man will prayerfully read the tenth chapter of John, he will clearly see the vast gulf between the false church and the true, the false followers and the true, and the false ministries and the true. The true church is the habitation of God, and it is the true and almost invisible ministry that God hath set that is perfecting it upon the true foundation.

Just as the ten tribes of Israel became lost to the eyes of the world after the Babylonian captivity, so also the true church has largely become lost to human view since the captivity began in the days of Constantine. God still knows what has become of the ten tribes of Israel, and God still knows the members of His true and holy church. This pearl of great price, though remaining hidden and buried from the prying, curious eyes of an unbelieving world, stands far beyond the comprehension of a church system that has worshipped and honored the works of its own hands. It is still known and loved of God as a treasure hid in a field. Century after century, year after year, day after day, and hour after hour it is the object of His continual care as He strengthens, establishes, and keeps each precious member. In His love He causes them to grow in stature by secretly... feeding them the milk of the Word, the bread of life, the strong meat of revelation, and the rich corn and wine of the coming kingdom. With loving paternal care He unerringly brings them to sonship. The chastening rod of correction falls upon them until they suffer such dire loss in all things of the world that their singing souls seem to be beyond hope of recovery. But in the greatness of their distress they learn to sing with the joy of God in their hearts, "The Lord has given and the Lord has taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord." Beneath the rod of His correction they learn to know true values. They come to know the transient nature of all earthly things. They see them rise like a green bay tree, which, after it is grown, has no known value. They see them grow like the grass which today is and tomorrow is withered with the east wind. They see all earthly things as the flower of the field which blooms today but tomorrow is cast into the oven to wither with the burning heat of summer. He makes their gold and silver canker and lose its value that men may see that only in Christ are true values to be found. Men of earth have no understanding of true value. They are much like Jonah who was very angry that God had destroyed the gourd, which grew up in one night and upon which he bestowed no labor, but was unable to see the value of one hundred twenty thousand souls whom God had spared from judgment by his preaching. Such is the understanding of carnal man.

Those blessed people whom God is creating to bear the image of His son must sooner or later learn that they can depend only upon the Lord. Our heavenly Father in His infinite wisdom knows how to teach His children that the man or woman who puts his trust in man will be utterly disappointed. He will soon learn the meaning of the words, "Cursed be he who maketh flesh his arm, but blessed is he who maketh God his strength." The life of the great apostle Paul was lived beneath the shadow of the cross of Christ, but let no one think that this was a glorious experience for the flesh, for it was not. He knew the bitterness of unfaithful friends. Hear him as he says, "Demas hath forsaken me, having loved this present world," and "At my first answer no man stood with me." He knew what it was to weep as he warned God's people of false teachers. He was betrayed by friends and delivered up to prison and to the stocks. By the time the earthly life of this man of God was ended, God had taught him that only Christ was all in all.

Have you often wondered why it was that the further you went in your walk with God the fewer friends you had? You may have wondered times without number if perchance you were walking the wrong road because your companions in travel were so few. Why did Jesus say, "I came not to bring peace, but a sword!" Is He not the Prince of Peace? Did He not say, "They that take the sword will perish with the sword?" Certainly He did. But all who would be sons of God must learn that peace between the flesh and the Spirit can never be, not even for a moment. They two are mortal enemies ever warring against each other, never declaring an armistice, never proclaiming a truce, never enjoying peace. The flesh is an implacable enemy of God. It is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be, so that they who are in the flesh cannot please God. Cain, who was of the wicked one, slew Abel, who was of the Lord. God hated Esau, who was after the flesh, and loved Jacob because he was after the Spirit. Joseph's brethren hated him because his father loved him. Ishmael, who was the son of the bond woman, mocked Isaac, who was the son of the free woman, and thus the war goes on forever. Jesus said He would divide a house against itself, two against three and three against two. "For I am come to set a man at variance against his father, and the daughter against her mother, and the daughter-in-law against her mother-in-law, and a man's foes shall be they of his own household." Matt. 10:35.

This is a conclusion, which is unavoidable, not that God rejoices in division, but that wherever men will walk with God they will always find opposition from those who walk after the flesh. How many million times have children seen the glorious light of revelation from heaven only to be opposed and hindered by parents who see nothing at all but the traditions of their fathers! How often has a wife embraced the glory of Christ's salvation only to find herself at sudden and bitter variance with a Christ-rejecting husband! How often have we seen men who loved God and longed to walk the green field of God's ever expanding truth only to be hindered and thwarted by the pettiness of a worldly minded wife who could never see beyond the circle of her friends and the luxuries of her home. The faithful followers of Christ will never find it necessary to pick quarrels with the worldly-minded. They will always find the Cains ready to murder, the Ishmaels ready to mock, the Shimeis ready to curse and throw stones (2 Sam. 16:5-7), the Absaloms anxious to rebel, the authorities waiting to plot their destruction (Dan. 6), and the high priests and religious leaders ready to crucify. They will be misunderstood by the people who profess to know God and hindered by those who should give them help. But all this is for their great eternal benefit, for it will cause them to come to know Him separate and apart from all people and all things, and that is a blessing of untold value. Once a man learns by experience that it is impossible to put confidence in any human being, then for the first time that man will begin to throw all his weight upon the Lord. Then will he lean on the Lord. He will learn that those who put their trust in the Lord are never disappointed or ashamed. Experience will teach him as David was taught that, "when my father and mother forsake me, then the Lord will take me up." He will learn not to trust in the advice of men, for earthly minded men, even though they be Christians, do not know the mind of the Lord. All who have learned to reject the mind of men have at last reached the place where they can let the mind of Christ dwell in them richly. The mind of man will always lead astray, for it knows only earthly counsels, but the mind of Christ is omniscient, and brings into the innermost being all the counsel of God.

In the light of these things can we not clearly see the universal benefit bestowed upon God's sons because, when all earthly dependencies are taken away, we grasp like a drowning man for things eternal that we may depend on them forever? When our tried and trusted friends fail us and turn away from us, reject us for no apparent reason, even becoming our bitterest enemies, then the pain and travail of this most bitter experience causes us to flee away to Him who never leaves us nor forsakes us. Experience has taught me the bitter pain of seeing men turn back just when the mountain peak was in sight. I have felt the traitor's kiss and have seen the toil of years vanish as a whiff of perfume in the breeze. But these apparent tragedies are not tragedies at all, for they teach us to put our trust only in the faithfulness of God, and by such temptation we are abundantly able to succor all others who are tempted in like manner. It was for this very reason that Jesus Christ was tempted in all points as we are, and of Him Paul has written, "We have not an high priest who cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities; but was in all points tempted as we are, yet without sin." Heb. 4:15. It is only because He has suffered all the temptations known to the human family that He can now be a merciful and faithful high priest in all things pertaining to God.

Bitter though it may be for a man to learn that he cannot trust in men, nor put his trust in leaders regardless of their strength, yet there is still a lesson to learn which is even more bitter, but more essential. You must learn above all things that you cannot trust yourself. The greatest enemy is the enemy within the gates, the fifth columnist, the quisling, the traitor within. It is always human and natural for us to say like Peter, "Though all men deny Him, yet I will not," or "Though all men forsake you, yet I will never forsake you!" But all who will be sons of God must learn by experience that they can no more trust in themselves than they can trust any other man. Your flesh is just as weak as your neighbor's. Furthermore, your flesh is just as much the enemy of the Spirit of God as the flesh of any other man that ever lived. While I trust in myself, I am just as capable of sinning as any man on earth. I am just as capable of being deceived, of falling into error, of being snared and destroyed by a lust of flesh. Bitter has been my disappointment in many men I deemed worthy of trust, but bitter as gall has been my disappointment in myself, for I have/own by experience that I am not a whit different from any other man. It is the mercy of God that we are taught these things that we should no longer trust in man or in ourselves, but in God who giveth liberally of His grace and strength to all men who will forsake the arm of flesh and trust no longer in themselves, but in Him who maketh us after the image of God.

The moment we begin to see that we cannot trust ourselves, then our self-righteousness begins to disappear. When we realize that we are made of the same substance as the worst of God's enemies, we lose our power to criticize those who are our enemies. There are far too many men in the world who, like the Pharisee, thank God that they are not like other men, but far too few Christians who, realizing they are like other men, bow their heads and beat their bosoms crying, "God be merciful to me a sinner."

By these methods then does the Almighty God deal with His elect and chosen though they be hidden from the eyes of a gazing world. It is this hidden gem that is the true church. This is the pearl of great price. This the treasure hid in the field. Men of the world and Christians likewise look on the vast fields of tares and imagine in their ignorance that it is wheat. They look on the pastures teeming with endless flocks of goats and they say, "Behold the sheep." They look on the assemblies of Babylon with all her confusion of doctrines and traditions, her sects and creeds, her endless ceremonies, her bitterness and strife, and say, "Behold the church", knowing not at all that the true church is one of God's greatest mysteries. For he is not a Jew who is one outwardly, but he is a Jew which is one inwardly, for circumcision is that of the heart, in the Spirit, and not in the letter; whose praise is not of men, but of God." Rom. 2:28-29.

As the true church is a great mystery and her members are known to God alone, so also is the true ministry a great mystery known and set by God alone. The ministries named by Paul in Eph. 4:11 are not to be confused with the vast array of reverends, right reverends, very reverends, doctors of divinity, priests, cardinals, bishops, and popes, together with a host of lesser lights in existence today. These for the most part are no more New Testament ministries of the church than the prophets of Baal were the true ministries to Israel and Judah. They are part of the confusion of Babylon. When, oh when, are people going to realize this fact and withdraw from all such confusion, settling in their hearts that he who is joined to the Lord is one spirit, but he who is joined to an harlot is one flesh?

The true church and the true ministry are like the tabernacle in the wilderness whose boards of wood and gold were joined by five hidden bars, also of wood and gold. This is the true church with its hidden ministry, seen and known of God. Though the tabernacle in the wilderness had a value of $1,500,000 in gold, silver and precious stones, yet all was covered with badger skins so that no one knew the treasure beneath it. This is the true church; this is the treasure hid in the field. There is a ministry today known unto God. It is for the perfecting of the mystical church till we all come to the knowledge of the Son of God unto a perfect man, unto the measure and stature of Jesus Christ our Lord.

Let us then approve ourselves as the servants of Christ in patience, in afflictions, in necessities, in distresses, in stripes, in imprisonments, in tumults, in labors, in watchings, in fastings; by purleness, by knowledge, by long suffering, by kindness, by the Holy Ghost, by love unfeigned, by the word of truth, by the armor of righteousness on the right hand and on the left; by honor and dishonor, by evil report and good report, as deceivers and yet true, as unknown and yet known, as dying and behold we live; as chastened and not killed, as sorrowful, yet always rejoicing, as poor yet making many rich, as having nothing yet possessing all things.

When the body of Christ is complete in the Spirit, I will have one faith, for all men moved by the same Spirit speak the same thing. The things of God knoweth no man, but the Spirit of God searcheth all things and reveals to us the deep things of God. There in one Spirit are we all of one mind, one faith, one body. The work of perfecting the body is given to these ministries. They will continue till we all arrive at oneness in faith and oneness of the knowledge of the Son of God, till we attain maturity in Christ and are no longer babies but full grown men in Christ. This is the sonship and adoption for which the whole creation is groaning. This maturity is the fore-ordained purpose of God. It is the beginning of righteous government and the reign of Christ on earth. In it is the hope of all creation - that they might be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the sons of God. With this maturity the will of God begins to be done on the earth as it is done in heaven. With it all nations come under a blessed and righteous government. It is the fulfillment of the prayer of Jesus Christ who prayed, "That they all may be one: as Thou, Father, art in Me and I in Thee, that they all may be in Us: that the world may believe that Thou has sent Me." This is the body through which God will reign in the millennial kingdom when the knowledge of the Lord shall fill the earth as the waters the cover the sea. This is the body that will subdue all enemies and bring all things under His feet. The last of all enemies that shall be destroyed is the most notable - death itself. Then, when death is defeated and all things are under the feet of Christ, He shall be subject to the Father that God may be all in all. By man came death. By man also comes the resurrection of the dead. Oh, the depths of the wisdom of God! How unsearchable are His judgments and His ways past finding out!

These five ministries will exist until unity is gained, until the full measure and stature of Christ has been attained and we no longer resemble babies, for the heir, as long as he is a child, suffereth nothing from a servant, though he be lord of all. Neither shall we resemble mariners on the sea, tossed to and fro with every changing wind of doctrine that blows. The things cleverly preached by unscrupulous and cunning men to draw away disciples to themselves will have no effect. Being built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, let us hold with love to the truth, growing up into union with the Head, even Christ. Let no shifting device move you from the purpose devised in God's mind before the world was, for the purposes thus ordained of God, though long in fulfillment, are sure and steadfast, God counting those who have fallen asleep in death while waiting as though they still lived; for He will raise the dead in Christ to join the living when the time comes.

As the body of Christ comes into maturity, every muscle and ligament in it will begin to contribute to its growth. Thus shall those other ministries - too numerous to speak of now - come into being and operation, that the body may be built up in love by that which every joint supplieth, by the effectual working in the measure of every part. Since such a hope is left us of entering into His glory, let us no longer walk in rebellion and perverseness of our mind; for while some seek freedom and liberty that their own thoughts may be established, they become slaves to their own corrupt ways of thinking and in bondage to every hateful doctrine and commandment of men that robs them of their place in Christ's body where there is one faith, one Lord, one Spirit, one baptism. The understanding of the natural mind is darkened and insensible to the revelation of the Spirit of God. Man, thinking he knows God's plan, goes about to establish it and finds himself to be fighting against God. If our understanding of God's purpose is darkened, we are bound to live as the Gentiles live. By reason of our deep-seated ignorance we become subject to human programs and doctrines, supposing that gain is godliness. Man's ways are always opposite to the ways of God. Man honors the rich; God blesses the poor. Man loves great crowds of followers; God chooses the remnant. The Jews demand miracles and the Greeks insist on philosophy; we preach Christ crucified - a thing revolting to the Jews and to the Greeks sheer nonsense, but to us who are saved the wisdom and power of God.

The man who bears about with him this hope of partaking of a heavenly citizenship has a tremendous price to pay. He must begin at once to put away his carnal nature and his earthly inclinations. There is no good thing found in the carnal nature. All its influences are misleading and blind us to the true purposes of God. Love of crowds, love of money, love of programs, love of eating and drinking and all manner of luxury spring from the carnal nature and are at strict enmity with the will of the Lord. Anger, wrath, evil speaking, corrupt communication with each other, together with all malice and unrighteous judgment must be put away. There must be a renewing of the spirit of our minds. The judgment of the sons of God must not be with bitterness, malice, and unrighteousness, for God's judgment is with longsuffering and righteousness.

To become a son of God and be a member of the body of Christ a walk in the Spirit is of greatest necessity, for as many as are led by the Spirit of God they are the sons of God. The Spirit leads us to walk in love. Fornication, uncleanness, covetousness and all such like are the opposite of love and should not be named among the saints of the Lord. Neither should we practice foolish talking nor low unclean jesting, for this is not conducive to grace and sonship. To be a son of God is to be a partaker and ruler in the kingdom of God; but let us be assured that unclean persons, idolaters, railers, drunkards, and extortioners shall have no part whatever in that kingdom. Let us do none of these things, neither let us speak evil one of another as some are given to doing. Evil speaking comes from evil surmising, and evil surmising comes from a corrupt mind. The wrath of God falls upon the disobedient because of all these things. How much more shall it fall upon the members of the family and household of God if we walk in their ways! In times past, when you were children of darkness, you walked in darkness, but now that you are light itself no darkness should come from you. The darkness you see in the world coming from carnal Christians should not be allowed to find reflection in you. The light that proceeds forth from the sun of righteousness is the light that should glorify our faces. It is the light that makes manifest the works of evil, and that which is made manifest should be reproved.

Since we are given such understanding of the will of the Lord, let us walk circumspectly and as befits our call from heaven, redeeming the time, for the days of preparation are few and we are encompassed with evil. If we are led by the Spirit of God, then are we the sons of God. To be filled with wine is mockery, but to be filled with the Spirit is to walk in the Spirit. This, at least, was God's intention and purpose when He filled us — that, having received of the Spirit, we should walk in the Spirit, not fulfilling the lusts of the carnal mind, but, being led by the Spirit, we should be manifested as the sons of God. Woe to us that, after being filled with the Spirit, we have walked after the lusts of our former nature. If we live in the Spirit, let us also walk in the Spirit. The fruit of the Spirit is manifested in all goodness and righteousness and truth, proving what is acceptable to the Lord.

The life of the Holy Spirit manifests itself by an overflowing life of praise - speaking to yourselves in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing and making melody in your heart to the Lord. Eph. 15:19. The fig tree does not bear olives nor the vine figs. Neither doth a fountain give forth fresh water and brackish. Let it be, therefore, that the mouth that speaks psalms and hymns and songs in the Spirit will refrain itself from evil and its lips from speaking guile. Otherwise its sacrifice of praise will be a putrid odor and its prayer an abomination to the Almighty. The life in the Spirit will manifest itself by thanksgiving for all things, for all things are working together for good to those who love the Lord and to them who are the called according to His purpose. It is the carnal nature that complains and frets over the difficulties of the way that grieves over losses and crucifixion. The things God takes from us are the things that hinder us in the Spirit and in our progress toward sonship. Therefore let us not mourn our apparent afflictions nor turn back when we are forsaken, for our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory while we look not on the things that are seen, but on the things that are not seen. For the things that are seen are temporal, but the things that are not seen are eternal. Therefore, knowing the end of our calling, let us give continual thanks to God, for all things are working together for our manifestation with Him.

The life in the Spirit is manifested further by submission. Submit yourselves one to another in the fear of God. This is the order of the coming government of the universe. Without it there can be no kingdom. Children must obey their parents. Wives must obey their husbands. Husbands must love their wives and themselves submit to all authority God has placed over them. The world is full of false ministries. To them we should neither give heed nor submission, but the Spirit of God will reveal His true servants. To their kind and loving authority we may safely and joyfully give heed. Likewise must ministries be in obedience and submission to Christ, for "surely the Lord will do nothing, but He revealeth His secrets to His servants, the prophets." Let us, therefore, follow the example of Him who came not to do His own will but the will of Him who sent Him, whose words were not His own, but the Father's, and whose works were those given to Him to do. These three things, then, manifest a life in the Spirit: praising, thanking, and submitting to authority. Without them there is no hope of sonship.

All our submission and all our authority must be in the love, which the Spirit gives. He who said, "Wives, obey your husbands," also said, "Husbands, love your wives and be not bitter against them." He who said, "Children, obey your parents," also said, "Fathers, provoke not your children to wrath lest they be discouraged." There is no room in God's program for disobedience. Neither is there room for carnal despots, Paul who said, "Be ye followers of me," said also that He was a follower of Christ. As dear children let us walk in love, for he that walketh in love is made perfect. An obedient wife is a crown of glory to her husband, and an obedient church is bone of His bone and flesh of His flesh. She will extol His glory in the coming ages and the nations will bring their glory and honor into her. Let every person obey those who have the rule over them, and let those who rule love those who are subject to them. There can be no Spirit-filled life without obedience to authority. The mystery of this obedient and Spirit-filled church is most glorious, for she is made bone of His bone and flesh of His flesh. She has partaken of the divine nature and has drunk of His Spirit.

In the armies that war against flesh and blood on earth the warriors must first learn discipline, submission, and obedience to all authority from the supreme command to the most inferior officer. Much more those who now wrestle to attain the mastery over the spirits that now govern the world and are masters of the air and the heavens surrounding us should learn obedience. Satan and all his forces of darkness are not in hell, but are princes and rulers of the air above us. The disobedient and unsubmissive church has killed her apostles and prophets and put the elders from their seats of oversight. Wives have been disobedient to their husbands and children to their parents; therefore, no weapons of warfare have been given us. We have no armor to withstand the evil, no girdle of truth, no breastplate of righteousness, no gospel of peace, but division, no shield of faith, no helmet of salvation nor sword of the Spirit. The prayer and supplication of the disobedient is not heard.

The great warfare against the powers of the devil is about to begin in desperate earnestness. It will be accompanied by the evil day of great tribulation when the sons of God with Michael the archangel shall wrestle against the principalities and powers and the rulers of darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places until that old serpent, called the devil and Satan, with all his host shall be cast down into the earth. Then shall these mighty warrior sons of God, these obedient and submissive children, be caught up to literally sit in heavenly places with Christ, having cast Satan out of the heavens.
This great and terrible warfare will be the beginning of the great day of restitution when all things everywhere shall finally bow and confess that He is Lord to the glory of God the Father. How unsearchable are the plans and purposes of God! How inexhaustible His resources! From Him everything comes. Through Him everything exists. In Him everything ends. Glory to Him forever! Amen and Amen!
CHAPTERS ONE
LET US DRAW NEAR

It seems good that our pure minds should from time to time be stirred up and awakened lest the dreadful sleepiness and drowsiness of this ever deepening night overtake us in our journey, and we be found in the morning of a new age broken, bruised and senseless in the calamitous wreckage of a dispensation that has fallen under the judgment of God. Our Lord Jesus Christ by word, by parable and by example taught us that we should always be watchful and we might well conclude that constant, continual and diligent watchfulness ran as a theme throughout His life. He understood the ever present human tendency to turn the eyes aside from the eternal goal to watch with interest some paltry thing that had both its beginning and its end in this present life, and thus be sidetracked and led astray into fruitless paths that have nothing to do with the will of God. Well did that great teacher know that it was while men slept that the enemy sowed tares among the wheat. With what gravity of word and forcefulness of parable did He show that the cares of this present age, the deceitfulness of riches and the lusts of many other things entering into our lives are like vigorous thriving thorns that choke the Word, the Logos, making our lives barren, fruitless and desolate before God. Matt. 13:22.

King Solomon by the wisdom given him of the Spirit left this gem of truth for our earnest consideration: "Drowsiness shall clothe a man with rags." Then, as though he would intentionally emphasize his statement, he associates this drowsiness with such cardinal sins as wine-bibbing, riotous eating of flesh, drunkenness and gluttony. "Let not thine heart envy sinners," he warns, "but be thou in the fear of the Lord all the day long. For surely there is an end: and thine expectation shall not be cut off. Hear thou, my son, and be wise, and guide thine heart in the way. Be not among wine-bibbers, among riotous eaters of flesh: for the drunkard and the glutton shall come to poverty; and drowsiness shall clothe a man with rags." Prov. 23:21.

If the sleepy-headed people of this present age find themselves walking in physical rags and constantly beset by poverty, we may well consider what harm and loss we suffer if we allow ourselves the dubious luxury of spiritual drowsiness. I have found a great evil among Christians, a mistake of such magnitude that it literally robs them time and again of the divine blessing that should be continually theirs. Almost all Christians are prone to imagine that they are perfectly capable of understanding the deep things of God by the use of their natural mind. They are possessed with the mistaken notion that a sincere Christian can understand any spiritual truth, providing it is presented to him with logic and a sound scriptural basis. This, however, is not the truth. In fact, it is as far from truth as anything can possibly be. The truth is simply this: "The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God: for they are foolishness unto him: neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned." 1 Cor. 2:14. But someone will immediately reply that because they are...
Christians and living for God, therefore they are no longer natural men. But my long and bitter experience has proved beyond doubt that God's people have become so steeped and grounded in doctrinal tradition that they are forever comparing spiritual revelation with their natural way of looking at things. They have paddled and paddled for years in the muddy waters of denominational tradition so that they can see nothing else, and in consequence they are completely ignorant of the unimpeachable fact that beyond them lie limitless oceans, unfathomed depths, unreached limits and breadths of eternal truth and revelation. They are not unlike the proverbial frog who lived in the well who thought he possessed all the water in the world.

Furthermore, it is a mistake for one to conclude that, because in the past he became a recipient of a great spiritual revelation, this will be a life-long guarantee of his continued spiritual understanding. Such thinking is very far from the truth and is indeed a gross and dangerous error. We are aware that many of the great, but dead, denominations in the world today were once living spiritual movements, having their pilgrim feet planted firmly upon a spiritual revelation. They had seen a present truth and for a time had basked in the glory and wonder of the experience it revealed. They thought they had reached the sunlit peak of the mountain when in truth they had but little ascended above the valley floor. As the ocean that bore them receded to her fathomless depths, they were left building castles in the sand, and so they built a fence around their truth and called it a denomination. With its help they hoped to keep all error out and all their people in. But the thing they seemed to have forgotten is this: As the body without the spirit is dead, so a revelation without the Spirit is dead. What value is there in preaching justification by faith if the Holy Spirit who gives the faith is absent? Is there any benefit in preaching holiness if we lack the presence of the Spirit of holiness? Is there any truth at all without the presence of the Spirit of truth? Without the presence of the Holy Spirit truth itself becomes an error, holiness becomes self-righteousness, faith becomes presumption and order becomes confusion. This is the pit into which the denominations have fallen, and this is the pit into which your cherished little group will fall and into which, all unknown to you, it has already fallen.

Did you ever put a new patch on a very old garment? Did you ever put new wine into old bottles? Did you ever attempt to pour the burning truth of a fresh and heavenly revelation into the old denominational wineskins? Did you ever go to a people who have been taught that one plus one makes two and try to tell them the glorious truth that one and one makes one? Does not the scripture say they two shall be one? Can you tell the natural mind that Christ and I have become so one that it is no longer Christ and I, but Christ, and yet that one is two and that two is one? Men hate these truths with a hate that is unrelenting and remorseless. To their natural minds they make no sense at all. Therefore, they deem them to be fanatical nonsense. Yet in the bosom of their fathomless depths lies the very secret of God's purpose in the creation of man - that man should be in God's image, the visible representation of Himself, God increased and God extended in preparation for the fullness of His government in all the uttermost corners of His limitless universe.

So intent was our Lord Jesus upon the task of revealing to mankind the existence of definite rears, one natural and one spiritual, that He often challenged their minds with the truth of it. "Ye are from beneath; I am from above," He said. "Ye are of this world: I am not of this world." John 8:23. Well did the Saviour know that the realm to which He belonged was such that natural men on natural planes could not hear its voices much less understand its words of life and truth. "Why do ye not understand My speech?" He asked them. Then, without waiting for their reply, He pressed the truth upon them, a truth they did not understand: "Even because ye cannot hear My word." John 8:43. In this natural world there are sights and sounds all about us that we are completely incapable of seeing or hearing. The natural ear of man is capable of receiving sounds up to fifteen thousand vibrations per second. Any sound higher than that passes him by and his natural ear does not hear it. But the purpose, for instance, has a much more sensitive ear and is capable of hearing one hundred and fifty thousand vibrations per second. Thus this creature of the sea is able to hear tones on a scale ten times higher than that heard by man. If then such a difference exists in the hearing ability of two natural ears, should we think it strange that the natural ear cannot hear the sayings of God and the natural mind cannot understand them? The Lord Himself has told us that "as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are My ways higher than your ways, and My thoughts than your thoughts." Isa. 55:9.

It is at this point in our incapability that God comes to the rescue of those who fear Him and put their trust in Him, "because that which may be known of God is manifest unto them, for God hath showed it unto them." Rom. 1:19. As it is written, "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love Him. But God hath revealed them unto us by His Spirit: for the Spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God." And again, "What man knoweth the things of a man, save the spirit of man which is in him? Even so the things of God knoweth no man, but the Spirit of God." 1 Cor. 2:9-11. When Paul was unfolding to the Christians at Ephesus the unspeakable wonders of the plan of God for the ages to come, he turned aside to remind them that he never ceased to give thanks to God for them and to make continual mention of them in his prayers. And this was his earnest prayer: "That the God of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of glory, may give unto you the spirit of wisdom and revelation in the knowledge of Him: the eyes of your understanding being enlightened; that ye may know what is the hope of His calling, and what the riches of the glory of His inheritance in the saints, and what is the exceeding greatness of His power to usward who believe, according to the working of His mighty power, which He wrought in Christ, when He raised Him from the dead..." Eph. 1:15-20.

This apostle, whose life was filled with an ever expanding spiritual revelation, knew well that the almost fantastic revelation of God's eternal purpose which he was bringing before the people could neither be heard nor understood by the natural mind. As the natural ear cannot hear a radio broadcast without a radio or the natural eye see a T.V. program without a television, so the natural mind cannot understand spiritual things without revelation. Therefore it is the Spirit and the Spirit alone who can take the things of God and reveal them unto us. Saul of Tarsus, according to all his natural understanding, believed Jesus Christ was the biggest hoax and the most monstrous deceiver that had ever walked on the face of the earth, but when a light brighter than the sun shone into his darkened heart, and his dull ears were touched by the Spirit of God, he heard a voice speaking and saying, "Saul, Saul, why persecutes! thou Me?" "Who art Thou, Lord?" he cried. And the answer came with quick assurance, "I am Jesus whom thou persecutes!" "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?" he pleaded; and the Lord said, "Go into the city and it will be shown thee what thou must do." With this revelation from above an entirely new life began. Earth receded and his natural way of looking at things passed more and more into dimness and obscurity, while heaven opened with increasing light to become an endless source of truth and spiritual understanding. When writing to the Galatians, who had seemingly lost their touch with God because of persistent dependence upon their natural understanding, he said, "When it pleased God, who separated me from my mother's womb, to reveal His Son in me, immediately I conferred not with flesh and blood; neither went I up to Jerusalem to them that were apostles before me: but I went into Arabia, and returned again unto Damascus." Gal. 1:15-17. Christ, preached or proved, meant little; Christ, revealed, meant everything. One day Jesus asked His disciples, saying, "Whom do men say that I, the Son of man, am? And they said, Some say that Thou art John the Baptist: some, Elias: and others, Jeremias, or one of the prophets. He saith unto them, But whom say ye that I am? And Simon Peter answered and said, Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God. And Jesus answered and said unto him, Blessed art thou, Simon Bar-jona; for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but My Father which is in heaven." Matt. 16:13-17.

We are inclined to entertain the vain imagination that, should Jesus Christ walk the earth in our day, startling men with His miracles, amazing their hearts with His sermons, or staggering their minds with His wisdom and understanding, any man, just any man at all with his natural mind and human wisdom, would recognize Him as the Christ of God. But that is not the truth; neither could it ever be. Jesus Christ, the Son of God, is a revelation. You could walk with Him as Thomas did, seeing and hearing, yes, even believing, yet never really knowing Him as God's Son. A man? Yes. A prophet? Yea, more than a prophet. You could see Him as righteous and good and worthy of trust, the greatest man the world had ever known, yet always fall just short of the divine revelation that He was God's Son, begotten of Him before the foundation of the world. But in that instant when a flash of revelation came to Thomas, revealing in heavenly light that Jesus was God's Son indeed, nothing could ever more dissuade him as in astonishment and assurance he gasped, "My Lord and my God!"

Our own sonship in Christ is likewise a matter of divine revelation. There is a spirit of sonship that produces sonship. Mark well the hidden secret of this inspired phrase, spirit of sonship. With great plainness of speech I must tell you that in our day there are tens of thousands of Christians who have tasted of salvation, who have been baptized in the Spirit, who believe the Bible and who live Christian lives, but who do not possess the spirit of sonship. To them God is God, divine, supreme, the author of their salvation, and sitting on His throne in heaven, but He has never become a Father to them. With their lips they have recited the Lord's prayer saying, "Our Father who art in heaven," but their spirits have never been able to breathe with the solemn assurance of revelation, "My Father!" It will be a great day for you or any man when God sends forth the Spirit of His Son into your heart, crying, "Abba Father." Our Father. It is the spirit of sonship that proclaims you a son of God indeed. It cannot be just the written word on the pages of the Bible. With great sadness of heart I must confess that I have seen the most shameful characters boldly setting forth their claims to sonship just because the Bible says, "Now are we the sons of God." But without the spirit of sonship you are not a son of God. Let no man deceive you about that, for it is to those who have the spirit of sonship that the words, "Beloved, now are we the sons of God," were written.

As I knelt before God yester morning long before the sun had kissed the eastern hills, the Holy Spirit directed my eyes to a passage of scripture, which I had never noticed before. In the long genealogy of the descendants of Judah mention is made of one obscure man whose name was Jabez. Of him the Holy Spirit pauses to say, "And Jabez was more honorable than his brethren; and his mother called his name Jabez, saying, Because I bare him with sorrow. And Jabez called on the God of Israel, saying, "Oh that Thou wouldst bless me indeed, and enlarge my coast, and that thine hand might be with me, and that Thou wouldst keep me from evil, that it might not grieve me! And God granted him that which he requested." 1 Chron. 4:9-10. Do you know why it was that in that long tedious genealogy, relating who begat whom, the Holy Spirit paused to tell us about Jabez? Our minds need not be in doubt for long, for here among the descendants of Judah is one man who is not only a son of Judah but a son of God as well. He was more honorable than his brethren only because God had granted him the spirit of sonship, the spirit that was sadly lacking in all his brethren.

If we draw nigh to God, He will draw nigh to us. If we cleanse our hands that we touch not the unclean thing, and purify our hearts that we may be delivered from double-mindedness, God will meet us. Christ will come in and sup with us and we shall be His sons and daughters.

We are living in an hour so serious that it is impossible to find words, which will adequately put things forth in a clear light. If a man fails to see that we are now at this moment living in the calamitous hours that must precede the end of the age, then surely he must be very ignorant of Bible truth and very blind to the signs of the times. How could a man possibly read the record of events and conditions as they were in the days of Noah, plainly recorded in Genesis 6:1-6, and still not know that the prophecy of Jesus is being literally fulfilled in our day? Luke 17:26-32. Let this truth be impressed upon every heart, for there are few, it seems, who know it. There was one grievous condition in Noah's day that is conspicuously evident in our day as well. The awful truth is simply that no one would listen. No one would believe that calamity was coming, nor would they believe that God would judge the earth. No man can say he believes until he is willing to act upon that which he believes. If he says, "I believe the flood is coming," but refuses to bestir himself from his evil surroundings and make his way with haste into God's ark, then he is a liar. He does not believe at all, because he refuses to take warning and act upon the message God has sent him.

Could we say that the children of Lot had faith in the message of the angels when they mocked at those who were sent to call them out? Gen. 19:14. What good would it have done for one to say, "I believe the city will be destroyed by fire," yet remain in his bed as the minutes ticked away to the moment of doom? Can that kind of faith save a man? The awful truth of the days of Noah and of the days of Lot was that no one would listen to the truth of the hour. They would readily lend their ears to fables and lies, but to the truth they gave no heed at all. Rather, they made it the song of the ribald and the jest of the drunken and obscene.

We no longer live in the days of Noah, nor yet in the days of Lot or Sodom, but in the days of the coming of the Son of man - dreadful days, so filled with calamity and judgment, so filled by sin and every evil imagination of the human heart, so violent and so replete with forms of godliness that our blessed Lord and Saviour said of them, "As it was in the days of Noah, so shall it be in the days of the Son of man." But they would not listen then and they will not listen now. They are like the deaf adder that stoppeth her ear, which will not hearken to the voice of charmers, charming never so wisely. Psa. 58:4,5. For "the wicked are estranged from the womb: they go astray as soon as they be born, speaking lies." Psa. 58:3.

The people of Noah's day could not see that they were exceedingly wicked. The people who lived in Sodom were unaware that they were submerged in the vilest kind of iniquity and transgression. Neither do the people of our day understand their abominable estate as they mingle the lusts and passions of their flesh with their multiplied forms of religion. They think nothing at all of lying all night upon the bed of adultery, then rising in the morning to sing with the congregation, "Just a closer walk with Thee." It is nothing to them to practice dishonesty, drunkenness, blasphemy, and even sodomy, and then to sing, "Take my life and let it be consecrated, Lord, to Thee. Take my moments and my days; let them flow with ceaseless praise." Oh, God! Break the teeth of the ungodly! "Break their teeth, O God, in their mouth: break out the great teeth of the young lions, O Lord. Let them melt away as waters, which run continually: when he bendeth his bow to shoot his arrows, let them be as cut in pieces. As a snail which melteth, let every one of them pass away: like the untimely birth of a woman, that they may not see the sun." Psa. 58:6-8.

But it is not to the ungodly I now write, but unto you, Oh men and women of God; for your hands are not pure, neither have you delivered yourself from the embrace of the greatest destroyer that ever stalked like a specter across the face of the whole earth. Verily I say unto you that at this very moment almost all of God's children are dwelling in Babylon, that great harlot system that embraces every religious organization, every sect, and every denomination on the face of the whole earth. The mother of harlots is Rome. The daughters, multitudes of them, are the Protestant denominations. Men will rebel more and more at the truth I speak, but be assured of this: those who dare to remain in the embrace of this octopus system serve not Christ, but the system. They labor not for Christ, but compass land and sea to make proselytes for the system. From this standpoint they boast and upon this ground they stand before God to proclaim, "Have we not prophesied in Thy name, and in Thy name have cast out devils for Thee." And, standing upon this same ground, they will hear the words of the all-wise God, saying, "I never knew you. Depart from Me, ye that work iniquity."

Oh virgin daughter of Babylon, the call of God is upon you. As the call of God to Lot was to come out, the call of God to you is also to come out. Do not call my attention to the wonderful works your sect is doing. Speak not unto God and say, "We are prophesying in Thy name and casting out devils for Thee." Obedience is better than sacrifice and to hearken than the fat of rams. The command of God for the end of the age is given to you. "Come out of her, My people!" Come out of the harlot system, the great Babylon of religious confusion that has encompassed the whole earth.

The failure of God's people to differentiate between the beautiful virgin church of which the apostles spoke and the bawdy harlot system which in our day dares to call itself the church has so blinded their eyes and confused their minds that they see nothing as they ought to see it and know nothing as they ought to know it. We need not hesitate to say that there is scarcely one person in ten thousand who can either see or understand that the monstrous system which calls itself the church and which, like a multi-armed octopus, clutches over a billion souls in its embrace is not the church at all, but none other than mystery Babylon the great. When, oh, when, will God's people see by the Holy Spirit that the true church of which the apostles wrote is not a harlot system, but a chaste virgin. The true church is the ecclesia, the called out ones, a people called out of the world and called unto Christ, a people called out of Babylon and all its multi-headed confusion to follow the Lamb whithersoever He goeth. The true church has nothing to do with denominations of any of earth's religious systems.

Well do I know that my own voice, which for many years has called to the virgin daughter of Babylon, "Come out of her, My people, that ye be not partaker of her plagues," has been a the voice crying in the wilderness of this evil system. It is with great heaviness and continual sorrow of heart that I confess that, though many hundreds have with their lips ascribed to the truth of the message, they themselves choose to remain in bondage to the harlot system, refusing to break off its shackles or free themselves from its chains. They say, but they do not. They hear, but obey not. With their lips they speak the truth, but their hearts abide in error. Woe to you, my brother, for Babylon the great has fallen and has become the hold for every foul spirit and a cage for every unclean and hateful bird.

So it was that in the days of Noah men refused to listen to the message. They knew things were wrong, but they paid no heed. God had not stepped in before, so why should He interfere now? "Why then," thought they, "should we change our ways or repent of our sins?" So they went right on marrying and giving in marriage, the sons of God taking the daughters of men, practicing every imaginable corruption, filling the earth with violence, committing senseless acts of terror even as we see everywhere today, and the whole thing was smiled upon and condoned. The messenger God had sent to warn them was considered, no doubt, the biggest fool that ever walked the earth. And so "they knew nothing till the deluge came and swept them all away." Matt. 24:39. (Moffatt). Those are very potent words. They knew nothing until the flood came and swept them all away. Dare we say that there is any difference in our day? Sinners will not listen. Christians will not listen. Every sign foretold by the prophets, the apostles, and Jesus Christ is filling the earth and telling us in the most unmistakable terms that the end of the age is rushing in like a tide upon us to sweep away the whole mess of violence, greed, sin, drunkenness, adultery, war, homosexuality, ungodliness, forms of religion, dishonesty, destruction and an ever increasing multitude of evil things. Even the vilest of men know the world is ripe for judgment, but they will not listen.

Several years ago in the book Mystery Babylon and others I warned that there would be a great alliance of all religious systems of the world, that Romanism and Protestantism would come together, that they would take into their fold all such religions as Buddhism, Mohammedanism, Hinduism, Confucianism and whatever else there was. I warned also that there would be an alliance between Romanism and Communism. These things are coming upon us now with ever increasing swiftness. They are becoming more and more evident every day. Furthermore, I warned that there would be a union between the religious system and the political system, the religious system being the first beast and the political system the second beast (see Rev. 13), and that the second beast would command that everybody on earth worship the first beast. Every day we are coming closer to this very thing, but scarcely anyone will listen. Christian and sinner alike continue right on in the system.

They would not leave the system in Noah's day. They would not leave Sodom in Lot's day, though angels were present to call them. And Christians will not leave Babylon in this day even though God's pronouncements of judgment against it are more serious and severe than those pronounced against Sodom or Nineveh. You have read the awesome list of her sins as recorded in the seventeenth chapter of Revelation by John who, carried by the Spirit into the wilderness, saw "a woman sit upon a scarlet colored beast, full of the names of blasphemy, having seven heads and ten horns. And the woman was arrayed in purple and scarlet color, and decked with gold and precious stones and pearls, having a golden cup in her hand full of abominations and filthiness of her fornication: and upon her forehead was a name written, Mystery, Babylon the great, the mother of harlots and abominations of the earth. And I saw the woman drunken with the blood of the saints, and with the blood of the martyrs of Jesus: and when I saw her I wondered with great admiration." Please read Rev. 17:1-18. Truly cried the angel of God, saying, "Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication." Rev. 14:8. Are we to imagine that a subject that consumes practically three chapters of Revelation, chapters 17, 18, 19, and part of chapter 14, is a subject of small importance? Dare God's people continue to go on cherishing a system, which is full of the names of blasphemy? The names given to the multitudes of sects today are the names of blasphemy. Why is it that God's people cannot see this? You simply cannot mention the word church without someone asking you which church? Which church, indeed! And if you cannot shelter yourself beneath one of these names of blasphemy, then you are considered a heathen or an outright unbeliever. How far have God's people wandered from the simplicity of discipleship! How far they have strayed from that true and blessed ecclesia that has heard God's voice and has followed Him! But no; they must have a name tacked on to them, a name of blasphemy, to designate what division, what sect, what political party they belong to, until the whole system has become full of names, which God's word describes as names of blasphemy. Rev. 17:3. And the woman who sits astride it is called a harlot. A harlot is a woman that commits adultery and fornication with all comers, and this, I think, is an apt description of the system as we see it in our time. Is it any wonder the angelic message today is "Come out of her, My people."

It is not my purpose to take up further time writing about that monstrous system Babylon that seeks to enslave us all, bringing our minds and spirits into the bondage of its ever narrowing walls and ever tightening shackles. But I shall have no hesitation in saying that in our day as never before in the annals of history God's people must throw off the shackles of the harlot system before ever they can begin to make any real progress with God.

We are living in the Laodicean period of the church, the day when God's people are neither hot nor cold, a time when they have a form of godliness but deny the power of it. Where are those glorious experiences of justification we witnessed years ago when chains of sin were snapped, and lifelong habits instantly broken, when family altars were set up, glorious baptisms flooded thousands of souls, and men walked with God? They are gone, my friend, and in their place has come a tepidity that is sickening to the heart. Christians are neither hot nor cold. The wheat is indistinguishable from the tares. It is impossible to tell whether they are sheep or goats. They assemble for an hour on Sunday to listen to a preacher, and they sit for hours watching Hollywood's corruption on T.V., that monstrous, one-eyed corruptor of souls that has done more to fill the world with violence and degradation than any other invention known to man. Christians seem to have lost all the tenderness of the Holy Spirit. They have flirted with evil so long that they cannot tell what is good and what is evil. Permissiveness is the order of the day, but the Spirit has fled and the glory has departed from us. No wonder the prophet said, "All tables are full of vomit," and the whole system is described as a hold of devils and a cage for every unclean and hateful bird. The curse of God is upon it, and except you, my brother, depart from it, you will be destroyed in the flood that is soon to sweep it all away.

It is time for Christians to sit up and take notice. We are definitely at the hour when God is dividing. He is gathering the good in vessels, but the bad He is casting away. He is separating the tares from the wheat. The tares He is gathering into bundles for destruction and the fiery wrath of the great tribulation, but the wheat He is gathering into His garner to become the seed of the kingdom of God. He is separating the sheep from the goats. Those tractable sheep are the sons of God who love to be led by God's Spirit, but the untractable goats are those people who are concerned only with their own will and desire. They get from this life everything they can and hope that somehow at the end of the journey God will have mercy upon them. Why, even the publicans and harlots will find their place in the kingdom more readily than this mad throng of pleasure-loving, money-grabbing Christians who never seem to learn that godliness with contentment is great gain, but seem to imagine that they must become absorbed in the rat race for this world's goods and vain glory.

Of the writers of the New Testament the apostle James seems to be the most practical. If you would explore the wonders of the love of God, you will sail its boundless ocean in the writings of John. When your soul is hungering for a spiritual feast, who can feed the famished sheep like Peter, who by his calling was a shepherd of the flock of God. To him Jesus had said, "Feed My Sheep." For sheer logic and spiritual understanding in the eternal purposes of God Paul was a vessel specially chosen to unfold unsearchable mysteries, hidden from the foundation of the world, but ready to be revealed in the last days by apostles chosen for that purpose. But if you need practical advice and spiritual common sense presented right down on your level, you will find the book of James a gold mine of information. His epistle abounds in instruction to the sick, the afflicted, the tempted, the proud, the impatient, the evil speakers, the boasters, the double-minded, the respecter of persons, the people who talk too much, the people who profess great faith in God but deny it by their lives. His writings are an inexhaustible mine of information for practical Christian living.

Notice what potent words of truth are set before us in this message: "Submit yourselves to God. Resist the devil and he will flee from you. Draw nigh to God and He will draw nigh to you." James 4:7, 8. Many of God's dear children have written to me expressing a fervent wish that they might have a much closer relationship with the heavenly Father. What desire can be better or more noble than the desire to live in ever increasing harmony and unity with the Lord? Why, that was the petition of our blessed Lord and Christ when He prayed to the Father, pleading. "That they all may be one; as Thou, Father, art in Me, and I in Thee, that they also may be one in Us: that the world may believe that Thou hast sent Me." John 17:21. Your desire for a deeper, richer relationship with God is a precious jewel in the eyes of the Lord and a sweet perfume to His nostrils. But I greatly fear that many a man has let that earnest longing die within his breast, even as the prayer died upon his lips. Perhaps he thought that all he could do was wish and hope before an unresponsive God, but this, God be praised, is not the fact.

Our relationship with God and our unending progress in Him is always a two way street. Thus it has always been; thus it is now, and thus it ever will be. Therefore James, this most practical writer, says to you and me, "Draw nigh to God, and He will draw nigh to you." I once read of a Christian who said to another, "I would give all the world to have an experience like yours." To this the other replied, "That is exactly what it cost me." Ah, there is truth in that saying! In all my life I have never found a man whose depth of experience cost him nothing. If your experience has cost you nothing, then it is worth exactly nothing. If it has cost you everything, then it is worth everything. Would you have God draw nigh to you? Then your first step is "draw nigh to God." Draw not nigh with a mouth full of requests, telling Him what you want, but draw near with a heart full of submission (James 4:7), longing to know what He wants. Those who thus come submitting themselves to God will find acceptance before Him. It has long been a source of distress to my spirit to find that, when Christians come to God, they invariably come with a mouth full of requests. They tell God what to do, what they want done, and how it should be done just as though He were the lackey, the servant and the slave and they were the all-wise Lord. Or, if they do not come with their demanding, they come as whining discontented children, hoping the Lord will feel sorry for them and give them the toy they seek, or deliver them from the trial He has sent to try them and do them good. To hearken is better than the fat of rams; therefore, listen long to Him before you speak.

We may safely say that ninety-nine and nine-tenths of all the prayers prayed are on the same level as the request made by the mother of Zebedee's children who came to Jesus requesting, "Lord, grant that these my two sons may sit one on Thy right and the other on Thy left in the kingdom." Lord, grant me this. Lord, grant me that. Lord, heal me. Lord, save my wife. Lord, save my children. Lord, bless the missionaries. Lord, bless the campaign we are going to hold. If you analyze all your prayers and the prayers of other, you will find they are usually on the give me level. It is almost always, "Lord, I want you to do this", and very seldom, "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?" Since, then, we are drawing near to the end of the age and all the former things are swiftly passing away, together with our opportunities, let us speak with great plainness concerning "drawing nigh to God".

When I attempt to tell you of the great benefits of fasting together with prayer and waiting on God, it goes without saying that a number of people all write to tell me how pitifully wrong I am. They will try to convince me that all such things as fasting and tithing belong to a forgotten era, that such things are Old Testament truths and do not apply now. But if they will examine their hearts before God, they will find that their reason for denying these things is not because of their convictions, but because they entail the crucifixion of the flesh, and they are loath to submit themselves to God. You must always remember that the flesh, the body, the natural man, literally hates anything that will facilitate your drawing nearer to God. The flesh is God's enemy and there is no bigger devil anywhere than self as it operates through the desires of the flesh and the instructions of the carnal mind. The carnal (fleshly) mind is an enemy of God and the natural man will not submit himself to God. As the scripture has said, he is not subject to the law of God and neither, indeed, can he be. So then they that are in the flesh cannot please God.

Fasting, accompanied by submission to God, an all-encompassing surrender to His will, is the first step any Christian should take if he would draw nigh to God. In the temple at Jerusalem there was veil that hung between the holy place and the holy of holies where dwelt the shekinah. That veil represented the flesh (Heb. 10:20). There is a veil that hangs in the temple, which you are, for your body is the temple of the Holy Spirit. That veil of flesh hangs between your present experience in God and the relationship you long to have with Him. But it is the same veiluntaken away (2 Cor. 3:14), namely, the veil of the flesh. When Jesus died on the cross, His life went out and the flesh was dead. Then the veil in the temple was torn apart from top to bottom and the way into the holiest of all was made open for all to enter. Matt. 27:50-51.

Fasting and prayer causes the earth and all its rotten, deceiving glamour to be shown in its true light before your searching eyes. Earthly possessions shrink to the status of childish toys and wealth and riches become moldy treasures corrupted by moth and rust, capable only of fortifying the frail flesh to the detriment of the eternal spirit. Position and earthly ambition dwindle into the dust of nothingness as the flesh weakens and the spirit, drawing nigh to God, grows stronger.

Why is it that almost all the world, whether Christian or non-Christian, is prone to believe that at the moment of physical death the spirit immediately flies away to heaven, whether it be the Christian's paradise, the Indian's happy hunting ground, or some other? Do we not realize that it is the spirit's deliverance from the bondage of the corruptible body that permits it to return to God where it has always longed to be? Why, then, are we so slow of understanding that we cannot see that, when the body is mortified through fasting, right there the spirit is permitted for the first time to really begin to draw near to God. I have no argument with those who wish to debate the matter. I will not answer them even one word. My only desire is that those who do sincerely long to draw near to God, as I also do, may find the way to do it, being delivered as far as possible from the deceptive bondage of the corruptible body, for the maintenance of which the whole world system functions, for the lusts of which every war in history has been fought and for the filth of which Sodom was destroyed. The earth was flooded in the days of Noah and is even now reserved unto fire and the judgment of almighty God. It is this same flesh which wars against fasting, which dreads even now as you read these lines lest you should announce to it that it must go without food for ten days, for seven days, or even for one day. The flesh is the enemy that is always weak when the spirit is willing. It is the enemy that demands sleep when the spirit would watch and pray. It is the enemy who would demand food when you would fast and pray. All our lives we labor and travail to preserve our physical flesh, but in the end it lies down and dies. Yet we coddle it and cater to its whims rather than give ourselves to fasting and prayer. No wonder James prefaced his instruction to draw nigh to God with the admonition, "Submit yourselves to God. Resist the devil, and he will flee from you." There is no devil closer to us than the corruptible flesh and the carnal mind that never ceases to press the demands of the body.

There is nothing complicated about fasting and prayer except the complications made by those who would avoid it. We will fast when our desire for God is greater than our desire to fill our stomachs. Only then will we do it. A three-day fast can prove to be of great value to you. A ten-day fast unto the Lord will uncover even greater benefits. Fasts of three weeks and forty days were by no means uncommon among the saints of old and among many saints of our day as well. Fasting never does the body any harm. As a multitude of diseases are caused by over-eating, so a multitude of cures come by fasting. It is, however, the spiritual man who is most blessed by fasting. Let us then draw near to God in this manner that He also may draw near to us.

Jesus gave some good instruction about fasting when He said, "When ye fast, be not, as the hypocrites, of a sad countenance: for they disfigure their faces that they may appear unto men to fast. Verily I say unto you, They have their reward. But thou, when thou fastest, anoint thine head and wash thy face; that thou appear not unto men to fast, but unto thy Father which is in secret; and thy Father, which seeth in secret, shall reward thee openly." Matt. 6:16-18. Your attitude toward God in all things is of the utmost importance. I have known men to fast for forty days that they might be given the gift of healing. I wonder what their motive really was? You may know what you want, but do you know what you need? Do not draw near to God to ask for the things you want, but come rather submitting yourself to Him who knows all things and who does all things well according to His infinite wisdom and foreordained purpose. Never measure yourself by yourself to see what you have gained by fasting. Neither measure yourself by the experience of another. It is God who sees and rejoices in your spiritual growth. Fasting should never be a once-in-a-lifetime affair. It should be undertaken whenever we feel a special need of drawing nigh to Him.

The things written in this book are present truths that lie heavily on my heart. I do not pretend that they are well ordered nor do I suppose they will make anyone happy. But the conviction that we are now in the closing hours of this age has at times been almost overwhelming. The hour of change is not near; it is already here. Let us, then, cast off our drowsiness and sleep to stand with our loins girded and our lamps burning as those who watch for the bridegroom, lest, coming suddenly, He find us sleeping. Let us draw near to God.

TO ALL WHO LOVE GOD

The element which we call time is swiftly passing away. The hour approaches when a mighty angel will stand with one foot up on the sea and one foot upon the land and will lift up his hand to heaven and swear by Him that liveth forever and ever that time shall be no longer, and, in that hour when the seventh angel shall begin to sound the last trumpet, the mystery of God shall be finished. Rev. 10:5-7. Cf. Rev. 11:15.

Just as the members of the resurrection comes forth each in his own order — Christ the first fruits, afterward they that are His at His coming, then cometh the end, (i.e. the end of the resurrection, 1 Cor. 15:22-24) - so all things likewise come in their own order and all events at their appointed time. As a mighty army moves, each man in his own company and each company in his own order, so the inhabitants of the coming kingdom march from experience to experience, from light to light and from truth to truth until that blessed day when corruptible puts on incorruption, mortal puts on immortality, the saints in God's image take the kingdom and the kingdoms of this world become the kingdoms of our Lord and His Christ, and He shall reign forever and forever. Rev. 11:15.
Centuries ago Israel marched across the burning wilderness of Sin. Ex. 16:1. Forty years they journeyed under the continual care and correction of God. Angels’ food was their meat (Psa. 18:25) and spiritual water was their drink, for they drank of that spiritual rock that followed them and that rock was Christ. 1 Cor. 10:4. Their bodies grew not weary and their garments waxed not old; neither was there a feeble one in their tribes (Psa. 105:37) as they journeyed under God’s orders and moved at His command. So it came to pass that, "on the day that the tabernacle was reared up, the cloud covered the tabernacle, namely, the tent of the testimony: and at even there was upon the tabernacle as it were the appearance of fire, until the morning. So it was always: The cloud covered it by day, and the appearance of fire by night. And when the cloud was taken up from the tabernacle, then after that the children of Israel journeyed: and in the place where the cloud abode, there the children of Israel pitched their tents. At the commandment of the Lord the children of Israel journeyed, and at the commandment of the Lord they pitched: as long as the cloud abode upon the tabernacle they rested in their tents. And when the cloud tarried long upon the tabernacle many days, then the children of Israel kept the charge of the Lord, and journeyed not. And so it was, when the cloud was a few days upon the tabernacle; according to the commandment of the Lord they abode in their tents, and according to the commandment of the Lord they journeyed. And so it was, when the cloud abode from even unto the morning, and that the cloud was taken up, they journeyed. Or whether it were two days, or a month, or a year, that the cloud tarried upon the tabernacle, remaining thereon, the children of Israel abode in their tents, and journeyed not: but when it was taken up, they journeyed. At the commandment of the Lord they rested in their tents, and at the commandment of the Lord they journeyed." Num. 9:15-23.

We today are under similar care and similar orders though we know it not. From time to time through the ages the church has been commanded to move on with the cloud to new revelation and experience in God, and after each move to pitch our tent and patiently wait for the moving of the cloud by day or the pillar of fire by night. What a tremendous sight it must have been for Israel, after having camped for a day, a month, a year, or many years, to see at last the cloudy pillar of God's presence and glory begin to move on, and what a hustle and bustle there must have been as they broke up their old camps to follow the cloud, every tribe in his own order, and every man in his order whithersoever the Spirit led them!

As time has swiftly passed, the light of that same fiery pillar has illumined to our waiting hearts many truths which we have embraced and have made part of ourselves and ourselves part of them. But with many of us, as with many of them, God was not well pleased, and they were overthrown in the wilderness (1 Cor.10:5). They lusted after evil things, became idolaters, and committed fornication just as thousands today are doing who once were baptized in the cloud, drinking of the spiritual rock and eating the spiritual meat. 1 Cor. 10:2-4. We have made jobs and money, possessions and pleasure our idols and our gods, and we have committed fornication with the harlot daughters of Babylon times without number. We have tempted Christ and murmured because of the rigors of the way, sat down to eat and drink in the fleshly realm, and rose up to play - to play at church and make a play of religion. Cf. 1 Cor. 10:5-11. These things that happened to them are for examples to us upon whom the ends of the ages are come. Verse 11.

In the depths of my spirit I seem to hear the trumpet call to a new awakening. It is time to move on from the revelation of the past years. It is time to partake of the resurrection, the bread of God, the better blood and the water of life. The pillar of fire is moving; it is time to move on. The great mystery of the ages, "Let Us make man in Our image", is about to be fulfilled when all things will begin to find their one head in Christ.

There is a great difference between a childlike faith in God and a childish faith. While the former believeth all things and endureth all things, retaining in maturity the simplicity of childhood, the latter never matures at all, believing less as the years go by, hoping for nothing and quite unable to endure the trials and furnaces of affictions prepared of God to refine the gold and purify the silver. Childish faith cries like Jacob, "All these things are against me" (Gen. 42:36), but childlike faith responds with Paul, "All things work together for good." (Rom. 8:28). Almost half a century ago I learned a poem whose lilting theme dances like a pretty fairy, dispelling doubt and gloom with her wand of childlike faith:

Two girls I know, Jeanette and Jo,
And one is always moping.
The other lassie, come what may,
Is ever bravely hoping.
Beauty of face and girlish grace
Are theirs for joy and sorrow;
Jeanette takes brightly every day
And Jo dreads each tomorrow.

One early morn they watched the dawn;
I saw them stand together.
Their whole day's sport, 'twas very plain,
Depended on the weather.

"Twill storm!" cried Jo. Jeanette spoke low,
"Yes, but 'twill soon be over."
And as she spoke the sudden shower
Came beating down the clover.

"I told you so," cried angry Jo,
"It always is a-raining!"
Then hid her face in dire despair,
Lamenting and complaining.

But sweet Jeanette, quite hopeful yet,
(I tell it to her honor,)
Looked up and waited till the sun Came streaming down upon her.

The broken clouds sailed off in crowds
Across the sea of glory;
Jeanette and Jo ran laughing in,
Which ends my simple story.

How happy is the man who grows and grows in wisdom and understanding, ever speaking the language of childlike faith until the heaven of heavens cannot contain God, much less the temples we build for Him. How desperately unhappy is the man whose childish faith never grows beyond the play-pen of his religion, peevishly fretting about every storm, and regarding each chastening rod as a threat to his pleasure, his well-being and even his very existence.

It is indeed a long road that has no turning. Even in the journey from the natural through the spiritual to the celestial there is a turning. It is not a turning to the right nor to the left, but an upward turning from the terrestrial to the celestial, from the fields where we walk and talk and live as men to the kingdom where Christ dwelleth, far above principality and power and might and dominion and every name that is named, not only in this age but in the ages to come.

It is necessary that we should understand the course of this age, knowing something of Babylon, the Beast, and the coming tribulation, but there must come a time when, as sons, we view all things from the mountains of God and not as men from the doldrums of earth. Therefore God, even our God, is calling a chosen people apart from the thinking of men, aside from the motley crowd with all its pitiful worry about physical welfare, the benefits of the body and the healing thereof, their worry over programs and enforced concern for the souls of men. With what foolishness and unbelief do childish Christians, concerned about their physical welfare, seek to establish desert hideouts in hope of being preserved when the floods of God's wrath are upon the earth! This they vainly do, for they have never learned the truth of that sacred text, "He that dwelleth in the secret place of the Most High shall abide under the shadow of the Almighty." Here it is that plagues come not nigh our dwelling though a thousand fall at our side and ten thousand at our right hand. Psa. 91:7. In this natural realm where we have lived so long the forest is obscured by the trees. Leave then the plains of men and the realms of human understanding to soar with Him up higher to view the broader plains from celestial mountain peaks in the heavenly realms where Christ sitteth at God's right hand.

Did you ever stand in awe and marvel at the work of the great artists on earth? Perhaps expressions failed and words became inadequate as you stood before Michelangelo's statue of David or gazed with wonder at the faces of the presidents carved in the heights of Mt. Rushmore. Wonderful as are these things, it must be that, ere the sculptor placed his chisel upon the stone to chip it away, he beheld in the uncut rock the very image of that which he by toil and skill would bring into being. Thus it was that God, the mighty architect of the universe, beholding in His own Spirit the glorious image of things to come, set the forces of His own will in motion to bring forth with unerring exactness the image of His pleasure in the very likeness of Himself.

No man can truly love God until with the eye of faith he catches a glimpse of God's eternal purpose, which He purposed in Christ Jesus before the ages began. All the purposes of God were in Christ before there was a man, before there was a temporal world and before an age was formed in the midst of eternity. God with omniscient wisdom planned with unerring and immutable accuracy every blow of the hammer that would in the end bring forth from the uncut rock a race of sons in the image of Himself. With omniscience there can be no errors, and there have been none; neither shall there ever be. With immutability there can be no change in purpose. There has been none; neither will there ever be. With omnipotence there can be no contrary powers, except those who, like Pharaoh, were designed by God Himself to fulfill His unerring purpose, for even of Pharaoh God has said, "For this cause have I raised thee up that My power might be seen in thee and that My name might be known in all the earth." Rom. 9:17.

Weakness has no part with omnipotence. Ignorance cannot be associated with omniscience. They are the antithesis of each other; therefore, we must immediately discard all childish philosophy, inherited traditions and all purposeless theology that have sprung up like tares in the fertile fields of the carnal mind to be handed to men as sacred truth. Banish from your heart all thinking that would make God capable of mistake or error. Abolish all idle theory that would lead you to believe that somewhere Satan disrupted and thwarted the perfection of the purpose God has formed in eternal wisdom. Dare you longer think that wisdom can be unwise or that infinity can be finite? Can immutability be changefulness, or omnipotence weakness? Nothing can slink unnoticed into God's garden. No power can thwart or delay Him nor can any wisdom instruct Him.

We are forever hearing about the power of Satan until one would think that he was only a whit behind God in omnipotence. But hear this, Oh fools and slow of heart, for the God of heaven and earth has declared, "There is no power but of God. The powers that be are ordained of God." Rom. 13:1. Where in scripture will one search to find the thought that Satan is a power with whom God must reckon? Where, indeed, will one turn to find that Satan has great power over men? I am fully persuaded that he has no power over anything but such as is given to him by the permissive will of God, and outside of that he is as helpless as you or I. He is a deceiver and subtle of heart, walking to and fro continually seeking occasion against men with which he might accuse them before God, for he has this permission of the Lord. It is for your good and mine that temptation and affliction come, for that is part of the chipping by which the image of Christ is brought forth from the rock in God's perfect likeness. Though Satan had completely considered God's servant Job, he could touch neither his property nor his flesh without the permission of the Almighty. See Job 1:6-12, 2:1-8.

When at last we see God eternal, omnipotent, omniscient, immutable, omnipresent, loving and holy, then upon these seven mountain peaks we take our stand to behold the glory of His purpose for the endless ages. Behold, Oh child of God, the blessed assurance that fills the spirit of man in the knowledge that God's purpose cannot fall short or fail or die, for He is eternal. It cannot be halted, for He is omnipotent. It cannot be changed, for He is immutable. It cannot go astray or be found at fault, for He is omniscient. Nor can man or Satan mar His purpose, for in omnipresence He stands, keeping watch upon His own. His love is over all that not a fragment should be lost, and by His holiness He has sworn that His purposes should be accomplished.

The hurry and rush of our modern way of life is far more a curse to us than it is a blessing. Rush and hurry have become so much the order of the day that few men pause long enough to consider the eternal wonders God would speak to our hearts. The Lord never speaks to a man who is in a rush, but unfolds His wonders to those who wait upon Him. To many the reading of scripture has become a matter of haste - of reading a short chapter and reading it fast so that they can get on with the more important business of living after and caring for the things that concern the body. But, if you will meditate upon the scriptures you have read a hundred times and found nothing in them, you will see the unfolding of an eternal revelation of the wisdom and understanding of God's purpose.

What heavenly peace comes into the spiritual mind when we grasp the force of this mighty edict: "For by Him were all things created that are in heaven and that are in earth, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones or dominions or principalities or powers: all things were created by Him and for Him; and He is before all things, and by Him all things consist." Col. 1:16-17. I firmly believe that a spiritual understanding of a truth such as this will revolutionize a man's life, transform his outlook and conform him to the image of Christ. The world is full of people who do not know that God is in control. They have never learned that back of all things stands the Almighty, that He is before all things, and that by Him all things exist, consist and subsist, and that in Him we live and move and have our being. It is He who raises nations up and puts them down again. He is the one who raises up mighty dictators and discards them when they have fulfilled His purpose. He raises up Pharaohs and Hamans, Herods and Hitlers to chastise His people, and when He has finished with them, He brushes them off as dust from the balance and they disappear into the nothingness from which they came. Satan himself is a dignity against whom not even archangels are permitted to rail, (Jude 9), much less men of flesh and blood, but in the end it will be seen that even he who has been the dread of the nations has had his part to play in the divine purpose of an all-wise God.

Even the simplest analysis of God's word reveals the vast benefits of temptation, that by the trial of our faith we should be able to discern both good and evil, forsaking evil and choosing good. Even our blessed Lord Jesus Christ was tempted in all points like as we are. Heb. 4:15 But God had a purpose in it, for through this very temptation He was able to become a merciful and faithful high priest in things pertaining to God. Heb. 2:17. Many a man has made vain boasts before temptation came, but afterward he confessed that he was like all other men, weak and helpless, needing the grace of God and power from above to carry him through to sonship. Temptation not only proves the weakness of the human frame, but gives us understanding to succor all who are being tempted as we have been. No man or women will ever enter the glory of sonship without temptation, and gladly will he boast that but for the grace of God he would have been overwhelmed by it. Thus, then, in the wisdom of God even the tempter becomes a part of the plan. God has never once told us to love Satan, because he is all that is evil and we are to hate evil. Nevertheless, he who speaks evil of Satan speaks evil of a dignity and does not understand how, in the counsel and wisdom of God, even this stormy wind is fulfilling His word. Psa. 148:8.

Long, long ago, about fifteen hundred years before the story of Bethlehem's manger, the saintly Job had been in long debate with three learned and very intelligent men. Though all their argument was filled with wisdom such as men today never speak, yet it was the wisdom of philosophers rather than the wisdom of God. When at last these men fell silent, the Lord answered Job out of a whirlwind in these words: "Who is this that darkeneth counsel by words without knowledge? Gird up now thy loins like a man; for I will demand of thee, and answer thou Me. Where wast thou when I laid the foundations of the earth? Declare, if thou hast understanding. Who hath laid the measures thereof, if thou knowest? or who hath stretched the line upon it? Whereupon are the foundations thereof fastened? or who laid the cornerstone thereof? When the morning stars sang together and the sons of God shouted for joy?" Job 38:2-7. If you will read on through this passage, you will find there are forty questions asked by the Lord, none of which Job could answer. I may also add that these questions for the most part are still unanswered in our day, baffling scientific minds with the greatness of their mystery.

It would, I think, be almost impossible to read this passage and pass unnoticed these words: "Who laid the cornerstone thereof, when the morning stars sang together and the sons of God shouted for joy." Here in God's goodness is the curtain lifted to give a glimpse into a long past age when in God's counsel all the vast plans of eternity were laid, line upon line, plan upon plan, purpose upon purpose, ascending with unerring accuracy from glory to glory until that marvelous day when all things should be in the image of Him who created them by the word of His power and for His eternal glory. There the course of angelic things were planned, the perfecting of the sons of God, the fall and redemption of man, the preparation of the bride of Christ and the final gathering of all things in heaven and earth into him. Eph. 1:10.
These things are far too wonderful for me, and so wonderful were they then that the morning stars rose and sang a great universal hymn of praise and the sons of God that surrounded His throne shouted and shouted for joy until the very corridors of heaven echoed and re-echoed from universe to universe and from eternity to eternity. It was then that Eden was planned and all the events thereof. There Calvary was ordained, the Lamb of God slain and the blood of atonement shed before the foundation of the ages. There the resurrection was planned, the ascension, the preaching of the Gospel and the gathering of all things in heaven and earth into Christ until that glorious day when sorrow and crying are ended, pain has vanished and tears are wiped away forever, when all that was lost in every fall has been restored and righteousness reigns without alloy forever and ever and ever. Amen!

It was there that you and I were planned. Indeed, we may have been there! The exact day of our entrance into this world was ordained as was also the day of our departure and all the minute details that go to make our sonship complete. Oh, how big God is! Oh, how infinite in understanding! Oh, how perfect in counsel! Oh, how omnipotent in might! I stand all amazed in Thine omniscient counsel and, but for the weeping of this present night, would rise and sing with Thy stars of light and shout with Thine eternal sons! But, though weeping shall endure for a night, with certainty shall Thy joy come in the morning. The passing statements of scripture always surpass the understanding and imagination of man. The morning stars of which Job spoke in Job 38:17 were in truths sons of God. I think our Lord Jesus Christ intended we should have such understanding when He said, "I am the root and offspring of David, the bright and morning star." Rev. 22:16. And to the overcomers of the church of Thyatira He gave the promise of sonship when He said to them, "He that overcometh and keepeth My works unto the end, to him will I give power over the nations; and he shall rule them with a rod of iron; as a vessel of a potter shall they be broken to shivers; even as I received of My Father. And I will give him the morning star. He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches." Rev. 2:26-29. Peter also, giving counsel to guide us to sonship, said, "Whereunto ye do well that ye take heed as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn and the day star arise in your hearts." 2 Pet. 1:19. What a promise of sonship that really is, yet how obscured from the prying eyes of the careless and unbelieving! Even the erring prophet Balaam made this unerring prophecy, "I shall see Him, but not now: I shall behold Him, but not nigh: There shall come a Star out of Jacob, and a Scepter shall rise out of Israel, and shall smite the corners of Moab, and destroy all the children of Sheth." Num. 24:17.

It is not wisdom to be wise above that which is written and it is foolishness for any of us to claim revelation if it is not in accord with the word of God. To speak of things which we do not understand is not profit, but loss, for it will bring us into error; and the very error in which we find ourselves will in turn close the door to truth, for falsehood does not easily vacate its throne nor make an exit from the human heart. Therefore we will leave with God that which we understand not and endeavor to state those things which are plainly evident to all.

Centuries ago the apostle Paul wrote a letter to his friend, Philemon, regarding a slave who had escaped but who, after his conversion through the ministry of Paul, was being returned to his master. Of this slave Paul wrote these significant words: "I beseech thee for my son Onesimus, whom I have begotten in my bonds: Which in times past was to thee unprofitable, but now profitable to thee and to me; whom I have sent again; Thou therefore receive him, that is, mine own bowels ... For perhaps he therefore departed for a season that thou shouldst receive him forever: not now as a servant, but above a servant, a brother beloved, specially to me, but how much more unto thee, both in the flesh and in the Lord." Phil. 10-12, 15-16. This verse in some wonderful way seems to go far beyond the local setting of a slave that departed from his master and returned again as a brother. It speaks of a creation that departed from its creator and became unprofitable, but will be returned at last to Him as a chaste virgin full of all the wisdom, the knowledge, the understanding and the reverence that our long night of separation has brought us. Do not ask me to explain the wisdom and counsel of God in this, for could I explain it I would be as God; but with respect and godly fear we shall believe Him in whom all wisdom dwells embodied.

Between that blessed day when the morning stars sang together and the sons of God shouted for joy and that wonderful day when at last the temple of God is with men, strange events beyond human understanding have taken place. Thrice in the course of the ages there have been falls of almost unbelievable magnitude and separations that none but God can understand. Known unto God are all His ways. All God's works are in wisdom and His ways past finding out. Who has known the mind of the Lord that he should instruct Him? Or who hath been His counselor? Or who hath given to Him and it shall be recompensed unto him again? For from Him everything comes; by Him everything exists; and in Him everything ends. Glory to Him forever. Amen and Amen! Rom. 11:34-36. We need not concern ourselves with the sick theology of a modern harlot church system that forever makes God to be the loser in His own eternal purpose; neither should we consider for a moment the abominable trumpery palmed off by eloquent preachers who, with feigned concern for the welfare of the lost, fill their own coffers with gold and live like kings from the pittances of well-meaning widows. Let us rather concern ourselves with the eternal purpose of God, seeking always to put ourselves at His divine disposal that we might come as quickly as possible into the fullness of that eternal plan.

One of the greatest blessings that can come to mankind will come to you when your eyes are opened to see that God is before all things - God, all wise, all powerful, all enduring; God, who is in all, through all, and over all; God, with whom there is no variableness neither shadow of turning; God, who speaks and it is done, who commands and it comes to pass; God, in whose hand the mightiest nations are but dust in the balance, who makes the wrath of man to praise Him, and whose bitterest enemies do His will, who knows the end of a matter from the beginning because He is both the beginning and the ending of all things. In Him dwelleth all the wisdom of the universe. He hangs the earth on nothing and tells the number of the innumerable stars. Nothing ever gets out of hand with God. Nothing happens in time or in eternity that He did not anticipate and fully know before ever He formed any creature. Well did the apostle say by the mighty anointing of God's Spirit, "Known unto God are all His works from the foundation of the ages." Acts. 15:18.

How different would be the prayer of Christians if they had this blessed knowledge! Then would all their frantic demands be gone and they, like Christ, would breathe from the innermost Spirit, "Thy will be done! Thy will be done!" We do not have record of many prayers that Jesus prayed, but those that are recorded speak forth the assurance of His soul that all things were following the course that had been laid down for Him on that wonderful day when the morning stars sang together and all the sons of God shouted for joy. Even the opening words of the prayer recorded in John 17 are these: "Father, the hour is come." What hour did He mean? He meant that the exact day and hour of His crucifixion had been set ages and dispensations before, and now at last that long awaited hour had come. The hour had been set in the counsel of God when the Lamb was slain before the foundation of the world. Jesus was not crucified before the world began, but the immutable purpose and plan of God willed that on such and such a day at such and such an hour God's only begotten Son should be slain and His blood shed for sin and all uncleanness. It was then that God decreed that without the shedding of blood there should be no remission of sins. The blood of Jesus Christ was not ordinary blood, but better blood than that of Abel. It was not corruptible blood, but incorruptible blood as fresh and pure today for the life of all the world as the day it was shed on Calvary. That blood was not available for earthly things only, but heavenly things as well. The apostle long ago declared, "Almost all things are by the law purged with blood, and without the shedding of blood is no remission. It was therefore necessary that the patterns of things in the heavens should be purged by these; but the heavenly things themselves with better sacrifices than these." Heb. 9:23.

See again the eternal assurance that filled the heart of Jesus when He said, "I have glorified Thee on the earth; I have finished the work which Thou gavest Me to do." John 17:4. And again, "For I have given unto them the words which Thou gavest Me; and they have received them and have known surely that I came from Thee, and they have believed that Thou didst sent Me." Verse 8.

There is nothing that will give you greater confidence in God than the definite assurance that God is on the throne, that all things are working according to His counsel and are carried out by His might. Known unto God are all His works from the beginning of the world. Acts 15:18. Neither the wrath of man nor any wisdom of Satan can change one jot or tittle of anything God has ordained. He has His plan for the heathen, for the true church, for the harlot church, for Israel and for the Jew. He has His purpose for those who sit in darkness and the shadow of death and for those who have never heard that God had a Son. He has His plan for the rich and the poor, the naked and the clothed, for slaves and free men; and, when at last we see it as He planned it and have learned experimentally that our light afflictions which were but for a moment have, indeed, worked for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory, we will shout with joy with all the ransomed sons of God, even as John the apostle in the Revelation beheld when he wrote, "And every creature which is in heaven, and on the earth, and under the earth, and such as are in the sea, and all that are in them heard I saying, Blessing, and honor, and glory, and power be unto Him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb forever and ever." Rev. 5:14.

It was certainly in such knowledge and eternal assurance that Jesus faced the bitterness of the cross with all its blood and sweat, its agony and separation, but, because He knew the result was certain, for the joy that was set before Him He endured the cross, despised the shame and is even now seated at the right hand of the Majesty on high. God's people have the wrong idea of the joy of the Lord. They look upon joy as some sort of bubbling effervescence that comes from feeling good all over. This may be the joy of the world, but it is not the joy of the Lord. The joy of the Lord comes from the enlightening of the soul in the knowledge of the eternal plan. The joy of the Lord endures forever. It is never affected by trial and tribulation because it sees hope in the end. It knows that after the pain of travail a son will be born and that he that goeth forth and weepeth, bearing precious seed, shall doubtless come again with rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him.

If we realize the truth of this text, "Known unto God are all His works from the beginning of the world," it will give us a confident assurance such as nothing else can. Nothing ever comes upon the plans of God unawares and, in my opinion, it is blasphemous to suppose they do. For centuries learned men have looked upon the events of the garden of Eden as something that came upon God unexpectedly. They willingly admit that God is all-wise, but somehow beyond understanding Satan slipped in unawares and spoiled His whole lovely plan so that even God was hard put to it to find a way out. In the light of what God is, nothing can be so nonsensical nor could anything create greater distrust in Him than a thought like this. The fall of man and the separation of male from female was part of a purpose that was to bring forth a creation that would know both good and evil that the universe might be purged from sin unto endless ages.

The fact that you are a Christian today is not a matter of chance nor of your being wiser than any other man, nor more tender-hearted nor more susceptible to the truth. It does not even depend on whether your parents were good or bad. It all rests on this one thing - that God, before the ages were formed, chose you to a certain place in Himself. Thus did Paul teach the Ephesians when he said, "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ, according as He hath chosen us in Him before the foundation of the world, that we should be holy and without blame before Him in love." Eph. 1:3-4.

It should be a very humbling experience, but a very confirming assurance, just to know that on that blessed day when the morning stars sang together and the sons of God shouted for joy you were chosen to be among the first fruits unto Him. It is no grace or goodness on your part or mine, but it is the plan of God that unerringly guides the course of all things and all people. Peter also took up the knowledgeable refrain when he said, "For ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people; that ye should show forth the praises of Him who hath called you out of darkness into His marvelous light." 1 Pet. 2:9. And the Lord Jesus Christ also said to His disciples, "Ye have not chosen Me, but I have chosen you, and ordained you, that ye should go and bring forth fruit." John 15:16. There was great understanding in the saying of Jesus, "I speak not of you all; I know whom I have chosen." John 13:18. This choice was not made casually on the spot. It was a choice made before there was a man on the earth or ever an age was formed.

Men were chosen not only to noble purposes, but to ignoble also. In a great house there are vessels not only of gold and silver, but of wood and earth, some to honor and some to dishonor. Judas Iscariot did not just happen along among the disciples. His treachery was known and ordained from the beginning and foretold by the prophets long before his birth. Cf. Zech. 11:12-13 with Matt. 27:10. He was a necessary part of God's plan, however ignoble his purpose may have been. The whole story of the crucifixion of Christ as it concerned both Jews and Gentiles was arranged before the ages began so that nothing was missing when the great offering of Christ for the world was to be accomplished. See how carefully God ordained this purpose and how well it was understood by the apostles of the Lord when they said, "The kings of the earth stood up, and the rulers were gathered together against the Lord, and against His Christ. For of a truth against Thy holy child Jesus, whom Thou hast anointed, both Herod and Pontius Pilate, with the Gentiles, and the people of Israel, were gathered for to do whatsoever Thy hand and Thy counsel determined before to be done." Acts. 4:26-28. Rest assured, then, that the Almighty God worketh all things after the counsel of His own will.
The Lord has said, "Whom He did foreknow, He also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of His Son." Rom. 8:29. Jesus Christ is the brightness of God's glory and the express image of His person (Heb. 1:3), and it is by union with Him that we come into the likeness of God. As the side of Adam was opened that the woman might be taken from him, so the side of Jesus Christ was opened that we might be grafted in, thus to become bone of His bone, flesh of His flesh, spirit of His Spirit, mind of His mind and wisdom of His wisdom. Both the sons of God and the bride of Christ are to be endowed with all the attributes of Himself that we may be the likeness, the brightness of His glory and the express image of His person. Thus the saying is fulfilled, "And the glory which Thou gavest Me I have given them; that they may be one, even as We are one: I in them, and Thou in Me, that they may be made perfect in one." John 17:22-23. Even now today the Spirit of truth is in the world speaking to the faithful and longing heart saying, "Because I live, ye shall live also. At that day ye shall know that I am in My Father, and ye in Me, and I in you." John 14:19-20. Thus the light that shined out of darkness has now shined into our hearts, flooding them with eternal light, illuminating men with the knowledge of God as it shines from the face of Christ. Cf 2 Cor. 4:6.

"It makes me sigh, indeed, this yearning to be under cover of my heavenly habitation since I am sure that once so covered I shall not be naked in the hour of death. I do sigh within this tent of mine with heavy anxiety, not that I want to be stripped, no, but to be under cover of the other, to have my mortal element absorbed by life. I am prepared for this change by God who has given me the Spirit as its pledge and installment." 2 Cor. 5:1-6. (Moffatt).

Long ago Moses, the servant of the Lord, was called of God to go up to the top of Mt. Sinai. The mountain burned with the fire of God. There was blackness and darkness and tempest, the sound of trumpets and the voice of words, and so terrible was the sight that Moses said, "I do exceedingly fear and quake." Heb. 12:21. There in the mountain of God's presence he remained for forty days, and when at last he descended, his face so shone with the glory of God that he hung a veil over his face that Israel should not behold the glory. Now Paul, in writing of this wonderful thing, makes plain the fact that the veil was not hung over the face of Moses with the purpose of hiding the glory, but rather that the children of Israel might not see that the glory was fading away. No man ever likes to feel that the glory of God is fading, decreasing, and becoming less in his life as the time passes. Thus it was because of this decreasing glory that Moses hung the veil over his countenance that the fact of the fading glory should be hidden from them. 2 Cor. 3:12-13. Goodspeed translates this passage thus: "So, since I have such hope, I speak with great frankness, not like Moses who used to wear a veil over his face to keep the Israelites from gazing at the fading of the splendor from it." It was natural that the glory given under the law should fail and fade away, for the law is death to unspiritual men. But now that Christ has died and has risen again and has sent forth the Holy Spirit into our hearts and the very law of God has become part of us, being written not on stones but in our hearts even as it is in God's heart, becoming our very nature even as it is the nature and essence of God Himself, therefore the veil is removed from our faces, for the glory is not fading but increasing as we behold, not cold tables of stone, but the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ. Therefore Paul wrote, "But we all, with open face, (unveiled face), beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord." 2 Cor. 3:18.

Over and over again in these writings we have tried to make all men see that it is in union with Jesus Christ that all our hope is embodied. Our hope of sonship is in union with Him. Our hope of glory is in Him. Our washing, our salvation, our sanctification, our sonship and every detail of our eternal redemption depends upon our personal relationship with Him. Beholding His face we are changed into His image and transformed into His likeness, even by the Spirit of the Lord. It is in communion with Him that His mind becomes our mind, His thoughts our thoughts and His ways our ways. In union with Him Christ becomes all and in all. He is the way, the truth, the light, the life, the resurrection, the ascension and the glory. All who rise with Him sit with Him in heavenly realms far above principality and power and might and dominion and every name that is named.

When will Christians stop this wickedness of making heroes of men, following this man and that man, this woman and that woman? God's people have become idol worshippers and followers of men whose breath is in their nostrils, who lead men as sheep and perish, leaving them to look for some other to lead them. Have we not heard the words of Christ, "He that followeth Me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life?" Change and decay is everywhere about us. Men come and men go, but Christ abides forever. He that puts his faith in man will certainly decay and perish with man, but he that beholds the face of Jesus Christ will be changed into that same image from one glory to another.

The first statement ever made concerning man is this: "Let Us make man in Our image, after Our likeness." Gen. 1:26. This is the first purpose of God for man, and this first purpose is in preparation for the second purpose. "Let Us give him dominion."

Everything from the beginning of the world to the end is working together for good to bring man into the very image and likeness of God, and it shall come to pass as God has ordained: As we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly. As the first man (Adam) is of the earthy, the second man (Christ) is the Lord from heaven... And as we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly. 1 Cor. 15:47,49. It is impossible for flesh and blood to inherit the kingdom of God and impossible for corruption to inherit incorruption, therefore God is preparing us now for a marvelous change, a transfiguration, and He who has wrought us for this selfsame thing is God, who has given us the Spirit as a guarantee. Cf. 2 Cor. 5:5.

For this reason a mystery of God is about to unfold, and the power of the resurrection, even the power that raised up Jesus from the dead, will be manifest that which is corruptible may be transformed into incorruption and that which is mortal may put on immortality. "Behold, I show you a mystery; we shall not all sleep (die), but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump: for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed. For this corruptible must put on incorruption and this mortal must put on immortality." 1 Cor. 15:51-52.

The time of the fulfilling of this great mystery is the time when the seventh angel sounds his trumpet, the mystery of God is finished and the kingdoms of this world become the kingdoms of our Lord and of His Christ. John saw a mighty angel stand upon the sea and the earth who lifted up his hand to heaven and swore by Him that liveth forever and ever that time should be no longer. But in the days of the voice of the seventh angel, when he shall begin to sound, the mystery of God shall be finished. Rev. 10:5-7. "And the seventh angel sounded and there were great voices in heaven, saying, The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and of His Christ; and He shall reign forever and ever." Rev. 11:15. The sounding of the seventh trumpet by the seventh angel is the last trump of which Paul spoke. 1 Cor. 15:51-52. In it the great mystery of God is finished.

Corruption puts on incorruption and mortality puts on immortality and the kingdoms of this world become the kingdoms of our Lord and of His Christ. He that is preparing us for this great change is God, who has given us the Spirit as a guarantee. Wherefore comfort one another with these words, for the time is near at hand.

CHAPTER THREE
THAT I MAY KNOW HIM

From the days of our infancy we have been children of tradition. Ideas, beliefs and teachings have always been handed down from generation to generation. Our culture, our codes and our beliefs, as our language, are handed down from family to family for many generations without any noticeable change. This can be a very good thing in the natural realm, but it can also lead to centuries of stagnation and even opposition to progress. There are places even in the spiritual realm where tradition can be a good thing, but sooner or later we will be brought face to face with the indisputable fact that Almighty God is not one who can be held within the narrow confines of human tradition nor can His eternal and ever expanding purpose be held in captivity by the ball and chain of human ways of looking at things.

The man or woman who believes that God is static, set, immovable, retired, without ambition and having no further purpose to attain has altogether the wrong idea of God. Everything that God is and does in all His universe shows that His purposes are progressive and expanding. God’s purposes expand as the days of His weeks. He has one week in which every day is twenty-four hours long. He has another week in which every day is one year long. This grows into another week in which every day is seven years long. This grows into another week in which every day is one thousand years long. This in turn grows into another week in which every day is seven thousand years long, and there is reason to believe that this vast week grows into another week in which every day is forty-nine thousand years long. You may not understand this by casually reading about it, but it is so, and a little study of the scripture reveals in part the truth contained in the inspired words of Peter, "A day is with the Lord as a thousand years, and a thousand years as a day." 2 Pet. 3:8. We often hear of nations who undertake five year plans or seven year plans to further their prosperity. No doubt it is a good idea, but God first originated the thought of conducting all His work on a seven-day plan, each day of which may be twenty-four hours long or seven thousand years long as He in wisdom deems necessary to fulfill His eternal purpose.

I once listened to an astronomer lecture on the magnitude of the heavens. In the course of his address he spoke with great conviction of the expanding universe, but after using the word 'expanding', he paused and said. "The word 'expanding' would be more appropriate, for many stars of the heavens are traveling away from the earth and out into space at the rate of fifty thousand miles per second." Since all these things are so and since even the heaven of heavens cannot contain God, who is the author of all these things, how dare puny man with his frail, worm-like, fallen mind try to incarcerate the Almighty within the paper walls of his human traditions? "When I consider Thy heavens, the work of Thy finger, the moon and the stars which Thou hast ordained, what is man that Thou art mindful of him, and the son of man that Thou visitest him? For Thou hast made him (man) a little lower than the angels and hast crowned him with glory and honor and madest him to have dominion over the works of Thy hands. Thou hast put all things under his feet... O, Lord, our Lord, how elegant is Thy name in all the earth." Psa. 8:3-9.

I have no hesitation in saying that the moment men come to know God they immediately become nonconformists. They see God far greater than the tradition of their fathers, greater than the law of Moses, even as he which buildeth the house is greater and more honorable than the house. Christ is greater than the gospel we know, greater than the kingdom we teach. His power is beyond omnipotence. His wisdom is beyond omniscience, His faithfulness beyond immutability. His loving kindness and tender mercies reach unto all generations and His grace beyond the length, the depth, the breadth or height of all understanding but His own.

There was a man two thousand years ago called Saul from the city of Tarsus. He was as steeped in the time-honored customs of the fathers and elders of Israel as it was possible for a man to be. He was as bound by the blinding traditions of an Israel that had crucified the Lord as millions today are bound by the doctrines and traditions of a backslidden, apostate Babylonish system that has the audacity to masquerade as the church of Jesus Christ without spot or wrinkle. Listen to this Saul as he boasts of his glorious past: "If any other man thinketh that he hath whereof he might trust in the flesh, / more: circumcised the eighth day, of the stock of Israel, of the tribe of Benjamin, an Hebrew of the Hebrews; as touching the law, a Pharisee; concerning zeal, persecuting the church', touching the righteousness which is in the law, blameless." Phil. 3:4-6. To a Jew who revealed in his past and in his strict adherence to the doctrine handed down from the days of Moses all this must have seemed very commendable. But, when he saw the whole thing in the blazing-light of God's revelation of Jesus Christ, he saw all the things of which he boasted as nothing but common dung. He was ready to load it all on the garbage wagon and cart it off to the nuisance ground as a thing that hindered rather than helped his progress. "What things were gain to me," he said, "those I counted loss for Christ; Yea, doubtless, and I count all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord; for whom I have suffered the loss of all things, and do count them but dung that I may win Christ, and be found in Him, not having mine own righteousness which is of the law, but that which is through the faith of Christ, the righteousness which is of God by faith; that I may know Him..." Phil 3:7-10.

"That I may know Him!" That is where the difference comes in. Knowing Christ makes the difference between Saul and Paul though they were the same man. Saul is tied to doctrines, traditions, priests, people and things, but Paul is swept by the knowledge of the revelation of Jesus Christ into the infinity of an infinite God. He who formerly adored Jews and hated Gentiles was swept into a realm where neither Jew nor Gentile exists, but all are one in Christ. He who slavishly adhered to a written law was transported into the very being of the lawgiver Himself. Oh, the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and the knowledge of God! How unsearchable are His judgments and His ways past finding out! For who hath known the mind of the Lord, or who hath been His counselor? Or who hath first given to Him and it shall be recompensed unto Him again? For from Him

How then would it ever be possible for a man who has thus been swept away on the fathomless ocean of divine revelation to ever again be content to puddle about in the muddy waters of Jewish tradition? Neither now is it possible for those who are walking in the brightening light of the Sun of Righteousness to conform to the rotting creeds of a church system that walks in the flickering light of the candle of modern tradition.

Paul was forever reminding us that the gulf that lay between the tradition of the elders and the revelation of the Son of God was as fathomless as God Himself. He likens the first to dung and speaks of the other thus: "I knew a man in Christ above fourteen years ago, (whether in the body or out of the body, I cannot tell; God knoweth;) such an one caught up to the third heaven. And I knew such a man (whether in the body or out of the body I cannot tell; God knoweth;) how that he was caught up into paradise, and heard unspeakable words, which it is not lawful for a man to utter. Of such an one will I glory; yet of my self I will not glory, but in mine infirmities." 2 Cor. 12:2-5. That is what he wrote to the church at Corinth, and to the Galatians he wrote, "Ye have heard of my conversation in time past in the Jews' religion, how that beyond measure I persecuted the church of God and wasted it: And profited in the Jews' religion above many my equals in mine own nation, being more exceedingly zealous of the traditions of my fathers, but when it pleased God, who separated me from my mother's womb and called me by His grace, to reveal his Son in me... immediately I conferred not with flesh and blood. Neither went I up to Jerusalem to them which were apostles before me, but I went into Arabia and returned again to Damascus." Gal. 1:13-17.

Whenever a man begins to seek to know Christ, he will find to his amazement that he is coming into variance with the age-old traditions of the church, which, though held high in honor by the multitude, are serving only one purpose, and that is to make the truth of God of no effect. Such a seeker will soon find that he will be at variance with his best friends, for they will regard him as a peculiar person who holds as precious truth many things which they call error. Paul once said, "This I confess, that after the manner which they call heresy so worship I the God of my fathers." Acts 24:14. If you continue to seek to know Him, you will find yourself becoming ostracized and not wanted. You may even be dishonorably dismissed, as I myself have been, but this should neither defer nor hinder your search, for it would seem to me to be impossible that one who has heard the unspeakable words of the third heaven should have anything in common with the kind of men who waste their time in tradition, always trying to patch up the riven veil of the temple.

HIS WAYS

There is a verse of scripture in Psa. 105:7 that reads thus: "He made known His ways unto Moses, His acts unto the children of Israel." This verse of scripture clearly shows the vast difference between men who know God and men who only know about God. There were countless thousands of people in the days of Jesus Christ who saw the acts of God as Jesus went about preaching the kingdom and healing all manner of sickness and disease, raising the dead, casting out demons, even restoring the maimed, giving them new limbs again. There was no question too hard for Him to answer, no miracle that He could not perform. Even death itself had no power over Him, for no one could take His life from Him, but He laid it down Himself. Such were the mighty acts of God, which were by no means done in a corner, but openly for multitudes to behold. Yet for all their marveling at His mighty acts, they still did not know Him. The majority of them, though doubtless convinced that He was the Son of God, still knew Him not. I could be wrong, but it seems clear that at the time of Jesus' death the fingers of one hand could number all the people who really knew Him. They knew His mighty acts, but they understood none of His ways. They did not understand anything about His death. Did Peter not say, "This shall not be unto Thee!" To which Jesus replied, "Get thee behind Me, Satan, thou savorest not the things that be of God." Matt. 16:23. Did they understand the rising from the dead (Mk. 9:10) or any other of the real purposes for which He came?

As it was with the multitudes of Jesus' day, so also it was with the children of Israel in the days of Moses. They had all seen the mighty acts of God in the land of Egypt and at the Red Sea. They had seen His miracles in the desert. They drank of the water that gushed in a torrent from the smitten rock, and they ate the heavenly manna full forty years. No feeble person walked among their tribes. Their garments waxed not old upon their bodies. Their eyes beheld the pillar of fire every night and the cloud of God's presence shaded their camp every passing day. They saw Mt. Sinai in billows of smoke from God's presence and they feared exceedingly with much trembling as His voice then shook the earth. See Ex. 19. If God ever made His mighty acts known to any people, He certainly made them known to those wilderness wanderers, yet for all this they knew none of His ways, but grumbled and fretted and rebelled until they were overthrown in the wilderness. And Moses, recounting their experiences before them, made this almost incredible statement. "Ye have seen all that the Lord did before your eyes in the land of Egypt unto Pharaoh, and unto all his servants, and unto all his land; the great temptations which thine eyes have seen, the signs and those great miracles: Yet the Lord hath not given you an heart to perceive, and eyes to see and ears to hear unto this day." Deut. 29:2-4.

But with Moses it was all different. God made known His ways unto Moses. He knew the Lord face to face. He spoke to Him face to face. He knew the inner workings of the great plan of God. He understood what was in the mind of the Lord when He called this rebellious people. He knew what the glorious end of it all would be. He prophesied of the coming of the Messiah in these words: "A Prophet shall the Lord your God raise up unto you of your brethren like unto me. Him shall ye hear." Deut. 18:15. He knew God and he knew God's ways. He did not marvel at God's acts nor did he seek them, for he knew God face to face.

So also it is in our day. Multitudes of men and women have seen the acts of God. Millions have been eyewitnesses of a healing, a miracle or a baptism of the Spirit, and in their zeal to behold these acts of God they willingly run from meeting to meeting, from coast to coast and often from country to country. The moment they hear of a miracle worker here or there, they are ready to run, hoping fervently that they will be able to feast their inquisitive eyes on some mighty act of God. Though they have been deceived times without number by some self-styled modern Moses whose wonders are all in his handbills, still they run again and again like inquisitive little boys to a fire or an accident. But for all their running and hearing and seeing they still do not know God. To be sure many can recount with indisputable proof instances of the acts of the Lord, still for all this they do not know God's ways. It is an indisputable fact that scarcely one Christian in a thousand has ever seriously considered what God's eternal purposes might be. The vast majority of Christians are surprised beyond measure when one ventures to tell them that God had a purpose before the world began, that he is now fulfilling it with infinite care, and that all things, including man's fall, are part of the eternal plan.

Do men come to know God by listening to the endless preaching of sermons from week to week? Can a man ever come to know God by this means? I declare he cannot. He may learn something about the acts of God. He may learn man's tradition about God or he may imbibe man's ideas about the doctrines of God, but he never comes to know God in this fashion. Those who know God must be with Him, not with the multitude, but alone. It is not enough to receive the initial filling of His Spirit, but all who would walk with Him must walk with Him into the wilderness of life to willingly suffer the temptation of the devil. They must walk with Him in fasting - not only from food, but from all other things that strengthen and build up the natural man at the expense of the Christ within. They must not only stand with Him in the glory of the transfiguration, but endure the desolating agonies of Gethsemane. They must willingly follow Him to the cross, yea, willingly bear it through all their earthly life that they might say with Paul, "I am crucified with Christ. Nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me." Did not Jesus say to the rich young ruler, "Come, take up thy cross and follow Me?" It is the cross of Christ that separates men from this present evil world with all its human lusts. It is here that we not only turn our backs on this present evil age, but die to it, and in dying we discover that all who have thus died in Him are unconscious to this present evil world and totally unaffected by it. They are not, however, unconscious to the spiritual world, for, having followed Christ in death, they have become part of His resurrection. They have discovered that all who partake of His resurrection have been awakened to a new world, even the world and realm of God. They are not raised, as was Lazarus, to the natural realm, but raised as was Jesus to a spiritual life.

During the centuries there has been much teaching emanating from the carnal mind. Everywhere today the theory is propounded that God wants His people to have the best of everything in this life. The truth is that those who seek after the best of everything in this passing world find, when it is too late, that their souls are poverty-stricken, their spirits devoid of God's grace, and their minds separated from true wisdom and spiritual understanding. While they feast on the things of this earthly realm, they have become spots in the feast of charity (love), "feeding themselves without fear. Clouds they are without water, carried about of winds
These teachings have caused the people of God to commit the three great sins mentioned by the apostle Jude - the way of Cain, the error of Balaam, and the gainsaying of Core. Jude 11. The way of Cain is envy and hatred against those whom God has accepted. The error of Balaam is the willingness to use the gifts of God for profit and earthly gain, a sin that is rampant in the professing church, glaring and blatant in almost every religious broadcast. The gainsaying of Core is rebellion and resistance against the authority of God and those whom He has set. See Num. 16.

We are well past the time when all God's people should take leave of the confusion and trickery of modern religion. It is time to take your Bible and separate yourself from people, from sects and from the opinions of men. It is time to find some convenient Jerusalem - your back bedroom, your attic, or a quiet mountain stream where you can seek God in fasting and prayer that you might hear His voice, know His will and receive of His understanding. Do not go before God seeking power. He knows how much power you need. Do not go before him seeking gifts of healing and working of miracles. God knows whether or not He wants a miracle worker. Do not seek to be a mighty man of God before the people. Seek to be acceptable before God, one who knows His voice, knows His will, loves His command and follows implicitly the gentlest movings of His Spirit.

While we seek to know God, we must always remember that God knows us. He does not depend upon what we say or testify. He did not depend on Peter's determined declaration of undying fidelity. He knew Peter would deny Him. He knew Peter much better than Peter knew himself. He knows well those in whom He can put His trust. He once said of Abraham, "For I know Him, that he will command his children and his household after him, and they shall keep the way of the Lord to do justice and judgment; that the Lord may bring upon Abraham that which He hath spoken of him." Gen. 18:19. God knew His people Israel and said of them just before they entered the land of Canaan, "For I know their imaginations which they go about, even now, before I have brought them into the land which I sware." Deut. 31:21. Never deceive yourself by believing that God accepts every word that you speak by way of consecration, for He will try you and weigh you and apply the torture test of temptation and disappointment until He knows that your profession is real, that there is no wedge of silver or Babylonish garment hidden in the tent of your heart.

MY SHEEP KNOW MY VOICE

No man can come to know the voice of Christ by listening to sermons. Though you listen to them twice every day for the remainder of your life, you may still be a complete stranger to the sound of His voice. Though Samuel had been brought up in the temple of the Lord from infancy, he knew not the voice of the Lord. He was unable to discern between the voice of the Lord and the voice of Eli. But when he listened to the voice of God, the message he heard made him afraid, for it was spoken against Eli, his teacher. 1 Sam. 3:11-21. All too often sermons are only sermons. Have we never realized that for every one sermon that is spoken from the very heart of God there are perhaps a thousand others that are contrived or rehashed by the aid of Homiletics? Texts of scripture are often used as a sort of springboard from which the preacher launches his personal notions or dives into a pool to emerge breathless at the conclusion of his address. You cannot come to know the voice of the Lord after this fashion.

Jesus said, "My sheep know My voice, and they follow Me; and a stranger will they not follow, for they know not the voice of strangers." If we but meditate on these words, what conviction they bring to our hearts, for we are living in an hour when God's people seem to know the voice of every stranger and follow them, but the voice of Christ they do not know. The Lord has not called me to rail against people, nor has He sent me to slay the prophets of Baal, but I must say that any man or woman who can absorb the trash that is presented in many pulpits and on the airwaves in the name of the Gospel, never recognizing that it is the voice of strangers, surely has never heard the voice of Christ. Every grasping, grabbing scheme, every shifting, deceiving device is presented to wheedle the unwilling dollars from the purses of the people. The presentation of each grandiose scheme for reaching the heathen ends with an appeal for money. Pretentious prayers for the sick usually conclude with a touching appeal to the sick to write immediately to tell of the miracle God has wrought.
"because we need your letters. They are the life-line of our ministry." Even the frequent offer of a free book is a wily device to secure another name to whom self-addressed pledge envelopes can be sent. I do not hesitate to say that this is not the voice of Christ, but the voice of big business. Well did Paul the apostle write, "That ye be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about by every wind of doctrine by the sleight of men, (the Greek word kubeia translated 'sleight' means as in playing dice or cheating), and cunning craftiness whereby they lie in wait to deceive; but speaking the truth in love, may grow up into Him in all things, which is the head, even Christ." Eph. 4:14. Why do people not wake up and see that this playing dice with the gospel is the work and voice of strangers! It is a misrepresentation of the true facts. If God's people would take even a moment to compare this modern racket with the beautiful methods of Jesus, they would soon realize that they are not listening to His voice, but the voice of men who are strangers to His ways.

YE SHALL KNOW THE TRUTH. John 8:32

Truth is fidelity, sincerity, and punctuality in keeping promises. When truth is used with reference to God, to these are added mercy and kindness. For millennia of time men have diligently sought for truth. They have burned the candle low as they have searched through the night, spending both youth and old age in their search for truth, and, when at last through elaborate calculations they arrive at their conclusions, they do so only to find in later years that some new discovery has upset their theories and sent them puzzling and searching again. Twenty-five centuries ago Socrates sagely remarked, "One plus one makes two, but I have never been able to decide whether it is the one that was added that makes two, or the one to which one was added." Thus man goes forever on seeking truth and is never quite able to find it.

Twenty centuries ago two men talked together in Pilate's judgment hall. Pilate was the judge and Jesus, the Son of God, was the accused. "Art Thou a king then?" Pilate asked. To this Jesus replied, "Thou sayest that I am a king. To this end was I born and for this cause came I into the world, that I should bear witness to the truth; every one that is of the truth heareth My voice." Then without waiting for a reply he went out. John 18:37-38. But had he waited for Jesus to answer, what do you think the answer would have been? Would He not have given the same answer to Pilate that He gave to Thomas? "I am the truth." If Pilate had found Jesus, his search for truth would have been ended, for He is truth. He does not merely preach truth and speak truth. He is truth. "Ye shall know the truth and the truth shall set you free." I have heard men speak of the liberating effects of truth, and all they said was perfectly right, but you will leave all your listeners hanging in mid-air unless you are able to point them to Jesus Christ, who is truth incarnate. Truth is not a thing. Truth is a person, and that person is Jesus Christ, the first begotten of the Father.

What a battleground the world has been as zealous men in search of truth and in defense of what they believed to be truth have flung into the raging war all the armaments that human wisdom could devise! What wars have been waged over doctrines and creeds, what battles over baptisms and sacraments as men of varied faiths have thumped the Bible in defense of their petty conclusions until Christ, who is the very Spirit of truth, has vanished from their carnal presence and hate and animosity flourish where Christ should have reigned supreme.

There was a time when I thought it was my sacred duty to be able to answer every question that was asked me. It seemed to be right to know where one stood on all the endless doctrines that have arisen. It seemed to be necessary to be ready to do battle immediately to defend one's ground on any issue. Well, all that has changed now, for I have found that truth is not a creed, not a doctrine, not a belief nor a faith. Truth is Jesus Christ and Jesus Christ is truth. He does not need that I should draw my sword as did Peter in His defense. Better far for me to attempt to defend a lion. Truth needs no defense. It is the greatest force in the universe. It opens the prisons and sets the captives free. It restores the sick to health and makes all the blind to see. It defeats the fraudulent claims of enemies. It fills the whole earth with righteousness, and it will abide when worlds are burned away. To know Him is to know truth and to know truth is to be set free.

Our Lord told His disciples long ago that truth would come from heaven to dwell in their hearts. They were not to learn it from a book nor from the lips of men, but truth would come from heaven in the form of the Holy Spirit of God and he would dwell in them and they would know the truth thereby. "I will pray the Father," He said, "and He shall give you another Comforter, that He may abide with you forever; even the Spirit of truth; whom the world cannot receive, because it seeth Him not, neither knoweth Him: but ye know Him, for He dwelleth with you and shall be in you... at that day ye shall know that I am in My Father, and ye in Me and I in you" John 14:16,17,20.

Oh, if men would halt their vain debating that can only produce malice and envy, and, instead, come to know Him who is the very Spirit of truth that He might dwell in their hearts by faith, for then would even the unbelieving see the light of truth and believe on Him who alone sets men free. He that is born of God cannot commit sin, for His seed (Christ) remaineth in him, and he cannot sin because he is born of God. Since God cannot sin, should it be thought a thing impossible that he who is born of God should also be totally free from sin? For if God, who cannot sin nor be tempted with sin, dwells within a man, how then could that man sin? It is wrong to argue that a believer who sins is born of God, for that which is born of God cannot sin. 1 John 3:9.

The same applies to truth, for he who has the Spirit of truth abiding in his life can neither be a liar nor believe a lie. As deep answers to deep, so he who is of the truth will respond to truth when he hears it and will be readily repulsed by the spirit of error. Error clothes itself in attractive garments. It often appears inviting, acceptable and to be desired, but there is always something about its spirit that is off key and to which the deep chords of Christ within refuse to respond. When anyone feels this way, he should never try to persuade himself to accept either what is taught or the person who taught it, for it is certain to be wrong. Truth, though not understood, will ring true, but error, though understood, will pall the spirit. You shall know the truth and the truth shall set you free.

My heart goes out in prayer that the God of all wisdom and understanding will open the hearts of all who read these things so that they may see that none can ever know God or understand His ways until God comes to him personally to uncover the truth by a revelation to his heart. Even those who, as Moses, have met God face to face possess no ability to describe His glory so that others might see and be transformed, God must reveal Himself in revelation to each individual heart or all will fail to comprehend His truth or understand His ways. Though Peter, James, and John should stand before me patiently explaining the effulgent wonders of the Mount of Transfiguration, their words would be wasted, for I can never hope to know the transforming power of that holy experience until I myself have stood where they stood to behold His glory, seeing and hearing those wonders that charmed and transformed their beings. It was for this very reason that Jesus charged them saying, "See thou tell the vision to no man until the Son of man be risen from the dead." Neither you nor I, my brethren, are in a position to waste even five minutes of our time in criticism or condemnation of anyone, for we all are devoid of truth and stripped to nakedness of understanding. It is time to confess our sins in sackcloth and ashes. It is time to rend our hearts and not our garments. It is time to repent of our waywardness and our hard speeches and confess that we know nothing yet as we ought to know.

TRUTH AND REVELATION

There is something about truth and revelation that no one ever really knows until it becomes a personal experience. While this is especially true in the spiritual realm, it is also true in the natural realm. The only persons on earth who really understand our sorrow are the persons who have traveled the same valley of despair. Only those who have been bereaved know what bereavement really is. They alone can shed the sympathizing tear, for they alone truly understand. Others may kindly and with feeling offer their condolence, but they can do little more than that, for they have not experienced the pain and loneliness of our loss. The reason our blessed Lord is touched with the feeling of our infirmities (Heb. 4:15) is that He knoweth our frame.

He remembereth that we are dust. He Himself was a "man of sorrows and acquainted with grief." He knew what it was to be despised, afflicted, and rejected of men. He knows what it is to be misunderstood, to be dragged from prison and judgment with no man to declare His generation. He knows what it is to be tempted in all points as we are tempted, and, though He knew not sin and no guile was found in Him, yet the sympathizing tears flow from His eyes as He extends His nail-pierced hand to lift us from the shades of our gloomy night to the ineffable light of the plane on which He dwells.

How are we to explain the blessedness of justification to those who have never experienced its joy or the peace that comes to the heart with the knowledge of sins forgiven? For many years I heard the story of men who were saved. They told of the wonderful goodness of that experience in God. They spoke of burdens that rolled away at Calvary, of blood that made sinners whiter than snow, of peace that flowed like a river, and of lives that were transformed by grace divine. It all sounded very wonderful, indeed, but one day of experience in that blessed realm taught me more than all my teachers through many a bygone year. I also learned of many things which none had ventured to tell me. I learned that there was far more to being a Christian than reclining on flowery beds of ease while waiting to be transported to the skies. I learned by experience that there were heartaches and crosses, narrow roads and slippery paths. Robbers and traitors lay in wait by my pathway and temptation sought to destroy my soul.

I asked for life and this is what He gave me.
My lot is hard; my tears flow like the rain.
I asked for hours gay with sunshine spattered,
But, lo, my waking hours are filled with pain.

How could I know that crushing brings forth fragrance
Like perfume from some crushed and bleeding rose,
That in the process of my better making
God used the methods He approved and chose?

It is a shocking revelation to find that after lifetimes of instruction in doctrines men still do not know the Lord. Men may learn the theories of justification replete with scriptures and theological argument, but they never know justification until it becomes an experience within them. The various theories of water baptism have been propounded for centuries, but perhaps there is still no man on earth who has experienced the transformation that will come to those who are truly baptized into His death and resurrection. We have been content with forms and ceremonies, but devoid of experience. Mary and Martha knew there would be a resurrection in some far off day, but they did not know that the resurrection was the Christ who stood by their side longing to dispel their darkness and open their understanding that He might become both resurrection and life to the living as well as the dead. "I am the resurrection and the life," He said. "Whosoever believeth in Me, though he were dead, yet shall he live, and whosoever liveth and believeth in Me shall never die. Believest thou this?" Yet they wept on, for the light of revelation had not penetrated their sorrowing minds. Jesus wept with them, not from a sense of despair, but because of the blindness of the natural mind. The natural mind understands not the things of the Spirit of God. It never, never can know them, for they are spiritually discerned. God must reach beyond the shadows of the natural mind, causing the light of His glorious revelation to flood upon our slumbering spirits before we can understand or know Him as He is.

To some people the voice of the Virgin Mary was the voice of a fornicator, an unholy young maid who had sinned during her betrothal, but when the voice of Mary sounded in the ears of Elizabeth, the babe leaped in her womb for joy. Thus the Spirit of God reveals the truth to the spirit of man, for, "when He the Spirit of truth has come, He will take the things of God and show them unto you." John 16:13-15. That is true revelation.

A true revelation is an experience from God. Any professed revelation that does not bring an experience to those who receive it is not a revelation from God at all, rather some figment of man's imagination. When God reveals Himself to man in any way, there is always transformation. It is impossible that it should be otherwise. I would not give a wooden nickel for any revelation which wrought no change in my life, that produced neither repentance, nor holiness, nor awe. If we could stand with Job in God's presence, we would hear him say, "I have heard of Thee with the hearing of the ear, but now mine eye seeth Thee; wherefore I abhor myself and repent in dust and ashes." If we could stand with Isaiah, we would hear him say, "In the year that king Uzziah died, I saw the Lord, high and lifted up and His train filled the temple. Above it stood the seraphims, each having six wings; with twain he covered his face, with twain he covered his feet, and with twain he did fly; and one cried to the other, Holy, holy, holy is the Lord God of hosts: The whole earth is full of His glory, and the posts of the door were moved at the voice of Him that cried, and the house was filled with smoke. Then said I, Woe is me! For I am undone; for I am a man of unclean lips and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips. For mine eyes have seen the King, the Lord of hosts. Then flew one of the seraphims unto me, having a live coal in his hand, which he had taken with the tongs from off the altar, and he laid it upon my mouth, saying, Lo, this hath touched thy lips and thine iniquity is purged and thy sin taken away." Isa. 6:1-7. Those who come face to face with true revelation are coming face to face with God, for they, "beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into that same image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord." 2 Cor. 3:18.
You may have seen men claiming great revelation from the Lord who were as puffed up as a toad, whose very being reeked of self-confidence and conceit. I do not believe in their pretended revelation but abhor their pride and turn away. When Gideon saw the angel, he cried, "Alas." Jacob, awaking from his dream at Haran, was afraid and cried, "Surely the Lord is in this place; how dreadful is this place. This is none other but the house of God and the gate of heaven." Gen. 28:16-17. And Peter, seeing the miraculous draught of fishes, begged in amazement, "Depart from me, O Lord, for I am a sinful man." Luke 5:8.

The hour is certainly at hand when all who will be sons of God must come to know Him. Let me therefore say with the utmost emphasis that you will never come to know Him by listening to sermons, attending meetings, reading articles, joining in great schemes to advance the gospel or any of the other things that occupy the time and thought of the modern church goer. You come to know Christ by being with Him where He is. "Father, I will that those whom Thou hast given Me be with Me where I am, that they may behold My glory." John 17:24.

You come to know Him by speaking often with Him and listening as He speaks to you. You come to know His will when you have no will of your own. Man's will is very strong and his heart very deceitful, but when at last your will is completely laid down in your Gethsemane as His was in the garden, then He will reveal His will and begin to lead you in His own paths. You have prayed that the mind of Christ would dwell in you. Seek then to have no mind of your own, for that which above all else hinders the mind of Christ from dwelling in you is the dominating presence of your own mind, your own ideas, your own thoughts and your own desires. The moment Saul of Tarsus on the Damascus road realized he was face to face with Jesus Christ and that his whole mind and will was contrary to Him, then in utter abandonment he cast his own mind away and cried, "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?" And from that moment the Spirit of God took over.

Learn now the words of the Lord. "My ways are not your ways, neither are your thoughts My thoughts; for as heaven is higher than the earth, so are My ways higher than your ways and My thoughts than your thoughts." It is time to stand still before God and give an earnest ear to His speaking, for all the world and the professing church with it has turned every man to his own way. They have forsaken the ways of the Lord. They do not know His voice nor follow Him. They have invented all manner of work, which appear wonderful on the surface, but they are not the ways of Christ. They are the works of their own hands. Never in the history of the world was there so much preaching and prophesying, so much idle talk about faith, so many claiming miracles and healings, so many great works and extravagant programs, but never was there such a dearth of truth, such lack of the mind of God and such abandonment to the will of man.

Above the tumult of tradition, above the strife of doctrine, above the cries for universal unity, the Spirit of God is calling a people who will hear His voice, walk in His will, know His mind, experience His presence, feel His life. They shall not walk as others walk, for leaving all others they cleave only to Him. They are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people to show forth the praises of Him who has called them out of darkness into His marvelous light.

BECOMING GOD’S WILL

THY WILL BE DONE IN EARTH

The hour is at hand when the glory of the kingdom of God will cast its gladdening rays over the entire earth, for the Sun of Righteousness with healing in His wings will have arisen forevermore. "Thy sun shall no more go down; neither shall thy moon withdraw itself: for the Lord shall be thine everlasting light, and the days of thy mourning shall be ended. Thy people also shall be all righteous: they shall inherit the land forever, the branch of my planting, the work of my hands, that I may be glorified. A little one shall become a thousand, and a small one a strong nation: I the Lord will hasten it in his time." Isa. 60:20-22.

The hour is at hand when Jesus Christ, the King of kings and Lord of lords will take His seat upon the throne of David His father in Jerusalem, the city of the great King. Matt. 5:34-35. Upon His right hand will be the one hundred forty and four thousand chosen sons of Israel, each with the seal of the living God in his forehead, and upon His left hand the one hundred forty and four thousand chosen sons of Zion, each bearing the name of God in his forehead. By those who minister at His right hand shall all the earth be covered with truth, and by those who minister from His left hand will all the earth be governed in righteousness, for "the law shall go forth from Zion and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem."

The hour is at hand when the will of God shall be done in all the earth below as it is done in all the heaven above. For six thousand years the inhabitants of the earth have drunk deeply of the cup of bitterness, bondage and oppression of a realm governed by the will of man. Judgment, justice, truth and equity have been banished from the land while kings and conquerors, dictators and despots have sought to establish their human wills, rejoicing at the sighing of the needy and ignoring the groaning of those they oppressed. But the kingdom of God will not be governed by the craven will of self-centered men, who know nothing as they ought to know, but by the will of Him who created the universe for Himself, who knoweth all things and loveth all His creatures. Those who shall be counted worthy to share His kingdom must first depart forever from their own will to become one with Him who worketh all things after the counsel of His own will.

That the will of God should be done in earth even as it is done in heaven was the prayer of Jesus Christ, the Lord. In heaven the will of God is always done. Those peaceful shores are never cursed by the carnal mind. No distorted vision blights their habitation. No selfish purposes disrupt the calm of that realm. There angels resplendent in wisdom and strength always behold the face of our Father in heaven. With sacred joy they bow their heads before Him to worship, or speed away as on wings of light to carry His edicts to the uttermost universe. In heaven the seraphim, covering their faces with their wings, cry, "Holy, holy, holy, Lord God Almighty!" The heavenly hosts forever hymn His praises. There the sun and the moon and all the stars of light praise Him. The heaven of heavens praise Him and the waters, which be above the heavens, for His will is always done in that celestial realm. Psa. 48. But now let God be praised, for the hour is at hand when His will shall be done in earth even as it is done in heaven. A new sun is about to rise over all the earth. "Let Israel rejoice in Him that made him: Let the children of Zion be joyful in their King. Let them praise His name in the dance: Let them sing praises unto Him with timbrel and harp. For the Lord taketh pleasure in His people: He will beautify the meek with salvation. Let the saints be joyful in glory: let them sing aloud upon their beds. Let the high praises of God be in their mouth and a two-edged sword in their hand; to execute vengeance upon the heathen, and punishments upon the people; to bind their kings with chains, and their nobles with fetters of iron; to execute upon them the judgments written: This honor have all His saints." Psa. 149.

We must through great tribulation enter the kingdom of God, but, when that tribulation is past, all nations will walk in the light of the Lord. Therefore, "praise the Lord from the earth, ye dragons and all deeps: fire and hail, snow and vapors, stormy wind fulfilling His word: mountains and all hills, fruitful trees and all cedars, beasts and all cattle, creeping things and flying fowl: Kings of the earth and all people, princes and all judges of the earth: Both young men and maidens, old men and children: Let them praise the name of the Lord: for His name alone is excellent; His glory is above the earth and heaven." Psa. 148:7-13. Thus in that day it shall be that all things in earth, whether fire or wind, snow or vapor, mountains, hills, trees and forests, beasts and cattle, creeping things and flying fowl, young men, maidens, old men and children, all will live in praise to the will of Him who created them. Let everything that hath breath praise the Lord.

If I were asked to name that which in all the universe is of greatest importance, I think I should have to name the will of God, for in the will of God all else that we might seek of Him lies eternally hidden. Apart from the will of God there can be no possession of the mind of Christ. Outside the will of God there can be no knowledge of the purpose of God. All those who shall be accounted worthy to share the glory of Christ's kingdom in the age to come must first experience in this age the wonderful knowledge of God's will, for before the will of God shall be done in the earth where we are, it must first have been done in the earth which we are.

The following teaching concerning the will of God is to me a matter of special revelation. If you will ask God to enlighten your mind, you will find an entirely new conception of what the will of God really is. I think you will be able to see clearly that the will of God has nothing whatsoever to do with many of our former conceptions of it, such as, "Is it the Lord's will for me to do this or that," or "Is it the Lord's will for me to go here or there?" God is no longer interested in slavish servitude, but sonship. He is interested in the will of God as it springs spontaneously from the hearts of His sons. We are becoming what He is and what He is we are becoming. He who formerly called us servants later called us friends, because a servant knoweth not what his Lord doeth.
Later still He called us brothers, (Matt. 12:49, 28:10), for brothers are sons of a common Father. They have the Spirit of sonship. They do the will of God as it springs spontaneously from what they are.

Many centuries ago Moses with head bowed, feet bare and heart trembling stood before the God of the burning bush. The zeal and fire of former years had ebbed from his spirit and he wanted nothing more than to be left alone with himself and his sheep. This, however, was not to be, for God was speaking to the old man, telling him of a work that was yet future and of a ministry of deliverance that was soon to begin. He must go back to visit his enslaved brethren in Egypt and bring them the blessing of the greatest emancipation ever known. He did not want to go, and we can scarcely blame him, but when finally he reluctantly consented to do the will of the Lord, he dubiously asked, "Who shall I say has sent me?" And God replied, "I Am that Am. Tell the people that I Am hath sent you." It seemed a strange name and surely it was one that would bring misunderstanding to those who heard it, yet the magnificent truth wrapped up in those two words has never yet been fully told or understood. Centuries later when the Pharisees disputed with the Saviour about His authority and divine origin, He told them, "Before Abraham was, I Am." Jno. 8:58.

No name known to the human tongue can describe the Saviour like this name. No sentence ever spoken by eloquent orator, no phrase ever written by sage or philosopher, no song ever sung by angel or seraphim can describe in such all inclusive excellence the almighty magnitude of what He really is. I Am, I Am, I Am. That is His name above all names and includes in itself all that He is and shall be forever.

"Lord, we know not whither Thou goest and how can we know the way," complained Thomas. "I am the way," Jesus replied, "I am the truth, I am the life."

"I know that he shall rise again in the resurrection at the last day," sobbed Martha sadly. "I am the resurrection," Jesus answered, "and I am the life."

"I am the vine. I am the door. I am the good shepherd. I am the light. I am the Alpha. I am Omega. I am the first. I am the last. I am the beginning. I am the end. I am thy redeemer. I am thy strength. I am He that liveth. I am He that was dead. I am He that shutteth and no man openeth and openeth and no man shutteth. I am the root and the offspring of David. I am the bright and morning star." There is no end to what He is, for He is everything. He is the Christ. He is the Lord. He is the redemption of the entire universe.

Jesus Christ is the will of God. He came not to do His own will, but the will of Him who sent Him. The works that He did and the words that He spake were never His: they were given to Him by the Father. All His wonderful acts were the acts of God. "The Father that dwelleth in Me, He doeth the works." All His mighty statements were the words of His Father. He Himself was "the Word of God." The blessed Christ was not merely a preacher of the Word of God; He was and is the Word of God. The same thing is true of His works. He did not merely perform the works of God, but He is the work of God.

Through suffering and obedience He had come to be the will of God. Nothing He ever did throughout His life was contrary to that divine will. "The cup which My Father hath given Me, shall I not drink it?" He asked. "Father, if it be possible let this cup pass from Me; nevertheless, not My will but Thine be done." "In all things" He pleased the Father, and in consequence the Father was well pleased in Him.

It will not be necessary for me to take time here to show that Christ was the first Son in a vast family of sons who were yet to follow. He is the firstborn, the eldest of many brethren, even as it is said, "Behold, I and the children which God has given Me." Heb. 2:13. This vast company of children is through suffering and tribulation entering into sonship. They are coming into His glorious image. What He is they are becoming. "The glory which Thou gavest Me I have given them," He said. "As the Father has life in Himself, so hath He given to the Son to have life in Himself." Likewise also the Son has given that glory to us that we too may have life in ourselves through Him. I am come that ye might have life and that ye might have it more abundantly," Let us think of any ineffable glory contained in the name "I Am" and wonder of wonders He has given that glory to the Son, and the Son in turn has passed it on to that vast family of brothers who are coming into His glorious image. "The glory which thou gavest Me I have given them," He declared; and it is absolutely true. Christ was the visible manifestation of the complete will of God and in Him we are becoming not merely reluctant doers of the will of God, but we are actually becoming the will of God. "Of His own will begat He us that we should be a kind of first fruit of His creatures."

There has always been a conflict between the mind of God and the mind of man. The struggle between the will of God and the will of man never ceases. In all things Christ pleased the Father. It is impossible to please the Father and to please yourself at the same time. Even Christ pleased not Himself. Not my will but Thine be done will be the theme of your life. It will be your meat and drink and the breath you breathe. "My meat," said Jesus, "is to do the will of Him who sent me and finish His work." You cannot serve God and Mammon, for if you obey the will of one, you will hate the will of the other, because God's will and man's will are the antithesis of each other. Paul declared, "If I yet please men I should not be the servant of Jesus Christ." There is no concord between Christ and Belial, and there is no communion between the will of God and the will of man. To love the one is to hate the other and to serve the one is to despise the other. You cannot serve God and Mammon.

The very moment Jesus Christ proclaimed, "Lo, I come to do Thy will, oh God!" the heavenly Father openly declared that He would take away the first (which is the will of man) and establish the second (which is the will of God). The sacrifices and offerings dragged from man's unwilling and rebellious heart could never be the foundation and order of the kingdom of God, but when the sons of God come, saying in truth, "I delight to do Thy will, oh my God," then nothing can delay the coming of His glorious reign. His kingdom will have come because His will shall be done on earth as it is done in heaven. The moment anyone delights in God's will, all sacrifice and offering is done away, for how could anything ever be a sacrifice to one who delights in God's will?

There is a path that leads to the will of God. You will never find it by struggling or striving. You will only find it in the great I Am. One day Jesus told His disciples, "Whither I go, ye know, and the way ye know." Thomas replied doubtfully, "Lord, we know not whither Thou goest, and how can we know the way?" What those poor troubled disciples did not know was that Christ was both the way and the destination at the end of the way. It is into Him that we are going, for He dwells in the Father and the Father dwells in Him. Christ is truth. He cannot be anything but truth, because God is truth and He dwells in God. He cannot be anything else but life, for God is life and He dwells in God. Therefore, because we are in the way of truth that leads to life, we become both the truth and the life, for He that dwelleth in Christ, dwelleth in God. When we lay down our will and pick up His, we are becoming the will of God, for Christ is the will of God and we know that He is the way and He is the end of the way.

As Noah in the long ago approached the great tribulation when the whole earth was to be destroyed by water, God called him aside and said, "The end of all flesh is come before me." God is speaking again in these last days, saying, "The end of all flesh is come before me." There is going to be a fantastic and unbelievable change from the will of man to the will of God. I have no hesitation in saying that the last particle of church tradition is about to vanish away, and everything will become completely new. Unknown to us there are still things about us that retain the nasty odor of the old disorder, but these also will have to go that nothing outside the will of the Lord may remain. God is going to make a complete riddance of the flesh during the coming wrath and judgment of the tribulation. The kingdom of God cometh on apace. Then His will shall be done in earth as it is done in Heaven.

We must settle it in our hearts that we are not going to try to please man and we are not going to try to please ourselves. In all the life of Christ His testimony remained true. He pleased not Himself. Oh, how we do love to please ourselves. We love to exact our labors. We like to find excuses to pick up what we once laid down and rebuild the things we once destroyed. We love to pad our shoulders so that the cross will be easy to carry, or else we lay it down altogether. The cup, which we have been given to drink we flavor to our taste to make it more pleasing and less bitter. We exact our labors and change our days of fasting and prayer for comfort and ease. In consequence our spiritual eyes grow dim and we lose sight of the celestial hills afar.

Paul spent a long lifetime in pleasing God. From the time it pleased God to reveal His Son in him until the end of his earthly pilgrimage, he never tried to please men. Many bitter and different experiences had taught him the truth, "If I yet please men, I am not the servant of Jesus Christ." There is only one person in the universe that you can please and that is God Himself. Though you may spend a whole lifetime trying to please men, you will find in the end you have not succeeded. The first thing you do to displease them will be thought sufficient to cancel out all the good things you have done, and they will turn against you and cry for your blood. Paul found it that way. One day he could scarcely restrain the multitude from offering sacrifice to him, but the next day they were stoning him.

As we come closer and closer to the end of this present age, we hear more and more about the manifestation of the sons of God. Whenever one thinks of the manifestation of the sons of God, his mind begins immediately to dream in terms of ecstasies and glories indescribable. Is it not wholly true that we begin to think of all the marvelous things we will do, of the signs and wonders that will be performed, the miracles done on sick bodies, the raising of the dead, the control of the elements, and the bowing of all men to God? I am quite sure that these in part are the general thoughts of each of us whenever we meditate upon this subject. Have we not longed to break through the barrier that binds us to this present age of impotence so that nothing will any more be impossible to us?

The sons of God are not manifest by what they do, but by what they are. Sonship is not doing, but being. It is quite possible for one to be a Son of God without having any record of works at all. On the other hand it is possible for one to have a long and impressive list of good works and not be a son of God at all. There is a record given in Scripture that has been disconcerting to many people. It tells of certain remarkable people, possessing a magnificent array of good works, who were not permitted into the kingdom of the Lord. They were very, very surprised and disappointed, and with a show of injured pride over the evident mistake God had made, they began to number their mighty works to prove that there certainly was an error somewhere. "Lord", they said, "We have prophesied in Thy name, we have done many wonderful works." See Matt. 7:21-23. These people are not lying; they are telling the truth. They had done all these wonderful things. For years they had been patting themselves on the back in pride. People had looked at them with admiration. They had decided that their works were evident tokens of their acceptability with God. They were appalled when they were told by none other than God Himself, "I never knew you. Depart from me, ye that work in iniquity." I have heard many explanations of this story, which purport to prove that the miracles were false and the people who performed them were everything that is bad, but that is not the answer. The truth is that sonship is not what you do.
Sonship is what you are.

Now let me explain what I mean. In the days of Israel's sojourn in the wilderness, many, many offerings were made to God and many things were done to gain the favor of the Lord. I do not mean that they were wrong in so doing, but I do mean it was no evidence of sonship. They offered the blood of bulls and of goats. Their offerings were continual. Every priest stood every day offering sin-offerings, burnt-offerings, trespass offerings, offerings for individual sin and offerings for the sin of the nation. But none of these things made the offerer perfect. Heb. 10:1. In other words, it did not produce sonship.

Then He says, "In burnt offering and sacrifice for sin, thou hast no pleasure. Then said I, Lo, I come to do Thy will. O God. ..." He taketh away the first, namely, all the things they were doing, doing, doing, doing. God had no pleasure in them at all. Neither has He any pleasure in the things that we do for Him. But now one has come to do Thy will, O God; so He takes away the first that He may establish the second. The first means the multitude of works, which we do for God. The second is a very different thing: doing God's will. The first He takes away. The second He establishes. Please read Heb. 10:1-10.

Just so long as we are busying ourselves rushing here and there and making a big show of the things we are accomplishing for God, the old order will continue to persist, but when we begin to take sincerely the attitude that "if God does not want the thing, neither do I," then we are approaching sonship. Why should I insist on raising up a big work in some corner of the earth if God does not want it? If He is not going to deal with the Jews or the Gentiles just now, why should I try to do it? Oh, the useless labor and hardship that men have endured because they were bound to accomplish something in which God had no interest.

We are like the legendary wise men of Gotham who, wanting the sun to rise earlier than usual, rolled great stones to the east to make the earth turn faster. Do you think they speeded up the sunrise? I don't think so. It was labor in vain. It is like the men who built a wall around the garden to keep the lark in, and like the man who took the door off his house so the thieves could not break it down. We would call such people morons, but I trow they are no more morons than those who think that the works they do are proof of their sonship.
There is only one attitude of heart that is pleasing to God; "Lo, I come to do Thy will, O God." This has nothing to do with the worn out phrase, "the Lord led me" or "it is the Lord's will," for there are many who follow the desires and ambitions that spring from their own hearts. They lead themselves to believe that these personal desires are actually the will of the Lord for them. Usually this has nothing whatever to do with the true leading of the Spirit of God. As long as there is any personal ambition, we cannot lay claim to being led by the Spirit of God. God knows whether you are being led by His Spirit or by your own fancy and personal desire. It is those who are led by the Spirit of God who are truly the sons of God.

Please notice now that just as soon as one came "to do Thy will, O God," it is said, "He taketh away the first."
A dispensation ends right there and then. Truly doing the will of God springs directly from being the will of God.
You can never truly do God's will until you have become God's will. As soon as this happens, you find all the old things are done away. Your ambitions go and His ambition becomes yours. Your ministry begins to change.
Instead of worrying about your ministry as you did in the past, you now find that doing the will of God is your ministry. Nothing else. Absolutely nothing else. It is not how abundantly you preach, prophesy, heal the sick or give to the poor. It is how you accomplish the will of God.

All the old ambitions fade out of your life to make way for God's will. You no longer have a will of your own.
God's will is your will, God's plan, your plan, God's purpose, your purpose. You kneel long in prayer before Him, but you have no requests to make. Your whole being proclaims, Amen! Amen! Thy will be done! And from the thousand corridors of your spirit echoes the joyful sound: Amen; Thy will be done! Thy will be done! Old things pass away all around you. They must pass away to make room for the new things. Everything changes.
Everything becomes new. Your planning, scheming, organizing, advertising until you are in a state of exhaustion is gone and in its place comes the rest wherewith He causes the weary to rest, and oh how sweet is the refreshing! When the body of Christ, like Christ the Head, has no more pleasure in the multitude of works but has come "to do Thy will, O God," then He taketh away the first order to establish the new order, even the order of the kingdom prepared from the foundation of the ages.

If you were to ask me where you might find the will of God and in what place does it dwell, I should have to answer, "The will of God dwells in that place where your will does not dwell, and there and there alone will you find it." If for a moment we could stand in that place where no creature dwells, then without a moment's delay we could hear God speak. There are so many voices in the world, all clamoring to be heard. There are so many voices within, all shouting for our attention. Only when we have passed beyond the will of man and the will of the flesh can we become acquainted with the will of God. God is not far away from us, but He can never speak to us because our will never ceases to instruct us and our minds never cease to think of ways and means to gather more things about us. But could we but for an hour cease from our own thoughts and cease from our own will, then eternal hearing, speaking and thinking would begin within us and we would understand and know the will and the mind of God.

If you do not believe this to be the truth, then come before God for an hour and see how your own thoughts drag your soul away from God and your own self-centered will comes into conflict with that of the Eternal. Your own will completely obliterates the will of God within you, and the sound of your own voice speaking its demands within you hushes His voice so it never can be heard by you.

The voice of God is seldom heard in the rush and bustle of life. He seldom thunders His edicts from Heaven, but waits with great patience until all sounds of earth have died away and then speaks with a voice both small and still. Not while we are slaying our Egyptian and burying him in the sand does God speak, but in the back side of some desert where earthly wills have drifted with the barren sands of time, where youthful ambitions have faded, and where the glittering sun of human purpose has cast its last flickering ray upon all earthly resolve. Not while we are riding in triumph to bind the saints does God disclose His secrets to our hearts, but in desolate Arabia, alone and apart from persistent quibblings of scribe and Sanhedrin, He lifts us into the third heaven to hear unspeakable things that concern His will. Let the wicked banish the faithful to some rocky Patmos of the sea, yet there beyond the reach of earthly voices where angels hymn their anthems will one appear like the Son of man, having eyes like lamps of fire and a voice as the sound of many waters. God is not far from any of us, but His will is found in that realm where our will does not come, and His voice is heard only where creature voices are hushed and silent.
If you can come to the place where your will is silent, where even the inner voice of your mind and soul is stilled, there you will be enfolded by His will and become a part of His mind eternally. God existed before any creature, and before the creature there was silence. Only the voice of God was heard; only the will of God was done. When you come to the place where no voice is speaking within you and no will is asserting its demands, then you have come back to the condition that existed before God made a creature. It is God's will that I should exist, not in self-will, but in His will.

When Adam and his wife rejoiced in the effulgent wonders of the heaven blest land of Eden, they knew nothing but the will of God. Every perfumed path they trod was in God's will and all their exalted thoughts were from the mind of Christ. The thought of living apart from Him never once saddened their pure hearts, but they dwelt in Him who possessed heaven and earth and, dwelling in Him, they possessed all things. No gloomy shadows ever darkened their bright minds, for in Him there was no darkness at all. Neither doubt nor fear tormented them, for in Him there is no sorrow nor doubt nor any torment of fear. Want or hunger distressed them not, for they dwelt in Hun for whom and by whom all things exist, and there where the perfumed breeze swept through the trees, they basked in His ineffable love and rejoiced in inexpressible joys.

It was a sad day, indeed, for man when the enemy of all righteousness suggested to him that it would be possible for him to have something apart from God. "God knows," he told them, "that in the day you eat of the tree you will be like God, knowing good and evil." For the first time a dismal shadow crossed their pure minds, making them think they could have something by themselves, apart from God - something, they were told, that would increase their wisdom and make them even more like God than they already were. In hope of being more like God our innocent mother stretched out her trusting hand to take the fruit, giving it to her husband as well. In truth their eyes were opened wide and they knew good and evil. They knew good, but it had fled back to God from whence it came. They knew evil, but it pursued them and from it they were powerless to flee. How wretched it is to possess things apart from God. Things! Things! Things! Man is always wanting to possess things. He spends his life collecting things and possessing them apart from God and because they are apart from God he has nothing in the end. He is able to collect only temporal things and all temporal things soon pass away. Therefore, should we possess the whole world or the whole universe apart from God, it would cease to be ours. Like mists before the rising sun, it would soon vanish away and our lives would fade as a leaf and be no more. Poor benighted man goes on in his blindness trying to set up his own frail kingdom which, if a fox should run over it, would be destroyed, or if the wind passes over it, is gone. How often it has been my lot to stand by a tomb listening to the plaintive sobs of broken hearts, while I intoned the words, "Like as a Father pitieth His children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear Him, for He knoweth our frame. He remembereth that we are dust. As for man, he is of few days and full of trouble. As the flower of the field he flourisheth, but the wind passeth over it and it is gone, and the place thereof shall know it no more, but the mercy of the Lord is from everlasting to everlasting to them that fear Him, and His righteousness unto children's children." A lifetime of labor is laid in the ravening dust and all the earthly things once possessed have fled away. Yet we walk away from the tomb and the lesson it taught us to go on as usual collecting the things of our own little kingdom about us.

I believe you will agree to what we now propose. Since the fall of man from the Paradise of God there has been a wicked, carnal mind that has filled him with an insatiable desire to possess things apart from God. Perhaps man imbibed some of that Satanic mind which once said, "I will ascend into heaven, I will exalt my throne above the stars of God; I will sit in the congregation in the sides of the north; I will ascend into the heights of the clouds, I will be like the Most High." (Isa. 14:13-14).

We do not realize it, I think, but frail man not only wants to gather things about himself, but he wants to be the center of his own little universe. The more he possesses the greater his universe seems to be and the greater his feeling of confidence and assurance. He never discovers that he has enough for this life, but, because he finds that what he has does not bring him the satisfaction he thought it would, he seeks to add more and more to it, hoping that the extra he adds will bring him contentment and rest from fear. Why do men who possess millions in earthly possessions go on adding more and more to them? There must be a reason. Think it through. Things possessed apart from God cannot ever satisfy.
Man is not satisfied by possessing earthly things. He secretly wants to possess the things of God as well and that for himself apart from God. There is no wisdom in the universe apart from the wisdom of God. In Him dwell all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge. Yet in the Garden of Eden man conceived the idea of possessing the wisdom of God apart from God. Can you imagine that? Man possessing wisdom apart from God? Yet this is what he wanted. The Lord says, "All our righteousness are as filthy rags." What are we trying to do with righteousness? Is there any righteousness apart from God? Yet here is man having a righteousness of his own, trying to possess it himself apart from God even though it is filthy rags. Why did Nadab and Abihu wickedly offer strange fire before the Lord? Did they not want to possess for themselves what only God possessed? Why did Simon, the sorcerer, offer money for the gift that Peter had? He cared nothing for God, but in the gall of his bitterness and the bond of his rebellion he wanted to possess for himself something that belonged only to God and cannot be had apart from Him.

Let me ask one question further. Do you not think that this strange desire exists today? What about spiritual gifts? Do men desire them to bring all glory to God, or do they covet them as a means of self-promotion and self-exaltation? How is it that so many men who seem to have gifts from God soon become the center of a little universe of their own where all roads lead to them and all fingers point in their direction? Let us face it. Men not only want to gather temporal things about themselves, but they also crave to have eternal things for themselves and to possess them in themselves and by themselves apart from God. The carnal mind is an eternal enemy of God. It refuses to become subject to the law of God, and indeed it is powerless to do so. But it secretly desires the things of God, wisdom, righteousness and power, so that it may be as God.

Were it possible for you to possess everything in the world and in heaven apart from God, you would have exactly nothing, but if you have nothing, yet dwell in God, you possess all things. Thus it is clearly made manifest what Paul meant when he said, "As having nothing, yet possessing all things." It does not seem right to me that the wood should possess the fire but that the fire should possess the wood, for the fire cannot become one with the wood, but the wood can become one with the fire. Neither yet is it possible for the ship to possess the ocean, for then it would sink; but the ocean may possess all the ships of the world without one being in sight of the other. For me to possess God or even any of the things of God will destroy me, but if God possesses me, then I possess all things because all things are His.

Is this truth not the one that was in Paul's mind when he declared, "Therefore let no man glory in men. For all things are yours, whether Paul, or Apollos, or Cephas, or the world, or life, or death, or things present, or things to come; all are yours, and ye are Christ's and Christ is God's." 1 Cor. 3:21-22. All things are yours because you are the possession of God. It is like a beggar maiden who married a millionaire. She could have roamed the dreary paths of life, receiving an occasional pittance of his charity and have nothing. But at the time she gives herself to him to become his bride he declares for the world to hear, "With all my worldly goods I thee endow."

How I wish I could explain with transcendent light the great difference between our possessing things and our being possessed of God. This, my friend, is the problem we are facing now. In the past we have wanted to possess things and have found ourselves desolate and empty, but if we give ourselves to Him, all things will be ours, because all things are His. He died for all that they which live should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto Him who died for them and rose again. II Cor. 5:15.

When Paul was expressing thanks for the gift given him by the Corinthians, II Cor. 8:1-5, the thing that rejoiced his heart most was that they first gave their own selves to the Lord. If we give abundant gifts to God yet withhold ourselves, we have given nothing. Everything is His anyway. It was His before you were here and it will be His after you have gone away. "Heaven is My throne and earth is My footstool. What house will you build Me," said the Lord. The heaven of heavens cannot contain Him, how much less a house we build Him. The early church had the truth straight when they took the attitude that "none of the things they possessed was their own."

The earth will never possess the kingdom of God as long as eternity shall endure. It must be the other way about. The kingdom of God must possess the earth. Though the kingdom of God is within me, yet I cannot possess it. It must possess me or it will never be seen or known. If I possess Christ, I will be as barren in the future as I have been in the past, but if Christ possesses me, then I will be hid with Christ in God and God alone will fill the earth with His resplendent glory.

As we consider the following thoughts, may God almighty grant that His Spirit may instruct us in the way of truth and understanding. Let us fervently pray that God will reveal the eternal truth of this subject to our hearts. The spirit's yearning for the will of God is without doubt the true spirit of sonship. Mark well the all-embracing testimony of Jesus Christ to this fact as stated in John 5:30-37. "I can of Mine own self do nothing; as I hear, I judge; and My judgment is just, because I seek not My own will but the will of Him who sent Me. If I bear witness of Myself, My witness is not true. There is another that beareth witness of Me; and I know that the witness which He witnesseth of Me is true. Ye sent unto John and he bare witness unto the truth. But I receive not testimony from man; but these things I say that ye might be saved. He was a burning and a shining light; and ye were willing for a season to rejoice in His light. But I have greater witness than that of John; for the works which My Father hath given Me to finish, the same works that I do, bear witness of Me that the Father hath sent Me; and the Father Himself which hath sent Me hath borne witness of Me."

I challenge you to survey the whole world today and you will scarcely find a man alive either in the church or outside the church who can truthfully testify in the words spoken above. I greatly fear that the testimony in the early church and the testimony of all men today can be truthfully given in the sorrowful words of Paul, "All seek their own, not the things which are Jesus Christ's." Phil. 2:21. You would not have to pay a dime a dozen for men who constantly use such worn phrases as "we want God", "we want God's will", or "I'm seeking the will of the Lord about the matter," or "I think it's the Lord's will that we do this or that." But you will have to search the world over for a handful of men and women who have enough of the spirit of sonship to withdraw from every human effort and wait until God instructs them though they should wait a lifetime. It is to this truth that Jesus was testifying when He said, "I can of Myself do nothing," "I seek not Mine own will, but the will of Him who sent Me." "If I bear witness of Myself, My witness is not true," "I do always those things that please the Father," and many other such wonderful statements of consecration.

At times certain words of scripture strike you like a thunderbolt. They impress you deeply and work a transformation in your life. Did you ever notice the words of Elijah as he stood alone before the prophets of Baal and before Israel and Israel's king? "Let it be known this day that Thou art God in Israel, and that I am Thy servant, and that I have done all these things at Thy word." 1 Kings 18:36. We have often heard sermons on the faith of Elijah. Certainly he was a man of faith, but his faith did not stand in his ability to believe that God would do what he demanded. Rather it stood in the fact that, long before he asked, God had commanded him and told him what to do. Calling down fire on the altar and the destruction of the prophets of Baal was not a grandiose scheme concocted in Elijah's head. The thing that he did was successful only because he was walking in sonship and listening to the voice of God. For three years he sat in the widow's house seemingly wasting valuable time apparently doing nothing. Why should such a valuable man withdraw himself from a society that needed his ministry so badly? But Elijah had learned that first principal of sonship, "I can do nothing of myself." If we are going to be guided by "what the public needs, what the church system demands, what the people want, what we feel we should do" or any such thing, then we are going to be wrong. We will be found to be opportunists guided by the opportunities of the hour rather than by the will of the Lord.

When Jesus taught His disciples to pray, the opening request was this: "Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done." These two requests are forever bound up in the hearts of each other. The kingdom of God can never, never come until the will of God is done in and on earth as it is done in heaven. Furthermore, the moment the will of God is done in the earth, the kingdom of God will be here. For six thousand years the earth has been governed by the will of man. We have been governed variously by kings, emperors, dictators, presidents, democracy and communism, but the net result has always been the same, for the will of man always asserts itself, seeking its own purposes, fulfilling its own desires and doing its own will.

Can anyone possibly imagine what would happen to a nation if all the members of its government were completely selfless instead of completely selfish, if they were sons of God who could of themselves do nothing, instead of handshaking, baby-kissing politicians seeking to curry the favor of men for personal advantage, or if judges judged by the Spirit of God instead of the tricky letter of the law? Jesus said, "As I hear I judge, and My judgment is righteous because I seek not My own will, but the will of Him that sent Me." To contemplate such things in this age brings but a sad smile to our faces. We know that in this age of the will of man such things cannot be, for, whether it be in the world, in Israel, or in the professing church, the testimony is always the same: "All seek their own, not the things that are Jesus Christ's." The end is always the same. Soon men seek to draw away disciples for their advantage. They compass land and sea to make a proselyte. Man's will displaces God's will. So Israel goes to Babylon, the church goes to Babylon, and the world itself becomes such a Babylon of confusion that nothing can save it. The kingdoms of this world must become the kingdoms of the Lord and of His wonderful Christ.

The first principal of sonship then is found in these words: "I seek not Mine own will but the will of Him that sent Me." The great daring programs of the church systems far too often have their roots, not in the will of God, but in self interest. Like whited sepulchers they look good and commendable on the outside, but within they are full of corruption and dead men's bones. Men have gone a-whoring after physical healing in our day, not because they have any particular love for the sick or compassion for the suffering, but because the whole world has become so bodily, physically, and fleshly minded that they are led to believe that to attain physical healing is a thing of enormous importance. Because of the popularity of this idea, many men in our age have made a vast financial gain, but there has been very little sign of genuine repentance, revival, or turning to God. All too often, if the wealth were not there, you would hear no more of their professed ministry.

In the midst of all this confusion of self-seeking the Spirit of God is calling out a people for His name. He is stripping them of self-interest, draining them of self-will, plucking from their broken hearts all personal ambition, causing them to abhor all self-seeking. From within out of their innermost being as sweet perfume wafted on the winds of God comes the constant sighing of the spirit of sonship, "Thy will be done! Thy will be done!" "And the smoke of the incense which came with the prayers of the saints ascended up to God out of the angel's hand." Rev. 8:4.

The world is yet to be governed by a noble race of sons of God, every one in the image of Christ, every one a brother of Jesus, every one a son who "can do nothing of himself." Adam, the son of God, reigning supreme in his glorious kingdom in Eden, was but a type of the sons of God who will reign in the whole earth at last in the blessed kingdom of the Father. The whole earth, as Eden was, shall be filled with the knowledge of the glory of the Lord as the waters cover the sea.

Oh, if I by the Spirit of God could but impress upon your holy minds the unspeakable need of entering now into the complete will of God where all earthly, fleshly wills are dead and buried beneath the dust of your crucified selves that you might stand selfless before the throne of His eternal glory! All who hope for sonship and the glory of reigning with Him must first see self-crucified with Christ. In the effulgent glory of the heavenly kingdom all men shall walk in the light and counsel of the Lord. The prayer of Christ shall be answered. His will shall be done in earth even as it is done in heaven. Amen!

CHAPTER FIVE
SOME THINGS THAT PLEASE THE FATHER

SPIRITUAL UNITY

There is nothing dearer to the heart of God than unity. But the carnal mind, implacable enemy of God as it is, knows nothing of unity. It is filled with division and maintains an abiding hate for those who seek oneness with the mind of God. The blessed Lord Jesus Christ gained a great deal of prominence through His miracles, His healings, and His teachings, but when He laid claim to complete unity with God, animosity and hate against Him flared into open rebellion. "My sheep know My voice," He said, "And I know them, and they follow Me; and I give unto them eternal life; and they shall never perish, neither shall any man pluck them out of My hand. My Father which gave them Me is greater than all; and no man can pluck them out of My Father's hand." They listened to Him up to this point, but when He continued, "I and My Father are one" then the Jews took up stones to stone Him. Jno. 10:30, 31.

We may well conclude that the one thing above all others which incurs the hatred of the carnal mind is its finding someone who is coming into unity with the mind of Jesus Christ. The carnal mind is so deceptive and wicked that it likes to think it is in unity with the mind of God. It loves to think that it is the mind of Christ. But it always rebels to find any mind who is in true unity with the Father, and it will rise up with stones in its evil hand to crush the head of those who have cast off the works of darkness, discarded the human ways of looking at things, and have earnestly sought to let the mind of Christ dwell in them richly in all things.

I believe I am right when I say that the only true unity in the universe is unity of mind. At first thought this statement may seem to be faulty, for we may think of many things which seem to have unity, but if we meditate a while, we will soon conclude that true unity never exists outside the mind. No unity of the flesh can possibly be said to be true unity. We have the testimony of scripture, saying, "For this cause shall a man leave his father and mother and be joined to his wife and they two shall be one flesh." While this is a precious truth, yet I aver it is not true unity, for the man and his wife will be separated by death. She will no longer be his wife and he will no longer be her husband, for in heaven they neither marry nor are given in marriage. Then again a man and his wife, though united in the flesh, may be as divided as the nations of the earth both in mind and in spirit. Sad to say many couples thus united are so much at enmity that they have to terminate their partnership and live apart.

The true unity that existed between Jesus Christ the Son and God the Father was not a physical unity but a unity of mind and spirit. How could there be anything but absolute unity when there was unity of mind? The mind that dwelt in Christ was not His own mind but the mind of the Father. Paul exhorted the Philippian Christians in these words. "Let this mind be in you, which was also in Jesus Christ." The mind that was in Jesus Christ was the Father's mind. The possession of that mind made Him one with the Father in thought, word, action, and deed. Who on earth can possibly deny the fact that, if the same mind dwells in you or me, we also will immediately become one with the Father in thought, word, action, deed, love, purpose, and being. We will think as He thinks, do as He would do, love as He would love, understand as He understands, and, putting it all together in one grand truth, we would be able to say as our blessed Saviour said, "I and my Father are one."

There is no greater prize than oneness with Him. Only those who have His mind can be led by His Spirit, and only those who are led by His Spirit can possibly come into sonship. The mind of Christ is a priceless pearl, to attain which a man will gladly sell all that he possesses. Beside that precious jewel all human wisdom fades into foolishness, all human understanding bows its head in shame and earthly gain or loss finds itself unworthy of consideration.

There is no wisdom apart from the mind of Christ. The wisdom of the world is foolishness with God; therefore, the mind of Christ and true wisdom are one and the same thing. The eloquent Job with silver tongued oratory declared. "Where is wisdom to be found? And where is the place of understanding? Man knoweth not the price thereof; neither is it found in the land of the living. The depth saith, it is not in me: and the sea saith, it is not in me. It cannot be gotten with gold, neither shall silver be weighed for the price thereof. It cannot be valued with the gold of Ophir, with the precious onyx or sapphire. The gold and the crystal cannot equal it; and the exchange of it shall not be for jewels or fine gold. No mention shall be made of coral or of pearls; for the price of wisdom is above rubies. The topaz of Ethiopia shall not equal it, neither shall it be valued with pure gold." Job. 28: 12-19. And Solomon catching up the refrain exultantly exclaims. "Happy is the man that findeth wisdom and the man that getteth understanding. For the merchandise of it is better than silver and the gain thereof than fine gold. She is more precious than rubies; and all the things thou canst desire are not to be compared to her. Length of days is in her right hand, and in her left riches and honor." Prov. 3:13-16. "Wisdom is better than rubies, and all the things that may be desired are not to be compared to it." Prov. 8:11.

It is from the mind of Christ that wisdom flows like a pure river of living water. No clouds of doubt cast their gloomy shadows upon its crystal sheen, nor do fears trouble its timeless waves. No rocks of misunderstanding mar its course and those who flow with its eternal current sail in the will of God.

Count not other things to be of value. Make the mind of Christ the thing uppermost in your seeking. For He who has the mind of Christ is one with the Father, a son of God, and a joint heir with Jesus Christ. The wretched teaching of a Babylonish church has made men think that to be busy for God is the important thing. But what on earth is the value in being busy for God, burning up for Him and working your fingers to the bone if you find at the end of your life that your labor was the product of your own mind and your untiring efforts were born of your own will and not of the will of God? It was of this very danger Jesus spoke when He solemnly declared, "Not every one that saith unto Me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of My Father which is in heaven. Many will say to Me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in Thy name? and in Thy name have cast out devils and in Thy name done many wonderful works? And then will I profess unto them. I never knew you; Depart from Me, ye that work iniquity." Math. 7:21-23.

Besides the twelve disciples who were always with the Lord, Jesus had chosen another seventy, whom He commissioned with power and authority and sent forth into the towns and cities where He would later come. These men went forth in the power and glory of the Spirit of Christ. The sick were healed, the cripples rose from their beds of pain, lame men leaped and ran, and demons fled at their command. Never had the Judaean hills echoed with such praises. Never had the people seen such wonders as throngs came to listen to these heralds of the coming kingdom of Christ. When their ministry was fulfilled, they returned with great joy to report their success to the Christ who had given them such miraculous power. Their faces were wreathed with smiles and their enthusiasms knew no bounds. Bursting with joy, they proclaimed, "Lord, even the devils are subject unto us through Thy name." And He replied, "I beheld Satan as lightning fall from heaven. Behold, I give you power to tread on serpents and scorpions and over all the power of the enemy; and nothing shall by any means hurt you. Notwithstanding, in this rejoice not, that the spirits are subject unto you, but rather rejoice because your names are written in heaven." Luke Ch. 10:17-20.

It is the fact that we are known of God that counts, that our names are on record before Him. The signs and wonders and works are nothing, for they were accomplished ages ago when Christ saw Satan fall as lightning from heaven. They are not done by our power and we deserve no credit for them. But to know God and be known of Him is the source and secret of sonship and the source and secret of His blessed will. Oh! what a universe of truth is contained in the following words of Christ's exhortation! Vs 21. "In that hour Jesus rejoiced in Spirit, and said, I thank Thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, that Thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent and hast revealed them unto babes; even so, Father, for so it seemed good in Thy sight .". And no man knoweth who the Son is, but the Father and who the Father is, but the Son, and he to whom the Son will reveal Him ... blessed are the eyes which see these things that ye see." As many, you see, as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God.

If any man who ever lived could have claimed miracles and signs as proof of his acceptance with God, it should have been the apostle Paul. But we find him near the end of his wonderful life still murmuring with indescribable passion and in longing, "That I may know Him."

The church today is full of men and women who are the image of those described. They are prophesying, preaching, casting out devils, and doing many outstanding works in many ways. They claim to have a call. They would be angry at the suggestion that they were acting outside the will of God. They point to their outstanding success as proof that they are right, but actually they know nothing at all about the true will of the Lord. They will be the most surprised persons in the world to find themselves left out of the kingdom. With surprise and indignation, they will point to their notable activities, as though God was overlooking something, only to be told that both they and their wonderful works are strangers to Him.

If we want to find the mind of Christ and come to unity with the Father, we are going to have to seek for it as for hid treasure and search for it as men search for gold. God never gives His mind to men just for the careless asking. I am thoroughly convinced that it takes years of enlightenment before we are even ready to see that the carnal mind, which we all possess is the enemy of God and the biggest antichrist in the world. The carnal mind is not only the most monstrous antichrist in the world but the most blatant liar and wily deceiver that ever issued forth from the pit. It makes men think that black is white, good is evil, evil is good. It exalts Satan to God's throne and sits in God's temple showing itself to be God. It was of this double-minded monster that James wrote, saying by the Holy Ghost, "Draw nigh to God and He will draw nigh to you. Cleanse your hands, ye sinners and purify your hearts, ye double minded." Jas. 4:8-10. When you see the situation as it really is, then your laughter is turned to mourning and your joy to heaviness, and, humbling yourself in the sight of the Lord, He lifts you up to partake of His mind and come to unity with Him.

During the last weeks I have thought much of the story of Mary and Martha which is recorded in Luke 10:38 in these words, "Now it came to pass as they went that He entered into a certain village; and a certain woman named Martha received Him into her house. And she had a sister, called Mary, which also sat at Jesus' feet and heard His word. But Martha was cumbered about much serving, and came to Him and said, Lord, dost thou not care that my sister hath left me to serve alone? Bid her therefore that she help me. And Jesus answered and said unto her, Martha! Martha! Thou art careful and troubled about many things. But one thing is needful; and Mary hath chosen that good part, which shall not be taken away from her."

Now I think Martha must have been a wonderful person. I have the idea she was kind, considerate of others, generous, hard working, and full of love for Jesus, whom she knew was the Lord and Christ. There was nothing she would not do to welcome Him and make Him as comfortable as possible. So zealous was she in this regard that she was evidently angered that her sister, Mary, was not doing as she was doing. It didn't seem right that she should have all the work to do while her sister sat and talked. It was with evident peevishness that she asked the Lord, "Dost Thou not care that my sister has left me to serve alone?" With the most merciful kindness Jesus tenderly rebuked her with the words, "Martha, Martha." Now the point is this. Dear Martha could have spent the rest of her life troubling about doing things for Jesus. She could have filled years and years, dashing about, trying to make Him welcome and to show her love for Him, and yet for all this strenuous activity she was not hearing one word that He had to say. And how, my dear friend, can any man or woman ever know the mind of Christ if he does not take time to listen and hear what He says? I think I may boldly say that one could spend his whole life slaving fervently for God and know less of His mind and His will at the end than at the beginning, because the trouble of much serving has taken up all his time and there was no time left to listen to the voice of Jesus. We will certainly find in the end that it is just such busy people who will hear Christ say, "Depart from Me; I never knew you."

We do not know much about Mary, but there were just not enough hours in the day for her to sit at His blessed feet and listen. And when at last He took His leave of them, it was Mary who knew what He had said; it was Mary who was acquainted with His purpose; it was Mary who had His mind and had come to unity with Him, and, when this blessed woman spoke, her lips were filled with His word and her mind with His wisdom. Even after the mighty miracle of the raising of Lazarus from the dead, while Mary and Lazarus sat at the table with Jesus, it is said, "And Martha served." And while dear Martha washed the dishes, Mary broke the sacred ointment on His head to anoint Him for His burial.

You will serve Christ much better if you take days and weeks and months and years to partake of His mind. "If ye abide in Me, and My words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done." Oh! what a promise that is! Millions of prayers are made every day, but the answers could almost be counted on your fingers. Why? Because Christians never take time to find out the meaning of the voice or to acquaint themselves with His purpose. They have no time for fasting. They are too busy with much serving to quietly sit at His feet and listen to the wisdom that falls as the snow and rain from heaven. But those who take time to listen to His voice and let His words abide in them move in His will and in His mind. They ask what they will and it is done, because they have no will but the will of God.

"My sheep know My voice and they follow Me, and a stranger will they not follow, but will flee from him, for they know not the voice of strangers." There is only one way by which we can know His voice and that is by hearing it. And there is only one way we can hear it, and that is by listening to it. Those who know that joyful sound are never deceived, for they follow Him. As many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God, and with their blessed Master they repeat, "/ and my Father are one." This is true unity and life eternal.

HEARING GOD'S VOICE

"There are, it may be, so many kinds of voices in the world, and none of them is without signification; therefore, if I know not the meaning of the voice, I shall be unto him that speaketh a barbarian, and he that speaketh shall be a barbarian unto me." 1 Cor. 14: 10; 11.

"The voice of my beloved. Behold, He cometh leaping upon the mountains, skipping upon the hills ... My beloved spake and said unto me, Rise up, my love, my fair one, and come away. For lo, the winter is past, the time of the singing of birds has come, and the voice of the turtle is in the land. The fig tree putteth forth her green figs, and the vines with the tender grapes give a good smell. Arise, my love, my fair one, and come away. O my dove, that art in the clefts of the rock, in the secret places of the stairs, let me see thy countenance. Let me hear thy voice; for sweet is thy voice, and thy countenance is comely." S.O.S. 2:8-14.

"My sheep hear My voice, and I know them, and they follow Me." "He that entereth in by the door is the shepherd of the sheep. To Him the porter openeth and the sheep hear His voice and He calleth His own sheep by name, and when He putteth forth His own sheep, He goeth before them and the sheep follow Him; for they know His voice. And a stranger will they not follow, but will flee from him for they know not the voice of strangers." Jno. 10:27, 2-5.

"And the Lord called Samuel: and he ran unto Eli and said, Here am I; for thou calledst me. And he said, I called not; lie down again. And he went and lay down. And the Lord called yet again, Samuel. And Samuel arose and went to Eli, and said, Here am I; for thou didst call me. And he answered, I called not, my son; lie down again. Now Samuel did not yet know the Lord, neither was the word of the Lord yet revealed to him. And the Lord called Samuel again the third time. And he arose and went to Eli and said, "Here am I; for thou didst call me." And Eli perceived that the Lord had called the child. Therefore Eli said unto Samuel, Go, lie down; and it shall be, if He call thee, that thou shalt say, Speak, Lord, for thy servant heareth. So Samuel went and lay down in his place. And the Lord came, and stood, and called as at other times, Samuel, Samuel. Then Samuel answered, Speak, Lord, for thy servant heareth." 1 Sam. 3:1-10.

Never in the annals of human history were there so many voices in the world, all clamoring to be heard. Every artifice and gimmick is used to gain the attention of the unwilling ear. Silly ditties are sung on the radio advertising every imaginable thing. They sing about pencils and toothpaste, automobiles and washing machines. One would think we were a lot of little children whose minds must be impressed with Mother Goose rhymes instead of intelligent people whose minds are insulted with such childish mediocrity. This clamor of voices is by no means confined to the salesmanship of the world, for I think the clamor of voices in the professing church is even greater. The babble of Babel is age lasting. It ceases not day or night. Solomon must have been seeing the modern Babylonish harlot when he said, "A foolish woman is clamorous; she is simple, and knoweth nothing. For she sitteth at the door of her house, on a seat in the high places of the city, to call passengers who go right on their ways: Whoso is simple, let him turn in hither." Prov. 9:13-16.

Not only is every voice shouting for disciples to follow it, but every imaginable plan, scheme, idea, and device is put forth to arouse the public interest, capture the mind, and open the pocketbook. The world is full of voices, all clamoring about something, until one would be inclined to liken them to the mob at Ephesus who for two hours shrieked and shouted, "Great is Diana of the Ephesians," and the most part knew not wherefore they were come together. Acts. 19:26-35.

The only people who will ever reign in the kingdom are those who know the voice of Christ, those who can shut out all other loudly clamoring voices and hear His voice clearly and distinctly. "My sheep know My voice and they follow Me, and a stranger will they not follow, for they know not the voice of strangers.

There is only one way to come to know the voice of Christ and that is by listening to it and hearing it often. We quoted above the lovely story of Samuel and the voice of God that came to Him. I am sure you must have noticed at once that God spoke to him four times. The first three times the young lad jumped from his bed and went quickly to Eli, saying, "Here I am, for thou didst call me." But Samuel did not know the Lord. Naturally, therefore, if he did not know the Lord, he could not be expected to know His voice. But he soon learned to know the voice of the Lord and the more often he heard it the better he knew it.

If we are going to know the voice of Christ, the first thing we shall have to do is shut out the clamoring voice of the multitude. Where these other voices are concerned, we must become like the deaf adder, which hearkens not to the voice of charmers, charming never so wisely. Psa. 58:5.

There was a time when Saul of Tarsus was smitten down on the road to Damascus. He had never heard the voice of Christ before and when the voice spoke and said, "Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me?" Saul asked immediately, "Who art Thou, Lord?" And the voice replied, "I am Jesus, whom thou persecutest." This was, however, only the first time Paul heard the voice of Jesus. I am sure He heard Him many times after that, and never again did he have to ask "Who are thou, Lord?" Behold the great assurance with which he spoke many years later, when for fourteen days the ship had floundered in the teeth of the dreadful storm Euroclydon. After fourteen days of fasting and prayer when all hope of life was fled from the ship's company, Paul stood forth and declared to the crew, "Sirs, you should have hearkened to me and not have loose from Crete and to have gained this harm and loss, and now I exhort you be of good cheer; for there shall be no loss of any man's life among you but of the ship. For there stood by me this night the angel of the Lord, whose I am and whom I serve, (Jesus Christ) saying, "Fear not, Paul, thou must be brought before Caesar, and lo, God hath given thee all them that sail with thee."

We can never, never come to know the voice of Christ until we silence completely all other voices. The voices that cry and clamor from without, day and night seeking to gain our attention and stir us to some activity of human devising, must be shut away from the inner ear of our spirits as when a man, disliking to hear a certain radio program, turns the dial to something else that suits him better. In like manner also we must silence the voices from within, for they arise from the desires of our own heart, and they clamor to be heard. They chide us of lost ministries and lost opportunities. They also coax us to return to old paths and ways from which God led us long ago. These voices too must be silenced and tuned out, that we may tune our spiritual ear to the voice that speaks from heaven. For God is speaking by His Son and we are warned, "See that ye refuse not Him that speaketh from heaven." "Thine ear shall hear a word behind thee saying, This is the way, walk ye in it." Isa. 30:21.

SEPARATION

Looking back across the centuries that are gone, we can clearly see that God in grace and mercy has sent many great deliverances to the people of earth. But long before these great emancipations were wrought, there were times of preparation. There were times when no voice was heard from heaven, and it seemed that God had forgotten that He had an earth, or that He had a people. Wickedness prospered and men seemed to say, "Where is the promise of His coming? for since the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as they were from the foundation of the world." But God has never forgotten and, at the moment when men think He has, the Almighty has His man called aside where his ear can be tuned to the wave lengths of heaven, and become deaf to the sound of all voices except the voice of the Lord.

For almost four hundred years the children of Israel had dwelt in a land where they were strangers. For a good part of that time they had been in cruel slavery in the land of Egypt.

Year after year their bondage increased and, as each generation passed away, new oppressions were heaped upon them. Their hands were horny with their toil and their backs were bowed with their burdens. In the nights they groaned out their prayers to a God that seemed never to hear, and in the day the sweat and tears washed the grime of toil from their troubled faces. "Will God never hear?" they wondered. Has He forgotten His promise to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob? But Oh! how little they knew that "all their tears were in His bottle" and, as soon as the dross had vanished from their gold, He would lead them forth from His furnace!

What excitement and searching there must have been in the court of Pharaoh, King of Egypt, when one day Moses, that promising prince, was found missing. Suddenly like a whiff of sweet perfume he was gone, and no one seemed to know what had become of him. I need not relate the wonderful story of Exodus, chapter two, for you know it as well as I, but Moses was gone. Where he was, was a total mystery. Frantic search was made in every possible place, but without result. Moses could not be found. Years went by and people began to accept the mystery. Time began to heal the wounds of those who mourned him, and others soon forgot all about him. Life got back to normal again. The shout of the task master, the crack of the whip, and the groans of the people continued endlessly on and on.

But there was One who knew where Moses was. For the God of mercy had not been deaf to the sighing of His people and He was hiding His man in the backside of the desert. His deliverer was being prepared against the day of emancipation, far away from the turmoil of politics, and the earthly wisdom of the Egyptians. The Lord had separated him, and, as the voices of earth began to fade away, his ear became tuned in to the voice of the Eternal, that speaketh from heaven. God cannot speak to those who are filled with the thoughts that belong to carnal minds. He must separate us from it all that we may learn to hear and know His voice. We must learn that deliverance does not come by our slaying Egyptians and burying them in the sand, but that it comes at what time, from what source, and by whose hand the eternal God has decreed from the foundation of the world.

We need go no farther with the story, for your heart has often thrilled as has mine as we read with awe the wonders of the deliverance that followed, the voice of God at the burning bush and the signs and wonders that followed by the hand of Moses when God's day of deliverance came, and how by a high and mighty hand He delivered His people. But what I want you to see is this: Before God moves according to His eternal purposes, He separates a people whose ears He makes deaf to all voices but His own and whose hearts become dead as stone to all purposes but His purpose.

It is not my purpose to fill up pages in recounting stories, but I know that our God is doing today as He has always done. He is preparing a people in secret in the backside of a spiritual wilderness for the great day of the coming of His kingdom.

There was a young man, Joseph, that dreamer who was so hated by his brothers that they sold him into the slavery of Egypt, and rejoiced in their hearts that they would not have to listen to his dreams any more. But they knew not that they were starting him on a journey into the center of God's will, and into the place where his dreams would all come true. What tears of lonesomeness and disappointment must have wet the face of this lad of seventeen summers, and, when for his righteousness he suffered the fetters of Egypt's cruel dank dungeon, even he did not know that the wheels of eternal purpose were turning and God was preparing a great deliverance for His own people and the whole earth besides. But before the deliverance could come, the deliverer must be separated from all voices of men that he might learn to listen to that voice which alone carries the wisdom of the universe. The weeks stretched on into months, the months into years, until Joseph was thirty. The last tiny grain of sand trickled through the hour glass of the Lord. The moment of deliverance had come, and God's man is ready. Egypt had long forgotten this stripling lad who years before had been cast into prison. His brethren back in Caanan had become even more callous and their consciences troubled them no longer. Even Jacob, his father, now grown feeble, mourned less often the loss of his son. Yesterday Joseph was languishing in the prison. Today, his ear attuned to the voice divine, he is the deliverer and the second ruler in the land.

Nineveh was a wicked city of one hundred twenty thousand souls. Their wickedness was so great that the God of heaven had declared he would rain down fire and brimstone and destroy them. Little did anyone know that God, who had pronounced such dire judgment against a wicked people, was at that very moment preparing a man to deliver them. Who on earth knew where Jonah was at that moment? The last person who had seen him saw him struggling for his life in the angry waves of the sea. Surely he had perished in the raging waters and no one would ever hear of him again. But God was separating His deliverer. Gone now were the voices of men that had clamored for his ear. Silent were the voices from within himself. In the belly of the whale in the bottom of the sea the voice of the eternal God was speaking, teaching His man to answer, Yes! to His will. And when the consecration was complete, the fish opened his mouth and vomited him out on the dry land and the deliverer went forth to Nineveh, clothed upon by the power of the Holy Ghost. Out of his mouth issued forth the two edged sword of the word of God and like corn before the sickle men fell on their faces in repentance. The words that thundered from his lips were not born of human wisdom or eloquence but of the Spirit of God. Like a spear they pierced the conscience. Like a sword they cut the heart until in forty days one hundred twenty thousand repented and turned to the Lord. History records no greater revival than this. Even Pentecost did not surpass it, but before such a mighty deliverance comes, God must separate the deliverer from the pandemonium of human voices that he may hear only the voice that speaketh from heaven.

Time and space would fail us to tell of Elijah whom God hid in a widow's house for three years while famine devastated the land and king Ahab scoured the countries in search of him. But while the famine waxed sore in the land and neither rain nor dew appeared on the earth, God had separated His man. There he sat in lonesomeness and idleness, far away from the preacher, the prophets of Baal and the prophets of the Lord. No need of the people or schemes for deliverance coax him to action. He must wait in separation listening only to the voice that spoke from heaven until the hour came for him to go stand before Ahab.
Little is told of John the Baptist, who for thirty years dwelt in the wilderness until the day of his showing unto Israel. God had shut this man away from the voices of scribes and Pharisees, away from the teachers and doctors of the law. No sounds of human wisdom reached his ear. He sat in no schools to hear the wisdom of the ancients, but separated and alone he heard a great voice saying, "Upon whomsoever you shall see the Spirit descending and remaining, the same is He that baptiseth with the Holy Ghost." And when the great day came, the Father sent him forth like a bolt of lightning to proclaim the message, "Repent for the kingdom of heaven is at hand."

Was not Paul separated into the wilderness of Arabia while he received the gospel of the grace of God? In my heart I can hear him saying, "When it pleased God, who separated me from my mother's womb, to reveal His son in me, immediately I conferred not with flesh and blood, neither went I up to Jerusalem to those who were apostles before me, but I went into Arabia, and returned again to Damascus." Gone were the teachings of Gamaliel; forgotten was his righteousness according to the law, and even the good things of the past were accounted as dung because of the excellence of the knowledge of Christ Jesus the Lord.

I cannot cease until I have mentioned John, the aged apostle, banished to lonely desolate Patmos, where, I suppose, his enemies hoped he would soon die of lonesomeness. But no! It was not for death that God had separated him, but that he might hear the voice of Christ as he had never heard that voice before. There in the Spirit on the day of the Lord came the voice as the sound of many waters, proclaiming, "I am Alpha and Omega, the first and the last." The voice of the lonely Galilean he had loved so long ago was now as the sound of many waters, and John, turning to see the face of Him who spoke, fell as a dead man before the glory of His countenance. But why was John on the lonely island? Because God was preparing him for a mighty, marvelous revelation of the things to come. His mind must not be cluttered with the opinions of men but with the truth and wisdom of God. Therefore he must be free of the conflicting confusing babble of earthly voices that he might hear that one voice that speaketh from heaven.

Does your bewildered heart often wonder why you are being separated in these last days? Do you wonder more and more why your earthly associations are becoming less and less? Wonder no longer, for as sure as He reigns in His heaven and sits on His glorious throne the greatest deliverance of all the ages is at hand. God today is preparing a people in His wilderness, in His deserts, in His prisons, on His lonely islands and in the four corners of the earth. They are a people whose ears are becoming deaf to every voice except the voice of their beloved. "He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith to the churches." "Incline your ear and come unto me, hear and your soul shall live, and I will make an everlasting covenant with you, even the sure mercies of David."

FAITHFULNESS

There is a very strange story related in 1 Kings, chapter 13 that has puzzled me for many years. It is the story of the prophet who came down from Judah and prophesied against the altar in Bethel. His prophetic words were immediately confirmed in that the altar was rent according to his word, and Jeroboam the king, putting forth his hand against him, was smitten. But the prophet, turning momentarily aside from the command of God, went to eat and drink in the house of another prophet, and for this disobedience was slain by a lion on his journey home. The story is very interesting and one should refresh his mind by reading it.

I do not understand the significance of the account, but there is one thing that is very, very clear. It is this: Once we embark on a course which has been chosen for us by the Lord, we must never allow anyone, whether he be the king of the land or a prophet of God, to turn us aside. This man refused to go to the king's house or to receive any reward of him, but because the prophet was a prophet and told him that an angel of the Lord had spoken to him to bring the man of God to his home, he was deceived by him and went and was slain. That is, indeed, a very sad and strange story.

It is very, very easy to be turned aside from a purpose, and because the purpose, which God puts in our heart is often long delayed, we are inclined to attempt some sort of psuedo arrangement or substitute to bring the promise to pass.
The act of Abraham in taking Hagar to wife to fulfill the promise of God is always looked upon as an act of unbelief and disobedience, but it really was an act of faith. Abraham believed the promise of God and staggered not at it, but like all the rest of us, seeing the promise was long delayed, he began to feel the necessity of taking some action to bring it to pass. That may seem good, but it only serves to bring grief. There are hundreds of men today who know according to the word of God that the kingdom is at hand, but because the promise is long delayed and slow in being fulfilled, they are scheming, organizing, planning and working in a frantic effort to bring the kingdom in. But their efforts will fail and fall to the ground. When God's zero hour comes, all the forces He has prepared from the foundation of the world will be set in motion and nothing will by any means hinder the coming of the glorious reign of Jesus Christ.

With God there is no crisis. With God there is no emergency. Such words are not in the vocabulary of the Almighty. Is there any evidence throughout the Bible that an emergency was ever thrust upon God, or that God was in a crisis and had to rush and hurry to plug some leak in the dam He had not expected to spring? Don't be silly! God is not only omnipotent. He is omniscient as well, and the end of a thing is no more mysterious to Him than the beginning. The only thing God requires of you and me is that we will lend our ear to Him and be faithful where He has put us. If He has given us a ministry to pray, let us pray and be faithful. If our only ministry is to wait, then let us quietly and patiently wait. In my opinion to wait is one of the hardest things God ever gives a man to do. David said, "Rest in the Lord, and wait patiently for Him; fret not thyself because of him that prospereth in the way, because of the man that bringeth wicked devices to pass." Of Abraham it is said, "After he had patiently endured, he received the promise."

It is very easy to become busy here and there, doing this and that, yet all the time forgetting the purpose for which God has set us aside. I think we would all be wise just now to keep the thing God is doing uppermost in our minds. It is not wise at this time to go plunging into the activities of earth. Let us not become busy here and there, trying to bring in the kingdom only to suddenly awake to find the thing God gave us to keep has escaped out of our grasp and we are left with nothing to hope for but judgment.

I always admire good businessmen. Diligent men will stand before kings and not before mean men. But if we go plunging headlong into the swirl and swim of the businesses of earth, making that the main object of life while pushing the purposes of God off into the corner, considering eternal values as a secondary thing to be attended to when we have nothing better to do, we will find we have been proven unfaithful and unworthy of the kingdom.

With all my heart I believe that a man's first consideration in all things should be, "How will this affect my standing with God?" Perhaps your associates require you to do things against which your heart rebels, just because it is expected of you. But you will do well to remember how Daniel purposed in his heart that he would not defile himself with the king's meat. He cared not a straw what became of him or his standing with the great king or with the government of Babylon. The one thing that concerned him was what would please the King of kings. Because Daniel was faithful and honored God, God was faithful and honored him, and in spite of all the conniving of all his enemies he rose to the position of the third ruler of the realm. It is required in stewards that a man be found faithful.

TITHING

I would like to say a word about faithfulness in tithing. I have no intention of trying to settle old stagnant questions about whether tithing belongs to law or grace or the kingdom. But I do say that a better system of giving never has and never will be devised. No method of giving is more simple, more rewarding, or more blessed of God. Those who faithfully tithe have a right to claim the blessing of God, and those who are unfaithful in this matter have no genuine claim to the faithfulness of God. Tithing is a partnership between yourself and God. Nine tenths belongs to you and one tenth belongs to Him. We all like to consider ourselves honest men, and would not cheat or short change an earthly partner. Most people are honest about taxes even though they hate them, yet the very same people think nothing of consistently month after month robbing God of the tenth that is His.

If you have no storehouse to bring your tithes into, that is no excuse. In a world where two billion people are always hungry surely good stewardship would find a way and a place for a tithe. I cannot believe that your responsibility ends by casting your money into the church treasury and forgetting about it, or giving to some man who writes you circular letters begging tithes for some vision he professes to have. Men who are always begging for money should be on the street comer with a monkey and a tin cup. Usually they are more concerned about themselves than the people they profess to be trying to help. Thirty years of watchfulness has taught me that irrefutable lesson. Nevertheless let us be faithful in tithing and bring them to a store house in which we have confidence, for we would not want to have to account for them when the great bookkeeper makes up the books. It is required of stewards that a man be found faithful.

Read the great scripture classic on tithing as found in Malachi 3:7-15 and see for yourself how it is part of Israel's preparation for the great day of the Lord, and the coming of Christ in Ch. 4.

CHRIST THE EXAMPLE

Jesus Christ took no part in earthly affairs. He hid himself lest they should attempt to force Him to be king, yet
He knew full well that He whose life was in union with the Father was ordained to be King of kings and to rule in timeless splendor.

"Art Thou a king then?" Pilate questioned. "Thou sayest that I am a king," He replied. "To this end was I born and for this purpose came I into the world." What value is a kingdom, which God has not given, or one taken by force of arms before the time? Few men are like David who refused to take the kingdom until God gave it to him and whose heart smote him for the mere act of cutting off the skirt of Saul's garment.

Full well Jesus knew the day would come when He would sit on the right hand of power and come riding upon the clouds of heaven. Full well He knew the nations would one day bring their glory and honor into His kingdom, and all nations would crown Him King of kings and Lord of lords and of the increase of His government there would be no end.

He took no part in the governments of earth and spoke no word for them or against them. When they inquired of Him, "Is it lawful to pay tribute to Caesar?" He replied, "Render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's and to God the things that are God's." And when they told Him Herod would kill Him, He answered, "Go and tell that fox, behold, I do cures today and tomorrow, and the third day I shall be perfected."

He did not concern Himself about the status of people. Never did He struggle to make the poor rich or the rich poor. He rebuked Judas for suggesting that the alabaster box should have been sold and the money given to the poor. "The poor ye have with you always, but Me ye have not always." There was a certain poor widow who, in giving a mite, had given more than all the rich men. There was a certain beggar who was carried by the angels into Abraham's bosom. And there was a certain rich man that was buried and lifted up his eyes in hell.
He did not hesitate to bless the poor or to pronounce woe upon the rich. Full well He knew that both riches and poverty are only temporal conditions that belong to time. Well He knew that the possession of riches was often a spiritual impediment tending to make one careless and forgetful of God. He knew that dire poverty brooked no spiritual impediment, but caused men to put their trust in Him who is the source of both temporal and spiritual supply.

Jesus healed the sick and performed His miracles from the standpoint of what and who He was. Never did He seek crowds but often withdrew from them. Never did He advertise His healings or gather crowds for the purpose of healing their bodies only. More than once He advocated silence by such commands as: "See thou tell no man." Or He conveyed Himself away before He was known as He did at the pool of Bethesda. His wonders were performed neither for show nor fame nor for advertisement, but as His Father directed. "I do only those things which I have seen of my Father," He said. When the disciples came rejoicing that even the demons were subject to them, He warned, "Rejoice not that the demons are subject unto you, but that your names are written hi heaven." No boast was made of any glory. No honor was sought of men. No pride was taken in healings, miracles, wisdom, or wonders, but in one thing only: "I do only those things that please the Father."

WHAT MANNER OF PERSONS
The first four words of the book of Genesis, "in the beginning God", constitute one of the most sublime statements ever written. Herein lies the true foundation of our faith for things past, things present, and things to come. Upon the sublime certainty that God almighty, all wise and immutable was God and Lord of the beginning of all things, all creatures, and all ages rests our certain hope both now and forevermore. Yea, and much more also, for not only was He in the beginning, but He Himself was the beginning as He will also be and even now is the end.

I speak with a heavy heart in saying that God’s dear people have lost their vision of the eternal majesty of God, their heavenly Father. They have allowed their horizon to become cluttered with arguments and schemes of men whose eyes see no further than the little stage upon which they are performing where they themselves have become the focal point. The world is filled with people each intent upon his little task, and the religious systems boast disciples by the million, each loudly proclaiming his theory, defending with vigor his doctrines while compassing land and sea to make proselytes to his cause, but you will be a fortunate person, indeed, if during your whole lifetime you are blessed with the acquaintance and fellowship of one man who really knows God. The church system has no lack of learned men whom they honor as theologians, men who spend their lives studying about God, but who seem never to learn that one may spend his whole life and eternity as well studying about God only to find in the end that he does not know Him. One man who knows God because he loves Him is better than ten thousand men who hold theories about Him. One humble little woman, rejoicing in the knowledge that the blood of Jesus Christ has cleansed her heart from all sin, is more precious in God's sight than all the learned doctors of divinity who dryly explain the intricacies of the doctrine of justification by faith, but in whose hearts the Justifier does not dwell.

Well might we disdain the forms and ceremonies of every sect on earth that we might lay hold on that blessed communion spoken of by Malachi the prophet, who wrote: "They that feared the Lord spake often one to another, and the Lord hearkened, and heard it, and a book of remembrance was written before Him for them that feared the Lord and that thought upon His name. And they shall be Mine, saith the Lord of hosts, in that day when I make up My jewels. And I will spare them as a man spareth his own son that serveth him." Mal. 3:16-17. The God who was in the beginning and the God who is the end can be known to mankind only as He reveals Himself to the heart that fervently loves Him. Man can study about God all his life and still not know Him, and that, alas, is what the multitude of professing Christians has done for centuries. Woe to us all, for even those who have been washed from their sins and who have received of His Spirit may often be included in that vast throng of professors who know the acts of God but do not know Him.

Have you ever meditated upon this scripture, "He made known His ways unto Moses, His acts unto the children of Israel?" Psa. 103:7. Read that scripture carelessly and it will tell you practically nothing, but let the light of divine revelation shine upon it and you will see the yawning gulf that lies between God's people who know Him and God's people who know Him not. There is almost a universe of difference between knowing the acts of God and knowing the ways of God. Possibly there was not one Israelite among the hosts that came out of Egypt with Moses who could not have described in detail the wonderful acts of the Lord. With their eyes they had beheld the ravaging plagues with which the Almighty had cursed the land. They had heard the terrifying thunder and had seen the searing lightning as it raced along the ground. They knew of the hail that had devastated Egypt but had left Israel unharmed. They often spoke of the horrible darkness that had filled the Egyptians with dread, even thick darkness that could be felt, while they in their houses walked in light. They had thrilled to see the angry waves roll back to stand in liquid heaps while they walked through on dry ground, and later had stood in awe as those mighty waves rolled back again to halt forever the advancing hosts of Pharaoh. They had eaten of the manna and had drunk of the life-giving water that gushed in torrents from the smitten rock, but, for all that they knew of the acts of God, they did not know God nor understand His ways. They murmured against Him at the sightest provocation and in their hearts turned back again to Egypt - Even the high priest Aaron, the brother of Moses, who had stood with him throughout all the wonders and signs that had been wrought in Egypt, seemed only to know the acts of God but not His ways. Could you believe that a man who knows God and is acquainted with His ways could ever be prevailed upon to fashion a golden calf and condone the worship of such an idol? Yet that is just what Aaron, the high priest, did. Ex. 32. Can you imagine a man who truly knows God murmuring against the Lord's anointed? Yet he and his sister Miriam spake against Moses. Num. 12:1. But with Moses it was different, for God had revealed Himself unto him. He saw far beyond the physical acts and manifestations of the Lord because the Almighty had revealed His eternal purposes unto him and he had become one spirit with the Father. It was the eternal purpose that lay beyond the physical acts that God revealed to Moses. Thus it is said in a statement of contrast: He made known His ways unto Moses, His acts to the children of Israel.

Not all who read these lines will understand them, but be it known unto you that no man ever truly knows God who is acquainted only with the acts of God. You may have witnessed miracles without number. Your own body may have been miraculously healed of disease. You may have given half your goods to feed the poor or spoken with the tongues of men and angels, but if you have rejoiced in the outward sign and manifestation rather than the eternal purpose, you are yet a babe and have never come to really know Him. Have you ever wondered why it was that Paul, the author of those two masterpieces of inspiration, 1 Cor. chapters 12 and 14 concerning the proper function of the gifts of the Spirit, should halt right in the middle of his discourse to write, "When that which is perfect is come, then that which is in part shall be done away…!'' When I was a child, I spake as a child, I understood as a child, I thought as a child; but when I became a man, I put away childish things. For now we see though a glass darkly, but then face to face. Now I know in part, but then shall I know even as also I am known" 1 Cor. 13:10-13.

Many of God's dear people in our day are like the elated disciples who, returning from their missionary journey, were full of stories concerning the wonders they had seen done. "Why, Master," they cried, "even the devils are subject to us." And Jesus with that note of mature pity replied, "In this rejoice not, that the spirits are subject unto you; but rather rejoice because your names are written in heaven." Luke 10:10, 20. The thing that was of eternal importance was the thing of which they stood in ignorance, while the thing that concerned the acts of God was that which gave them boisterous delight.

Surely no one would ever be foolish enough to say that Jesus did not believe in divine healing or to deny that every spirit was: subject to His word of power. He positively demonstrated His omnipotence in every sphere of life whether of things in heaven, in earth or under the earth. Every form of sickness known to mankind fled before His touch. The most violent of demons were cast out at His word. The elements in all their tempestuous turmoil were still at His word of command, and the violent mob who in impetuous fury came to capture Him in Gethsemane went backward and fell to the ground, groveling and helpless before the majesty of His presence. John 18:2-9. But He did not rejoice in any of these things. Rather He rejoiced continually in the knowledge of God's will. "Lo, I come to do Thy will, O God," was the continual consecration of His heart. Where can more sublime consecration be found than was manifest in His prayer recorded in John 12? As He faced the great task for which He came, a strange and troubled uneasiness that often precedes events of great importance was in Him when He said, "Now is My soul troubled; and what shall I say! Father, save Me from this hour; but for this cause came I unto this hour. Father, glorify Thy name. Then came there a voice from heaven, saying, I have both glorified it and will glorify it again." John 12:27-28. And what shall be our prayer in these perilous times? Shall we say, "Father, save me from this hour", or shall we say, "Father, glorify Thy name?"

As days with quickening footsteps slip away into months and months hasten into years, a deep spiritual conviction is arising in the hearts of the elect of God warning them that days of eternal importance are now at hand. It will not be long until the kingdoms of this world become the kingdoms of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ. Only a few more shadows will gather before the gigantic injustice of this evil realm of the carnal mind will collapse before the magnificent shining forth of the Sun of Righteousness. The creation that long has groaned beneath the night of oppression, injustice, inequity and sorrow will be emancipated and delivered into the glorious freedom of God's sons. Even now, while we meditate upon these lines, the mighty work of preparation is going on. The beautiful feet are coming forth from the womb. They are being washed that the whole body of sons might be clean every whit. They are being shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace. They are climbing the lofty mountain of wisdom and understanding, counsel and might, knowledge and reverence for the Lord. Soon all the world in harmonious chorus will chant in glad refrain, "How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace, that bringeth good tidings of good, that publisheth salvation, that saith unto Zion, Thy God reigneth." Isa. 52:7. For "His feet shall stand in that day upon the mount of Olives, which is before Jerusalem on the east, and the mount of Olives shall cleave in the midst thereof toward the east and toward the west, and there shall be a very great valley; and half of the mountain shall remove toward the north, and half of it toward the south. And ye shall flee to the valley of the mountains; for the valley of the mountains shall reach unto Azal: yea, ye shall flee, like as ye fled before the earthquake in the days of Uzziah, king of Judah: and the Lord my God shall come and all the saints with thee. And it shall come to pass in that day that the light shall not be clear, nor dark: but it shall be one day which shall be known to the Lord, not day, nor night; but it shall come to pass that, at evening time, it shall be light. And it shall be in that day, that living waters shall go forth from Jerusalem; half of them toward the former sea, and half of them towards the hinder sea: in summer and in winter shall it be. And the Lord shall be king over all the earth: in that day there shall be one Lord, and His name one.” Zech. 14:4-9.

Every word of this prophecy will come true just as it has been written. I for one must plead guilty to being a literalist, yet God has taught me that all natural things have spiritual counterparts. All types and prophecies have at least three fulfillments - one small and local, one greater and wider, and one limitless and universal. One would, I think, need but half an eye to perceive that even now the feet are ascending the mountain. Right now there is a mighty earthquake that is shaking the very foundation of every movable thing. Even now the saints are fleeing from the earthquake to find their refuge in the valley of the mountain of God, where they will hide eternally in Him. Now is the day when it is neither light nor dark, for, though there is light and truth abroad in the earth, it is so mingled with darkness and confusion that mankind is baffled to know which is light and which is darkness. But this day shall be a day different from all other days, for, though all other days grow dark toward evenings, it shall come to pass that in the evening of this day "there shall be light".

When Babylon with her confusion has fallen, when the stone cut from the mountain without hands has smitten the clay feet of the Babylonian image and her power has dissolved into the dust of the summer threshing floor, then shall the stone, the living stone, the stone which was rejected of the builders, rise to become the head stone. It shall increase unto a great mountain that will fill all the earth with the knowledge and wisdom, glory and power of the kingdom of the Lord and of His Christ. See Dan. 2:31-35.

We are now living in an hour of great consequence. Never in the history of all the earth was there a more important hour than this. As the days have passed by, an almost dreadful solemnity has settled down upon my spirit until I cannot shake off that restlessness which one feels while awaiting events of momentous importance. Do soldiers sleep well before the battle or do visions of tomorrow's strife alarm their dreams? Why, even Jesus amazed His disciples and filled their hearts with fear as in the eagerness of the hour He quickened His pace on that final walk to Jerusalem that would end in His crucifixion and the fulfillment of the purpose for which He came into the world. See Mark 10:32. Even nature itself is manifesting the restlessness of expectancy as the earnest expectation of the creature (creation) waits for the manifestation of the sons of God. Since, then, these things are so and all things from the least of earth to the greatest in heaven bear witness in joyful chorus, echoing from heart to heart the blessed refrain of emancipation, what manner of persons ought we to be in all holy conversation and godliness? Long ago our blessed Lord Jesus Christ, the head Son, lifted up His eyes to heaven and with a sigh of triumphant relief He said, "Father, the hour has come". John 17:1. Ah, what an hour that was! That was an hour planned in the purposes and counsels of God before the foundation of the ages, before ever man breathed the breath of life and became a living soul. Long eons had He waited for that great hour to come as suns rose and set, millenniums waxed and waned, dispensations came and went, and ages passed away. But now at last the hour had come, the D Day, the H Hour. Of all the hours that had come and gone through time this was the day and this was the hour, for upon this pivot turned the plan of the ages and in it eternal redemption would be accomplished.

But now once more at the end of this age stands another son, even the body of the sons of God, not the head Son but the feet sons, and again the hour has come. The hour in which we now live was planned of God before the foundation of the world. Any instant now, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, the dead in Christ shall rise first to be joined to the Head and we, the feet, which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them to meet the Lord in the air, and so shall we ever be with the Lord. The saints who have died through the ages - the breast, the shoulders, the arms, the thighs, and the legs - cannot be perfected without us, the feet, for they without us shall not be made perfect. Heb. 11:40. But when these precious sons arise to stand upon their glorious feet, then shall we be made perfect together. "Father, oh Father, glorify Thy name!" Then came a voice from heaven, saying, "I have both glorified it and I will glorify it again." Oh, God, grant to Thy people such divine wisdom and understanding that their hearts might assuredly know that the hour is at hand for all these things to be fulfilled.
WHAT MANNER OF PERSONS?

Since, then, these things are so, what manner of persons ought we to be in all holy conversation and godliness? Our blessed Lord Jesus Christ, the Head of that vast body of sons now being created in His image, was no ordinary person. "Never man spake like this man," said the soldiers. "I find no fault in Him", Pilate declared. "This is My beloved Son in whom I am well pleased," thundered the Father from heaven. "He was holy, harmless, undefiled and separate from sinners," wrote the apostle to the Hebrews. And how much more could we testify to the beauty of His life in all patience, kindness, longsuffering, truth, power, wisdom and knowledge, and tell of the marvelous works He did as the multitudes of sick and demon possessed were delivered every one! And what shall we say of His sacrificial death and His triumphant resurrection, His ascension into heaven, and His pouring forth of the Holy Spirit that all who believed might be born again and become sons of God in the midst of a crooked and perverse spirit, among whom we shine as heavenly lights? No, Jesus was no ordinary man; and the time has come when we who have heard His voice and followed Him shall not live as ordinary men, but as sons of God and members of Christ, bone of His bone, flesh of His flesh, spirit of His Spirit, as saviours appearing upon Mount Zion to judge the mount of Esau (the flesh), and the kingdom shall be the Lord's. Obadiah 21.

How my heart thrills in anticipation of such marvelous grace! We are slowly learning that the light and momentary afflictions in which we often whine and groan are but for a moment and they are working/or us, not against us, yielding a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory while we look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen, for the things which are seen are only temporal, but the things which are not seen are eternal.

It is with grief that I now confess the fear that many people who have been talking glibly about sonship do not possess the spirit of sons which God has sent forth, crying, Abba Father. Sonship is not a position attained by signs and wonders and mighty deeds but is the Spirit of Christ in our spirits crying, "Our Father, Thy will be done! Thy will be done!" Many have considered sonship to be a sort of reward for their deeds, for their preaching, prophesying and healing, but sonship is not a reward for anything. It is a divine bestowal of God's eternal grace by which men receive the spirit of adoption to walk as sons of God in the midst of a perverse world and an apostate church system.

A SEPARATE PEOPLE

There are some things, which should be a great help to all people who are longing to be delivered from this crooked and perverse age into the glorious freedom of God's sons. Let us first recognize and confess that we have been a people of tradition. We have accepted what we were taught by priest and teacher and that often without question. We have not searched diligently and personally to see if these things were so. We have followed like sheep in the way of Babylon, imagining that her harlotish ways were the ways of God. We have accepted what men had to say, but have not listened to what God had to say. We have prayed and begged for revival in the churches, never considering that God had no desire or inclination to revive that, which always turned men's hearts from Him. I challenge any man to search the past centuries and produce a case where Go a has ever revived a sect or denomination. Look at every revival of church history and you will see the testimony clearly given that the Lord does not put new wine in old bottles. Did He ever revive the Roman Catholics? Certainly not. He called Luther out from among them. Did He ever revive Lutheranism after it became a system? Certainly not. He called out a people under Wesley who became known as Methodists. Did He ever revive them? No, He did not. He called out another people known and hated as the Pentecostal people. But the moment they began to organize, their glory also began to ebb away until they have a name that icy live, but the glory has departed from them. Even so it is with all people in all ages.

The people who are longing to know the glory of sonship have one great lesson to learn no matter how disagreeable that lesson may be. Should I write a whole book on the subject, I could not express the truth with more concise pertinence than did Paul when he wrote these words: "Wherefore come out from among them, and by ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you, and will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be My sons and daughters, saith the Lord almighty." 2 Cor. 6:17-18. Whether or not we want to accept such challenge will never alter the truth of it, for the truth is that all who would be received as sons of God must cut their ties with the harlots of Babylon and from that there can be no reprieve. The sublime truth taught by the parable of the prodigal son was that this son - for he was a son - had lavishly wasted his life and is gifts to satisfy self. In prodigal extravagance he devoured his living with harlots; which things are an allegory setting forth in clear light the truth that sons of God shall not waste their inheritance among the harlot daughters of Babylon. After he had squandered all and had come to the end of everything, including himself, joining himself to a citizen of that country, he found himself feeding swine - not sheep, I say, but swine. The scathing type is, I fear, sound, though we dread to admit that in in Babylon system the nature of swine is more prevalent than the nature of sheep. He hungered and thirsted for better days, but the more he hungered the worse things got until he made the momentous decision that all sons must eventually make. "I will arise and go to my Father. I will leave the harlots, leave the swine, leave the citizens of confusion to which I have been joined, and return to become one mind with the Father."

The story of the prodigal son is too familiar to need repetition here. It is not the type but the anti-type, not the prodigal but you and I who are in the spotlight now in this the end of the age. The harlot systems are soon to be destroyed. There must be a separation unto God, a coming out from among them, a being separated, a refusal to touch the unclean thing, for what is more unclean than an harlot? And who can pity you less after she has brought you to want? These are serious days and hours of momentous decision. Not only does the Spirit urge me to write these things, but the steady stream of mail that reaches me continually testifies that God is calling out a people for His name. From America to Australia, from New Zealand to Britain, and from Europe to the islands of the sea sons are arising to return to the Father. He is calling people from among the Jews, His elect from among the Catholics, His chosen from among the Protestants that they may be one new man in Christ, having broken down the walls of partition that were between them.

A CONFIDENT PEOPLE

It is never wise to make changes until one is sure of himself before God. It will not help to come out because I say so, for all truth is a matter of revelation. God's servants may tell you about it, but only God can reveal it unto you. But, when He opens the eyes of your understanding, then you will wonder, "Why did I not see this before?" Our confidence in God must be firmly founded upon the knowledge that God has spoken. God has spoken by two immutable things in which it is impossible for Him to lie. Heb. 6:18. The two immutable things are: first, His promise and secondly, His oath. The promise that He gave to Abraham (Heb. 6:16,17) He confirmed later by an oath (Heb. 6:16,17) that by these two immutable things, God's promise and God's oath by which it was impossible for God to lie, we might have strong confidence, who have fled for refuge to lay hold on the hope that is set before us.

In these the final hours of the dispensation many learned but wicked men are casting doubt upon the word of God, but, if God's word cannot be trusted, then our harbors are whirlpools and all our rocks are naught but clouds. God's word can be trusted, for in the beginning was the word and in the end will be the word. By the word of God the heavens were of old and the earth standing out of the water and in the water. By the word of God the heavens shall be dissolved and the elements melt with fervent heat. By the word of God we look for new heavens and a new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness, for, though the heaven and the earth shall pass away, God's word shall not pass away. The word was made a Son. The word is now being made sons, for God, who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in times past unto the fathers by the prophets, has in these last days spoken by His Son, or, literally, hath spoken in Son. How glorious are Thy thoughts, O God, and Thy ways past finding out!

It is not necessary for us to understand everything that God has said, but it is essential for us to believe Him. His ways are too high and wonderful for us as yet. Many things we do not comprehend, but, believing, we rejoice. I do not know how God looses the bands of Orion, causing the snow and ice to melt and the waters to flow, but I know He does it. I know very little about His promised coming again, but I believe Him when He said, "I will come again." I understand but little of His glorious kingdom, which is soon to dawn on the whole earth, but I know that kingdom is coming, and all the details can be safely left to Him. I know not how He will fulfill His promise that in the dispensation of the fullness of time He will gather together all things in Christ, but I believe Him and it will be just as He promised, all theology and arguments of men to the contrary notwithstanding.
Let us then have strong confidence in God to lay hold on the hope that is set before us, looking unto Jesus the author and finisher of our faith. Let those who will say, "There is no God." What difference should their blind unbelief make to our strong confidence in Him? Let a mouse defend a lion, but God needs no defense from us. Let those who will declare that God is dead. We need not argue with men whose iniquity has made them completely insensible to the God in whose hand their breath is. Let us rather show that the life we now live in the flesh we live by the faith of the Son of God who loved us and died for us and, being raised from the dead, ever liveth within to transform our own lives into His glorious likeness.

Among the many titles and names of the most, high God, one above all others fills the heart with the abiding confidence of His ever present nearness. That name is so simple that it scarcely seems to be a name at all, yet in it we see Him standing in the past, in the present and in the future. It tells us He is there whether the earth is filled with sunshine or immersed in the deepest shadow. It proclaims the wonder of His presence when we with eagles' wings rise to exalted heights of revelation and understanding and assures us (but He is just as near when the journey is too great and we sit beneath our juniper tree, wishing death would mercifully take us away. It is the name "I Am".

Long ago Moses received a commission from God. He was eighty years old when the angel appeared to him in the burning bush. He was old enough to be free from earthly ambitions, weary enough with earth's bitter disappointments to be content to spend life's evening tending the quiet and gentle sheep in the backside of the desert and sage enough to have learned that of all the creatures God had made none was more unpredictable, unthankful, unmerciful and unkind than that stubborn rebel called man. It is little wonder that this old man was horrified at the thought of returning to Egypt to deliver a people that had already rejected him. Many were his efforts to convince the Lord that he was not the man to deliver them. "And Moses said unto God, Behold, when I come unto the children of Israel, and shall say unto them, The God of your fathers hath sent me unto you; and they shall say to me, What is His name? What shall I say unto them? And God said unto Moses, I AM that I AM and He said, Thus shah thou say unto the children of Israel, I AM hath sent me unto you." Ex. 3:13-14. I AM! I AM! Not I was or I will be, but I AM. He is ever present. He is always there. He is always here. "Before Abraham was, I AM," Jesus told the Jews. John 8:58. "Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the age." Matt. 28:20. "It is I; be not afraid." "Fear not, I am with you."

Once there was an atheist who wanted his infant daughter to believe as he did. He did not want her to have any superstitions about God, so to impress her young mind that God simply did not exist he hung a plaque at the foot of her bed inscribed with the words, God is nowhere. The little girl could not read very well, so she sounded out the words to herself. When her father returned from work that evening, he asked her if she could read the words he had written for her. "Oh, yes," she replied, "it says God is now here." So you see, this is the confidence we have in Him. What men say makes no difference. He is the I AM. Let fools preach that God is dead. He is still the I AM, and ever liveth to make intercession for us. Whether the sunshine sheds its radiant beams upon us or the tempestuous waves threaten to swamp our frail bark, the I AM is always present, saying, "Fear not; I am with you." Seventy-six times in the Bible the term "fear not" is repeated to bring assurance to every troubled heart in all manner of circumstances. To those who walk the unfamiliar path that leads us to the triumphant hour of manifestation and the kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ His ancient words of assurance come ringing down the centuries to dispel our woes and calm our fears: "Fear not, little flock; it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." Luke 12:32.

MAKING YOURSELF AVAILABLE

In this the end of the age there is an ever, increasing babble of voices clamoring for our ear, every one with a tongue, an interpretation or a doctrine. Well did Solomon describe this loud mouthed church woman when he said, "A foolish woman is clamorous; she is simple, knowing nothing. For she sitteth at the door of her house, on a seat in the high place in the city, to call passengers who go right on their ways: Whoso is simple, let him turn in hither; and as for him that wanteth understanding, she saith to him, Stolen waters are sweet, and bread eaten in secret is pleasant. But he knoweth not that the dead are there; and that her guests are in the depths of hell." Prov. 9:13-18. Not only are the pulpits filled with voices pouring forth a murky stream of senseless doctrines and dogmas of men, but the airwaves are crowded with religious clamor both in word and picture, and the mails also are literally stuffed with religious literature, often of such mediocre quality that it is a waste of time either to print it or read it. If we attempt to listen to all the voices that are shouting to gain our ears, we will certainly miss the great plan of God. There is a voice divine filled with the wisdom and counsel of eternal ages that is worthy of the attentive ear of men and angels. But that voice, alas, is seldom heard because we are so busy listening to the paltry observations of men that we never make ourselves available to the voice of God.

It is impossible to over-estimate the infinite importance of becoming personally acquainted with the voice of the Lord. God still speaks to the hearts of men. He is ever instructing them in the way they should go. Seldom perhaps it is that he speaks with an audible voice, but many there must be who are acquainted with the still small voice of the Lord as He speaks to the inner man, making His will and purposes known. Those precious saints who would know the voice of the Lord must learn one lesson above all others. They must learn to make themselves available to God. There must be special times when the sons of God present themselves before the Lord. Job 1:16. There must be definite times when all other voices are shut out, when all duties are laid aside except the duty of waiting upon Him, when every imagination of our own heart is cast down and every high thought and thing is brought into obedience to Christ. Cf. 2 Cor. 10:5. There must come a season and that season should come every day, when you present yourself to the Lord, not to make demands but to hear and listen to the voice of eternal wisdom, for in the awesome stillness of God's presence the inner man is full of expectancy as he hearkens to the instructions, the reproofs, the rebukes and the commands of the Almighty.

It was in the year that King Uzziah died that Isaiah saw the Lord. Isa. 6:1. It was when Job's comforters had all ceased their talking and Job had ceased from his arguments that he heard the voice of God. See Job chapters 38-42. Oh what blessedness will be yours when you know the truth of the sacred text, "Be still and know that I am God" Psa. 46:10. Most of us, I fear, are like little Samuel who had spent his young life listening to the instruction of Eli, but when God spoke to him, he did not know God's voice because he had never heard it. But when Eli told him how to listen to God, then he received instruction from the Lord. 1 Sam. 3. Even so it is today.

It may be that this fact has never dawned upon you, but look about you and you will see that everything, absolutely everything, in modern society is geared to keep us all so occupied with temporal things that there is never time to be silent before God or time to give the Lord opportunity to speak to the heart. Saint and sinner, saved and unsaved are entertained artificially from morning till night. Every spare moment is taken up with the disturbing noise of some sort of entertainment until I suppose it would be thought a singular thing indeed should a man be found alone with his thoughts and with his God. The church system in her backslidden confusion has adopted the attitude of the world, being conformed to the world system in all respects. It is a well, known fact that the pastors of assemblies strain every effort to keep the people constantly busy. All their spare time must be taken up with some church activity. Whether it is of any value or not, it must be done just to keep the people occupied, for it is reasoned that while the people are busy they have no time to look beyond their little realm. It should not be necessary here to recite the numerous activities engaged in, but suffice it to say that in most cases every night of the week is occupied with some kind of meeting with two or three sessions on Sunday. This may be the way to make assembly line followers of a creed, but it is not the path by which men come to know God, for it is possible to chum with friends and associates, subscribe to the doctrines and creeds of your group, and have the whole Bible at your finger tips while your soul remains empty and void of a personal relationship with the Lord.

Sons of God are not made by continual association with religious people. They are made by continual association with their Lord and heavenly Father. They make themselves available to Him to listen to His voice, to read His word, to enquire of His wisdom and to ask of His understanding. "One thing have I desired of the Lord," said David, "that will I seek after; that I may dwell in the house of the Lord all the days of my life, to behold the beauty of the Lord, and to enquire in His temple." Psa. 27:4. And let us see the results of such association with God, for he continues, "In time of trouble He shall hide me in His pavilion; in the secret of His tabernacle shall He hide me. He shall set me up upon a rock." Verse 5. There is something infinitely different about the man or woman who has been in communion with God. The revelation of the Lord within comes shining through the darkness of all outward coverings. Lack of schooling, inability to speak or explain are things of naught when the heart speaks from the wisdom of the clear shining light of God within His tabernacle.
When Jesus sat by the wayside well with the woman of Samaria, He spoke truths to her heart that had never been revealed to any Pharisee or doctor of the law, and, while she communed while Him, something was born in her heart that never ceased to grow. A lamp was lighted to shine with increasing brilliance forever. The endless wonders of the words He spoke that day have never ceased, and I am sure that during the remainder of her life on earth she bore radiant testimony to the wonder of meeting Him face to face. Could we imagine that even in death such a gushing fountain of life could possibly cease? Far be this from the truth, for in heaven itself the water that quenched her thirst flows as a river from the throne.

I am sure that you have noticed, in reading the Bible, that the greatest truths ever spoken to mankind were spoken to the ones and twos who had made themselves available to Jesus. When Nicodemus, the ruler of the Jews, turned aside from the teachings and doctrines of the scribes and Pharisees to make himself available to Jesus Christ, truth was unfolded to him such as was never spoken before in all the history of the world, yea, and to my knowledge was never repeated by Him again. Stand with me by the door, if you will, and hear their conversation as understanding is imparted to a troubled heart and light eternal comes to dispel the darkness of the natural mind and death's morbid gloom is displaced by life eternal. "Master, we know that Thou art a teacher come from God," said he, "for no man can do these miracles that Thou doest, except God be with him. Jesus answered and said unto him, Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God. Nicodemus saith unto Him, How can a man be born when he is old? Can he enter the second time into his mother's womb and be born? Jesus answered, Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter the kingdom of God. That which is born of the flesh is flesh; and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit. Marvel not that I said unto thee, Ye must be born again. The wind bloweth where it listeth and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh and whither it goeth: so is every one that is born of the Spirit." John 3:2-8. "Art thou a master in Israel and knowest not these things?" Jesus asked. Verse 10. Woe to them, for Israel had many masters who knew not the things of the Spirit. Woe to us also, for the church system with all its degrees and learning knows little of the things of God's Spirit. It is the revelation of the Lord that makes known eternal things to longing hearts who make themselves available to Him.

Was it not to weeping Martha that Jesus spoke the eternal truth, "I am the resurrection and the life; he that believeth on Me, though he were dead, yet shall he live; and whosoever liveth and believeth on Me shall never die?" John 11:25. Martha had heard of His coming and had run out on the road to meet him. Her disconsolate heart, mourning the death of her only brother, drew from her lips the complaint, "If Thou hadst been here, my brother had not died," and with a note of questioning hope she added, "But I know that even now whatsoever Thou wilt ask of God, God will give it Thee." "Thy brother shall rise again" He assured her with godly joy. To this she replied, "I know that he shall rise in the resurrection at the last day." "I am the resurrection and the life," our Lord replied, and with this eternal truth He filled the heart of a weeping woman who had run out on the road at the message of His coming to make herself available to Him.

It was Abraham's aloneness that made him a friend of God, or should I have said that it was Abraham's friendship with God that made him a lonely man. Yet he who dwells in God is never lonely or alone, for the promise is ever with him, "Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the age." Enoch could not have walked with God if he had not made himself available to God to walk with Him and commune with Him while all other voices were shut out and their clamoring denied. The voices of scribes and Pharisees, priests and preachers have become as the clamor of high pressure salesmen who hawk their wares in the public place and sell their trinkets from door to door, and those who buy their wares find them something much less than was represented. I am sick of men who harangue about issues and I am sick of the issues as well. I am weary of doctrines and dogmas, slants and shades of so-called truth. I am tired to death of hearing of who is right and who is wrong, or whether this man or that man is God's man of the hour. I shall rise far above this slimy cesspool of religious debate to dwell where God dwells in the Spirit.

If you, my friend, have looked about you, you will certainly have seen that it is human opinions that divide men from one another. It is the insistent propounding of doctrines that are supposed to be truth, but which in reality do nothing but separate God's children. How often has my spirit bled and drooped in the dust of despondency as some brother or sister turned his heart away because I had not embraced his pet doctrine or had failed to mention it in any of the articles I had written or because I had not been enlightened upon some thing that was of great importance to him. Such shoddy experience can never be with men who love God and know Him, for instead of devoting their time to senseless pros and cons concerning the resurrection, they will know Him who is both the resurrection and the life. Instead of vain imaginations and explanations about the water of life they will have that artesian well within them, springing up with living water and flowing out to satisfy all who would drink at its Living fountain. What good are debates about the new birth? Is it not much better to receive and experience it?

Is it not much better to know God than to endlessly war and debate about the Godhead as so many do? I am convinced that those who debate about God have neither seen Him nor known Him, for had they done so, there would be no argument. They are like the little girl that was diligently drawing a picture of some mysterious creature, who, when asked by her father what she was drawing, said, "I am drawing a picture of God." "Well," said her father, "you cannot draw a picture of God because no one knows what God looks like." "Well," replied the child, "when I am finished with this picture, they will know." We smile at this and well we might, but is her answer more simple than the vanity of men who, not having seen God, describe His appearance and, not having known Him, take pride in their explanations?

There is not a man on earth who is qualified to teach God's truth until God has revealed it unto him by the Spirit. Perhaps one of our greatest misconceptions is in our understanding of the words of Paul, "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed," 2 Tim. 2:15. This verse of scripture is almost always used as an exhortation for men and women to become students of the word of God or to urge upon them the necessity of attending a Bible School to imbibe knowledge by study. I do not believe such a thought as that ever entered the inspired mind of the apostle. He was not telling us to study books. He was not even telling us to study the Bible, good and necessary as that may be, but he was telling the people that their lifelong study should concern their being approved of God. Did you ever read this sentence? "Jesus of Nazareth, a man approved of God." Acts 2:22. Are we to conclude that God's approval rested upon Him because He was a diligent student of books and doctrines? No! Never! That is not what made Him approved. Even the miracles and wonders that He performed were not in themselves the basis of God's approval, but rather the constant attitude of His life: "I do always those things that please the Father." Well did Paul say, "The kingdom of God is not meat or drink, but righteousness and joy and peace in the Holy Spirit, for he that in these things serveth Christ is acceptable with God and approved of men." Rom. 14:17-18.

That you might be approved of God should be your lifelong prayer and study that you might know Him well, become acquainted with His eternal purposes, and above all that His will for you as an individual might be manifest unto you that you might walk in it and thus be blessed with His approval. I frankly confess that I am sick to death of preachers and meetings. I am tired of seeing people sit like dumb sheep to listen to the ideas and opinions of men, accept their interpretation, practice their theories, act on their advice, and yet never come face to face with God at all. Why should these religious professionals be allowed to squeeze everybody into their mold or try to fashion all men after their liking? Is not God Himself the Potter? Are we not all the clay in His hands? Is it not God who is working in us to will and do His good pleasure? Why then must I be a follower of this hireling or that when there is one Lord and one Head that is higher than the heaven itself and when there is faith in each one of us to reach beyond the veil and hold the Head that we may be joined perfectly with Him?

There is no value in belonging to a sect. Even the thought of adherence to a denomination is a schism and a division in the mystical body of Christ. It is a separation of joints and marrow, a hindrance to that which every joint supplieth. Flee from these things that you may lay hold on Christ, for all that comes before Him is naught but a thief and a robber that will steal away the precious unity of His Spirit, which alone can make the unity of every member of His body true and glorious. I am convinced in my heart that, the moment men wild women begin to make themselves available to God, at that same moment the bondage and shackles of creeds, sects, denominational, preachers, programs, meetings and all other inventions of man will begin to fall away, for he whom the Son makes free in free indeed.

We have made lies our refuge and under falsehood have we hid ourselves. We have trusted in our church affiliations to deliver us in the time of the overflowing scourge, but all it has proved to be is a covenant with death and an agreement with hell.
Isa. 28:17-18. But the hour has come in this the end of the age when God is laying in Zion a chief corner stone, even Jesus Christ, the Head of the true body. He is a precious stone, a tried foundation, and those who trust in Him shall not be confounded. Isa. 28:16. Now is the hour when judgment is being laid to the line and righteousness to the plummet (or plumb-bob). Now is the hour for the sweeping away of the refuge of lies that has held God's people in the vice-like grip of the Babylonish systems. Now is the time for God's people to break their connections with the Delilahs and Jezebels, the Catholic mother of harlots and the host of her Protestant daughters. This is the time above all times to lay hold on that tried foundation stone to become one in spirit with Jesus Christ, for all who are one spirit with Him are one body in Him. This is the true church and beside it there can be no other either in heaven or in earth. This is the virgin male, the sons of God, the head of that female bride who will come to perfection after the man Christ Jesus has been formed in completeness, from Jesus of Nazareth, the Head of the body of sons, to ourselves the glorious feet of that same mystical body of Christ. Then shall the sons of God because of eternal unity be called the Son, even as the Lord, when calling the multitudes out of Egypt, declared, "Out of Egypt have I called My Son."

It is neither good nor necessary to know men after the flesh. That is why I never clutter up the paper with pictures of myself. That is why I seldom encourage people to visit me. Who is Paul or who is Apollos but ministers by whom you believed? And how much less important am I, the least of all His saints! Seek not man whose breath is in his nostrils, but seek Him who through the eternal Spirit offered Himself without spot to God. Make yourself and your whole life available to Him. Wait before Him in silence and awe that He may speak and make His will known to your waiting heart. "For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God."
"Now before the feast of the Passover, when Jesus knew His hour was come that He should depart out of this world unto the Father, having loved His own which were in the world, He loved them unto the end. And supper being ended, the devil having now put into the heart of Judas Iscariot, Simon's son, to betray Him; and that He was come from God and went to God; He riseth from supper, and laid aside His garments; and took a towel, and girded Himself. After that He poureth water into a basin, and began to wash the disciples' feet, and to wipe them with the towel wherewith He was girded. Then cometh He to Simon Peter; and Peter said unto Him, Lord, dost Thou wash my feet? Jesus answered and said unto him, What I do thou knowest not now; but thou shalt know hereafter. Peter saith unto Him, Lord, not my feel only, but also my hands and my head. Jesus saith unto him, He that is washed needeth not save to wash his feet, but is clean every whit: and ye are clean, but not all." John 13:1-10.

The earthly life of our blessed Lord and Christ was a life of parables from beginning to end. Parable after parable flowed from His anointed lips teaching mankind all manner of truth concerning both Himself and the long awaited kingdom of God. Jesus came to proclaim the kingdom and at the end of this age He will take His seat on His exalted throne to reign unto the age of the ages. So frequent and diverse were the parables He spake that in one instance the statement is clearly made, "Without a parable spake He not unto them." Matt. 13:34. The disciples, becoming aware of this method of instruction, asked Him plainly, "Why speakest Thou unto them in parables?" Matt. 13:10. The answer He gave them clearly shows that there are certain elect people who are ordained to see and believe the truth now, while others are left in darkness now to await their time of enlightenment in a coming age. His reply to their question was this: "Because it is given unto you to know the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven, but to them it is not given." Verse 11.

The teachings of Jesus were continually filled with parables, understood only by those elect to whom God has given eyes to see and hearts to understand. And it must further be stated with the greatest possible emphasis that not only in word were His parables given, but every act of His anointed life contained in itself some great parabolic teaching concerning the coming kingdom of God. Consider, for instance, His miraculous birth, which made God alone to be His Father and Himself the Son of God. Does this not teach us all that unless a man be born from above, born again and renewed in the image of the great Creator, he is not a son of God at all? How then would it be possible for one to see the kingdom of God until that blessed birth from above takes place in response to living faith in his own heart?

The wilderness experience of Jesus Christ, in which he overcame Satan and all that is in the world - the lust of the flesh (appetite), the lust of the eyes (avarice), and the pride of life (ambition) - is surely a parable, teaching every prospective overcomer not only the way he ought to go, but the way he must go. We well know that Jesus paid it all. We are confident that He died for us and took upon Himself all our sins. We are assured that He is our victory and that He has borne our grief's and carried our sorrows and our cross, but what Christian has not found that there is a cross for everyone? What victorious Christian has not discovered that, before ever he came into victory, he also walked the dreary wilderness where at times it seemed that even God had forsaken him? What victorious Christian exists today who has never been faced with the evil of temptation and through many failures made the discovery that victory only comes by believing on Him? Do not tell me you have never faced the wilderness in your Christian experience, for you have, and if you have not, you will. Do not boast that you have never been tempted, for you have and you will be. The same temptations that were placed before the first Adam in the Garden of Eden were placed before the last Adam in the wilderness, but where the first man transgressed under the most favorable circumstances in God's lovely Eden, the last man Adam was victorious amid the hunger, thirst, and loneliness of the wilderness.

We mentioned above the three words appetite, avarice, and ambition. All that is in the world, said John, is the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life. The lust of the flesh is appetite - any appetite whether it be over-indulgence in food, over-indulgence in strong drink, promiscuous sex, or a hundred other appetites, which are common to mankind. Satan appealed to the appetite when he showed the woman the tree and she saw that it was good for food. The same Satan was appealing to the appetite when he said to the fasting Saviour in the wilderness, "Make these stones bread." When Satan showed the tree to the woman, Eve, she saw that it was a tree to be desired. In this temptation he was appealing to one of the world's most powerful passions, the desire to have and possess and make all things our own. Avarice, or greed, is the desire to possess the world. This passion is manifest universally in the world today and is, perhaps above all else, the source of the world's dilemma. When therefore the last Adam was in the wilderness, Satan took Him to a high mountain and showed Him all the kingdoms of the world in a moment of time, saying, "All this will I give Thee if Thou wilt fall down and worship me." Many a man through the ages has set out to conquer the world and possess all things and make them his own. Twice in this twentieth century mighty armies have marched with this in mind - to conquer the world, and yet once more will they march, violently destroying at least two-thirds of every living thing, hoping to gain for themselves all things.

Once again in the garden the woman saw a third thing - that the fruit of the tree would make her wise. This is the pride of life. The wisdom of this world is foolishness with God, but worldly wisdom is the pride of life. Oh how men boast of the things they know and the things they think they know! Only yesterday I received a circular, requesting that I subscribe to a certain magazine that would take us back two million years into the past, showing where we came from and what we came from and the process of development through the ages. All this sounds very fascinating, a tree to be desired to make one wise, but why should I give heed to worldly wisdom and their theories of evolution, since the Lord Himself has told me from whence I came and from whom I came? More than that He has told us whither we go. The pride of life is expressed in ambition to be somebody special and to know and possess apart from God, to be the greatest man or woman in any given realm, the world's best orator, the world champion boxer, the greatest preacher, to prove that one is non pareil. It was with this in mind that Satan, having placed Jesus on a pinnacle of the temple, challenged Him with these words: "If Thou be the Son of God, cast Thyself down; for it is written, He shall give His angels charge concerning Thee: and in their hands they shall bear thee up, lest ^at any time thou dash thy foot against a stone." Prove now that you are the Son of God, the greatest man on earth. Show by this miracle that there is none your equal. But had the blessed Lord yielded to such a temptation, He would have yielded to that same ambition that Eve yielded to in the garden. All that is in the world is the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life. There is nothing more, and from these three sources all temptation springs forth.

You have surely noticed how frequently Jesus performed miracles on the Sabbath day. The millennial kingdom, my brethren, is the Sabbath day. It is God's day. When Jesus therefore went into the synagogue on the Sabbath day and found there a man with an unclean spirit and cast it out, He was showing by a parabolic miracle that in that wonderful kingdom Sabbath mankind will be delivered from the bondages of the prince of the power of the air, the spirit that now rules in the hearts of them that believe not. It was on the Sabbath day that He healed the man who was born blind, showing by this miracle that in God's great Sabbath day there will be no blind either literally or spiritually. In all past ages the god of this world has blinded the minds of them that believe not, but in God's great Sabbath day no blind shall be there and no veils of darkness will becloud the minds of men, for God shall lead the blind by a way they knew not. With open vision they will behold the glory of the Lord. The whole world is full of unbelievers and in this our day the god of this age has blinded the eyes of them that believe not. The church system is a seething mass of unbelief. Christians will believe God for justification, then refuse to see one step further than that. Well spake the prophet Isaiah of multitudes in our day, saying, "For the heart of this people is waxed gross, and their ears are dull of hearing, and their eyes have they closed; lest they should see with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and understand with their heart, and should be converted, and I should heal them." Acts 28:27.
Jesus is all this poor world needs today.
Blindly they strive, for sin darkens the way.
O to draw back the grim curtain of night!

One glimpse of Jesus and all would be bright. So Jesus healed the lame man on the Sabbath day to show that in His great kingdom Sabbath there will be none who cannot walk. It is a blessing to be able to walk, but there are those who cannot walk; neither dare they run the race that is set before them, but in His Sabbath the lame man will leap as an hart and all will be whole. He healed the withered man, too, on the Sabbath day, and there are many Christians whose experience is withered and dried up by the roots. He raised the dead on the Sabbath day, because he is the resurrection and the life of that day. Of the many other wonders He performed we have not time to write, but if we will meditate in the Spirit upon each and every act of His eventful life, we will see in His works as well as in His words a parable of the glory of the millennial day when He shall reign as King of kings in the glory of His Father's kingdom and we shall reign with Him.

In the scripture quoted at the beginning of this message we see a most remarkable picture of Jesus folding up and concluding all the things that belonged to the ages past and preparing Himself and His people for an entirely new era. The sacred record states that Jesus knew His hour had come that He should depart out of this world, that Satan had put into the heart of Judas Iscariot to betray Him, and that the Father had given all things into His hands. These words speak volumes to us. They bid us see that all the work of the past is at an end. Now preparation is to be made to enter into a new realm. In preparation for this He had broken bread, saying, "This is my body," and He had given of the wine, saying, "Drink ye all of it," or "All of you drink it." The tabernacle of the past was folded up and the sacrifices done away. A new tabernacle, which is the body of Christ, was to be built and a new, incorruptible blood was to be given for an entirely new age. Well did Jesus know the things that were shortly to come to pass and in preparation for them He closed out the past and prepared Himself and His disciples for that which was at hand.

To the faithful in Christ Jesus we now proclaim this message. We are now at the end of the age that is known as the dispensation of the grace of God. The Lord is now phasing out the things of this present age. He is folding them up like a garment to proclaim the things, which are immediately at hand. The message in the following pages is to advise the people of God concerning those things we may now expect and the things that must shortly come to pass. The kingdom of God is at hand and that kingdom is sure and certain to us, but before the glory of its beauty appears, there will be yet one brief struggle twixt old systems and the Word in the darkness before the light shines that will know no darkness forever.

The study of the scripture clearly shows that every age from Eden until now has ended with some gigantic calamity and each new age was born in travail as the death pains of the former age became the birth pangs of the new. Now at long last we have come to the end of the six days of man's labor and travail, but the seventh is the Lord's Day of rest. Then shall the eyes of the blind be opened and the ears of the deaf be unstopped. The lame shall leap as an hart and the tongue of the dumb shall sing. In the wilderness shall waters break out and streams in the desert. The parched ground shall become a pool and the thirsty land springs of water. In the habitation of dragons, where each lay, shall be grass with reeds and rushes. And an highway shall be there and a way, and it shall be called the way of holiness. The unclean shall not pass over it. The wayfaring men, though fools, shall not err therein. No lion shall be there nor any ravenous beast shall go up thereon. It shall not be found there. The ransomed of the Lord shall return and come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads. They shall obtain joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away. See Isaiah 35.

We are now seeing the old age passing away and it shall be no more, but its thrashings are like unto those of an infidel who, having walked this life in defiance and unbelief in God, now sees the damning vision of his own reward while he struggles to hold on to a few more minutes in this kingdom of darkness and unbelief. This age is rapidly passing away, but evil men and seducers will struggle as with the terror of perishing men to maintain their perilous hold on this realm of the shadow of death. Of the brief and awful struggle that is to come and that even now holds the world in its vise-like grip the scripture twice records that it will be a time of trouble such as the world has never known in all its tragic past and will never know again throughout the ages of the ages. As Daniel sought to know the meaning of the end time visions that had flooded his searching soul, he was told, "There shall be a time of trouble such as never was since there was a nation even to that same time, and at that time thy people (that is, Israel) shall be delivered, every one that shall be found written in the book." Dan. 12:1. Likewise our Lord Jesus Christ, speaking of the days in which we live, said, "For then shall be great tribulation such as was not since the beginning of the world to this time, no, nor ever shall be. And except those days should be shortened, there should no flesh be saved: but for the elect's sake those days shall be shortened." Matt. 24:21-22.

There seems to be agreement among almost all students of the word of God that the end time tribulation will be seven years in length, and I see no good reason to disagree with this understanding. Because seven years is but a very short period of time and because many ancient prophecies must be crammed into so short a space, we may now expect a great acceleration in the pace with which wickedness, rebellion, and unbelief will advance and manifest itself. Every saint should now remember the words of the Lord and of His apostles, who with much concern taught us all to watch and be sober. "For," said they, "if the good man of the house had known in what hour the thief would come, he would have watched. Watch ye, therefore, for ye know not in what hour your Lord doth come."

Through the past decade or so great and ever increasing evil has moved like a sullen cloud over all the nations of the earth. Because people have not been watchful, they have allowed themselves to become partakers of many harmful and hurtful things. Evil teachings, incredible in their filth and degradation, have crept into the schools on every level. Prayer and the Bible have been thrown out and openly ridiculed. Children have been taught by the teachers that parents are old fogies and that they should rebel against them and the restraints of home. Under the guise of sex education schools young people have been encouraged in all manner of promiscuous living. They have been told that their parents do not understand sex and homosexuality. The result of this corruption is that a generation has arisen who know not God, who have no respect for law and order and who seek only to partake as fully as possible of all the corruption of the flesh.

Not only have these corrupt influences come into the schools and into the text books, but television is systematically used to corrupt the morals of all people until we have a violence unparalleled in the history of the world, increasing every day in its ghastly horror. People have become so accustomed to hearing of murders, kidnappings, rapes, shootings, poisonings, guerrilla warfare, drunkenness, drug addiction, illicit sex, and every imaginable wickedness that they begin to take a ho-hum attitude toward it all. The police forces of the world, unable to get any support or backing from the law of the land, have in many cases thrown up their hands in despair, looking the other way when evil occurs and in a multitude of cases joining in with the corruption, accepting bribes and pay-offs in hope of gain. In all fairness to the police we must admit that much of the time they are the most abused people in our society. They are discouraged from carrying out their duties because of the weakness and corruption among judges and lawmakers in the land. We now see the horrible sight of criminals and thugs being turned out on the street to become a menace to society simply because there is no more room in the jails to hold them.

Evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived, and now that the tribulation is upon us and a time of trouble such as the world has never known is with us, we must expect a great acceleration of evil right up until the hour of the coming of Christ, when He shall come with the armies of heaven to put down all rule and authority and take the throne of David and reign over the house of Israel and the whole world for a thousand years in righteousness and peace.

This is not the time for God's people to join in with the wickedness of the day, but it is time to watch and be sober and know that each succeeding vice and calamity that falls upon the earth is just one more infallible proof that the coming of the Lord and the resurrection of the just is at hand, even at the doors. The hour in which we live should be a time of watching, watching with diligence every sign of His coming, watching that our garments be kept clean and unsoiled by the vomit that fills all tables in our day. To the saints of God this must be a time of sanctification, of laying aside every weight and the sins that do so easily beset us. This is a time when all hatred, malice, envy, jealousy and evil speaking should be put away from all who name the name of Christ and who profess to be His disciples. This is a time when men and women should make sure they have repented of their sins with a godly sorrow that need not be repented of. It is a time when men should make sure they are born again. It is a time when every believer in Christ should search his own soul. See if you can find hatred in your heart. Go to your brother and do what you can to be reconciled to him. Do not even retain a dislike for people. We should realize that we ourselves would be as they were it not for the goodness of God.
In this time of waiting and watching for the coming of the Lord let us see to it that the lamp which we are is filled with the oil of the Holy Spirit and that our lamps are trimmed and burning brightly. My brethren, I want to warn you before it is too late. I want to tell you that it is impossible to maintain oil in your lamp and a high and blessed Christian experience if you insist upon joining the world to sit watching all manner of violence and filth on the boob tube. Your time is too precious for that kind of thing. If you thirst for an experience in God where living waters flow from your belly, then you must spend hours in prayer. You must read God's word and meditate upon the things that concern Him and His kingdom. It is largely true that we are what we eat, and it is just as true that evil communications corrupt good manners. It is perfectly true that where our treasure is, there will our hearts be also. By these evil means of communication good manners are corrupted, people learn violence, and hear the foulest of language and blasphemies against God. They are taught to believe that immorality is the new morality. They are forced to think that divorce, fighting, and every evil triangle is the normal way of life. The present evil age offers a flood tide of filth, often in the name of education and always in the name of entertainment, but those who are defiled by it will miss the greatest prize of all the ages - sonship and the hope of reigning in righteousness with Christ.

This is the hour, my friend, when the cry is ringing out through the corridors of the world for all mankind to hear, "He that is unjust, let him be unjust still; he that is filthy, let him be filthy still; he that is righteous, let him be righteous still, and he that is holy, let him be holy still." Choose you this day whom you will serve, whether it be the world with its corruption or the Lord with His purity, but as for me and my house, we will serve the Lord. Let all those who have hope in Christ give heed to the apostles fearful cry, "Come out from among them and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing, and I will receive you and will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be My sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty."

In the articles concerning the Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse we spoke of the awful spreading of false religion and false teaching that would settle like a dark mantle over the earth in the closing days of this age, a fact that is everywhere evident. We saw the red horse of war, bloodshed, and violence sent forth to slay the third part of mankind. We saw the black horse of famine ride forth with the measuring scales in his hand and heard the pitiful cry, "A measure of wheat for a penny, and two measures of barley for a penny; and see thou hurt not the oil and the wine." Now, as if the prophetic message were receiving an answering echo, we read that in 1974 eighty million people were crushed to death beneath the awesome hoofs of the black horse of famine. This black horse of famine was followed by the pale horse of death, and following hard on his heels come death and the grave to consume two-thirds of the world's population. Even while we write, mankind is wrestling with the problem of what to do with the burgeoning populations of the world, but I tell you in sorrow that they will not need to worry much longer about that. There are certain inevitable calamities soon to appear on the world's horizon, which will bring into focus many formerly obscure things that are recorded in the word of God.

Two great beasts are mentioned in the book of Revelation. Both of these are vitally connected with the present Babylon of the world system. Babylon is a great mystery never to be completely solved until the last days. There are two vital and integral parts to the Babylon system and these two vital parts form one system. They are not two separate entities. They belong as much to each other as the two arms of a man belong to his body, both working together for the good of the man. Of these two beasts of Babylon one is the political arm and the other is the religious arm, so that the final upshot of the Babylon system, which is the world system, will be one government and one religion, both forced upon the people in the same manner that the worship of Nebuchadnezzar's image was forced upon the inhabitants of Babylon in the days of Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego.

It seems very evident to me that this is the teaching of Revelation, chapter thirteen. Of course, there is much we do not understand and many details are hidden from our eyes, but he who will take time to search will clearly see that two great beasts are revealed in this chapter. The first beast was a many, headed creature (verse 1) which rose up out of the sea. (The sea here represents the masses of humanity.) You will notice as you read that this beast received his power from the dragon, which is the devil (verse 3), and that this beast was worshipped (verse 4). Furthermore, "there was given unto him a mouth speaking great things and blasphemies." (Verse 5.) "And he opened his mouth in blasphemy against God, to blaspheme His name, and
His tabernacle, and them that dwell in heaven. And it was given unto him to make war with the saints, and to overcome them... and all that dwell upon the earth shall worship him, whose names are not written in the book of life..." (verses 6-8). If any man have ears to hear, let him hear. I do not know how better one could visualize false religions than is here pictured by the first beast.

As John watched, he saw another beast, a second beast, rise up out of the earth. He had horns like a lamb and a voice like a dragon. This in our day would seem to be a very significant statement. Like the proverbial wolf in sheep’s clothing he causes the earth and them that dwell therein to worship the first beast (verse 12), forcing the people to make an image to the first beast as Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, had done. In verse 16 we see the political nature of this second beast in that, after he had forced all mankind to worship the first beast, he then caused "small and great, rich and poor, free and bond, to receive a mark in their right hand, or in their foreheads: and that no man might buy or sell, save he that had the mark, or the name of the beast, or the number of his name." (Verses 16-17.)

Many things have been written concerning the mark of the beast. We are plainly told here that a day is coming when no man will be able to buy or sell unless he has the mark of the beast in his right hand or in his forehead. Any thinking person must realize what a serious matter this will be. All that a man hath will he give for his life and it is certain man cannot live if he is unable to buy food, unless of course, that man is sustained by the power of God as Israel was sustained in the wilderness. In Revelation, chapter fourteen, three angels are seen flying through the midst of heaven, the first having the everlasting gospel to preach to those who dwell on the earth, and the second proclaiming the fall of the Babylon system. The third, as he flew, proclaimed this message: "If any man worship the beast and his image, and receive his mark in his forehead, or in his hand, the same shall drink of the wine of the wrath of God, which is poured out without mixture into the cup of His indignation; and shall be tormented with fire and brimstone in the presence of the holy angels and in the presence of the Lamb." Rev. 14:9-10. We may not be certain as to the full meaning of this verse, but it certainly is a solemn warning, and all mankind must consider well how fatal a mistake it would be to worship the beast system or receive its mark. I trust that all God's people will remember that there is a God in heaven who delivers His faithful saints. He who provided a table for two and a half million Israelites in the burning wilderness long ago will also deliver His people and preserve their lives when the hour comes that no man can buy or sell unless he receives the mark of the beast or the number of his name. This prophecy, brethren, is not a myth to be taken lightly, for as God is true and cannot lie, so this dread wonder will appear at the end of the age.

Now I will tell you briefly how this will come about. This is my own opinion and in writing this I am not laying claim to any special inspiration, but as the mystery unfolds, we will be able to decide whether these are mere human opinions or whether there was some inspiration from the Lord.

Though this is a most disconcerting thought, there is much evidence that the world is now heading toward what may be called a cashless society, the idea being that money as we have known it will soon be out of circulation altogether. Each person will have a bank account. All dealings will be done by computer and accounts will be debited and credited as the occasion demands. Every person will receive a card like a social security card upon which his number will be stamped. No other person in the world will have the same number. This card will be presented whenever a purchase of any description is made. The card will be placed in a computer and your bank account debited accordingly. What we are saying here is not news. There are many communities in America where this method of transaction is already in operation. It is a most amazing procedure to behold. The reader will have noticed that even now scarcely ever a purchase is made but the clerk asks the question, "Is this cash or credit?" The credit card system is rapidly taking over the business of the nation.

The remarkable thing about all these evils is that there is a certain amount of benefit with them. If men and women do not carry money, it cannot be stolen. If supermarkets do not have a till full of cash, they cannot be robbed. But let us never forget that the credit card system is slowly but surely preparing the people for the mark of the beast, which presently will come and which the vast majority of people will accept without question as a most useful and handy idea.

When the credit card and computer system becomes universal another problem will present itself, which the authorities will very easily solve. It will be found that thousands of people are either losing their credit cards or having them stolen. To solve this problem it will first be suggested, then tried, and finally enforced, that a person’s number be indelibly imprinted with invisible ink upon the right hand or forehead of every individual, thus ensuring that no one will ever lose his number and that it can never be stolen or used by any other person.
This in my opinion is the manner by which the mark of the beast will be brought in. Without doubt there will be other complications. The Bible is very clear in the thought that, before being thus stamped with the mark of the beast, the receiver must first swear allegiance to the beast. While this statement is not made directly in the Bible, it is certainly implied. If we compare Rev. 13:16 with Daniel 3:1-7, we will plainly see that the worship of the beast and his image is more than merely implied. It is not easy at present to say just how the number 666 will be incorporated into every person's number, but no doubt this will be evident in its time.

As time goes on, there will be more evidence that the whole world is drawing nearer to these conditions. Not only are we coming closer to a cashless society, but more and more the frustrated leaders of the world are looking for a super-dictator who will be able to extricate the nations from the dreadful mess into which they have fallen through their own greed, corruption, and rejection of God. More and more we hear the thought expressed that we are citizens of the world.

In the light of the fact that the sixth chapter of Revelation plainly teaches us that war and violence will fill the earth in the last days and that this will be accompanied by the death of perhaps two-thirds of the earth's population, we are perfectly safe in saying that we are now facing the worst depression the world has ever known. This depression will not be altogether like the great depression of the 1930's. In that great calamity plenty of commodities were available at very low prices, but there was so much unemployment and shortage of cash that it was impossible to buy anything but the barest necessities of life. Many people were known to eke out a whole month's existence on $5.00, and I myself often lived, paid tithes, and drove my car on $3.00 a week. It sounds impossible, I know, but that is the way it was. The depression into which we are now moving, however, will be accompanied by many shortages, unbelievably high prices, and much unemployment. It will be far more severe than anything that has ever been before. It will be as Daniel and Jesus plainly told us - a time of trouble such as the world has never known or ever will know again.

In the depression of the 1930's there was very little violence. People maintained a much higher moral standard. Many revivals took place in those dark years and tens of thousands of people were added to the Lord. But, sadly, we are entering into the coming time of trouble with the lowest moral standards since the days of Noah, coupled with the highest crime rate and the poorest law enforcement ever known. Furthermore, the leaders of the nations, having become exceedingly corrupt themselves, are promoting lawlessness and corruption world-wide.

Make no mistake about it. Both the elected and non-elected governments of the world are purposely bringing about the present conditions of violence, drugs, depression, and lawlessness in the hope that it will bring both themselves and the world banking interests tremendous financial gain. But their greed and gain will be short lived, for it shall come to pass at the end of this age that rich men shall weep and howl for their miseries that shall come upon them. God has said, "Your riches are corrupted, and your garments are moth-eaten. Your gold and silver is cankered: and the rust of them shall be a witness against you, and shall eat your flesh as it were fire. Ye have heaped treasure together for the last days." Jas. 5:1-3. Powerful international corporations whose wealth simply cannot be computed are bringing on world-wide depression, war, and famine in the hope of reaping further enormous wealth and bringing all mankind into slavery. But in their pitiful blindness they do not know that the very gold and silver that has become their idol will in the end burn up their own flesh as with fire. The great prophet Isaiah saw this same dreadful circumstance at the end of the ages and cried, saying,
"The loftiness of man shall be bowed down, and the haughtiness of men shall be made low; and the Lord alone shall be exalted in that day. And the idols He shall utterly abolish. And they shall go into the holes of the rocks, and into the caves of the earth, for fear of the Lord, and for the glory of His majesty, when He ariseth to shake terribly the earth." Isa. 2:17-19.

In the next two or three years there will be a series of wars and more or less minor skirmishes, but the great depression into which we are now moving will be followed by World War III, a war in which the whole world will be involved and which will be terminated by the coming of the Lord. This conflict is vividly described in Rev.
19:11-21.
In closing this brief and somewhat disconnected chapter, there is a thought which all people who dwell in North America should seriously consider. We read much in the scripture of the king of the north - the king of the north, the chief prince of Meshech and Tubal, which are the present clay cities of Moscow and Tobolsk. Beyond any possibility of doubt we must therefore conclude that Russia and all her hordes are referred to here. In the book of Daniel, chapter 11, we have an account of the many exploits of this great power, and we see him entering peaceably into the Holy Land and becoming possessor of its great wealth. In Dan. 11:44 we read these strange words: "But tidings out of the east and out of the north shall trouble him: therefore he shall go forth with great fury to destroy, and to utterly make away many."

Though the east has always been reckoned to be China and the north Russia itself, I would bring to the attention of every reader that there is another east other than China and another north other than Russia. There is the Near East where all the vast resources of oil are found and where also the wealth of the nations is steadily going. There is another north, which is vitally opposed to Russia, and that north is North America. These two places - the Near East and North America - are now a trouble to Russia, and it is North America above all others and the United States in particular that now stands in the way of the chief prince of Meshech (Moscow). Otherwise he would trample the world under his feet immediately. A few years from now the opposition from these sources will become such a trouble to him that, in my opinion, he will launch an atomic attack against Canada and the United States with the intention of utterly making away with them. Dan. 11:44. This, of course, will bring unbelievable retaliation.

Several times in these writings I have mentioned that the Anglo-Saxon nations are to be identified with Israel and that the United States is definitely an Israel nation. If this be so - and for my part I am certain that it is - then the attack on Israel, spoken of in Ezekiel, chapter 28, is in all probability made not only in the direction of Jerusalem, but in the direction of all the hated Israel nations.

From time immemorial it has always been found that the Israel nations, when wandering far away from their God, will turn in repentance and call upon His name in their times of great trouble and distress. So also will they do when this final time of unspeakable trouble comes upon them. When all is lost and they are completely defeated, they will call upon God as the prophet Joel has said. "Then will the Lord be jealous for His land, and pity His people... I will remove far from you the northern army, and will drive him into a land barren and desolate, with his face toward the east sea, and his hinder part toward the utmost sea, and his stink shall come up, and his ill savor shall come up, because he hath done great things." Joel 18:20. Thus shall he come to his end and none shall help him. Dan. 11:45. The prayer of God's people will be answered by the coming of Christ, who will then set up His kingdom and reign with His faithful saints in peace and righteousness for one thousand years. These are things which must shortly come to pass.

SOME THINGS THAT CONCERN US ALL

Many centuries ago Solomon said, "Of the making of many books there is no end." Eccl. 12:12, and it was John the apostle who stated, "I suppose that even the world itself could not contain the books that should be written." As surely as the Lord is omniscient, there is no end to His understanding and the revelation of His truth. Month after month-and year after year truth flows like an ever widening river of life making the words of Jesus literally true: "He that believeth on Me, as the scripture hath said, out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water. This spake He of the Spirit, which they that believe on Him should receive: for the Holy Ghost was not yet given," John 7:38. In this natural world "all the rivers run into the sea, yet the sea is not full." Eccl. 1:7. But in the spiritual world the opposite is true, for the boundless ocean, which is God Himself flows into all the rivers, filling them to the brim with an inexhaustible supply of wisdom and understanding, counsel and might, knowledge and reverence for the Lord. This is exactly what Jesus told us, for the rivers of living water that were to flow forth from the belly of believing man were to be the direct result of the indwelling Holy Ghost which was given to man, for He spoke of the Spirit which had never before been given in any measure of fullness, and even unto this day we have received but the earnest of the Spirit in our hearts.

We felt it to be the mind of the Lord to write a simple exhortation to all whom it may concern that by God's grace we might better find our way in this most important hour when all the diseases, both physical and spiritual, of a sick, confused world are swelling up like a painful, malignant boil to fester into one diabolical head — antichrist himself, who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is of God or that is worshipped so that he, as God, sitteth in the very temple of God, showing himself that he is God. 2 Thess. 2:4. Any man today with an ounce of understanding must certainly be able to see that the systems of this world, both political and religious, have been caught in the throes of an irresistible force that is sweeping them relentlessly on like dust and corruption caught up in a cyclone, that all the world might worship the beast that had the deadly wound and did live, and that no man might buy or .tell except he has the mark of the beast or the number of his name. This dread climax is sure and unalterable. No force of arms can stop it nor prayers of saints delay it, for God, in whose hands the nations of the world are but dust in the balance, has declared that thus it shall be. Let us not, then, waste our time trying to delay and hinder that which omniscient wisdom has declared must be, but let us rather take fast hold on that calling and election to which we are ordained that we may have one head, even the Lord Jesus Christ, whom God hath appointed the heir of all things, whose kingdom shall be an everlasting kingdom which shall never be destroyed.

We have lived so long as natural men in a natural world with a natural environment that to be converted and begin to live as spiritual men requires nothing less than a birth from above, for, if we have spoken of earthly things and men believe not, how shall they believe when we speak of heavenly things? Nevermore shall we enter the womb of our mother to be born a second time of the flesh, but the Spirit of God, that bloweth where it lieth, moves even now upon the face of the deep, rousing men to resurrection and life, unlocking the closed mind, and giving the mind of Christ to those who adore Him that men might speak the wisdom of God, which none of the princes of this world know, and dispel the dim shadows of night from men's eyes that they might see heaven opened and the angels of God ascending and descending upon the Son of man. Then the lips of them that sleep shall speak, for from the cocoon of our death comes forth a new creature that no longer crawls as a worm upon its belly but, borne up on the winds of the Spirit, it inhabits a new and heavenly realm henceforth to live as spiritual men spiritually and not as natural men naturally.

Though some may disbelieve it, the truth is that all spiritual men must and will appear to be mystics. It is not because they try to be so, but it is because they are so. They cannot help being oddities and misfits here because they do not belong to this world. Jesus said, "Ye are not of this world, even as I am not of this world." Therefore, because you are not of this world, you will always be a stranger to it. You are a foreigner and a wanderer in a strange country. Your speech will always betray you. Your actions and customs will always reveal you. Your communications with the spiritual realm will mark you. The things you love will unmask you. Your lack of interest in all that belongs to this present realm will give your identity away. You will always feel that you do not belong in this realm and that you neither can belong nor wish to belong. "They that speak such things declare plainly that they seek a country. And truly, if they had been mindful of that country from whence they came out, they might have had opportunity to have returned. But now they desire a better country, that is, an heavenly: wherefore God is not ashamed to be called their God, for He hath prepared for them a city." Heb. 11:14-17.

There are several definitions of a mystic, but the one I like best is this: One who has been initiated into a mystery. Now when we realize that a mystery is something incomprehensible in its nature, something that can never possibly be understood apart from divine revelation, then consider how wonderful a thing it is to be "initiated into a mystery." Blessed be the man who has thus been enlightened by the Spirit of God! But such a man has no ability to disclose the truth revealed to him until the Holy Spirit in loving kindness draws aside the darkening veil and reveals the hidden truth that those who hear might understand. It is said of Jesus, "Then opened He their understanding that they might understand the scriptures." Luke 24:45. The heavens are closed because our minds are closed. Thus we grope in darkness and thus we remain until by the miracle of divine revelation our understanding is enlightened. We have tried to teach, educate, instruct, and explain, but, whether we know it or not, we miss the mark, for nothing is revealed until the Lord reveals it and nothing lives until the Lord makes it live. We may earnestly preach that man should repent, but no man can feel his need of repentance until God reveals his sin to him and grants him a spirit of repentance. We have tried to make men believe, but a man cannot believe unless God gives him believing faith, for faith is not of ourselves; it is the gift of God. Eph. 2:8. We have been exhorted to turn our faith loose, but we have no faith to turn loose unless and until it is given of God. Then nothing can withstand it.
A spiritual man will always be an oddity in this world, not because he tries to be so as some have foolishly done, but because he is different from all other men. While the world and most of the Christians walk after the dictates of the flesh, the spiritual man walks after the dictates of the Spirit. His whole life on earth clearly testifies that, "as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God." Such a man no longer seeks to please himself as others do, but his constant prayer both night and day is, "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?" He does not have a multitude of requests to continually present to God, for he knows that even the prayer that sounds best may have come from the selfishness of human desire, but, having brought himself into complete harmony with God's will, he prays, "Not my will but Thine be done."

The natural mind does not know what is good or what is evil. It does not know that the house of mourning is better than the house of feasting, or that sorrow is better than laughter, for by the sadness of the countenance the heart is made better. If such an evil as pain or sickness brings us nearer to God, then it is no longer evil, but good and is no more worthy of rebuke. To the spiritual man the will of God is not a cross but a crown, for it is his daily delight. It is his meat and drink, his joy and satisfaction. Withhold such a man from the will of God and he would die of utter longing. He has learned the meaning of the text, "As the heart panteth after the water brooks, so panteth my soul after Thee, Oh God." He has found that the soul who thirsts after God's will does literally pant after God. He thirsts after the fountains of living water and hungers for the righteousness of the Lord. His soul is often sick with longing and he breaks out into all manner of exclamations even as Solomon who cried, "Stay me with flagons; comfort me with apples, for I am sick of love (love sick)." Songs of S. 2:5.

As a spiritual man progresses in the will and understanding of God, the realities of Gethsemane are borne in upon him. No longer with eloquent oratory does he describe the crushing hour Jesus endured in the garden but, having himself borne some of its agonies, he is loath to speak of it at all except to those who understand, for, if he ventures to speak of such sacred things to those who understand not, his words will seem but idle tales and his voice, echoing from the hollow emptiness of their stony hearts, will return void in his face. Few men know the bitter agony of the crucifixion of the human will and neither do they see that from its dead and crucified self has one in the very image of God risen within henceforth to love and embrace only those things that belong to His divine purpose. Well did Paul say, "Ye have not yet resisted unto blood, striving against sin." 2 Cor. 5:13.

Let not those who enter into the secret of God's presence imagine even for a moment that other Christians will understand, for they will not. Tell them ever so earnestly, but they cannot hear. From this day forth the spiritual man will be a speckled bird. Jer. 12:9. Even while he tells them, their eyes will be heavy with sleep and he will seem to them as one who has taken leave of his senses. This in a measure is true, for the celestial realm is beyond the realm of time and sense. The people who listened to Paul cried, "Paul, thou art beside thyself; much learning doth make thee mad." To which he replied, "I am not mad, most noble Festus, but speak forth the words of truth and soberness." Acts 26:24. Perhaps Paul had this same accusation in mind when he wrote to the Corinthians, "If we be beside ourselves, it is to God." 2 Cor. 5:13.

It is undeniable truth that all the world lives after the flesh. We have already pointed out in the book Two Realms that the flesh and the flesh alone is the motivating power of the present world order. Everything from pins to battleships is for the sake of the physical body of flesh and not one thing devised by man exists except for the satisfaction of one or all of the five senses of the human body. "From whence come wars and fightings among you? Come they not of the lusts that war in your members? Ye lust and have not. Ye kill and desire to have, and cannot attain." The banquetings, feasts, and abominable idolatries of the heart are all for the sake of the five senses of the body, and who is so foolhardy that he would dare to deny that the physical, corruptible body is a body of flesh?

All the gold on earth is not enough to buy a spiritual experience. Therefore, all the wealth possessed by man is laid up for the flesh and the flesh alone. Wealth can cater so much to the comfort of the flesh and the poverty of the spirit that it is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle than for a rich man to enter the kingdom of God. All the diamonds of Africa could not atone for one sin nor bring one moment of the peace that comes from faith in the cleansing blood of Jesus Christ.

Let us not imagine that it is only the unbelieving world that lives after the flesh. The undeniable truth is that the vast majority of believers live far more after the flesh than after the Spirit. They hate to hear it and the majority of Christians refuse to admit it, but it is so. They sing "Sweet hour of prayer," but most believers neglect to even hold family worship. They are conversant with their business affairs and even church affairs, but strangers in communion with God. They sing, "Oh, for a thousand tongues to sing my Saviour's praise," but their minds are filled with the latest hits, and while they sing, "Blest be the tie that binds," they allow the least offence to sever them.

A man is not spiritual because he has quit all worldly pleasure. The reverse is true. The natural, the carnal, and the sinful have departed because of the abundance of his spiritual life. When his time becomes absorbed in the realm of reality, which is the realm of the Spirit, he does not have either stomach or heart for the weak and beggarly things of this life. If he tries for a moment to enter into them, he finds his heart drifting away from them because he belongs to a different realm and a different country, even an heavenly country. These light and frivolous things of the passing fail to interest him because they belong to the natural while he belongs to the Spirit. All his hopes and aspirations have fled from this world to lay hold on the things that belong to the realm of reality where he shall abide forever. Both the world and worldly Christians will think it strange that he runs not with them to the same excess of riot, speaking evil of him, but they must give an account to God who is ready to judge both the living and the dead. Even the memory of the days in which we did the will of the flesh should be sufficient for us, for then we walked in lasciviousness, lusts, excess of wine, revellings, banquetings, and abominable idolatries. See 1 Pet. 4:1-4. People who spend their time feasting their minds, their eyes, their stomachs, and their ears on the sordid things of this passing age are unaware that the man who has suffered in the flesh has ceased from sin that he should no longer live the rest of his time in the flesh to the lusts of men, but to the will of God. The worldly minded find much of their transient pleasure by dishonoring their own bodies in every possible way, in eating and drinking to excess, by enflaming the body with strong drink, by doping it with foul-smelling tobacco, or by adventuring upon all manner of sex orgies. These are all enemies of the soul that endlessly and unremittingly WAR against the spirit. The man of God must purge himself from all these that he may be a vessel fit for the habitation of the Holy Spirit.

The spiritual man is peculiar because he has meat to eat that others know not of. So real was that heavenly meat in the experience of Jesus that, when weary and hungry He sat on the well in Samaria, He refused natural food, for His communion with God had supplied His need for both food and drink, and, when at last they offered Him food, saying, "Master, eat," He needed it not, for hunger, thirst, and weariness had departed from Him as the indwelling Spirit of God quickened His mortal body. The life-giving Spirit was to Him both food and drink, though other men had still not discovered the truth of the words, "My Father giveth the true bread from heaven". John 6:32.

The hour is coming and now is when the sons of God who are coming into the image of the firstborn Son, Jesus Christ, will find themselves living in a spiritual realm completely independent of the bondage of all that is earthly. It is clear to be seen that Jesus, even while He lived among men being found in fashion as a man, proved that sons of God are in all things independent of the bondage and power of this present world system. Always, after the hour of His baptism in the Jordan, the heavens were opened to Him and all the lasting and eternal benefits of that realm were His, never to depart from Him. When He ministered, the angels of God ascended and descended upon Him. Is it any wonder that no power of man or devil could stand before Him? He manifested His authority over every disease known to humanity. The might of the most terrible demons was overcome with no more than the touch of His finger. Cf. Luke 11:20. Howling winds were calmed to gentle breezes at His rebuke, and violent raging seas whimpered like babies and fell asleep at His bidding of peace. He paid not His taxes by the labour of His hands. The wild beasts of the wilderness were as pets in His realize that there is an heavenly realm where sons of God may live far above all principality and power and might and dominion and every name that is named, not only in this age, but in that which is to come.

The unspiritual Christian struggles to keep alive all the things that God has ordained must die. He lays fast hold on the temporal things of this passing world. He hates to be reminded that his years are passing and that age is increasing because he unconsciously knows that each passing year will mean a shortening of his stay in the realm of the flesh, which he dearly loves. He hates the thought of death because to him death is the end and not the beginning. Even Solomon himself could not convince such a man that the hour of death is better than the hour of birth. Neither could such an one be persuaded that the house of mourning is better than the house of feasting. Eccl. 7:1-2. His life after the flesh has convinced him that youth is better than old age and folly is better than wisdom. Ecc. 7:3-4.

In meditation I have come to the conclusion that the spirits of all men were with the Father before they came forth from the womb. When a tiny baby is born into this world, his spirit has recently come forth from the presence of the Lord, but he remembers it not because a veil has been drawn over his mind. Heaven has been closed to him by his incarnation or en-flesh-ment and he sees the realm of spirit and reality no more until his days of travail in the flesh are done and his spirit through death returns once more to God who gave it. Eccl. 12:7. See then how much better is the hour of death than the hour of birth, for in birth we come forth from God's presence, but in death we leave the world to go to the Father. John 16:28.

As long as our eyes remain closed to the celestial realm, we will always lay fast hold upon the fleeting things of this temporal world. Seeing nothing beyond this realm, we will struggle to hold fast to it. We will dread the appearance of every gray hair, knowing not that the hoary head is evidence of increasing wisdom and that the wrinkled face is the evidence that we have borne His yoke upon us, having passed through our wilderness, our Gethsemanes, and our Calvaries. The afflictions of this life leave upon our flesh and our spirits as well the marks of the Lord Jesus. The beloved Paul knew they were the marks of the Lord Jesus and he made no effort to hide or to erase them, but, bearing them with great pride, he said, "From henceforth let no man trouble me, for I bear in my body the marks of the Lord Jesus." Gal. 6:17.

When king Solomon described the heavenly bridegroom, he said His hair was as black as a raven, Songs of S. 5:11, but, when John beheld His glory on Patmos, he said His hair was white as wool. Rev. 1:14. How glorious that is, for between the vision of Solomon and the vision of John lay Gethsemane and the cross, a life of sorrow and acquaintance with much grief. Recently in our journey we stopped for lunch at a restaurant. Three women sat at a table nearby. From their appearance we judged that they were a mother and daughter and grandmother. The daughter looked young because she was, perhaps, fifty. But the grandmother looked ridiculous because she was evidently trying to look as young as the granddaughter. Her wrinkled face was smeared with rouge and lipstick to simulate youth, her gray hair was dyed, she had plucked and arched her eyebrows and used eye shadow in profusion. The clothes she wore were suitable for a twenty-year-old lass, and her efforts at animated and youthful conversation were sickening to behold. She deceived no one but herself, poor lady, and I am sure she did not deceive herself either. But that is what I mean. Not knowing the realities of the Spirit, mankind, believers and unbelievers alike, are loath to see the visible and unreal slipping away. If indeed there were any truth to the frequent tales of ghosts that inhabit cemeteries, I suppose it would be because these spirits, having known naught but the unreality of the flesh, desire to return to it again. Even the flesh of swine was more acceptable to the demons at Gadara than no flesh at all.

A wonderful experience awaits the child of (Jod when for the first time in life he sees that "our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." As long as man sees every difficulty, every adversity, set back, sickness and bereavement, or failure as nothing more than the wicked hand of the devil hindering his progress in life, that man will always be a disconsolate, miserable, faithless, and unbelieving Christian. Hut, when he learns that these afflictions are set in mercy and love from the hand of God and that they are not against him but for his eternal benefit, then the golden gates of a whole new realm of spiritual understanding and experience are wide open before him. There was a vast difference in the understanding of poor sorrowing Jacob and the oft stricken Paul. While Jacob mournfully wailed, "Joseph is not, Simeon is not, and you will take Benjamin away also and bring down my gray head with sorrow to the grave; all these things are against me," Gen. 42:36, Paul, who knew affliction as few other men have known it, triumphantly exclaimed, "All things work together for good to them that love the Lord, to them who are the called according to His purpose." Rom. 8:28.

To see that your affliction is working for you and not against you is a most valuable revelation of truth. It is something that all people should learn and especially those who are the called in this particular hour. I suppose that many Christians were dismayed that such an indispensable man as Paul should spend years shut up in a dingy jail. Then, as now, no doubt the people thought this a master stroke of Satan to hinder the gospel, but it was not so. Paul's frequent imprisonments were from the hand of God and not from the hand of Satan. It was from these dank prison cells that his choicest epistles were written to bless and enlighten the saints and leave a heritage of spiritual truth for all ages to come. Paul did not fear his years in prison, for he well knew that, when evil men fastened him securely in the inner prison, binding him with chains and putting his feet in stocks, the angel of the Lord would bring him out if that were God's will, or that, when men left him for dead, God could raise him up again.

It is the visible things that are temporal. It is the invisible things that are eternal. Things, however thin, have two sides to them - the visible and the invisible. The visible side is what we see now - the pains, the tribulations, the distress, affliction, sickness, persecution, misunderstanding, and a thousand difficulties. But the invisible side, the thing that is hidden from us now, is the thing that affliction is producing. The invisible things are eternal things. While the outward man is suffering wear and tear and pain, the inward man is receiving fresh strength from God every day. The transitory troubles which we suffer are winning for us a permanent, glorious, and solid reward out of all proportion to our pain, for those who understand are looking all the time not at the visible things but at the invisible. The visible things are transitory, passing, and unreal, but the invisible things are permanent, enduring, and real. The man who spends his life bemoaning his afflictions is a loser, but the man who has learned that this affliction is producing an eternal weight of glory is a victorious winner indeed.

Evil cannot come to a good man either in life or in death. Evil only seems to come. "The steps of a good man are ordered of the Lord." The damning condemnations that men of ill will intend should do him harm, God intends for good. By His hidden and eternal wisdom God is ruling over all the forces of darkness, making the wrath of man to praise him, proving to such a rebel as Pharaoh that even he was raised up by the Lord for his ignoble task. Exod. 9:16. "What can ever separate us from the love of God? Shall tribulation, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword? It is for God's sake that we are killed all the day long and are accounted as sheep for the slaughter. Nay! In all these things we are more than conquerors through Him who loved us. For I am persuaded that neither life, nor death, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature shall be able to separate us from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus, our Lord." Rom. 8:35-39. Phillips Translation.

Oh, the depths of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! How unresearchable are His judgments and His ways past finding out! For who hath known the mind of the Lord? Or who hath been His counselor? Or who hath first given to Him and it shall be recompensed to him again? For from Him everything comes, by Him everything exists, and in Him everything ends; glory to Him forevermore. Amen and amen!

It should not be necessary at this hour to have to prove to any man that we are living in momentous days. All men instinctively know this to be true whether they be men of God or men of the earth. As the stirrings of spring come to the trees of the wood and as the urge of migration comes to the birds of the wild, so the awesome sense of a coming age is settling down upon all mankind. The feeling that "something is going to happen" is expressed so often by many who make no profession of godliness whatsoever. It is like the troubled feeling that gripped Jerusalem at the time Jesus was born in the manger of Bethlehem. Matt. 2:3. Turmoil is everywhere. Like some phantom and evil spirit it has crept into all phases of life on a universal scale. The individual is confused. The homes are confused. The governments are confused. The United Nations is confused and has no more true unity than oil and water. Distrust, intrigue, and suspicion are rampant among them as they sit together and tell lies at one table, Dan. 11:27.

For the past years we have continually pointed out that the present visible church system with all its vast confusion of sects, denominations, ists and isms is not the true church at all, but is the confusion and disorder of Mystery Babylon, into which confusion the saints of God have been carried captive even as Israel was carried captive to Nebuchadnezzar's Babylon long ago. We have also pointed out continually that, as the end of this age draws near, more and more efforts will be made to unite all religious systems. The so-called Protestant denominations will find a confused and unholy union with Rome, that mother of harlots and abominations of the earth. This union is taking shape with ever increasing haste before our very eyes. Day after day new innovations will come until the day the sordid union is complete. Almost every day now one may read of united meetings, ecumenical councils, or papal pilgrimages in which countless throngs bow before this modern Belshazzar of Babylon. Small wonder Jesus said, "I have come in My Father's name and ye received Me not. Another shall come in his own name; him ye shall receive."

Not only do we hear of united gatherings, but already the harlot and her daughters are building temples together. Only recently I received a clipping through the mail which we here quote in full: "Britain's first inter-religious church with facilities for Anglican, Free Church, and Roman Catholic congregations will be dedicated next June at Keele University in Staffordshire. A similar "Unity Church" for the three bodies is also planned for London Airport at a later date. The Keele University church will have three chapels grouped around a central altar. The work is already well advanced on the building, which will cost about $235,000. Each church will contribute toward a University special fund which will finance the project." We are not only to see union between Protestants and Catholics, but already overtures are being made to bring in the other religious systems of the world that they all may drink from the same cup of confusion and all commit fornication in one unholy bed.

Many Christian people who have had a real experience of justification and many more who have received the baptism of the Holy Spirit are deceived into believing that their little group will escape the arms of this great octopus. But this is not so, for the whole visible religious system is going to be swept into the seething cauldron. Many of the so-called Full Gospel people will enter into this union because they will soon hear of high-ranking churchmen laying claim to all manner of miraculous power. They will profess to speak with tongues, heal the sick, and perform miracles. Bishops, cardinals, and perhaps even popes will make all manner of apostolic professions so that many thousands will be deceived, thinking a great revival has come, and thereby, if it were possible, even the elect themselves would be deceived. Christians, alas, have become so miracle minded that they imagine that anything supernatural is necessarily of God. Do not be deceived by this, for, when antichrist is revealed, he will be a miracle worker, and he will come with all power, and signs, and lying wonders, and all deceivableness of unrighteousness in them that perish, because they did not love the truth. 2 Thess. 2:6-12.

We are living in an hour of great deception. We are in a time when the world and the professing church system is stacked full of false prophets, false teachers, false apostles, false evangelists, false shepherds, and false miracle workers. Men with false gifts, claiming to be some great ones, are abroad everywhere. There is no end to their abominable claims. False prophets are forever predicting things that do not come to pass or prophesying in such a way that they would appear right whatever may transpire. False deliverers who are themselves helpless captives of some besetting sin are professing to deliver people from all manner of evil.

Did not Jesus tell us that in the last day there would be false prophets and false christs and that many would come in the name of the Lord, saying, 'I am Christ?' Did He not tell us that they would say, "Lo, here, and Lo, there?" Did He not warn us that they would say He is in the wilderness, or He is in the desert or in the secret place? And did He not say, "Go not after them?"

Matt. 24:23-26. I am frankly amazed that I have heard of a number of different places being prepared in the United States and Canada as refuges for people in the great tribulation. The strange thing is that many are preparing to go to such places. Go, if you wish, but you will find it a farce in the end and no refuge at all. David had the true secret when he said, "God is my refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble (tribulation); therefore will we not fear though the earth be removed..." Psa. 46. And again he said, "He that dwelleth in the secret place of the Most High shall abide under the shadow of the Almighty." That is where no evil will befall you nor plague come nigh you. That is where ten thousand will fall at your right hand and a thousand at your left. That is where the terror by night will not alarm you nor the arrow by day slay you. Only with your eyes shall you behold the reward of the wicked. Psa. 91. Elisha knew this refuge when the hosts of the Assyrians came to take him. Jesus knew it, too, when He said, "Know ye not that I could now pray to My Father and He would send more than twelve legions of angels." This is refuge we must have. Learn to dwell in the secret place of the Most High God and you will not be running to some false refuge in the desert when trouble starts. Remember the words of Jesus! When they say He is in the desert, go not forth.

In spite of all the years we have been in the church system, strangely enough very, very few people even remotely understand what the true church really is. We have been writing concerning the visible and the invisible, and we have considered at some length the words of Paul when he said, "The things that are seen are temporal, but the things that are not seen are eternal." This same truth applies to the church. Man has been prone to see the visible thing upon which is inscribed the letters C-H-U-R-C-H. This he divides into endless segments, giving each segment a different name until there are so many names that we would be hard put to it to count them all. This vast visible confusion man calls the church. But the thing which man calls the church is by no means the thing that God calls the church, for, while man is looking at some visible temple he has built, God sees the true church rising on the foundation stone which is Jesus Christ Himself.

The true church always has been a mystery, invisible to the eyes of man but clearly seen by the eyes of God. The word 'ecclesia' from which the word 'church' is derived simply means 'called out'. It is called out of the world; it is called out of sin; it is called out of Babylon; and it is called out unto Christ. When Jesus said, "My sheep know My voice and they follow Me," it should be perfectly clear that the ones who are the 'called out' are the ones who know His voice and who follow Him. The true church consists of the called out ones, the people who know the voice of Christ and are following Him and Him alone. "They are not all Israel who are of Israel, but in Isaac shall they seed be called." Even so they are not all church who appear to be church, but those who are disciples of Jesus Christ. Until we see the church as a wheel within a wheel, we will never discern the true church nor the true body of Christ. The visible system means nothing. It is our hidden relationship to Christ that really counts. Man has placed tremendous emphasis on his association with sects, which erroneously called themselves the church. To be joined to them means absolutely nothing. If you could make yourself a member in good standing with every one of them at once, it still would mean less than nothing. The only thing that counts for anything is your union with Christ in the Spirit. Make certain of this above all else. Those who are united to Him, whether still in bondage to a system or whether they be free men, are the one true ecclesia, the one true church.

Jesus said, "I know My sheep and am known of Mine." It is to them that eternal life is given. They alone have the promise that "no man can pluck them out of the Father's hand." Great blindness has come over the world in that only a very 'little flock' discerns that the true, mystical, and invisible body of Christ is a separate entity from all the man-made systems that parade under the banner of the church. So degenerate has the understanding become that it is commonly believed that, if a person is not a member of one of these organizations, he is no better than a heathen and is completely outside the pale of the church. My spirit, soul, and body fiercely rebel against all such crude and uninspired understanding, for the opposite is the truth. All who are made free by the Spirit of God, who know His voice and are joined to Him in the Spirit, are the church of God in truth. These are moving farther and farther away from the confusion of all human systems and human understandings which bind men in chains of traditions and blind their eyes with scales of unbelief.

Whether we wish to receive it or not, the hour is coming and now is when even the angels of God will proclaim through the heavens, "Come out of her, My people, that ye be not partaker of her plagues." While man is building great Babylon on the one hand and mysterious power is rising to hitherto unheard of heights, God on the other hand is preparing her terrible judgment. All nations have drunk of the wine of her fornication and the kings of the earth have committed fornication with her and the merchants of the earth are waxed rich through the abundance of her delicacies. It is in this tremendous hour of her great triumph, when the religious leaders of the earth imagine in their carnal minds that they have at last solved the religious differences of the whole world; it is called out of sin; it is called out of Babylon; and it is called out unto Christ. When Jesus said, "My sheep know My voice and they follow Me," it should be perfectly clear that the ones who are the 'called out' are the ones who know His voice and who follow Him. In the world system and the existing church (I fear the two are wed) the day of the individualist is gone. Every body, every nation, every religion, is being thrown into one melting pot to be either melted together or frozen together in one vast sea of humanity from which the beast himself shall rise. But let us not forget that, while all this is going on, God has a chosen people, a peculiar people, an elect people who are joined to Him in perfect unity of spirit and mind, and who are joined to each other, not by physical presence, but by this omnipresent Spirit. Most of the people have never seen each other's faces, yet they are one, for spiritual unity does not depend on the close proximity of physical beings but upon the unity of the Spirit in Christ. All who are one mind with Him are one mind with each other, regardless of distance. Paul once said to the Colossians, "Though I am absent in the flesh, yet am I with you in the Spirit, joying and beholding your order and the stedfastness of your faith." Col. 2:5.

In the days of Elijah the prophet all Israel was following the prophets of Baal, but unknown to Elijah and all unknown to each other there were seven thousand people who had never bowed the knee to Baal, but were sincere servants of the Lord. With which one of these two companies did Elijah belong? Was he one with that vast visible confused religious system which was preaching and prophesying all about him, or was he one in heart and soul and spirit with that hidden seven thousand whom he had never seen nor heard of before? Well do we know the answer to that question? Elijah was one heart and one soul with that invisible number in whose presence he had never been, for they were one spirit with the Father and therefore one spirit with each other. The physical unity of crowds and congregations means nothing. The unity of the spirit means everything.

We must now consider a matter of supreme importance. It is the truth concerning our harmony with God. The Lord is the author of all harmony. His whole majestic universe is a harmony far exceeding all earth's symphonies. "Ask now the beasts, and they shall teach thee; and the fowls of the air, and they shall tell thee; or speak to the earth, and it shall teach thee: and the fishes of the sea shall declare unto thee. Who knoweth not in all these that the hand of the Lord hath wrought this? In whose hand is the soul of every living thing, and the breath of all mankind?" Job 12:7-10. "The heavens declare the glory of God; and the firmament sheweth His handiwork. Day unto day uttereth speech, and night unto night showeth knowledge. There is no speech nor language where their voice is not heard." Psa. 19:1-3.

That we may have some idea of the vastness of the heavens, astronomers tell us that on a clear night the naked eye can detect only some three thousand stars from a given point and, though the great telescopes have discovered several million stars, astronomers estimate that there are enough galaxies in the celestial expanse to give one to every man, woman and child that ever was born. There is no way the human mind can begin to comprehend or imagine the vastness represented here. The nearest of those stars, Cygni by name, is more than thirty-six billion miles from earth, so that the light from the nearest star takes six and a quarter years to reach us. Other stars are so far distant that the mathematicians' figures fail to describe the awesome distances. Our imaginations reel at the thought of light with its speed of one hundred eighty-six thousand miles per second taking a thousand years to reach us.

There was a day in the long ago when the eloquent voices of Job and all his counselors fell silent as the Lord began to speak. At the presence of the Lord Job himself repented in dust and ashes (Job 42:1-6), because he found himself unable to answer any of the forty questions the Lord demanded of him. Among the baffling queries that came from the lips of God was one that even the astronomers in our day cannot answer with perfect satisfaction. It was this: "Canst thou bind the sweet influences of Pleiades, or loose the bands of Orion?" Job 38:31 Pleiades is the name given by the Greeks to what is known as the seven stars, clearly visible in the heavens on a cloudless night. The name comes from the Greek word pleen, which means to sail. The appearance of these stars in the heavens indicated a favorable time to begin a voyage at sea. In the Chaldaic language the word for the seven stars of the Pleiades is chimak, meaning a hinge or a pivot. The astronomer Bradley in 1748 discovered that Alcyone (pronounced al-si-O-ne), the brightest star among these seven, is as far as can be determined the center of our entire solar system. It is the hinge or pivot around which the sun with all its attendant stars and planets is believed to revolve. If we now comprehend' that our sun is three thousand billion miles from Alcyone, then we may have some idea of the sweet influence of Pleiades, which as a hub or axle of our universe swings these millions of heavenly bodies about itself at the rate of more than one hundred and fifty million miles a year in a circuit so vast that it would take thousands of years to complete it.
As the ages roll on endlessly and all the heavenly bodies are continually in motion - the moon revolving around the earth, the earth revolving around the sun, the sun with the entire solar system revolving around Alcyone, and Alcyone with its billions of attendants revolving around some still greater center, and these in turn revolving around that center of all centers, the throne of God - we can contemplate to some small degree what must be meant by the sweet influence of Pleiades. Engineers use the word sweet to describe the smooth working and humming of perfectly tuned machinery. Is it any wonder then that the perfect harmony of this perfectly tuned universe is here described as sweet?

You will say this is all incredibly wonderful and I will certainly reply, Amen; but may I suggest that, wonderful as is this sweet influence of a perfectly tuned universe, all this is but dust, and sentence has been pronounced that the heavens will pass away as a body goes down to the dust of the grave. "Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." While the Lord is speaking to us of things far transcending our understanding, He has not failed to tell us that even these will one day pass away and that, though the natural heavens will one day disappear, our Lord is building for Himself a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens, which filleth all in all. Eph. 1:23. Weymouth in his translation expresses it thus: "God has put all things under His feet, and has appointed Him universal and supreme Head of the church, which is His body, the completeness of Him who everywhere fills the universe with Himself." Eph. 1:22-23. (Weymouth). Ah, what unimaginable harmony that will be! A universe filled with living stars who shine as the brightness of the firmament forever, all in sweet accord with the sun of our souls, our Saviour dear, and all motivated and controlled by the sweet influence of God's eternal throne!

If we are to love God as we ought to love Him, we must begin to understand and be gripped by the eternal purposes of God. It is not sufficient to say to a man, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God." We are no more capable of loving God because we are told to do so than we are capable of loving some human being because we were told to do so. There are millions of people in the world today who know the scripture, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thine heart..."., yet they have no love for God at all, and, though some are able to say, "I love the Lord because He saved me," even that falls far short of perfect love because in this they are loving the Lord, not for who He is or what He is, but because of something He did for them.

Though I was a denominational minister for some thirty years before the command of Christ, "Come out from among them and be separate", reached my ears, and though I preached fervently all the doctrines and traditions of the elders as they had been taught to me, I am now one hundred percent convinced that, if any man is really going to come to the knowledge of the Holy, he is going to have to depart physically and spiritually from the presence of this association of blind guides and he will have to be taught of God concerning those great universal and eternal purposes which God, who cannot lie, who cannot change, and who cannot be deterred, purposed in His holy mind of wisdom and understanding before ever the ages were formed or time began.

It is beyond my ken and understanding how the existing church systems can possibly pretend to be bringing the good news of the gospel to the people who dwell on the earth. In spite of the plain teaching of scripture, which clearly states that God hath reconciled all things to Himself, the preachers shamelessly tell the people that ninety-nine people out of every hundred will be lost and go to a burning hell to suffer its raging fires and agonizing tortures ceaselessly, endlessly and eternally, without hope and without God for time unimaginable, for what creature of time can possibly imagine eternity? This they call gospel and this they call good news. I cannot possibly imagine any news that could be worse than this, no, not if my imagination were to run rampant day and night forever! And what is even worse, they willingly admit that God, being omniscient, must have foreknown all this harm and loss, and yet for all His love and omnipotence He did not deter or hinder it.

Furthermore we are asked to believe that the ignorance of the masses of mankind has no bearing on their fate. We are supposed to believe that, though billions of Chinese, Indians and Africans through no fault of their own have lived and died without knowing anything at all of God's Son, still they are inexcusable. Then these poor, blind leaders of the blind try to tell us that this is the good news of which the angels sang at His nativity. It is not good news. It is dreadful news. It is completely out of harmony with all that God is and all that God does. He who said, "Thou shalt not muzzle the ox that tredeth out the corn," must surely have some concern for an even higher creation. If no sparrow falls without His notice, are we not better than many sparrows?
Some three thousand years ago the world's most eminent sage wrote, "Every purpose is established by counsel", Prov. 20:18; and "To everything there is a season, and a time to every purpose under heaven." Eccl. 3:1. Isaiah, taking up the theme centuries later, wrote these harmonizing words: "The Lord of hosts hath sworn, saying, Surely as I have thought, so shall it come to pass; and as I have purposed, so shall it stand." Isa. 14:23. Our Lord and our God is a God of purpose. He who said, "Every purpose is established by counsel," must certainly have taken counsel Himself. He who said, "Let us make man in our image and after our likeness, and let us give him dominion..." must certainly first have taken counsel in His own heart as to how this mighty edict was to be accomplished. How hateful is the teaching that pictures man's transgression and fall as an accident that the all-wise God had not foreseen! How I despise the insinuation that envisions Satan slyly slipping in a back door to bring ruin to God's plan! I have heard world renowned preachers harping this kind of discord. If Satan was able to slip into Eden unnoticed by God, what fools we must be to affirm that God is either omniscient or omnipresent! How much better it is to heed the blessed words of the apostle Paul, who in preaching the truth unashamedly described the lowly path that leads to sonship in this profound sentence: "The creature was made subject to vanity, not willingly, but by reason of Him (God) who hath subjected the same in hope. Because the creature itself also shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God." Rom. 8:20-21. Ah, there is truth. There is the revelation that fully explains the purpose of the fall of man. I know it is a staggering truth - meat indeed for men of full stature. Should these profound words stagger your imagination as they once staggered mine when first their truth burst upon my understanding, you will never recover from their profundity. Well do I remember when first the Spirit made them shine from out the sacred page? In astonishment of heart I cried out. "Lord, do you mean to say that you are taking responsibility for the fall of man?" And that is just exactly what is stated here. No accident here nor trick of a sly, unrelenting devil! Oh, no! Man's subjection to the vanity of the fall was part of God's infinitely wise counsel from the beginning. Through this awesome valley of the shadow of death He planned to lead His appointed sons along the path to perfection, by which the entire world would eventually come to the knowledge, not of evil only nor just the knowledge of good, but the knowledge of both good and evil.

Oh, how our love for God grows when once our eyes envision the wonders of His marvelous purposes, which were purposed in Christ before the world began! Have you noticed the precious understanding of Peter as he preached on the day of Pentecost, full of the Holy Ghost, his soul aflame with fresh anointing, and how he made known the way of God to his massive audience? These are his words: "Ye men of Israel, hear these words; Jesus of Nazareth, a man approved of God among you by miracles and wonders and signs, which God did by Him in the midst of you, as ye yourselves also know: Him, being delivered by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God, ye have taken, and by wicked hands have crucified and slain."

Acts 2:22-23. Take heed to those words, if you will - "the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God." This crucifixion was not the doing of man. This was the work of God. This was God's determinate counsel. The death of God's Son by crucifixion was planned and determined beforehand. This blessed Lamb was slain before the foundation of the world. It is true that wicked men stretched out their violent hands to kill the Son of God and it is true they accomplished their evil design, but it was God who determined before the foundation of the world that it should be done. As Samson found honey in the dead carcass of the slain lion, so this Lion of the tribe of Judah has brought forth from His predetermined death the honey of everlasting life. Jesus Christ the Lord is eternal life. In Him was life, and the life was the light of men. While He walked among us as a man, He gave eternal life to no one, but when by death He released His life, for the life is in the blood, He shed life abroad that all mankind may freely drink of its blessed fountain and never thirst again.

Some time ago I listened to a radio preacher bemoaning with plaintive voice the death of Christ. He told the people how sad it was that He was crucified by wicked men and that it need not have been. What? It did not have to be? Has not the Holy Spirit said that God determined before that it should be done? Jesus could have saved Himself at any moment during the whole tragic scene. At any time He could have called a legion of
The Jews have often been blamed for killing Jesus and, whatever the pope or the ecumenical movement may have to say to the contrary, Paul affirmed that it was true when he said to the Thessalonians, "Ye also have suffered like things of your own countrymen, even as they have of the Jews: who both killed the Lord Jesus, and their own prophets, and have persecuted us; and they please not God, and are contrary to all men." 1 Thess. 2:14-15. Though that statement is harsh, it is true, even to this very day. But Peter opened up a whole new realm of understanding when he said to the Jews, "The God of Abraham, and of Isaac, and of Jacob, the God of our fathers, hath glorified His Son Jesus; whom ye delivered up, and denied Him in the presence of Pilate, when he was determined to let Him go. But ye denied the Holy One and the Just, and desired a murderer to be granted unto you; and killed the Prince of life, whom God hath raised from the dead. ... And now, brethren, I wot that through ignorance ye did it, as did also your rulers. But those things, which God before had showed by the mouth of all His prophets, that Christ should suffer, He hath so fulfilled." Acts 3:13-15, 17-18. Then, after the apostles had been evil entreated and beaten, they gathered together for prayer and, having received a fresh filling of the Holy Spirit, they lifted up their voices with one accord and said, "Lord, Thou art God, which hast made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and all that in them is: who by the mouth of Thy servant David hast said, Why did the heathen rage, and the people imagine vain things? The kings of the earth stood up, and the rulers were gathered together against the Lord, and against His Christ. For of a truth Thy servant David hast said, Why did the heathen rage, and the people imagine vain things? The kings of the earth stood up, and the rulers were gathered together against the Lord, and against His Christ. For of a truth against Thy holy child Jesus whom Thou hast anointed, both Herod and Pontius Pilate, with the Gentiles, and the people of Israel, were gathered together, for to do whatsoever Thy hand and Thy counsel determined before to be done" Acts 4:24-28.

Is it not plain to be seen that there is a marvelous harmony running through all these things? Not only are all things - even the worst of things - working together for good, but they are working for good according to a purpose. Therefore, whether a thing appears to be good or evil, it is good, because it is working for good. Tribulation may be an evil thing, but, if it is true that tribulation worketh patience and patience, experience and experience, hope and hope maketh not ashamed because the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts, then it certainly has worked for good, for, though the tribulation was an evil thing, the patience, experience, hope, unashamedness and the resultant love of God that was shed abroad in the heart made the evil of tribulation work for eternal good. Furthermore by this we come to a more advanced knowledge of good and evil, even as it is written, "Strong meat belongeth to them that are of full age, even those who by reason of use have their senses exercised to discern both good and evil." Heb. 5:14. "Shall we receive good at the hand of God, and shall we not receive evil?" Job 2:10. Verily I would say that such would seem almost to be impossible, since we know not good until we know its opposite, which is evil.

Because Paul said, "Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus," I set myself earnestly to seek how I might let the mind of Christ dwell in me. Somehow I seemed to expect that this would be an experience that would suddenly overtake me, wherein I would be conscious of a new mind dwelling in me, thus displacing my own. To have the mind of Christ is to have a renewed mind and to have a renewed mind, the scripture says, is the secret of having a healthy body, and, if my understanding is not amiss, it is the secret of incorruption as well. For this reason Paul wrote, "I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service. And be not conformed to this world: (as almost all Christians totally are, taking their medicines and running to their doctors): but be ye transformed by the renewing of the mind." Rom. 12:1-2. What a tremendous statement this is! The word transformed is from the Greek metamorphoo and is the same word used in Matt. 17:2 and translated transfigured. It is also the same word that is translated changed in 1 Cor. 15:51-52. If we can grasp the truth that is set forth here, then the Lord has put something in our possession, which will make a world of difference to us, not only spiritually, but physically as well. How good it would be if, when God's people fall ill and the evil of sickness overtakes them, they would refrain from immediately seeking to be anointed with oil for healing! James has said, "Is any among you afflicted? Let him pray." Do not pray at once to be delivered from your affliction. More than likely God intends to work some great thing in you, if you will but hearken to His voice. Pray rather, not that you may be healed immediately, but that by prayer and reading and waiting on the Lord you may come to know the mind of Christ, and, Christ having revealed His mind to you, and you having your mind renewed, a transformation begins to take place. The renowned Dr. Charles S. Price, perhaps the greatest preacher of the twentieth century, a man who saw tens of thousands of lasting healings in answer to prayer, always taught the people to seek the Lord rather than to seek healing, and, because of this wise counsel, the most stubborn cases of infirmity were healed. Through his advice seekers usually became more concerned about their low spiritual estate than about their physical healing. Then, when God had adjusted their spiritual need, they found health and healing for their bodies as well. Dr. Price’s book, The Real Faith, written shortly before his death, is a gem that should be read by every Christian.

While in earnest prayer and meditation some days ago, the Spirit of the Lord made it clear to me just how simple it is to let the mind of Christ dwell in me. As the prayer that Jesus taught us to pray was going through my mind, I was forcefully impressed with the words, “Thy will be done in earth as it is done in heaven.” Right there in these blessed words lies the sacred secret of having the mind of Christ. My dear brethren, why is it that, when Christians pray today, they still make long prayers as the Pharisees did in the long ago, thinking they will be heard for their much speaking and asking? But their prayers still go unanswered. We pray God to bless our church when God has no intention of blessing it. We pray God to extricate us from the mess in which we are involved, but God may intend to leave us there for years to come that we might learn some never-to-be-forgotten lesson. We plead with God to remove our physical affliction when He is far more concerned with our spiritual need. He does not afflict willingly, but “the curse causeless shall not come.” When Miriam spoke against Moses and was smitten with leprosy, Moses cried to the Lord, “Heal her now.” But the Lord said, No! Let her go outside the camp for the days appointed and then offer the proper sacrifice. Then she may come in. In other words, even though she was Moses’ sister, she needed to learn both her lesson and her manners.

If a man or a woman would have the mind of Christ dwelling within, the first requisite is to have no mind of one’s own. People who come with a program, which they present to God and then ask Him to bless it and to finance it, are defeated before they ever start, first because it is their program and second because it originated in their minds. Never present a program to God and ask Him to bless it. Let Him present His purpose to you. His purpose is His mind. Thus you will have good success. You may sow and you may water, but it is God who gives the increase.

The man or woman who hits on some big idea, then rushes out and tells people over the pulpit, through radio and by letters that God gave him the plan, that it is a great work of faith and therefore he must have your dollars to carry it out, is a deceiver, and the person he is deceiving most of all is himself. It is amazing to find how many people are daily deceived by this enthusiastic line of the self-styled preachers of righteousness. All letters that come through the mail begging for money to carry out some grandiose scheme should be thrown in the wastebasket and burned as soon as possible. All urgent appeals by radio, T.V. or magazine soliciting funds to finance great programs should be completely ignored. This is not God's way and it is not God's mind. It is not of faith and it is not God's way of propagating His gospel.

So often people ask me this question: “What would happen to the world if it were not for all the denominational churches?” Well, I'll tell you what would happen. God would then raise up true ministries as He did during the first three hundred years of this present age. Those mighty ministries who spurned all of our modern striving spread the marvelous gospel light all over the then known world until by 300 A.D. there were more Christians in the Roman world than heathen. It was only when the church became organized and a pope was set at the head that the fearful darkness of the dark ages began to cover the earth. The world is once again in dark ages, for darkness now covers the earth as it did in the days of Noah, when the people knew not until the flood came and took them all away.

So you see, to have the mind of Christ is to allow God to reveal His mind and purpose to you. Then when you act on that, you will find His mind dwelling in you, leading you and revealing His way, for thus saith the Lord, "As many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God." We have already made prominent the point that all God's purposes are predestined, pre-arranged, and foreordained. Therefore if any man will seek to discover His purposes and walk in them, he will have the mind of Christ dwelling in him.

One of God's purposes, possibly the greatest at present revealed, is His intention to restore the whole of His creation to Himself. I make no apology whatsoever for boldly asserting that according to God's own word it is
His will and intention to eventually restore the whole of creation. It is not His intention, however, to complete the work now nor in this dispensation nor yet in the age to come, but He, like a master craftsman, accomplishes one thing at a time. First He presents Jesus Christ, Son of God and Son of man, perfected through suffering that He might be the merciful high priest of us all. Next He prepares and perfects the sons of God, a people for His name, and, having perfected a vast family of sons in the exact image and likeness of Jesus Christ inasmuch that He speaks of them as in Christ, He will return to earth a second time to rebuild the tabernacle of David or, in other words, to set up the kingdom of God on earth, that the residue of men might seek the Lord and that the glorious bride, seen perfected in Rev. chapter 21, may be prepared. Then finally the gates are opened to all the nations. This marvelous plan was laid out in detail by the inspired apostle James when at Jerusalem he spoke these illuminating words: "Simeon hath declared how God at the first did visit the Gentiles, to take out of them a people for His name. And to this agree the words of the prophets; as it is written, After this I will return, and will build again the tabernacle of David, which is fallen down; and I will build again the ruins thereof, and I will set it up: that the residue of men might seek the Lord, and all the Gentiles, upon whom My name is called, saith the Lord, who doeth all these things. Known unto God are all His works from the beginning of the world." Acts 15:14-18. Since it is the purpose and intention of the Lord to accomplish all these wonders, each in His appointed time, until the whole creation is restored, then why do energetic men, especially the preachers who should know better, insist on trying to save the whole world now? God will bring in each appointed number in its own appointed time and all the striving of men will not and cannot alter His purpose one iota. To know God's plan and walk in it as He directs is certainly to have the mind of Christ. Thus to be led by His Spirit is to be a son of God.

I say again - I repeat it with the assurance of His word of truth - that it is God's intention to restore the whole creation to Himself. If there were no other verses in the New Testament but those given in Ephesians 1:9-11, we would have abundant assurance that it is God's intention in His own time to restore the whole creation to Himself. Because of the exceeding importance of this scripture as it displays the purpose of God, the intention of God and the counsel of His will, we take the liberty here to quote from several translations the beauty and forcefulness of this revelation. Eph: 1:9-11.

"Having made known unto us the mystery of His will, according to His good pleasure which He hath purposed in Himself, that in the dispensation of the fullness of times He might gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven, and which are on earth, even in Him: in whom also we have obtained an inheritance, being predestined according to the purpose of Him who worketh all things after the counsel of His own will." (King James Version.) I ask all who read to dissect this passage clause by clause and phrase by phrase. As you do so, you will see clearly that a certain mystery of His will is spoken of, a certain good pleasure, a marvelous universal purpose, which He has purposed in Himself, and that mysterious purpose and good pleasure is to gather into Christ everything on earth and everything in heaven, and that this purpose and intention will be completed in all its wonderful entirety in the dispensation of the fullness of times. For our information this is the dispensation that follows the millennial kingdom. You will further see that this mighty, all-inclusive program was predestined before the ages began and is now working as the ages pass by according to the counsel of His will. Not the will of man, not the will of angels, but the will of God, who planned it before ever the ages began.

Let us now give earnest heed to the translation as given by the learned Richard Weymouth that our souls may bask in that blessed hope that is laid out here in the vivid words of his translation. "It is in Him, and through the shedding of His blood, that we have our deliverance - the forgiveness of our offences - so abundant was God's grace, the grace which He, the possessor of all wisdom and understanding, lavished upon us, when He made known to us the secret of His will. And this is in harmony with God's merciful purpose for the government of the world when the times are ripe for it — the purpose which He has cherished in His own mind of restoring the whole creation to find its one Head in Christ; yes, things in heaven and things on earth, to find their one Head in Him. In Him, too, we have been made heirs, having been chosen beforehand in accordance with the intention of Him whose might carries out in everything the design of His own will..."

No less vivid are the translations of Goodspeed, Phillips, Young, and others, making assurance doubly sure that it is the intention of our all-wise heavenly Father to gather into Christ in the ages to come the "all things in heaven and on earth."
Finally we quote this passage from the translation by Moffatt. "So richly has God lavished upon us His grace, granting us complete insight and understanding of the open secret of His will, showing us how it was the purpose of His design so to order it in the fullness of the ages that all things in heaven and earth alike should be gathered up in Christ — in the Christ in whom we have had our inheritance allotted to us as was decreed in the design of Him who carries out everything according to the counsel of His will..." Ah, what tremendous assurance is given here!

Jesus Christ is the image of the invisible God, "the firstborn of every creature: for by Him were all things created, that are in heaven, and that are in earth, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers: all things were created by Him and for Him: And He is before all things, and by Him all things consist. And He is the head of the body, the church: who is the beginning, the firstborn from the dead; that in all things He might have the preeminence. For it pleased the Father that in Him should all fullness dwell." Col. 1:15-19. And now Paul, having spoken of things visible and things invisible, of thrones, dominions, principalities and powers, all of which have tasted the bitterness and curse of the fall, makes this all inclusive statement: "And having made peace through the blood of His cross, by Him to reconcile all things unto Himself; by Him, I say, whether they be things in earth, or things in heaven." Col. 1:20. It is well worthwhile for anyone to count the number of times the term all things is used in the book of Colossians.

I have written these assurances with the hope and prayer that God's dear saints may be made aware of the infinite harmony of His merciful purpose. If we will take time in reverent meditation and prayer to read His word and listen to His voice, we will become strangely acquainted with the secret of His will, not only for the ages to come, but for the present age and the things that concern our daily walk with Him. In the secret of His will we walk in the Spirit. When we walk in the Spirit, we are led by the Spirit, and, when we are led by the Spirit, we are the sons of God.

Nowhere in a thousand universes could a harmony be found like the harmony of God. From Him everything comes, by Him everything exists, and in Him everything ends. He is the master planner, the master architect, the wise master builder, the author and finisher of faith. He is the mighty maestro of a symphony whose well, tuned harmonies swell to the utmost reaches of His universe. He is the leader of a heavenly choir that is filling heaven and earth with the harmonies of God.

Men wrap themselves in smug cocoons
Of dogmas they believe are wise,
And look askance at those who see
In worms potential butterflies.

THE LAST DAYS

The holy men of God who by divine unction and verbal inspiration wrote the word of the Lord have given mankind a prophetic message that describes in great detail the works of God with man, His creation, during the "seven thousand year day" which extends from Adam in Eden to the end of the millennial kingdom. It was the sixth day when God said, "Let us make man in our image." Five vast days, each seven thousand years long, had passed into history before Adam came. The sixth day now is and will continue until the end of the millennial kingdom. The seventh day is yet to come. Like its six predecessors it, too, will continue for seven thousand years. It is the dispensation of the fullness of times, spoken of by Paul in Ephesians 1:10. That will be the crowning age of all ages. It is in truth the age of the ages. In it God has promised to gather together all things in heaven and earth in His blessed Son, Jesus Christ. Eph. 1:10.

Fifty thousand years of time, lying in the heart of eternity, were determined upon this earth to create all things, to bring man, the predestined lord of the universe, to the image of God, and to restore all things and gather them together in Christ. This fifty thousand years is divided into seven days, each day being seven thousand years in duration. When this has been completed, then will follow the jubilee, the fiftieth day one thousand years long. In that day all things will return to their rightful owner, who is God Himself. This immense and wonderful plan of the ages is set forth in type in Leviticus 25:1-13. The man who lacks an understanding of God's plan for the ages can never hope to comprehend God's purpose. The days of the week are very typical. For this reason the apostle Peter emphasized the importance of days, saying, "But, beloved, be not ignorant of this one thing, that one day is with the Lord as a thousand years and a thousand years as one day." 2 Pet. 3:8. His divinely inspired statement embraces God's plan for vast ages and for days, whether they be days twenty-four hours long, days one thousand years long, or days seven thousand years long.

The Spirit of God inspired His prophets and apostles to leave with us irrefutable evidence of the approaching end of our time. The last days of this our age are referred to in many and unmistakable terms. It was none other than Paul who wrote, "This know also, that in the last days perilous times will come." 2 Tim. 3:1, of which we shall speak presently in greater particular. We may say with certainty that the greatest portion of the Bible is prophetic and was written for men who will live in the last days. If the wise of this world who waste their time trying to disprove the Bible would take time to compare the statements of 2 Tim. 3:1-7 with the events of the hour in which we now live, they would know for certain that God, who knows the end from the beginning, had spoken with infinite wisdom and prophetic exactness. As far back as the book of Genesis the Spirit of God undertook to tell us what would befall us in the latter days. Jacob, with the spirit of prophecy mightily upon him, called unto his sons, and said, "Gather yourselves together that I may tell you that which shall befall you in the last days." Gen. 49:1.

The apostle Paul, writing to Timothy, said, "This know also that in the last days perilous times shall come." Well may we who live in the last days of the twentieth century say with certainty, "Perilous times have come." It would be a weariness to the reader should I now begin to recite those universal evils which encompass us. We are well aware of the international and world-wide confusion of our day, how nation rises against nation in accusation, misrepresentation, lies, and innuendo until the smoking flax of ever increasing hate and bitterness flames into open conflict, devouring culprit and innocent alike in its relentless inferno. It would be a waste of time and a heaviness to the spirit to repeat the weird stories of sadistic, senseless violence daily perpetrated on the streets, in the homes, on fields of battle, and in the secret places of shame and despair. A few years ago the word violence was scarcely ever heard in the newscasts or seen in newspapers, but now it is used with ever increasing frequency, telling us with unmistakable voice that, as the earth was filled with violence in the days of Noah before the flood, Gen. 6:13, so also it is filled with universal tribulation that will leave nothing outside its engulfing wake. Then shall they see the Son of Man coming in the heavens with power and great glory. Then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn, for He shall come to put down all rule and authority, 1 Cor. 15:24, and set up that kingdom of God for which all creation has been in travail.

Violence is everywhere. It is safe to be neither on the street nor on the highway. Jer. 6:25. Even the privacy of homes is invaded time and again by muggers and thugs and bandits who without regard to age or sex leave old and young alike beaten, bound, robbed, tortured, or dead, and all this for no reason at all. What more can we expect when violent scenes are continually enacted in the living rooms of millions of hoqies? We see soldiers being killed in battle. We see men being bound and bludgeoned, kicked and shot right on the newscasts, until the whole nation becomes violence conscious and accepts violence as our way of life.

Paul by the wisdom given unto him wrote, "Even as they did not like to retain God in their knowledge, God gave them up to a reprobate mind, to do those things that are not convenient." Rom. 1:28. Something very terrible has happened to the minds of the people. There is a sort of mental block that turns the thoughts of the wise from the paths of wisdom to the channels of foolishness and error until all their thinking is becoming reprobate and wrong, completely backward and upside down. Authorities are becoming possessed with the ridiculous notion that people should see crime to prevent them from becoming criminals. They imagine that people who watch will be informed and so turn away from it. Their corrupt minds reason that if people, young and old, see filth they will become pure-minded. Only recently one advocated that men and women should go nude on the bathing beaches to abolish the crime of rape. Others declare emphatically that LSD should be legalized so that people won't be bothered experimenting with it. You see what I mean by a mental block? Why, that kind of reasoning is as foolish as would be the imagination that cigarette advertising encourages men to kick the habit, or that liquor advertising would produce abstainers. Because men do not want to retain God in their knowledge, they have inherited a reprobate mind and the Lord has turned all their wisdom to foolishness and hurt. When nations who once worshipped and honored the true God come to the place where they no longer want to retain God in their knowledge, they heap to themselves endless trouble, and the heavy hand of divine chastisement will be continually laid upon them in awesome blows until they are consumed.

The tragic trend that places men's feet in the devouring quicksands of the reprobate mind begins with this attitude: "Even as they did not like to retain God in their knowledge, God gave them over to a reprobate mind, to do those things which are not convenient." Rom. 1:28. The initial wedge of this folly began with the teaching of evolution, a teaching which not only contradicts the sacred word of the Creator but which in all the world has no foundation in fact. In all the entire creation of God we are unable to point to any creature that today is in the process of evolving. If man evolved from monkeys, how does it happen that all monkeys have not evolved until that species is extinct? It is not because men do not know the truth, but because their wicked hearts delight in denying it. Man cannot play with God for long, for, though His mercy is patiently extended toward us, those who dare to play on the quicksands of unbelief will certainly be swallowed by them. The inspired statement of the Holy Spirit through the apostle Paul can scarcely be enlarged upon. Those who read it should certainly be advised and warned by it that they may flee from the vanities of unbelief and doubt to lay hold upon God, who not only tells the truth but who Himself is truth.

The translator, Phillips, has rendered Romans 1:18-32 in words so vivid that they seem to numb the mind with the certainty of their real and awful parallel in our day. "Now the holy anger of God is disclosed from heaven against the godlessness and evil of those men who render truth dumb and inoperative by their wickedness. It is not that they do not know the truth about God; indeed He has made it quite plain to them. For since the beginning of the world the invisible attributes of God, e.g. His eternal power and divinity, have been plainly discernible through things which He has made and which are commonly seen and known, thus leaving these men without a rag of excuse. They knew all the time that there is a God, yet they refused to acknowledge Him as such, or to thank Him for what He is or does. Thus they became fatuous in their arguments, and plunged their silly minds still further in the dark. Behind a facade of "wisdom" they became just fools, who would exchange the glory of the eternal God for an imitation image of a mortal man, or of creatures that run or fly or crawl. They gave up God: and therefore God gave them up - to be the playing of their own foul desires in dishonoring their own bodies.

"These men deliberately forfeited the truth of God and accepted a lie, paying homage and giving service to the creature instead of to the Creator, who alone is worthy to be worshipped for ever and ever, amen. God therefore handed them over to disgraceful passions. Their women exchanged the normal practices of sexual intercourse for something, which is abnormal and unnatural. Similarly the men, turning from the natural intercourse with women, were swept into lustful passions for one another. Men with men performed these shameful horrors, receiving, of course, in their own personalities the consequences of sexual perversity.

"Moreover, since they considered themselves too high and mighty to acknowledge God, He allowed them to become the slaves of their degenerate minds, and to perform unmentionable deeds. They became filled with wickedness, rottenness, greed and malice; their minds became steeped in envy, murder, quarrelsomeness, deceitfulness, and spite. They became whisperers-behind-doors, stabbers-in-the-back, God-haters; They overflowed with insolent pride and boastfulness, and their minds teemed with diabolical invention. They scoffed at duty to parents, they mocked at learning, recognized no obligations of honor, lost all natural affection, and had no use for mercy. More than this - being well aware of God's pronouncement that all who do these things deserve to die, they not only continued their own practices, but did not hesitate to give their thorough approval to others who did the same." Rom. 1:18-32. (Phillips).

This, then, explains the awesome progression of ever increasing wickedness that in these closing days of the age ascends as a blinding smoke from the bottomlessness of the bottomless pit. Because the high-mindedness of man has brushed aside the wisdom and truth of God, he has become vain in his imagination and his foolish heart is darkened. Professing himself to be wise, he has become a fool, and God has given him up to a reprobate mind. Man has sported with the wind and been carried away with the whirlwind. His intercourse with unbelief has conceived and brought forth the reprobate mind, and it in turn has filled the world with unrighteousness, fornication, wickedness, covetousness, murder, deceit, back-bitings, boasts, evil inventions, disrespect for parents and all authority. It has produced a people devoid of natural affection for families or children, a people implacable and unmerciful who worship and serve the creature and not the Creator.

Do you know that divorce in England has increased fifty percent in the last five years? Do you know that in the last one hundred years the population of the United States has increased four hundred percent, but divorce has increased twenty-eight hundred percent, until today there are four hundred thousand divorces a year, leaving an indelible scar on the minds of millions of children that can never be healed or erased through life? Do you know that pregnancy is the number one health problem among teen-age girls? Do you know that every day fifteen hundred young people in the United States alone, mostly in their teens, are affected with venereal disease and that each year there are one million seven hundred thousand new cases? Do you know that the Archbishop of Canterbury spoke in the British House of Lords in support of the bill to legalize homosexuality? Do you know that homosexuals are organized and are actually procuring young boys for their illicit use?

This filthy disease that springs from the reprobate mind is engulfing millions in our day, and I would be an unfaithful servant of Christ if I did not warn every man and woman who will be warned that homosexuality was the final sin that brought the fire of God on Sodom. And every sodomite throughout all generations has been the namesake of that corrupt city. If you will read the account of events that preceded the flood in the days of Noah, you will find that every corrupt and harmful perversion was prevalent to bring the wrath of God upon an age so evil that it repented the Lord that He had made man. These are the last days, and they are days so terrifyingly perilous that only those who reach out for the mind of Christ will ever be able to escape them.

Queen Victoria of England, when asked by the German Kaiser to explain the secret of the world-wide power and success of the British Empire, is said to have handed him the Bible. This remarkable testimony, given by the reigning monarch of the greatest Empire the world has ever known, and the only commonwealth (or multitude) of nations the world has ever known, was also given by the fathers and great men of the mightiest and greatest individual nation the world has ever known. See Gen. 48:19-20. No less a person than George Washington, the father of the American Republic, declared, "It is impossible to rightly govern the world without God and the Bible." And that other immortal, American president, Abraham Lincoln, said, "I believe the Bible is the best gift God has given to man. All the good from the Saviour of the world is communicated to us through this book." Also that man whose name is now a household word throughout the Anglo-Saxon world, Daniel Webster, declared, "If we abide by the principles taught in the Bible, our country will go on prospering and to prosper, but if we and our posterity neglect its instruction and authority, no man can tell how suddenly catastrophe may overwhelm us and bury us." Those last three words, "and bury us," are certainly prophetic as a voice from God, speaking out of the distant past and uttering the very sentence of the ungodly Khrushchev, "We will bury you."

Woe to us that the leaders of our nation no longer honor the God of our fathers, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, but honor the god of forces, of armies, tanks, and bombs. It is unconstitutional for a Roman Catholic sovereign to reign on the throne of the British Commonwealth. The monarch must be a protestant, and it is not the will of God that the United States should have a Roman Catholic president. The moment this happens, the nation is brought under the control and authority of a foreign potentate, that power of Rome which in centuries past reigned over the kings of the earth and is preparing to do so again. This is the power that would deny the people the right to read the Bible and worship God as individuals. This is the power that during its brief reign from 1960 to 1963 took the Bible and prayers from the American classroom, turning a well-ordered, well disciplined educational system into one of confusion and anarchy, rebellion, insolence, riot, and licentiousness. How well did Theodore Roosevelt say, "Mere education without divine guidance is like handing a gun to an irresponsible man." Lyon Phelps said, "I believe a knowledge of the Bible without a college course is more valuable than a college course without the Bible." We might all well shout amen to these remarkable statements, for what shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his soul? Or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?

The underlying cause of all the abominable confusion in the world today is that man has tried to forget God. Our nation, once God-fearing, has come to the place where it does not want to retain God in its knowledge. The greatest criminal of them all in its godless thinking and rejection of truth is the system that is everywhere falsely known as the church, that desolating abomination whose puppeteers cry, "God is dead. The Bible is a myth. Jesus was the son of Joseph and Mary. Man came from a monkey. The miracles of the Bible are fakes.
Jesus did not die; He only fainted." With them it has come to pass that "even as they did not like to retain God in their knowledge, God has given them up to a reprobate mind" to do all manner of things that are not convenient.

Now when Paul wrote, "This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come", he gave a very definite reason for their coming, "For," he said, "men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, truce-breakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God; having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof: from such turn away." 2 Tim. 3:1-5. These, then, are the reasons that perilous times have come upon us! The opening statement, "Men shall be lovers of their own selves," is the key note of the whole prediction. While love for God has grown cold and dead, love of self abounds on every hand. Though man is generally a lover of self, he hates to admit that he is basically and fundamentally selfish. But who can deny that selfishness and the love of self are one and the same thing? It is a deplorable testimony, but a true one nevertheless, that in our age it is a most difficult thing to find a man who has more concern for others than he has for himself. "How does this affect me?" is the question in the mind of every man. Where do "I" come out in the bargain? The same people who delight in willfully damaging the property of others, vandalizing, breaking, burning, stealing, always squeal like pigs the moment harm befalls them.

But let us not speak only to the riff-raff, the thugs, and the plunderers. Let every man examine his own heart. Time and experience is a great teacher, teaching us lessons we often hate to know. I was seventeen years old when I gave my heart to Christ and I have been walking in His grace and mercy ever since then. Vast and varied beyond all expectation have been the experiences of the way. With great joy I can testify to many miracles of God's grace and power wrought in the lives of men and women, but with great sadness of heart and with deepest sorrow of spirit I must confess that a truly unselfish man is hard to find. If in my pilgrimage I have found one or two unselfish people that would be good indeed, for they are scarcer than the jewels of wisdom and knowledge. Many people have listened to sermons about the cross, but far too few have ever faced it or embraced it for themselves. Many have heard sermons about Gethsemane, but few have ever waited there in the deep agony of its shadows until their own will, their own self and selfishness drifted away like an evil spirit into obscurity to be replaced by the will of God that henceforth the "I" element should no longer be a consideration, but an eternal loss.

Men have said to me, "We want God, brother; we want God. We want God's will", and many other such high-sounding phrases; but when the test comes and their "self faces the cross, they show in no uncertain way that, should God's will be found to conflict with their own, then they want no part of it at all. The loud affirmations of devotion to God's service and God's will made by countless preachers in their pulpits usually is as meaningless as the squeaking of a door on its hinges, for lurking behind the statements of utter abandonment and devotion is the crafty old enemy of self, deceiving the people and above all deceiving self. Search in the dark and secret places and you will find self there. You will find him like Judas, valiantly stating the case of the poor, while he covets the money that was put in the bag. You will see him like Simon the sorcerer, coveting the gifts of the Holy Spirit that he might himself be a great one. Or perhaps you will see him as the rich young ruler who, finding that eternal life would affect his prized possessions, went sadly away. The old Jacob nature, that treacherous supplanter called self, must, must, be taken to Gethsemane and from thence to the cross, never to be considered or heard of ever more.

If there was ever a day when men were saying, "Lord, have we not prophesied in Thy name, and in Thy name cast out devils, and in Thy name done many wonderful works?" surely that day is now. But unto them it shall be spoken." "I never knew you; depart from Me, ye that work iniquity." "Men shall be lovers of their own selves," said Paul. Therefore, whether it be in politics where men climb to power over the assassinated characters of their opponents, or whether it be in the homes where natural affection and love has fled away, leaving behind only flopouses devoid of love, affection, and unity, or whether it be in the confused system that calls itself the church where hireling professionals vie for sheep and for prominence, self sitteth in every temple of God, claiming man's heart as its throne and showing itself to be his God.

The prophet Jeremiah said, "The heart is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked: who can know it?" Jer. 17:9. It is always putting on a false front. It is always acting with ulterior motives. We cannot understand the deceitful working of our own hearts; how then can we understand the heart of another? "It is naught, it is naught, saith the buyer: but when he is gone his way, he boasteth." Prov. 20:14. "It is good, it is good," saith the seller; and when you have bought, he winketh! We are living in a deceitful age when men are lovers of their own selves, and it is extremely hard to find a man who, taking no thought for himself, has dedicated his life to the will and to the glory of God. It is love of self that has brought the perilous times upon the world, nor will there be any change until the day that Jesus Christ is revealed from heaven in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God and obey not the Lord Jesus Christ.

We can no longer say the last days are at hand. We can only say we are now living in the last days. Let us watch, therefore, and be sober!

By His question, "When the Son of man cometh, will He find faith on the earth?" our Lord Jesus Christ made it abundantly clear that in the last days there would be little true faith on the earth. We may well ponder the Lord's meaning, but the question leaves no doubt that faith will be very limited and almost non-existent. Faith in Christ, so important for our justification, is in the final analysis simply believing God, believing that He is, and that He is the rewarder of all who seek Him, believing that everything He said is true and that He will stand faithfully behind His word. The only important element in faith is believing, and the only important element in believing is the will or mind of God. The man who truly walks in God's will need scarcely ask anything of God since God has obligated Himself to fully meet the needs of those who walk according to His bidding and His will. Christians who imagine they are in the will of God while they continually solicit the aid of men to carry on their affairs are deceiving themselves. Loath I am to say it, yet truth demands the sorry confession that the church system is overflowing with this artificial and useless faith. The man who with his right hand raised to heaven loudly proclaims his faith in God while with his heft hand he begs from the public is not only a deceiver of the people, but a deceiver of himself as well.

There was faith in the earth on that memorable day that Noah entered into the ark, even as the Spirit testified, saying, "By faith Noah, being warned of God of things not seen as yet (rain), moved with fear, prepared an ark to the saving of his house; by the which he condemned the world, and became heir of the righteousness which is by faith." Heb. 11:7. Faith there was, but it was very, very scarce. There is little reason to believe that faith was present even in Noah's family, but that his faith was the salvation of his household. There was faith in the earth on the day that Lot went out of Sodom, but it was so scarce that in that whole city there could not be found ten people who had faith, that Abraham's prayer could be answered. Gen. 18:32. Yet He delivered "Just Lot" whose soul was vexed with the filthy conversation of the wicked. 2 Pet. 2:7.

Abounding faith will not be found on the earth when Jesus comes. In the elect of God alone will faith be found. When Jesus comes, even the elect will no longer be found in companies or congregations, but they will be found scattered to the four winds of heaven, whence the Lord will call them on that day. Matt. 24:31. I most seriously doubt that in all the world there will be any group of people gathered together on any kind of scriptural grounds. Those who in the end of the age vividly discern the mystical body of Christ will not see it in the groups or sects or congregations, but as a mystical, many-membered body on which rests "the Head", rising like a spirit from the four winds of heaven to take its place in Him. There will, indeed, be faith on the earth when Jesus comes, but only in the elect, and the elect have always been few. The systems of earth are a faithless lot, sinking ever deeper in the morass of unbelief.

With the ever, increasing unbelief of this hour, there has arisen an abundance of false teachers, false prophets, and false christs. We will certainly see, if we trouble to look, that in our day that which is false greatly outweighs that which is true. Jesus further stated that the false teachers and false prophets of the end of the age would deceive many. We need little more than the natural mind to teach us that those who are deceived would be unlikely to know that they are deceived. Thus it is that thousands and millions walk in error. Neglecting their relationship to Christ, they follow men who in their pride have deceived even themselves.

It is the Spirit that quickeneth. The flesh profiteth nothing. "The words that I speak unto you, they are spirit and they are life," said Jesus. We may conclude from this that only those things to which the Holy Spirit bears witness and which come forth from the Spirit can possibly be truth. You may find it difficult to receive this, but I am convinced that truth cannot be spoken except by the Holy Spirit. Thus we must conclude that those people who make correct statements and say correct words, yet being devoid of the Spirit, are indeed false prophets or false teachers and the words they speak, though technically true, bring forth fruit unto death rather than unto life. Why should anyone imagine that Satan could not speak the truth? But could you dare to believe that truth, coming from him, would bring forth fruit unto life? That is impossible simply because he is devoid of the Spirit and truth is not in him, and it is the Spirit that quickeneth. In the Acts of the Apostles we have the account of a girl who was a soothsayer, who followed the apostles for several days, crying to all, "These men are the servants of the most high God, who show unto us the way of salvation." Acts 16:17. Now dare we say that this statement was untrue? Certainly not. It was as true a statement as could possibly be made. Why was it, then, that Paul, a man full of the Holy Spirit, was greatly grieved in spirit and, after suffering her words for some days, turned and rebuked the spirit and commanded it to come out of her? The answer is very clear and should be a tremendous lesson in our day. It is simply that her words, though correct, were not of the Spirit. Thus one who speaks, having not the Spirit of God, is a false prophet, bringing forth fruit unto death. Are we to believe that God is pleased that Satan should proclaim the cross or the blood or the Holy Spirit? Would not such a proclamation be an abomination in His sight? And dare we think that the Lord Almighty is pleased that the carnal mind of man should proclaim the cross, or the blood, or the Spirit, or that he should attempt to explain the truths of the Bible? The truth therefore remains that all men who dabble in the things of the Spirit, they themselves having not the Spirit, are false prophets, false teachers, false apostles, and false christs.

Not long ago I listened to a sermon by radio. The things being said were correct. The presentation was excellent, the diction good, and the English perfect. There was evidence of zeal. But, when the sermon was finished, it left my spirit dead, untouched, unmoved, and unfed. The listeners, it seemed, were left far more impressed with the ability of the speaker than with the Christ or the truth he presented. One thing was lacking; it was the Spirit, who alone can quicken and make alive. Because of this lack the sermon produces death rather than life. Have you not listened to sermons like that? - sermons which apparently were true and well presented, but which, when they were finished, left you spiritless and wondering what was missing? Time and again men and women have written enquiring, "What is the matter with me? Why is it that these sermons leave me feeling dead?" The only answer I can give is that, because they do not come forth from the Spirit of God, but from the spirit of man, therefore they bring forth fruit unto death. In our day there are many such preachers. Because a man stands shouting, "Thus saith the Lord", until his voice is so husky he can hardly speak is no reason to believe he is speaking by the Spirit. There are hundreds, perhaps thousands, of men and women in our day crying, "Thus saith the Lord", yet God has spoken nothing.

In 1963 someone sent me a book entitled "Prophecy on the March". It gave what was supposed to be a year-by-year prophetic preview of events from 1963 to 1968. Those predictions consisted mostly of earthquakes and violent storms in such varied places of the earth that almost any good guesser could have hit some of the things right. But all the great, important things and world, shaking events were never hinted at nor mentioned in any way. Had the prophet (?) told us that in 1963 the President of the United States would be assassinated, almost any of us would have been forced to give heed to his words. Had he foretold the dreadful war in Viet Nam, what man in the Christian world would have doubted that he spoke by inspiration? Or had he mentioned that great world-shaking event of 1967, the six-day war in Palestine, I for one could not have doubted his spiritual insight and understanding.

Let us conclude, then, that all religious functions and all religious talk - in fact, all things coming forth from the mind of man — belong to the realm of the false, whether it be in teaching, in prophesying, or in any other way. The false prophets and false christs, which Jesus warned would be many, are with US today. They are legion. If you will closely examine that which in our day is heralded as revival, you will find that the results in most cases are completely artificial. Evil men and seducers are waxing worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived. Mercenary-minded men, hungry for quick wealth, have grasped the spectacular atmosphere of the meeting as a fitting place to proclaim their pseudo miracles and their imaginary signs and wonders before a gullible public, who in turn have loaded them with excessive financial benefit, vainly imagining that their idol will and my work is in His plan and purpose for me, then God is enough. He will supply all the need according to His riches in glory without my begging for a penny. If God is not sufficiently interested in the work you are doing to carry it on without your financial machinations, then let the work die. It isn't worth the doing and God is preacher will use the wealth to convert the world. Every man who has big programs for your money should be regarded as false. However big the project may be, a life-time of experience has taught me that if I am in God's not concerned about it.
We are indeed living in perilous times. The times are perilous because of the explosive situation in all the world, because of the violence on every hand, because of the incredible and phenomenal rise of false ministries and false christs. Our lives are in jeopardy everywhere we go and in everything we do. We have never had so much talk of peace and never so many wars. We have never had so many doctors, medicines, and hospitals, and never so many sick, insane, and infirm. Never so many schools and universities and never so much ignorance. Never so much food and never so many hungry. Never so much preaching and never so much godlessness and false religion. Is it any wonder that the Spirit warned us with no uncertain voice, saying, that in last days perilous times should come, that, as it was in the days of Noah, so should it be when the Son of man came, that evil men and seducers should wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived, that men should be lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God, and that when the Son of man came, would he find faith on the earth? We are living in perilous times. It is best that we believe it. Is it any wonder that the Holy Spirit, seeing our day with all its Babel of confusion, sent forth this message to His people, "Come out of her, My people, that ye be not partaker of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues." Rev. 18:4.

There is but one place of safety. It is not in the systems of religion. It is in our Lord Jesus Christ. The blood that He shed for the remission of the sins of the whole world is available in our day to all who will believe in Him. It still retains its ancient power to cleanse from all sin. It still is efficacious to deliver from every abominable sin of the past. It is able still to give victory for the future. The blood of Jesus Christ is better than the blood of Abel, better far than all other sacrifice and offering. It is able, not only to sprinkle the unclean, but to purge the conscience from dead works to serve the living God, making pure as angels the vilest sinner who believes in its power.

The hour has come to turn from the vanities of earth's religions and all the masquerading they have done in the name of church. "Behold," saith Christ, "I stand at the door and knock. If any man hear My voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with Me. He that overcometh will I grant to sit with Me in My throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with My Father in His throne. He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches." Rev. 3:20-22.

THE END OF THE DAYS

That we are living in the final days, if not the closing hours, of this age there can be no reasonable doubt, and as we see the long awaited day approaching, our hearts are mightily stirred to reveal from scripture just how near the end of the age must be.

It will not be my purpose here to recount those oft repeated signs which God's word sets forth as evidence of the last days, such as the recurrence of the universal wickedness of the days of Noah or the abounding sin and lawlessness which Paul sets forth as clear evidence of the last days. 2 Tim. 3. I will endeavor, however, to set forth as clearly and simply as possible a form of evidence which to most Christians has become almost an anathema to be avoided as much as possible by those who endeavor to expound the mysteries that concern the end of the age.

The understandable apprehension we justly display concerning any form of date setting has, I fear, become somewhat an obsession with most of us, causing us to immediately shun any effort to estimate the time of His coming as a totally unscriptural endeavor that should not be countenanced, even in the least degree. Whenever reference is made to the time of the Lord's coming, we are promptly reminded that "No man knoweth the day or the hour when the Son of man cometh." That one statement is supposed to preclude and abolish every honest attempt that might be made to interpret those very definite prophetic utterances which concern the end of the age, the time of the Lord's coming, and the resurrection of the just.

In my opinion there is not a man on earth who knows the day or the hour of the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, and I will certainly not try to solve the riddle in this message because I frankly confess I do not know. Nevertheless, the apostle Paul wrote to the saints of God in these words: "But of the times and seasons, brethren, ye have no need that I write unto you. For yourselves know perfectly that the day of the Lord so cometh as a thief in the night. For when they shall say, Peace and safety; then sudden destruction cometh upon them, as travail upon a woman with child; and they shall not escape. But ye, brethren, are not in darkness, that that day should overtake you as a thief. Ye are all the children of light, and the children of the day: we are not of the night, nor of darkness. Therefore let us not sleep, as do others; but let us watch and be sober." 1 Thess. 5:1-6.

If these solemn words mean anything at all, they must certainly mean that in the world today there are children of light who are not asleep, but wide awake and fully aware of the nearness of the coming of the Lord. Just as some watchful, well-informed person might know the hour in which a thief would come, so these enlightened ones should also know the time of the advent of Him who likened His coming to the stealthy approach of a thief in the night. Let us then ask ourselves one very important question. If the Lord did not want us to know almost the exact time of the end of this age and of the resurrection of the dead, why did He inspire the prophet Daniel to fill so large a part of his marvelous prophecy with days, weeks, years and times, which, when carefully reckoned, bring us to certain exact dates which, if correctly computed and properly understood, point with unerring certainty to the time in which this present age will end?

As in the fear of God we examine the scriptures given by Daniel the prophet, foretelling the time of the coming of Christ, the end of the age and the resurrection of the just, it will surely become evident that the Lord on several occasions has placed in His word the exact date of the end of the age and the resurrection of the just. It may very well be that our understanding of the scriptures is painfully faulty; thus would our understanding become misunderstanding. Nevertheless, regarding this momentous event of the ages, the prophet Daniel was clearly told, "None of the wicked shall understand, but the wise shall understand." Dan. 12:10.

There is a holy wisdom that is always hidden from the world of the ungodly and the realm of the careless. It is a secret wisdom, which God imparts to those who are possessors of His mind. The wicked and the careless cannot partake of the riches of this spiritual understanding because it is a secret wisdom, the priceless gift of the Holy Ghost. Concerning this hidden wisdom which God imparts to His mature saints, a very vivid description is set forth in the Revised Standard Version of 1 Cor. 2:6-14. "Yet among the mature we do impart wisdom, although it is not a wisdom of this age or of the rulers of this age, who are doomed to pass away. But we impart a secret and hidden wisdom of God, which God decreed before the ages for our glorification. None of the rulers of this age understood this; for if they had, they would not have crucified the Lord of glory. But, as it is written, What no eye has seen, nor ear heard, nor the heart of man conceived, what God has prepared for those who love Him, God has revealed to us through the Spirit, for the Spirit searches everything, even the depths of God." Is it any wonder, then, that the apostle said we have no need to be in darkness that that day should come upon us unawares?

Never in the history of the world was there an age of greater self-conceit, materialism, pride, arrogance, selfishness, greed, corruption and false religion! Mankind in our day is filled with all unrighteousness, which is manifest in all manner of wickedness, evil, covetousness, malice, envy, murder, strife, deceit, malignity, gossip, slander, hatred of God, insolence, haughty pride, evil inventions, disobedience to parents, lawlessness, foolishness, faithlessness, heartlessness and ruthlessness, and with all this disregard for all righteousness, women are changing their natural relations with men for that which is unnatural and men in their degradation and corruption are leaving their natural relations with women to burn in their filthy lusts one for another and are receiving the just judgment of God, which manifests itself in diseased bodies and reprobate minds that delight only in evil.

Our Lord Jesus Christ likened this wicked generation in which we now live to the days of Noah, saying, "As it was in the days of Noah, so shall it be also in the days of the Son of man." They were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage until the day that Noah entered into the ark and the flood came and took them all away. Vivid as was the description Jesus gave concerning the corruption that is to abound at the end of the age, it was not more cogent than the words written by Moses concerning the universal corruption that abounded in the days of Noah. The conditions extant in the pre-flood world are forcefully left for our learning in these vivid words of instruction: "And God saw that the wickedness of man was great in the earth, and that every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually. . . . The earth also was corrupt before God, and the earth was filled with violence. And God looked upon the earth, and, behold, it was corrupt: for all flesh had corrupted his way upon the earth." Gen. 6:5, 11-13.
The signal for the downfall of the Adamic race, the rampant sinfulness, the degrading corruption and defiance of God that followed was manifested when the sons of God began to intermarry with the daughters of men. Gen. 6:1. The sons of God referred to here are not fallen angels as the preachers are so fond of saying. Angels, whether fallen or otherwise, are sexless beings and cannot co-habit with humanity. The sons of God here mentioned are the Adamic race. The scripture distinctly states that Adam was the Son of God. Luke 3:38. Therefore his descendants were also sons of God. The daughters of men were the people of the pre-Adamic races. It was among these pre-Adamic people that the wicked Cain found his wife. All forms of intermarriage with any of these other races are strictly forbidden time and again in scripture. This "going after strange flesh" (Jude 7) and taking strange wives from other races is always condemned by God and brings the participants under wrath and condemnation. Nowhere in all the scripture do we ever find justification for intermarriage among the races. God separated them and commanded kind to produce after his kind. Those interested in the subject should study 1 Kings 11:8; Ezra 10:2,10,11,14,17,18,44 and Neh. 13:27. When the prophet Baalam could not find a way to curse Israel, but only bless them, he slyly cast a stumbling block before them and taught them to sin so that the wrath of God would come upon them. This diabolical and crafty stratagem of his is clearly disclosed in Christ's message to the church of Pergamos: "I have a few things against thee, because thou hast there them that hold the doctrine of Baalam, who taught Balac to cast a stumbling block before the children of Israel, to eat things sacrificed unto idols, and to commit fornication." Rev. 2:14. Now it is evident from the Genesis account that their fornication was not illicit intercourse between Israelitish men and women, but they went after strange flesh, intermarrying and committing fornication with the Canaanitish women round about them. The Old Testament does not tell us that this promiscuity was the result of Baalam's teaching, but Jesus discloses that sordid fact in His message to Pergamos.

"And Israel abode in Shittim, and the people began to commit whoredom with the daughters of Moab. And they called the people unto the sacrifice of their gods: and the people did eat and bow down to their gods. And Israel joined himself unto Baal-peor: and the anger of the Lord was kindled against Israel. And the Lord said unto Moses, Take all the heads of the people, and hang them up before the Lord against the sun, that the fierce anger of the Lord may be turned away from Israel. And Moses said unto the judges of Israel, Slay ye every one his men that were joined unto Baal-peor. And, behold, one of the children of Israel came and brought unto his brethren a Midianitish woman in the sight of Moses, and in the sight of all the congregation, who were weeping before the door of the tabernacle of the congregation. And when Phinehas, the son of Eleazar, the son of Aaron the priest, saw it, he rose up from among the congregation, and took a javelin in his hand; and he went after the man of Israel into the tent, and thrust both of them through, the man of Israel, and the woman through her belly. So the plague was stayed from the children of Israel. And those that died in the plague were twenty and four thousand." Num. 25:1-9.

I do not ask what your opinion may be concerning the intermarriage of Adamites with non-Adamites, for neither your opinion nor mine is of any importance. The only opinion that is worth a moment's consideration is the opinion of God. He it was who said that kind should be after his kind and, though I personally have the deepest respect for all races of men as also has the Lord, our intermarriage with them is always the beginning of sorrows. The blatant disregard for this fact in our day is one of the chief contributing causes for all the turmoil, lawlessness and violence we find among us. No Christian should ever consent to such a union. It is not only a sin on the part of the Adamite, but it is a grave sin against the non-Adamite and the chief sufferers in the days to come will be the mongrel children of such a union. Flee from all thought of such intermarriage, for God's word everywhere condemns it. It was Solomon's intermarriage with the heathen princesses of the nations round about that not only turned his heart away from God, but also brought the idolatrous worship of these women into the nation Israel.

I am one hundred percent convinced that we are an Israel nation, possessors of all the promises given to our father Abraham. Because of this it is one hundred percent wrong to invite heathen people of other nations to come to our country to teach our children in our schools and universities and to introduce their heathen gods and practices into our midst. What blessing has Mohammedanism ever brought to the world? It has brought nothing but filth, squalor and desolation. Has Buddha ever lifted the deep darkness from the begging, benighted millions of India? The more this evil in going after strange flesh is practiced in our land the greater will become the depravity of the human mind, Rom. 1, until even now in our day men do not want to retain God in their knowledge at all because they know that everything that God is or does condemns their evil practices and brings them into judgment.

When the prophet Daniel with much fasting and prayer earnestly sought the Lord for a clear understanding of the visions that had been entrusted to him, the Lord gave him no reply that he could understand, but said, "Blessed is he that waiteth, and cometh to the thousand three hundred and five and thirty days. But go thou thy way till the end be: for thou shalt rest, and stand in thy lot at the end of the days." Dan. 12:12-13.

Every honest heart, seeking for truth, will face the very evident fact that in verse 11 the Lord spoke of a period of one thousand two hundred and ninety days and in verse 12 He spoke of one thousand three hundred and thirty-five days. Then Daniel was told that he would rest, evidently in death, and "stand in his lot" or be resurrected at the end of the days. It must surely become evident that, if the Lord told His servant Daniel that he would rest and after thirteen hundred and thirty-five days (years) he would stand in his lot, the Lord was certainly telling him the exact time of his resurrection. Since the just shall be resurrected at the time of Christ's coming, then the Lord was telling us all what time the resurrection would occur, that is, at the end of the thirteen hundred and thirty-five days. This knowledge increases the forcefulness of the words of Paul: "But ye, brethren, are not in darkness that that day should overtake you as a thief." 1 Thess. 5:4.

The twelve hundred and ninety days of Daniel 12:11 and the thirteen hundred and thirty-five days of verse 12 are not the only days given us in this great prophetic book. In chapter 8:14 we are given another period of twenty-three hundred days, after which the sanctuary would be cleansed, and again in chapter 9:24 we are told of a period of seventy weeks that were to pass, encompassing the entire history of Israel up to the time of the bringing in of everlasting righteousness, which undoubtedly refers to the kingdom of God. Then once again we are given a period of twenty-five hundred and twenty days, during which Jerusalem would be trodden down of the Gentiles and after which Jerusalem would once again become the possession of the Israel people.

When we consider all these "days", described with such emphasis in Daniel's prophecy, it becomes quite easy to see that, when the Lord told Daniel he would stand in his lot at the end of the days, it was to the above mentioned days he was referring and to none other. If, therefore, by the help of God we can discover what these days mean, where they begin and where they end, we will certainly not be ignorant as to when the end of the days will come and when the end of the present age will arrive. If your friend should tell you that he plans to visit you twenty-five days after Christmas, then it should be a simple matter to count the days on your calendar and conclude exactly what day he will arrive. In like manner, when the Lord tells us He will come twenty-five hundred years after a certain date or thirteen hundred and thirty-five years after another date, we also should be able to compute almost exactly the time of His coming.

No one on earth realizes more than I do how easy it is to make mistakes or be found wanting in our understanding of these things, but of this I am certain: The Lord in His faithfulness caused these days to be recorded for our edification that the wise might understand. Dan. 12:10. If, therefore, we understand these days correctly, we will be aware of the time of the Lord's coming and, should our understanding be found faulty, sooner or later God will reveal the correct interpretation. It is well for us to remember that, when Daniel sought to know the meaning of these time visions he had seen, he was refused the information on this significant ground: "The vision is closed up and sealed till the time of the end". Dan. 12:9. Since Daniel lived twenty-five hundred years before the end of the days and the fulfillment of his vision, it would seem to be unnecessary for him to understand the details. The truth is that like all prophets he was ministering to us, upon whom the ends of the ages are come. Let us, then, seek to know, not the day or the hour, but most certainly the time when we will arrive at the end of the days.

When architects draw blue prints for a new building, they always use scales of measurement. The scale they use is plainly indicated on the blue print so that the builders will know exactly how to read it. The scale he uses may be one inch to ten feet, or for greater detail he may make an inset using a larger scale. For instance, on a map of the state of Illinois the scale may be an inch for one hundred miles, but on the same there is an inset of the city of Chicago with a scale of one inch for a mile.

In exactly the same manner as an architect uses a convenient scale of measurement to represent the dimensions of a building, so the Holy Spirit uses time scales to represent the length of time that will pass before certain prophecies are fulfilled. Perhaps the simplest example of a time scale may be found in the prophecy of Ezekiel. Here the prophet was told to lie upon his left side three hundred and ninety days to bear the iniquity of the house of Israel and then to lie upon his right side forty days to bear the iniquity of Judah. Then in Ezekiel 4:6 the Lord said to the prophet, "Thou shall bear the iniquity of the house of Judah forty days: I have appointed thee each day for a year." This then is the Bible time scale wherever days are indicated as a time scale. One day represents one year. Thus, when a period of twenty-three hundred days was indicated to Daniel, the meaning is twenty-three hundred years. When the scale measures twenty-five hundred and twenty days, the time is twenty-five hundred and twenty years and, when the scale measures twelve hundred and ninety days, the time will be twelve hundred and ninety years. Days, however, are not the only time scales given in the Bible. We also have a scale of weeks, which, of course, are made up of seven days. There is also a week of weeks, a week of years, and a week of weeks of years, which is forty-nine years. See Lev. 25:1-13. There is also a week of millenniums, which is seven thousand years. But, as our primary interest now is to deal with the scale of days, we need not confuse our minds by trying to grasp the meaning of these older time measurements.

As the prophet Daniel was earnestly seeking the Lord for an understanding of the great events that would concern Israel before the time of the end of the days, he says, "Whilst I was speaking in prayer, even the man Gabriel, whom I had seen in the vision at the beginning, being caused to fly swiftly, touched me about the time of the evening oblation. And he informed me, and talked with me, and said, O Daniel, I am now come forth to give thee skill and understanding. At the beginning of thy supplication the commandment came forth, and I am come to shew thee; for thou art greatly beloved: therefore understand the matter and consider the vision. Seventy weeks are determined upon thy people and upon thy holy city, to finish the transgression, and to make an end of sins, and to make reconciliation for iniquity, and to bring in everlasting righteousness, and to seal up the vision and prophecy, and to anoint the most Holy. Know therefore and understand, that from the going forth of the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem unto the Messiah the Prince shall be seven weeks, and threescore and two weeks: ..." Dan. 9:21-25.

Two time scales are used here to show the coming of great events. Both are called weeks. In verses 24 and 25 the time week used is the week of weeks of years, that is, a week forty-nine years long, or the jubilee cycle. This seven Sabbaths of years unto the jubilee is clearly stated in Lev. 25:8-10. "And thou shall number seven Sabbaths of years unto thee, seven times seven years: and the space of the seven Sabbaths of years shall be unto thee forty and nine years. Then shall thou cause the trumpet of the jubilee to sound on the tenth day of the seventh month, in the Day of Atonement shall ye make the trumpet sound throughout all your land. And ye shall hallow the fiftieth year, and proclaim liberty throughout all the land unto all the inhabitants thereof: it shall be a jubilee unto you; and ye shall return every man unto his own possession, and ye shall return every man unto his own family." It will be seen, then, that we have here a week forty-nine years long, composed of seven days, each day being seven years long. Now let us remember that Gabriel, in his message to Daniel, showed him that seventy weeks were determined upon his people and that in this time the Lord would accomplish six very outstanding things. He would (1) finish the transgression, (2) make an end of sins, (3) make reconciliation for iniquity, (4) bring in everlasting righteousness, (5) seal up the vision and prophecy, and (6) anoint the most Holy. The bringing in of everlasting righteousness and the anointing of the most Holy brings us right down to the end of this age and the beginning of the millennial kingdom.

It is not my wish to try to over-simplify a matter that has puzzled men from Daniel's day until now, but it seems perfectly clear that, by using the forty-nine year week of the jubilee here, the seventy weeks of which Daniel speaks in chapter 9:24 actually embrace the entire history of Israel from the day of the exodus from Egypt (Exod. 12:2) unto the end of the days and the bringing in of aionian righteousness, which, of course, is the kingdom of God. "Seventy weeks are determined upon thy people", each week being forty-nine years long as we have already seen. Thus seventy times forty-nine equals three thousand four hundred and thirty years. Since the international geophysical year of 1957, when such a wealth of new knowledge was discovered, the date of Israel's departure from Egypt has been definitely set as 1453 B.C. in the month of Nisan, which is April. Thus three thousand four hundred and thirty years after April, 1453 B.C., plus the final jubilee year, brings us to the period between 1978 and 1979. It is not unreasonable, then, to expect that the seventy weeks, which Gabriel said were determined upon Israel before everlasting righteousness would be brought in, come to their end some time in 1978.
The prophecy of the seventy weeks, which we have briefly considered, is most sweeping and all embracing in its dimension since it includes the entire existence of Israel as a nation from year one (Exod. 12:2, the beginning of months) when the nation departed from Egypt in 1453 B.C. down to 1978-79 A.D., the end of the seventy weeks. Though undoubtedly there remains much about these final times that we will not have wisdom to understand, there need be no doubt in our minds that this prophecy of the seventy weeks brings us right down to our time and the end of the days.

Following the large scale seventy weeks prophecy, which covers a period of three thousand four hundred and thirty years, we have another prophecy which also embraces a very long period of time, two thousand five hundred and twenty years.

Two years after Nebuchadnezzar came to the throne of Babylon, he had a perplexing dream, which none of the wise men of his realm could interpret for him except Daniel the prophet Daniel's interpretation of the king's dream definitely showed that the dream embraced the entire period of world history from the time Nebuchadnezzar became king of Babylon in 604 B.C. to the time of the end when the entire Babylon system of world government would be destroyed and the God of heaven would set up a kingdom that would never be destroyed. This is the dream and the interpretation Daniel gave: "Thou, O king, art a king of kings: for the God of heaven hath given thee a kingdom, power, and strength, and glory. And wheresoever the children of men dwell, the beasts of the field and the fowls of the heaven hath He given into thine hand, and hath made thee ruler over them all. Thou art this head of gold. And after thee shall rise another kingdom inferior to thee, and another third kingdom of brass, which shall bear rule over all the earth. And the fourth kingdom shall be strong as iron: forasmuch as iron breaketh in pieces and subdueth all things: and as iron that breaketh all these, shall it break in pieces and bruise. And whereas thou sawest the feet and toes, part of potters' clay and part of iron, the kingdom shall be divided; but there shall be in it of the strength of iron forasmuch as thou sawest the iron mixed with miry clay. And as the toes of the feet were part of iron, and part of clay, so the kingdom shall be partly strong and partly broken. . . . And in the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed: and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand forever." Dan. 2:37-42, 44.

This is indeed a very extensive prophecy. There is no possible way that we can read it and not be convinced that it covers the whole gamut of history as it proceeds from the coronation of Nebuchadnezzar as king of Babylon through the empires of Medo-Persia, Greece, Rome and Papal Rome right down to the time when the kingdom of God shall take over all the kingdoms of earth and the stone cut from the mountain without hands, which is Christ, will become King of kings and Lord of lords.

Though Nebuchadnezzar's vision of the image, of which he was the head, is in itself a very remarkable prophecy, it would do little more than give us a pre-written account of world history were it not for a second awesome event that took place in his life. The fourth chapter of Daniel records another disquieting dream that overawed the king and seemed to make his blood run cold. Though the dream was from God, it must certainly have seemed to him to have been a literal nightmare. The reader should familiarize himself with the entire fourth chapter of Daniel that its full significance may be the more clearly understood.

In his dream Nebuchadnezzar had seen a tree of great height grow out of the earth. The tree was strong. The height thereof reached to heaven and the sight thereof to the end of all the earth. The leaves thereof were fair and the fruit thereof much, and in it was meat for all. The beasts of the field had shadow under it, and the fowls of heaven dwelt in the boughs thereof, and all flesh fed of it. Dan. 4:10-12. Then the vision changed, and Nebuchadnezzar continued, "I saw in the visions of my head upon my bed, and, behold a watcher and an holy one came down from heaven; He cried aloud, and said thus, Hew down the tree, and cut off his branches, shake off his leaves, and scatter his fruit; let the beasts get away from under it, and the fowls from its branches: Nevertheless leave the stump of his roots in the earth, even with a band of iron and brass, in the tender grass of the field; and let it be wet with the dew of heaven, and let his portion be with the beasts in the grass of the earth: Let his heart be changed from man's, and let a beast's heart be given unto him; and let seven times pass over him." Dan. 4:13-16. In the remaining verses of the fourth chapter the prophet explained to Nebuchadnezzar the ominous import of the vision and the fearful consequence it envisionon. At the end of twelve months (Dan 4:11) all the calamities Nebuchadnezzar had seen actually came upon him until this mighty monarch learned from God's omnipotent hand that it is the Most High that ruleth in the kingdoms of men and giveth them to whomsoever He pleases.

Now, while the seven times which passed over Nebuchadnezzar (Dan. 4:32) may or may not have represented seven full years of calamity in his own life, I am confident that this vision concerned itself with far more than Nebuchadnezzar. The vision actually indicated the entire length of time through which the Babylon system of world government would hold its power and dominion over the earth. We must not forget that, whether it be Babylon, Medo-Persia, Greece, pagan Rome or papal Rome, all these systems are the very quintessence of Babylon. Every form of world government, whether it be democracy, monarchy, Nazism, Facism, Communism or any other human system, all are Babylon. All are confusion. All belong to the beast system (see Daniel 7) and all carry and support the drunken harlot with whom the kings and rulers commit fornication. Rev. 17:2. Whereas Nebuchadnezzar, the king of Babylon, was the head of gold, all lesser forms of government come under that Babylon head. All nations have fully drunk of the wrath of the wine of her fornication. See Rev. 17. Babylon is the mysterious harlot, drunken with the blood of the saints, who in her drunken corruption rides majestically upon the back of the beast of this world's systems, whether they be religious or political.

The seven times indicated in the king's dream presupposes the exact length of time this Babylon system will endure. A time in scripture is another of God's time scales by which the great architect of the universe indicates the interval that will endure before the end of the days and the end of the age. The word times here is from the Hebrew word iddan, meaning a set period of time. It does not mean a point in time. In Daniel's interpretation of the vision he spoke of seven times that would pass over Nebuchadnezzar "till thou shalt know that the Most High ruleth in the kingdom of men and giveth it to whomsoever He will." Dan. 4:32. The world events that were to take place during this long period of seven times are fully described in chapter seven, which envisions the rise and fall of the empires of Babylon, Medo-Persia, Greece and Rome. All these world empires were to be Gentile powers that would dominate the world, overrun Jerusalem, and desolate the Promised Land until the times of the Gentiles should be fulfilled.

It was our Lord Jesus Christ who first used the term, the times of the Gentiles. He was telling His disciples of the terrible tribulation that would follow His death, when Jerusalem would be compassed with armies, and there would be great distress in the land and wrath upon the people. He said, "They shall fall by the edge of the sword, and shall be led away captive into all nations: and Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled." Luke 21:20-24. The times of the Gentiles of which Jesus spoke are identical with the seven times of which Daniel spoke. When Daniel saw his vision about 607 B.C., Jerusalem was already trodden down by the might of the Gentile power of Babylon, and when Jesus spoke the words of Luke 21:20-24, Jerusalem was under the domination and iron rule of the Gentile power of Rome. This treading down of Jerusalem by Gentile power was to continue under one oppressor after another - Babylon, Medo-Persia, Greece, Rome, and finally Mohammedanism - until the times of the Gentiles would be fulfilled. THE LAST Gentile power to crush Jerusalem under its feet was the Turkish Empire, which lost its control when Jerusalem was captured by the British in 1917 to later become capital of the State of Israel.

It will now be our task to discover how long a period is indicated by "a time." If we can discover the length of one time, then immediately things that have puzzled us for centuries begin to fall into place. There does not seem to be any instruction in the Old Testament that would indicate the length of a time. This absence of understanding is significant because the Lord did not intend that the Old Testament saints should know the full meaning of these things. Thus, when Daniel sought the interpretation of his visions, he was distinctly told that the vision was sealed until the time of the end Hence the things Daniel wrote were not for him to understand, but were given for our edification to be understood by those of us who would be on the earth at the end of the days and also at the end of the times of the Gentiles.

For this reason the key to the length of a time is not found in the Old Testament at all, and without that key none could ever interpret the vision. But in the last book of the Bible, the book of Revelation, the key to the length of a time is given. In Revelation, chapters eleven and twelve, we have the use of three very significant terms. The first has to do with months (11:2), the second with days (11:3), and the third with times (12:14). If we place these three terms side by side, we discover the true length of a time. We read, "And to the woman (Israel) were given two wings of a great eagle, that she might fly into the wilderness into her place, where she is nourished for a time, and times, and half a time." Rev. 12:14. The John Knox translation says, "A year, two years, and half a year," and Moffatt uses the expression, "a time, two times, and half a time."

Then much more light is thrown on the subject when in Revelation 11:3 and 12:6 we have the same time broken down into days by the expression "a thousand two hundred and three score days (1260) days." This is exactly three and one-half lunar years, or time, times and half a time, or a year, two years, and half a year. Again in 11:2 we have another useful expression that greatly helps us to understand the length of a time, for here we read forty and two months. The months referred to here are undoubtedly the lunar months of thirty days each, used by the Gentile powers who controlled Palestine right up to the end of the times of the Gentiles in 1917. The lunar month was thirty days. Therefore forty-two lunar months equal one thousand two hundred and sixty days. Thus from the following three expressions we discover the definite length of a time:

The first, Rev. 11:3 and 12:6, reads twelve hundred and sixty days, = 1260 days

The second, Rev. 12:14, time, times, and half a time, = 1260 days

The third, Rev. 11:2, forty-two months (lunar). = 1260 days

From this evidence we can scarcely come to any other conclusion than this: If three and one-half times equal twelve hundred and sixty days, the one time must equal twelve hundred and sixty divided by three and one-half, which is three hundred and sixty days. Thus, if one time equals three hundred and sixty days, then the seven times of Daniel's prophecy must certainly mean three hundred and sixty times seven, which is two thousand five hundred and twenty days. And whereas the time scale reads a day for a year (Ezek. 4:6), then the seven times referred to in Daniel undoubtedly means two thousand five hundred and twenty years.

We should digress from our subject for a moment to consider a thought of great importance. For centuries the preachers have been saying that Jesus spoke in parables to make the gospel so simple that everybody could understand what He was saying. This is a teaching I do not believe, because it is unscriptural. The opposite is the truth. Jesus spoke in parables so that very few could understand what He was saying. This was made abundantly clear when His disciples asked Him, "Why speakest Thou unto them in parables?" His reply was this: "Because they seeing see not; and hearing they hear not, neither do they understand." Vs. 13. Now does that sound as though He was trying by His parables to make everybody understand? It certainly does not. Then again He said, "Unto you it is given to know the mystery of the kingdom of God: but unto them that are without, all these things are done in parables: that seeing they may see and not perceive; and hearing they may hear, and not understand; lest at any time they should be converted, and their sins should be forgiven them" Mark 4:11, 12.

If we will but remember this very important fact, we will understand why the Lord uses these difficult terms such as time, times and half a time, forty-two months, twelve hundred and sixty days, seven times, and the end of the days, and then, as if to complicate the parable further, He left us to discover from Ezekiel's prophecy that a day on His time scale may represent a year, or even a thousand years. 2 Pet. 3:8. These things were done so that none of the wicked would understand, but the wise shall understand. Dan. 12:10. Even Daniel himself, who wrote these things and sought so earnestly for the solution of the mystery, was told only, "Blessed is he that waiteth and cometh to the thousand three hundred and five and thirty days. But go thou thy way till the end be; for thou shalt rest, and stand in thy lot at the end of the days." Dan. 12:12-13. Though that may have seemed like a brush-off to poor Daniel, it was really a blessed promise that he would be resurrected at the end of the thirteen hundred and thirty-five days mentioned in verse 12. We will consider these days presently.

Let us first, however, consider the meaning of the seven times or the twenty-five hundred and twenty days during which time the empires of world, all as integral parts of the image of Babylon, would rise in their successive order of power and might and suddenly come to their end exactly at the end of the seven times or the twenty-five hundred and twenty years. So exact is their rise and fall at the time appointed that one cannot imagine how it would be possible for anyone to doubt the absolute accuracy of the word of God or the inspiration of the prophet who gave us these things. Let us recall here that Jesus said, "Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled," (Luke 21:24), and that Daniel had told Nebuchadnezzar that seven times would pass over him. Please remember that the times of the Gentiles, spoken of by Jesus, and the seven times of Daniel's prophecy are one and the same thing.

The Assyrian Empire fell in 607 B.C. and the Babylonian Empire with Nebuchadnezzar as its head came into the ascendancy that same year. In 604 B.C. Nebuchadnezzar captured the city of Jerusalem and Jerusalem for the next twenty-five hundred and twenty years was literally trodden down of the Gentiles. Now is it not most noteworthy to find that exactly twenty-five hundred and twenty years after 607 B.C., when Babylon became a world power, we arrive at the momentous year A.D. 1914? This was the year the first World War began, the war that was to end with the destruction of the Turkish Empire, the deliverance of Jerusalem from Gentile power, and the end of the times of the Gentiles. Though this is a most remarkable thing, it is not more phenomenal than the fact that Nebuchadnezzar captured Jerusalem in the year 604 B.C. and twenty-five hundred and twenty years after 604 B.C. brings us to A.D. 1917, when the British army under General Allenby captured Jerusalem, December 11, 1917, and marched into the city without firing a shot, while the massed bands of the British army played

"Jesus shall reign where'er the sun
Doth his successive journeys run;
His kingdom spread from shore to shore
Till moons shall wax and wane no more."

Thus exactly and perfectly on schedule the seven times prophecy was fulfilled to the letter. Seven times, or twenty-five hundred and twenty years, after Babylon rose to power in 607 B.C., the war that was to liberate Palestine began, and seven times, or twenty-five hundred and twenty years, after Nebuchadnezzar captured Jerusalem in 604 B.C., the city was recaptured by the British forces (which are Israel). The times of the Gentiles were fulfilled and Jerusalem was to be trodden down by Gentiles no more.

In connection with this historic event, the re-capture of Jerusalem, I would like to make special mention of the prophecy of Isaiah 31:4-5. "For thus hath the Lord spoken unto me, Like as the lion and the young lion roaring on his prey ... so shall the Lord of hosts come down to fight for mount Zion, and for the hills thereof. As birds flying, so will the Lord of hosts defend Jerusalem; defending also He will deliver it; and passing over He will preserve it."

As the British war planes like birds flew low over Jerusalem on this momentous occasion, the Turks fled and the British army marched unresisted into the city. Every commentator I have read or heard in the last fifty years admits that this momentous event was the fulfillment of Isa. 31:5, "As birds flying, so will the Lord defend Jerusalem; defending He will deliver it; and passing over He will preserve it." Remarkable as is this dramatic fulfillment of prophecy, we cannot miss the pertinent fact that in verse four those conquering forces were definitely identified as "the lion and the young lion roaring on the prey." No forces in the world other than British can be identified as the lion and the young lion. These symbols are not only British, but Israelitish as well, and do in my opinion form a mind-numbing proof that the conquering British armies were the armies of Israel. Otherwise Jerusalem would still have been trodden down of Gentiles.

World War I was the most fearful convulsion the world has ever known. In its bloody wave 65,038,810 men were mobilized of whom 9,538,315 were killed, 21,219,452 were wounded. 7,750,919 were taken prisoner or missing. According to the Encyclopedia Britannica, the total casualties were 37,404,186. No wonder our Lord Jesus Christ, speaking of the day when nation would rise against nation and kingdom against kingdom, said this would be the beginning of sorrows. This devastating conflagration was followed by the Spanish influenza 1918-1919, in which plague it is estimated that twenty million people perished and fifty times that number were stricken with the disease.

The appalling conflagration of 1914-1918 and the desolating plague of influenza that followed it were the true beginning of sorrows and the time of Jacob's trouble. After twenty years of world-wide unrest and international sabre rattling and bloodshed the already reeling world was struck another staggering blow by the outbreak of World War II. Into this raging sea of blood and tears and incredible devastation waded the armies, the air forces, the navies and the civilians of fifty-seven nations, and when at last the guns fell silent and bombs ceased to fall, another 15,000,000 men had lost their lives besides an incredible number of men, women, and children of the nations involved. The cost in money and equipment could not possibly be estimated. The cost to the United States alone was estimated to be three hundred and fifty billion dollars. This unspeakable conflagration saw the dropping of the first atomic bomb and the unbelievable incineration of two great cities and their inhabitants.

Since the closing of World War II, there has not been a day of peace on earth. Devastating local wars have been fought by many nations, and even now all signs point to the final holocaust that will end with the coming of Christ to take the government of the world. In our day we are seeing the literal fulfillment of the words of Jesus, "Except those days should be shortened, there should no flesh be saved..." Matt. 24:22.

Speaking of these days of sorrow and trouble, our Lord Jesus gave us a faithful promise when He said, "This generation shall not pass away, till all be fulfilled." Luke 21:32. The words this generation evidently have reference to the generation that would be living when these things begin to come to pass. That, of course, is our own generation. As our life expectancy is three score and ten years, then a generation must be considered to be between sixty-five and seventy years. Many among us who were small children when this beginning of sorrows began in 1914 may yet live to see all things fulfilled.

In a writing such as this, when we walk in unknown paths that lead over unfamiliar ground, it is easy for us to become confused as our minds begin to swim with figures and statements of facts. We should not, however, be too surprised at our apparent lack of understanding since Daniel, noted in scripture for wisdom and understanding, could not in spite of all his effort comprehend the wonders he had seen, but remained to his death in doubt as to their meaning. Thus he writes, "I Daniel fainted, and was sick certain days; afterward I rose up, and did the king's business; and I was astonished at the vision, but none understood it." Dan. 8:27. The Lord had said that these things were sealed up until the time of the end, and, were it not for those promising words, until the time of the end, it would be vain for us to endeavor to search them out. But we who live at the end of the days will surely find their meaning. If, however, in our earnest search we find our calculations to be imperfect by a few years, we may rest assured that the time of the end and the end of the days are very near at hand.

Another direct Bible prophecy concerning the end of the days is found in Daniel, chapter 8. In this vision, which occurred in the third year of the reign of Belshazzar, Daniel was given a vision of the destruction of the Babylonian Empire by Medo-Persia and the subsequent destruction of the Medo-Persian Empire by Greece. Here in symbol Medo-Persia is characterized as a ram having two horns, pushing north and south and westward so that no beasts could stand before him. Compare Dan. 8:1-4 with verse 20. In the midst of these mighty Medo-Persian conquests another beast appears in the form of a rough he-goat with a notable horn between his eyes. This he-goat is the kingdom of Greece (verse 21), which rose to the height of its power under Alexander the Great.

In the vision Daniel saw the he-goat (Greece) with the notable horn between his eyes come from the west. He came against the ram in the fury of his power, and smote him, broke his horns (power), and stamped on him. Verse 7. Then the he-goat waxed very great, and when he was strong, suddenly the great horn between his eyes was broken. This evidently is a prophecy concerning the death of Alexander the Great, who had become so great in power that his empire extended from India to Ethiopia. It is doubtful if any conqueror who ever lived could equal his prowess as a general. Alexander died suddenly in 323 B.C. at the height of his power at the age of thirty-two years, having never once been defeated in battle. The death of Alexander was undoubtedly one of the most outstanding events in the history of the Grecian Empire and was the great turning point in her history. It was after Alexander died that the nation was divided into four heads according to the prophetic words of Daniel 8:8, and from one of the four horns came forth the little horn (verse 9) by whom Jerusalem was trodden down and the daily sacrifice was taken away. Dan. 8:12.

As Daniel was seeking to understand the vision, he "heard one saint speaking, and another saint said unto that certain saint which spake, How long shall be the vision concerning the daily sacrifice, and the transgression of desolation, to give both the sanctuary and the host to be trodden under foot? And he said unto me, Unto two thousand and three hundred days; then shall the sanctuary be cleansed." Dan. 8:13,14. This twenty-three hundred days, which on the time scale would be twenty-three hundred years, from the time the daily sacrifice... was taken away is described in verse 19 as the last end of the indignation. The indignation is the desecrating of God's holy place, "for at the time appointed the end shall be." Verse 19.

It is not completely possible to say with dogmatic certainty just exactly what year we should begin counting the twenty-three hundred years, but we may say with a good deal of certainty that, because the vision concerned the Grecian Empire, and because after the death of Alexander the daily sacrifice was taken away, the approximate time to begin counting the twenty-three hundred days would be at the time of Alexander's death. If, then, the death of Alexander the Great (323 B.C.), clearly foretold in Dan. 8:8, is to be the starting point of the twenty-three hundred days, twenty-three hundred years after 323 B.C. brings us once again to the year 1978 A.D. as the approximate time of the end of the days. Whether this reckoning is exact or not makes little difference to the indisputable fact that we are now living at the very time of the close of this age and the beginning of the kingdom of God.

"And from the time that the daily sacrifice shall be taken away, and the abomination that maketh desolate set up, there shall be a thousand two hundred and ninety days. Blessed is he that waiteth, and cometh to the thousand three hundred and five and thirty days." Dan. 12:11-12.

As we have considered different periods of days as stated in this book of Daniel, we have, I trust, come to realize more clearly the meaning of the expression the end of the days. Should we who live at the end of the days find ourselves puzzled or frustrated in our endeavors to understand such tremendous end time prophecies, then surely we should feel the stricture and perhaps embarrassment Daniel felt in his endeavor to comprehend the meaning of the riddle that confronted him, since he had not yet seen the beginning of days, let alone the end of them. But this man of God was plainly told that the message was sealed until the time of the end and could not be understood until then. Therefore the Lord dismissed him with these words: "Go thy way, Daniel; for the words are closed up and sealed till the time of the end."

While the words must have been disappointing to the prophet, they should be reason for great rejoicing to us who live in the end of the age. Since history has left us some definite dates to indicate the time these thirteen hundred and thirty-five days actually began, we are now able to begin our counting of these days with some certainty. Let us then rejoice in the perfect assurance that we are drawing near to that time of blessedness which was promised in these words: "Blessed is he that waiteth and cometh to the thousand three hundred and five and thirty days." These final words, spoken to Daniel, were intended to be both a great comfort to him and a refreshing source of knowledge and inspiration to us. "Thou shalt rest, and stand in thy lot at the end of the days" was a promise to him of the date of his own resurrection and the resurrection of all the righteous in Christ. "Go thou thy way until the end be: for thou shall rest, and stand in thy lot at the end of the days." This lo Daniel was a sure and certain promise of the resurrection. Though he has been at rest for more lean twenty-five hundred years, he is now nearing the end of Ice days and, as it is a glorious hope for him, it is also a sure and certain hope for us, for "they without us shall not be made perfect."

As the twenty-five hundred and twenty days had lo do with the Babylonian Empire and the twenty-three hundred days had lo do with the Grecian Empire, so also now the twelve hundred and ninety days and the thirteen hundred and thirty-five days have to do with the desolating power of Mohammedanism.

Grattan Guiness, that great and learned man who lived in the latter part of the nineteenth century and who possessed a wonderful understanding of the end of the age, foretold in his day that the end of the limes of the Gentiles would come in the year 1917. At the time he predicted the beginning of World War I, which was to bring about the end of Gentile power over Jerusalem. Writing in his book, The Approaching End of the Age, page 431, he said, "The Papacy does not stand out more distinctly as the great apostasy of the west than does Mohammedanism as the great parallel apostasy of the east. The one originated from within the church, the other from without; but they rose together... They have run chronologically similar courses; they have both based their empire on religious pretensions; the one defiled and trampled down the church, the other defiled and trod down Jerusalem. The Holy Roman Empire under the control of the Papacy dominated nearly all of Europe whilst the Mohammedan Empire at its zenith extended all the way from Spain to India."

In one of His many serious talks with His disciples Jesus foretold the destruction of the temple at Jerusalem and the setting up of an "abomination that maketh desolate" in its place. One of the signs He gave as an indication of His coming and the end of the age was, "When ye therefore shall see the abomination of desolation, spoken of by Daniel the prophet, stand in the holy place, (whoso readeth, let him understand:) then let them which be in Judea flee into the mountains." Matt. 24:15-16. When Jesus spoke these words, He was referring to the prophecy of Daniel 12:11, which says, "And from the time that the daily sacrifice shall be taken away, and the abomination that maketh desolate set up, there shall be a thousand two hundred and ninety days." That is, there will be twelve hundred and ninety years left until the end of the days.

Mahomet was born at Mecca 570 A.D. and died 632 A.D. The temple of the Lord at Jerusalem had been destroyed by the Romans just as Jesus had prophesied in Matt. 24:2 and as Daniel had prophesied in Dan. 9:26. But unknown to Daniel more than twelve hundred years were to elapse between the giving of the prophecy and the actual time the abomination of desolation was to be set up as he had foretold. In 622 A.D. Mohammed fled from Mecca, where he had preached and established some of his doctrines. The Mohammedan calendar begins from this date. Therefore A.D. 622 is year one on their calendar, which is reckoned, not by solar years, but by lunar years. After the death of Mohammed in 622 Omar became caliph. He came to Jerusalem and in the year 643 to 644 erected a temporary wooden mosque on the temple site. Just as the temple of the Lord had been the center of Israelitish worship, so now this abomination became the centre and symbol of Mohammedanism. The Christian patriarch at Jerusalem, upon seeing the building of the mosque, exclaimed, "The abomination of desolation is in the holy place!" No truer word was ever spoken; and there it must remain until the end of the thirteen hundred and thirty-five years, which will be the end of the days.

This building of the mosque of Omar in the year 643-644 was a very important event and should definitely be considered the starting point of the thirteen hundred and thirty-five days of Dan. 12:11. That its erection in the holy place is connected with the thirteen hundred and thirty-five days and the consequent end of the days there can be no reasonable doubt, for the scripture clearly indicates that following this event there would be thirteen hundred and thirty-five days (years) from that time until Daniel would stand in his lot at the end of the days. If this be correct, then it is only a matter of simple addition to compute that thirteen hundred and thirty-five years after 643-644 brings us to the year of 1978-79 as the time of the end of the days spoken of in Daniel's prophecy.

Now there appears to be a double confirmation here, for, while Omar built the wooden mosque in 643-644 A.D. and it remained on the site for some forty-four years, the present structure, The Dome of the Rock, commonly called the Mosque of Omar, was begun in the year 688 A.D., the work continuing until 691 A.D. These are the figures given by the Encyclopedia Britannica.

You have already noted that Daniel was given two sets of figures concerning this abomination of desolation — twelve hundred and ninety days and thirteen hundred and thirty-five days. In Dan. 12:11 he was told that from the setting up of the abomination of desolation to the end there would be twelve hundred and ninety days (years), and then in verse 12 he was further mystified by the baffling expression, "Blessed is he that waiteth and cometh to the thirteen hundred and thirty-five days." How was Daniel to know what the abomination of desolation would be and how much less was he to know that two structures would be built, the first one temporary to be begun in 643 A.D., almost twelve hundred years after his day, the second to be commenced in 688 A.D.? My readers must already have come to the conclusion that twelve hundred and ninety years after the erection of The Dome of the Rock in 688 brings us to the year 1978, and thirteen hundred and thirty-five years after the beginning of the temporary Mosque of Omar in 643 also brings us to the same date. Thus 688 plus 1290=1978 and 643 plus 1335=1978.

I have no desire whatever to be guilty of juggling figures like some dishonest accountant, and probably no one on earth realizes more than I do how overly easy it is to make mistakes or be in error. Even an error of a year or two might appear to make a shambles of all our reckoning. But of this one thing I am positive: Once the correct dates can be rightly computed to begin the counting of the days as given to Daniel for our benefit, we will know of a certainty the exact time when the days will end. As the Lord gave these days to Daniel, he was given the wonderful promise that the end of them would be the time of his resurrection. "Thou shalt stand in thy lot at the end of the days." I shall never apologize for truth. The only thing for which we need to apologize is our ignorance and inability to understand the things, which God has stated.
To recapitulate and show again the things which we have considered we must conclude that the years 1978 and 1979 must of necessity be years of great importance concerning the end of the age, for we have already endeavored to show to the best of our understanding that the long series of days and times given to Daniel all bring us to 1978-79 as the approximate time of the end of the days. Seventy weeks or thirty-four hundred and thirty years, determined upon God's people Israel, when added to the date of the exodus, which was the beginning of days for them, brings us to 1978. The twenty-three hundred days after the death of Alexander in 323 B.C. brings us again to 1978. Thirteen hundred and thirty-five years after the first mosque was built in 643 brings us to 1978, and twelve hundred and ninety years after the commencement of the Dome of the Rock in 688 B.C. brings us also to 1978-79.

In the great vision concerning Nebuchadnezzar and the succeeding Gentile powers twenty-five hundred and twenty years were to pass before Jerusalem would be delivered from Gentile power. Seven times or twenty-five hundred and twenty years after the capture of Jerusalem in 604 B.C. brings us to 1917, which is the year that Jerusalem was captured by the British forces to end the domination of Mohammedanism and all Gentile rule in that city. Speaking of the beginning of sorrows and the time of trouble that would be at the end, Jesus said, "This generation shall not pass away until all be fulfilled." From 1917 until 1978 is sixty-one years, which is well within the scope of a generation.

I leave these thoughts with you for your earnest consideration. I do not infer that 1978-79 is the exact date of the end of the age, but, in the face of all the multiplied signs that point to the end of the age, now appearing on every hand in ever increasing numbers, we would be very foolish and very unbelieving if we did not see in this simple evidence both that the coming of the Lord draweth nigh and that we are in truth at the end of the days.

CHAPTER FIVE
CONCERNING OUR TIMES

There are limitless ways to be wrong, but only one way to be right; therefore it behooves us all to recognize the frailty of our understanding and be ready, if necessary, to say, "I may be wrong," and in some cases, "I was wrong." The vast capability for human error was probably the reason the apostle James exhorted the saints with this pertinent observation: "Let not many of you become teachers, my brethren, for you know that we who teach shall be judged with greater strictness. For we all make many mistakes, and if anyone makes no mistakes in what he says, he is perfect." Jas. 3:1-2. Revised Standard. That piece of inspired advice should make us all take second thought before we presume to be teachers of the word or before we insist that we are right in what we say. I may therefore be wrong, but I am very much of the opinion that September-October 1979 brought us to the end of the days as they are set forth in the book of Daniel. We now appear to be in the interim period of disintegration when all the systems of the world are crumbling and falling apart just as we would expect them to do, since the feet of the image Daniel saw are an unstable mixture of iron mingled with clay.

The great nations of the world are falling apart. The mighty empires are no more. In a day not long ago, when the British lion roared, tyranny trembled, and when the American eagle screamed, nations bent on evil slunk away and all the world took heed. Now these two powerful brothers have lost their will to lead. They have abdicated their power to resist evil. Through the abundance of their riches they have corrupted themselves. They seem to have lost their souls. The prophet Isaiah, speaking of the last days of our age, said, "Darkness shall cover the earth, and gross darkness the people." The people referred to here are the Israel people, and I declare that their gross darkness, their spiritual blindness, has become so incredible that in many cases heathen nations are showing more moral fiber than the so-called Christian world. These nations, among whom it once was true that Christ was the glory of His people Israel, now have sunk so low that many of them do not know that Christ is God's Son. They do not know that He was God manifest in the flesh or that He died, was buried and rose again for our justification. The prophets of the Old Testament and Jesus Christ our Lord, together with the apostles He chose, have all joined their inspired words to affirm with one voice that the final days of this age of grace will be times of great trouble, unrest and tribulation. "This know also that in the last days perilous times shall come," and to such an extent that men's hearts will literally fail them for fear and for looking after the things that are coming upon the earth, for even the powers of heaven will be shaken.

The prophet Daniel spoke of an un-named beast that would arise before the end of the age, a beast dreadful and terrible and strong exceedingly with great iron teeth. It devoured and brake in pieces, and stamped the residue with its feet. It was diverse from all the beasts that were before it, and it had ten horns. "I considered the horns, and, behold, there came up among them another little horn, before whom there were three of the first horns plucked up by the roots: and, behold, in this horn were eyes like the eyes of a man, and a mouth speaking great things." Dan. 7:7-8. This reign of terror was to continue until the Ancient of days came, whose garment is as white as snow, and He took the kingdom. Bless His name!

The prophet Isaiah, foretelling the glory of the coming kingdom age, in chapter 60, verse 2 uttered one short sentence that vividly portrays the spiritual condition of the world immediately before the setting up of the long-awaited and glorious kingdom of Christ. "For, behold, the darkness shall cover the earth, and gross darkness the people: but the Lord shall arise upon thee, and His glory shall be seen upon thee." Darkness like a black mantle hangs over all the world at the present time. The light of Israel shines no more and the light of the church is that of a flickering, sputtering candle.

Our Lord Jesus Christ in strict harmony with the prophets asked this sobering question: "When the Son of man comes, will He find faith on the earth?" The Emphatic Diaglott has it this way: "Will He find the faith on the earth?" This, I feel, is the true meaning of the passage. The world is full of preachers preaching every imaginable doctrine, but the faith, which was once delivered to the saints is sadly lacking and for the most part is not being preached at all. If you speak to the existing church about sects or denominations, they can identify with you immediately. Preach about church tradition and they know what you mean. Fill your sermons with soul-winning, missions, Sunday Schools, crusades, seminars, creeds, assemblies, doctrines, meetings, communions, baptisms, programs, campaigns, tract distribution, healings, gifts, personal work, radio, T.V., offerings, drives, buildings and building funds, invasions, publications, Bible Schools, alms, temples, special numbers and on and on ad nauseum, and with these things the people can identify. But, when you start to talk about the faith once delivered to the saints, the eternal purposes of God, the restitution of all things, reconciliation, repentance, regeneration, justification, the atonement, sanctification, the mind of Christ, election, predestination, the kingdom of God and sonship, and many other words of faith which the Holy Ghost teaches (2 Cor. 2:13), then the veil is upon their faces and they stagger in amazement and think the preacher has taken leave of his senses. With sympathetic tones and knowing glances they whisper, "He has gone off the deep end," or "He is away out in left field," and other such expressions of infantile understanding. The existing church system of our day with its vast array of petty sects and vainglorious denominations has a form of godliness, but is in every sense denying the power of it. From all such God commands us to turn away.

Then again the infallible Lord Jesus taught us, "As the days of Noah were, so shall also the coming of the Son of man be." Matt. 24:37. The sixth chapter of Genesis gives the reader a vivid picture of world conditions in the days of Noah. "And God saw that the wickedness of man was great in the earth, and that every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually." Gen. 6:5. And again, "The earth also was corrupt before God, and the earth was filled with violence. And God looked upon the earth, and, behold, it was corrupt: for all flesh had corrupted his way upon the earth. And God said unto Noah, The end of all flesh is come before Me; for the earth is filled with violence through them; and, behold, I will destroy them with the earth." Gen. 6:11-13. There was also another evil rampant in Noah's day, and this same evil is becoming rampant in our day, but, alas, it is being passed over with a careless shrug. Adam was a Son of God (Luke 3:16-38) and the sons of God spoken of in Genesis 6:4 were the descendants of Adam. They were Adamites. Though the Bible deals in particular only with the seed of Adam, or the sons of God, by definite, unmistakable inference it becomes perfectly clear that races of men other than Adamites were on the earth, not only at the same time as Adam, but in all probability long before he came. These other races are not called sons of God, but are referred to as men.

An inference in scripture is as strong as, or perhaps stronger than, a direct statement. Thus, when the Lord banished Cain from His presence, Cain complained, "My punishment is greater than I can bear. Behold, Thou hast driven me this day from the face of the earth; and from Thy face shall I be hid; and I shall be a fugitive and a vagabond in the earth; and it shall come to pass, that every one that findeth me shall slay me." See Gen.
4:13-14. At the time this statement was made, only Adam and Eve and Cain remained of the Adamites. Abel had already been slain. Before whom, then, was Cain to be a fugitive in the earth? To whom did he refer when he said everyone who found him would slay him? If no other races existed, why did he fear that someone would slay him? Nay, but other races did exist and the indisputable inference is that Cain, being an Adamite and undoubtedly white of skin, was afraid that all these blacks and browns and yellows, who dwelt outside of Eden, would seek to kill him. Then, too, is it not a singular thing that Cain, having departed to the land of Nod, which means the land of wanderings, found a wife? The old question, "Where did Cain get his wife," vexes and befuddles all who fail to see that pre-Adamic races existed. Without doubt Cain married one of these daughters of men and was the first Adamite to begin the wicked practice of intermarrying with these forbidden tribes. Then not only did Cain marry a wife in his wanderings, but, the story goes on to relate, he also built a city. Verse 17. None of these wandering tribes had ever thought of building a city; neither had any of them ever tilled the ground. Gen. 1:5; 4:2. They were just as the savages are in our day.

By the time of Noah the earth had corrupted itself to such an extent that the sons of God - that is, the Adamites - were freely mingling with the daughters of men and taking them wives of all that they chose. "And it came to pass, when men began to multiply on the face of the earth, and daughters were born unto them, that they began to call upon the name of the Lord." Gen. 6:1. The idea advanced by some that the sons of God were the angels who married Adamites is in my opinion too ridiculous for comment. Angels neither marry nor are given in marriage. They are sexless beings and do not possess the powers of incarnation. Such jejune statements are made because of prevailing and pernicious ignorance of the fact that there were other man-like beings on the earth as well as Adam and concurrent with him. We should dismiss all such artful dodging of the truth and open our minds to the fact that Adam was a special creation in God's image, destined to have dominion over all else in the world and eventually, when fully sharing God's image, to govern the universe, but that he was not alone in the earth there is abundant evidence.

The moment you understand this truth, it is a simple matter to grasp why it is that the scripture, speaking of the last days, plainly tells us, "They shall mingle themselves with the seed of men." Dan. 2:43. This forbidden act of Adamites inter-marrying with non-Adamites is a sign of the end of the age now just as it was a sign of the flood in Noah's day, and just as the wickedness of the earth was vastly increased by this wicked fornication with other races, so today the more this practice of "going after strange flesh" (Jude 7) is pursued so much the more evil and darkness comes upon the face of the earth. I verily believe it is a great sin against light for any child of Adam to intermarry with any pre-Adamic race. The Old Testament scriptures abound with warnings and judgments against any such thing to such an extent that both Ezra and Nehemiah forced the Israelites to put those wives away. See Ezra 10:10-19; Neh. 13:23-31; See also Deut. 7:1-4. A bastard in the language of the Old Testament is not a child born out of wedlock, but a child born of one of these illegitimate unions.

To talk about sin and corruption has never been a delight of mine. I would much sooner spend my time considering the incorruptible realms of the Spirit, but, since Jesus and His apostles and the prophets taught us to be watchers lest the great day of the Lord should come upon us unawares, it behooves us at times to pause in our flight to the celestial realms to examine ourselves and take particular notice that all the signs about us are pointing to the end of the age and the coming of our long awaited Lord. For this reason Jesus warned us that in the end of the age the world would be as wicked and violent, as adulterous and barbaric, as it was in the days of Noah and that the thoughts and imaginations of men's hearts would be only evil continually.

In like manner He warned of another sordid evil of the last days when He said that as it was in the day that Lot went out of Sodom, so should it be when the Son of man would be revealed. Luke 17:20-30. The sin that ran rampant in Sodom was homosexuality in all its debasing, degrading, defiling debauchery. Sodom was a city situated on the Dead Sea, destroyed with its neighboring city, Gomorrah, because of the wickedness of the people. Gen. 18:10. From the proper noun, Sodom, comes the noun sodomy, which means unnatural sexual relations, especially between male persons or between a human being and an animal. This filthy, barbaric crime was the sin that caused the overthrow of the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah with fire and brimstone from heaven so that not one person save righteous Lot and his two daughters escaped. Gen. 19.
It is a tragedy of enormous proportions that in our day this sin is again rampant in the earth. The significant thing is that it has only become rampant in the last twenty years. To earth's unspeakable shame so-called homosexual churches now claim over fifty thousand members. In their towering blasphemy they even profess to hold what they imagine to be "Holy Ghost conventions." I can think of nothing more blasphemous than this! This vile dissipation with all its devitalizing, debilitating corruption is present, not only among members of congregations, but also among an effeminate Protestant and Catholic, dissolute and immoral clergy, not excluding many so-called evangelical denominations. We have no delight in disclosing these evils, but let the unrestrained ragings of these crimes warn us that the day of vengeance and judgment and the end of the age is even at our doors, for as it was in the days of Sodom, so shall it be when the Son of man comes.

In his second epistle to Timothy Paul warned that "in the last days perilous times shall come, for," said he, "men shall be lovers of their own selves." From this love of self all the other evils of our day apparently spring. While considering this present day love of self, a few lines from the poetry of Macaulay comes to mind:

Then none was for the party;
Then all were for the state.
Then the great man helped the poor
And the poor man loved the great.
Then lands were fairly portioned;
Then spoils were fairly sold.
The Romans were like brothers
In the brave days of old.

Now Roman is to Roman
More hateful than a foe.
The Tribunes beard the high;
The Fathers grind the low.
As we wax hot in faction,
In battle we grow cold;
Wherefore men fight not as
In the brave days of old.
```
